6

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 1 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 4th January, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign:
1.	Awakening of the Persians and the Anglo-Russian treaty	7
2.	The Anglo-Russian convention ...	7
	(b)—Home:
3.	The present situation	7
4.	The present unrest	7
5.	Present situation in India and its remedy	7
6.	Indians in the Transvaal	8
7.	Indians in the Transvaal	8
8.	Indians in the Transvaal	8
9.	Indians in the Transvaal	8
10.	Sentiment in Africa	8
11.	Extension of the Council	9
12.	Election of the Honorable Nawab Saiyid Muhammad	9
13.	Advisory Councils	9
14.	District and Divisional Advisory Council	10
15.	Advisory Legislative Councils ...	10
16.	Presidentship of the Congress ...	10
17.	The Surat Congress	10
18.	The Congress Eve...	11
19.	Wanted—a real National Congress ...	11
20.	Wanted—a real National Congress ...	11
21.	The Indian National Congress ...	11
22.	The Surat Congress	12
23.	Messrs. Lajpat Rai and Gokhale at the Surat Congress	12
24.	The Nationalist Conference	12
25.	The Congress	12
26.	The split in the Congress	12
27.	The Congress crisis	13
28.	The Surat Convention	13
29.	Mr. Tilak's explanation	14
30.	The twenty-third session of the Congress	14
31.	The Congress in London	14
32.	Extremists versus Moderates ...	14
33.	Extremist Methods and Ideals ...	14
34.	Anglo-Russian Convention and Indian Army expenses	14
35.	Sir B. Fuller's suggestion	15
36.	What should the Muhammadans do ? ...	15
37.	The Decentralization Commission ...	15
38.	Count Okuman's speech	15
39.	The Viceroy in Calcutta and the future problem	15
40.	India under Liberal Ministry... ...	16
41.	The rulers and the ruled	16
42.	The Old and the New years	16
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
	Nil.
	III.—NATIVE STATES.
43.	Legislative Councils in Native States ...	17
	IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
	(a) Judicial and Revenue:
44.	The period of limitation of mortgage suits...	17
45.	The period of limitation of mortgage suits	17
46.	The Rohilkhand Gazette defamation case	17
47.	Whipping	18
48.	Reform in the constitution of jury hearing the trial of a European ...	18

		Page.
49.	The Wood's case and the Rawalpindi riot case	18
50.	The Rawalpindi rape and the Lahore shooting cases	18
51.	The Lahore shooting ease	18
52.	The famine and realisation of revenue ...	18
53.	The famine and realisation of revenue ...	18
	(b)—Police :
54.	The Manda murder case and the Allahabad defence Associatoin	18
55.	The Manda murder case	19
56.	The Manda murder case and police ...	19
57.	Police torture in Noakhali	19
58.	Conviction of Police officers in Noakhali	19
59.	The punitive police force at Jhalakati...	20
60.	The Agra Police	20
	(c)—Finance and Taxation :
61.	The Nickel Coin	20
	(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :
62.	Necessity of a separate flesh market in Moradabad	20
63.	Water supply at Benares	20
64.	Removal of Mr. Khaparde from the vice-chairmanship of Amraoti	20
65.	Bareilly Municipality	20
66.	Road lighting in Lucknow	20
67.	Adulteration of milk	20
	(e)—Education :
68.	Quarrel between the students and the clerk of the Moradabad Government School	21
69.	The principalship of the Islamia College, Lahore	21
70.	National institutions	21
71.	Hindi Text-books	21
72.	Bishop Whitehead on education ...	21
73.	Complaint of the school masters in Lucknow	21
74.	The Agra College...	22
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :
75.	The famine	22
76.	The famine	22
77.	The famine	22
78.	Relief works and the Rosa-Sitapur line ...	22
79.	Famine allowance to railway servants ...	22
	(g)—General :
80.	The swadeshi movement	22
81.	The swadeshi movement	23
82.	The attempted assassination of Mr. Allen	23
83.	The attempted assassination of Mr. Allen	23
84.	Attempted murder of Mr. Allen ...	23
85.	The attempted murder of Mr. Allen ...	23
86.	The Pioneer and the attempted murder of Mr. Allen	23
87.	A plea for unity	24
88.	The imperative need for unity ...	24
89.	Grievances of office clerks	24
90.	Grievances of clerks	24
91.	Work in holidays	24
92.	The proscribed newspapers	24
93.	The Press and the Government ...	24
94.	Motor cars	25
95.	The trouble in Zululand	25
96.	Office orderly for Sub-Registrar ...	25
97.	The selfish policy of the English ...	25
98.	Mr. Nevinson's advice	25
99.	The Emperor of Germany in England ...	25
100.	Conviction of the Hitaishi ...	25
101.	The condition of the United Provinces ...	26
102.	A grave accusation	26
103.	A new capital for India	26
104.	The Justice	26
105.	India's poverty, its causes and remedy ...	26
106.	Advice to the Indians	26
107.	Factory Commission	26
	V.—LEGISLATION.
108.	The Seditions Meetings Act... ...	26
	VI.—RAILWAY.
109.	End of the strike on the East Indian Railway	27
110.	Rajputana-Malwa Railway	27
111.	Railway strikes	27
112.	Troubles of the Railway passengers ...	27
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
113.	Head Clerk of the office of the Superintendent of Post offices, Moradabad ...	27
114.	Commission on postage stamps ...	27
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
115.	Rajput Shuddhi	27
116.	Rajput Shuddhi	27
117.	Rajput Shuddhi	28
118.	The Parasnath Hill	28
119.	The Parasnath Hill	28
120.	Government and the repair of the Lahore mosque	28
121.	The Vilaporam incident	28
122.	Dedication of children to the Ganges ...	28
123.	The coming Magh Mela	28
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
	Nil.

QUARTERLY LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

No.	Name.	Locality.	Name of publisher.	Circulation.
	ENGLISH.
	Monthly.
1	Agra Magazine ...	Agra	Priya Lál Saksena ...	500 copies.
2	Allahabad Magazine ...	Allahabad	S. C. Roy
3	Central Hindu College Magazine.	Benares	Board of Trustees, Central Hindu College, Benares.	11,000 „
4	Hindustán Review ...	Allahabad	Munshi Shádi Lál ...	1,500 „
5	Modern Review ...	Allahabad	Ráma Nand Chatterji ...	1,051 „
6	Student World ...	Allahabad	Bábu Chinta Mani Ghose ...	300 „
7	Theosophy in India ...	Benares	Theosophical Society, Benares	5,000 „
8	Virjanand Magazine ...	Partábgarh	S. S. Tug	1,000 „
	Twice a month.
9	Allahabad Law Journal ...	Allahabad	Pandit Man Mohan Lál Nehru	1,000 copies.
	Weekly.
10	Express	Lucknow	Siddíq Ahmad	600 „
	Twice a week.
11	Advocate	Lucknow	Bábu Ganga Prasád Varma ...	1,000 copies.
12	Citizen	Allahabad	Sen & Co., Allahabad ...	650 „
13	Indian People ...	Allahabad	Sidhi Charan Rae ...	700 „
	Daily.
14	Hindosthán	Kálákánkar (Partábgarh) ...	Rája Rámpál Singh ...	200 copies.
15	Indian Daily Telegraph	Lucknow	C. H. Bull	1,250 „
	ROMAN.
	Monthly.
16	Sipáhi	Cawnpore	Sita Rám	...
	ANGLO-HINDI.
	Weekly.
17	Báránasi	Benares	Bábu Rás Mohan Sarkár ...	500 copies.
18	Khichri Samáchár ...	Mirzapur	Madho Parshad	Very small.
	ANGLO-URDU.
	Monthly.
19	Aligarh Monthly ...	Aligarh	Wiláyat Husain	500 copies.
	URDU.
	Monthly.
20	Al Akhláq	Agra	Saiyid Gul Bádsháh ...	400 copies.
21	Álamgir	Aligarh	Bábu Pyáre Lál	500 „
22	Al Aziz	Agra	Abdul Aziz Khán ...	300 „
23	Al Hádi	Simrauta (Rae Bareli) ...	Shaikh Fárúq Ahmad ...	937 „
24	Al Islám	Allahabad	Hámid Husain	300 „
25	Al Nur	Nawabganj (Bara Banki) ...	Muhammad Wahid Álam ...	50 „
26	An Nadwah	Lucknow	Abdul Hai	450 „
27	Árya Bandhu ...	Meerut	Dr. Rám Chand	500 „
28	Árya Patra	Bareilly	Pandit Púran Mal... ...	1,900 „
29	Árya Samáchár ...	Cawnpore	Bábu Ánand Sarup ...	500 „

Quarterly list of newspapers—(continued).

No.	Name.	Locality.	Name of publisher.	Circulation.
30	Hamdard-i-Quam ...	Meerut	Raghu Náth Singh ...	1,000 copies.
31	Intikháb-i-Meerut ...	Meerut	Salek Chand	500 „
32	Khátún	Aligarh	Ali Muhammad Khán ...	500 „
33	Pardah Nashin ...	Agra	Mrs. Khámos.
34	Postal Magazine ...	Agra	Abdur Rauf Khán ...	...
35	Rástgo	Allahabad	Anant Deo Prasád ...	...
36	Satopkári	Bareilly	Bareilly Satopkári Sabha ...	1,500 copies.
37	Urdu-i-Mualla ...	Aligarh	Fazl-ul-Hasan, B.A. ...	750 „
38	Vaishya Hitkári ...	Meerut	Mohan Lál	750 „
39	Yadi Bayza	Sikandrábad (Bulandshahr) ...	Saiyid Muhammad Said ...	250 „
40	Zamánah	Cawnpore	Dayá Narain Nigam ...	700 „
41	Zamíndár-wa-Káshtkár ...	Bijnor	Muhammad Khalíl-ur-Rahmán	300 „
42	Ziá-ul-Islám ...	Moradabad	Mushtáq Husain ...	450 „
	Twice a month.
43	Akhbár-i-Imámia ...	Lucknow	Saiyid Ábid Ali	250 copies.
44	Al Faiz	Fyzabad	Muhammad Yusuf ...
45	Anjan-Akhbár ...	Moradabad	Hakím Mindhai Lál ...	500 „
46	Khurshíd-i-Nánpára ...	Nánpára (Bahraich) ...	Bádullah	200 „
47	Muraqqa-i-Tasawwar ...	Fatehpur	Karím Bakhsh	127 „
48	Násir-ul-Akhbár ...	Meerut	Ahmad Husain	150 „
	Weekly.
49	Agra Akhbár	Agra	Khwája Siddiq Husain ...	204 copies.
50	Al Bashír	Etáwah	Muhammad Bashír-ud-din ...	850 „
51	Aligarh Institute Gazette	Aligarh	Muhammad Mumtáz-ud-din ...	350 „
52	Al Islám	Aligarh	Shaikh Saiyid Ahmad ...	250 „
53	An Najm	Lucknow	Maulvi Abdus Shakúr ...	400 „
54	An Nasir	Budaun	Muhammad Shaida Husain ...	225 „
55	Áwáza-i-Khalq ...	Benares	Guláb Chand	600 „
56	Cawnpore Gazette ...	Cawnpore	Har Nám Singh	500 „
57	Colonel	Moradabad	Muhammad Ismáil ...	250 „
58	Dabdaba-i-Sikandari ...	Rampur	Muhammad Fárúq Hasan ...	300 „
59	Fitnah	Gorakhpur	Hakím Abdul Karím Khán ...	400 „
60	Hind	Lucknow	Ram Shankar Prasad ...	...
61	Hindustáni	Lucknow	Bábu Ganga Prasád Varma ...	1,300 copies.
62	Indian Punch ...	Budaun	Kamar-ul- Hasan	500 „
63	Isrár-i-Álam	Allahabad	Muhammad Isháq	...
64	Jadd-o-Jehad	Sháhábád (Hardoi) ...	Shaikh Faiyáz Ali ...	280 copies.
65	Jádu	Jaunpur	Abdur Rahman Khán ...	Very small.
66	Jám-i-Jam	Allahabad	Abdul Manán	...
67	Kanauj Punch ...	Kanauj (Farrukhabad) ...	Abdur Rahim Khán ...	465 copies.
68	Káyasth Hitkári ...	Agra	Ahmad Husain	400 „
69	Mashriq	Gorakhpur	Hakim Barham	...
70	Mufíd-i-Ám ...	Agra	Qádir Ali Khán Súfi ...	150 copies.

Quarterly list of newspapers—(continued).

No.	Name.	Locality.	Name of publisher.	Circulation.
71	Mukhbir-i-Álam ...	Moradabad	Qázi Abdul Ali	300 copies.
72	Musáfir	Agra	Pandit Bhoj Dat	800 „
73	Naiyar-i-Azam ...	Moradabad	Saiyid Ibn-i-Ali	350 „
74	Najm-i-Bázigh ...	Moradabad	Muhammad Ismáil Khán ...	200 „
75	Nizám-ul-Mulk ...	Moradabad	Qázi Mazhar Qayúm ...	367 „
76	Public News	Meerut	Ragubir Singh	1,000 „
77	Oudh Punch	Lucknow	Muhammad Sádiq	300 „
78	Qulqul	Bijnor	Qázi Nazar Husain ...	350 „
79	Rafíq Punch	Moradabad	Mahmúd-ul-Hasan ...	450 „
80	Rahbar	Moradabad	Brij Lál	400 „
81	Riyáz-i-Faiz	Pilibhít	Munshi Dál Chand ...	160 „
82	Riyáz-ul-Akhbár ...	Lucknow	Saiyid Riyáz Ahmad ...	300 „
83	Rohilkhand Gazette ...	Bareilly	Shaikh Abdul Azíz ...	500 „
84	Sahífa	Bijnor	Maulvi Nur-ul Hasan ...	300 „
85	Shahna-i-Hind ...	Meerut	Ahmad Hasan Shaukat ...	250 „
86	Sitára-i-Hind ...	Moradabad	Muhammad Ismáil ...	115 „
87	Sulaimáni Akhbár ...	Benares	Kashi Nath	1,000 „
88	Surma-i-Rozgár ...	Agra	Itrat Husain	200 „
89	Swarajya	Allahabad	Maháshaya Nárain ...
90	Tafríh	Lucknow	Rámji Dás Bhárgava ...	1,000 „
91	Tohfa-i-Hind	Bijnor	Munshi Jairáj Singh ...	375 „
92	Union Gazette ...	Bareilly	Karam Iláhi	175 „
93	Zul Qarnain	Budaun	Maqbúl-ur-Rahmán ...	700 „
	Twice a week.
94	Nasím-i-Agra ...	Agra	Bíreshwar Sányál ...	300 copies.
	Daily.
95	Oudh Akhbár... ...	Lucknow	B. Manohar Lal	600 copies.
	ARABIC-URDU.
	Twice a month.
96	Al Bayán	Lucknow	Maulvi Abdul Wali ...	150 copies.
	HINDI.
	Monthly.
97	Anand Kádambini ...	Mirzapur	Pandit Badri Naráin ...	Very small.
98	Bhárat Sudasha Pravartak	Farrukhabad	Pandit Ganesh Prasád Sharma	350 copies.
99	Bráhman Kul Chandrika...	Cawnpore	Shankar Dayál	275 „
100	Bráhman Samáchár ...	Parichhatgarh (Meerut) ...	Pandit Chhuttan Lál ...	400 „
101	Bráhman Sarvasva ...	Etáwah	Pandit Bhímsen Sharma ...	800 „
102	Dayanand Patrika ...	Meerut	Pandit Mutsaddi Rám ...	100 „
103	Garhwáli	Dehra Dún	Pandit Girja Dat Naitháni ...	850 „
104	Hindi Pradíp... ...	Allahabad	Bálkrishna Bhatt ...	200 „
105	Jásús	Gahmar (Ghazipur) ...	Gopál Rám ...	500 to 600 copies.
106	Kalwár Gazette ...	Mirzapur	Bábu Sita Rám	1,100 „
107	Kalwár Mitra ...	Allahabad	Bánke Lál	400 „
108	Kánya Kubj Hitkári ...	Cawnpore	Manohar Lál	800 „

Quarterly list of newspapers—(concluded).

No.	Name.	Locality.	Name of publisher.	Circulation.
109	Kavindra Bátika ...	Allahabad	Bisheshar Náth	400 copies.
110	Khatri Hitkári ...	Benares	Bálmukund Varma ...	500 „
111	Kshatriya	Meerut	Shádi Rám Varma... ...	...
112	Nágri Prachárak ...	Lucknow	Bábu Gopál Lál	...
113	Nigamágam Chandrika ...	Benares	Narayan Rao	3,750 copies.
114	Sanádhyopkárak ...	Agra	Shankar Lál	400 „
115	Sanátan Dharm Patáka ...	Moradabad	Pandit Rám Sarúp ...	1,300 „
116	Saraswati	Allahabad	Bábu Chintámani Ghose ...	1,600 „
117	Shri Rághavendra ...	Allahabad	Chaube Dwárka Prasád ...	500 „
118	Sudha Ságar	Cawnpore	Pandit Sahdeo Prasád Vaidya...	1,250 „
119	Swadesh Bándhava ...	Agra	Kunwar Hanuwant Singh ...	1,000 „
120	Vánijya Sukhdáyak ...	Benares	Bábu Jagannáth Prasád Singh	1,000 „
121	Ved Prakásh	Meerut	Pandit Tulsi Rám ...	1,000 „
	Twice a month.
122	Almora Akhbár ...	Almora	Munshi Sadánand Sanwál ...	155 copies.
123	Rájpút	Agra	Hanwant Singh	1,800 „
	Weekly.
124	Abhyudaya	Allahabad	Rám Sewak Pándey ...	...
125	Ánand	Lucknow	Pandit Shiva Náth ...	100 copies.
126	Árya Mitra	Agra	Hukam Singh	1,400 „
127	Bhárat Jíwan ...	Benares	Bábu Shri Kishan Varma ...	1,550 „
128	Jain Gazette ...	Deo Band (Saharanpur) ...	Jugul Kishore	...
129	Prayág Samáchár ...	Allahabad	Rámgopál Sharma... ...	250 copies.
130	Sansár Mitra	Allahabad	Sen & Co., Ld., Allahabad ...	300 „
131	Sunder Shringár Samáchár	Muttra ...	Jagannáth Dás ...	1,000 „
	Twice a week.
132	Mohini	Kanauj (Farrukhabad) ...	Puttan Lál	500 copies.
	Daily.
133	Hindosthán	Kálákánkar (Partabgarh) ...	Rája Rámpál Singh ...	250 copies.
	HINDI-URDU.
	Monthly.
134	Árya Darpan	Sháhjahanpur	Bakhtáwar Singh ...	600 copies.
135	Baranwál Saháyak ...	Moradabad	Durga Prasád	...
136	Dharm Panch ...	Meerut	Parbhu Dayál Sharma ...	500 copies.
137	Kashmír Darpan ...	Lucknow	Munshi Ajodhia Prasád ...	300 „
	SANSKRIT.
	Monthly.
138	Saddharm	Bindrában (Muttra) ...	Vámna Chárya	200 copies.

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad-Hardoi) of the 23rd December, while describing the awakening of the people of Turkey and the reforms recently introduced into the Turkish Government, expresses its gratification at the freedom allowed to the press by the Government of Turkey.

Awakening of the Persians and the Anglo-Russian treaty.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 23rd December, 1907.

The editor points out that the Turkish newspapers denounce the ratification of treaty between England and Russia as destructive and ruinous to the interests of the Persian Government.

2. Referring to the Anglo-Russian Convention in continuation of its issue of the 24th December, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 25th December, describes at length the system of the Government of Afghanistan and its relation with the British Crown.

The Anglo-Russian convention.

OUDH AKHBAR, 25th December, 1907.

The editor then refers to the policy of European Governments and the way in which they gradually encroach upon the neighbouring foreign possessions, and remarks that the convention recently concluded between England and Russia and the alleged extension of the Russian Railway to Afghanistan will give grave cause of suspicion to the Governments of Persia and Afghanistan.

(b).—Home.

3. Commenting on the present situation in India, the Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 23rd December, (received on the 2nd January), says that neither the Extremists nor the Moderates are desirous of driving out the English. Both of them only want to improve the condition of the Indian population as a whole. Such a reform has nothing to do with sedition. Indians have never been guilty of sedition. They are loyal to the core. Seeing that their representations have not received any consideration they now want to do something for themselves, which should in no way be disquieting to the rulers. Neither should the people refrain from taking part in movements calculated to ameliorate the condition of the country for fear of offending the rulers, since the latter are not opposed to the country's progress and would be the first to lend their support if necessary.

The present situation.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR, 23rd December, 1907.

4. Referring to the remarks made in the course of a speech by a missionary at a meeting held in Madras, that agitation in India was the outcome of the higher education that is imparted to the Indians, and that to counteract its effect they should now in future be educated only through their own vernaculars, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th December, says that perhaps he has been led to make such remarks in the hope of dealing a blow to the growing feeling of nationality in this country owing to English having become the common language here. The editor points out that the missionary will be disappointed to know that the Indians now fully realize the importance of having one common language, and that steps are being taken to make Hindi such a language, and thus the removal of English from the course of studies in Indian universities cannot be a bar to their progress towards a united nationality.

The present unrest.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th December, 1907.

5. While expressing its gratitude to His Imperial Majesty and to the late lamented Queen Victoria for the various boons which have been conferred upon Indians and the just and unprejudiced policy of the British Government as expressed in the Proclamation, the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 31st December, holds Lord Curzon and others whom he describes as self-opinionated, prejudiced, imprudent and short-sighted officials, responsible for the recent disturbances and agitation in India.

Present situation in India and its remedy.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 31st December, 1907.

The editor suggests that no such friction of feelings could ever take place between the Government and the peaceful and loyal people of India if the Prince of Wales were appointed the Viceroy of India and invites the attention of His Majesty to the suggestion, which besides removing the existing unpleasant feelings between the rulers and the ruled, will also make the Indians ever grateful, and more intimately connected with the British Crown.

ANAND, 26th December, 1907.

Indians in the Transvaal.

6. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 26th December, says that the ill-treatment of the Indians by the Transvaal Government is a disgrace to the Imperial Government, which will do well to save its reputation by espousing the cause of the oppressed Indians and plainly telling the Boers that they must give up illtreating the Indians.

HINDUSTANI, 1st January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

7. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 1st January, referring to Mr. Polak's article in the Hindustan Review, remarks that it is the duty of the Imperial Government to put an end to the sufferings of the Indian residents in Transvaal, and to take steps to ensure that all the inhabitants of that country may live in peace.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 3rd January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

8. In the issue of the 3rd January, the editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), writes that the question of British Indians in the Transvaal is the most important one of the hour, for the time has arrived when the obnoxious legislation of the Transvaal must be put to test. Apparently despite brave words to the effect that they mean to adhere to their policy of degrading British Indian subjects and hounding them out of the country, the Transvaalers are not at all anxious to make the first actual move in that direction.

He quotes Mr. Bhownaggree's advice to the British Indians to fight and to never give in, and says that it is only by determined resistance that interference on the part of the Imperial Government could be compelled, and that resistance was therefore the proper course. The Transvaal though self-governing colony, has not the right to insult British subjects, and he expresses the hope that the Colonial Government will soon be plainly told so. Sir West Ridgeway was very ill-advised in saying that the anti-Asiatic legislation of the Transvaal was condemned only by the agitators in India, and he characterises it as a deliberate misstatement. The attitude adopted by the Transvaal to British Indians is condemned by every Indian and by every white man in this country who has any regard for India and respect for her people.

He remarks that the Daily Telegraph's idea of British East Africa as a Colonial annexe of India is not a way out of the difficulty, that the Transvaal has flung out a challenge to all Asiatic peoples except the Jews, whom she largely patronises, that she has insulted every man of intellect and genius the East has produced, and the evil is bound to bring forth bitter fruit unless its growth be instantly checked.

He says it was not the instinct of self-preservation which had prompted the anti-Asiatic legislation in South Africa, but that it was violent racial prejudice utterly unworthy of a white race.

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

9. Referring to the present situation of the Indians in the Transvaal the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 3rd January, says that when the subjects of a civilized state are illtreated in another state, the former demands compensation from the latter and in default of its payment even goes to war with it. But to whatever troubles the Indians may be subjected, the British Government affects indifference towards them. It is high time that the Imperial Government should intervene and protect its Indian subjects in the Transvaal.

ADVOCATE, 29th December, 1907.

Sentiment in Africa.

10. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th December, writes :—"One cannot but learn with delight the decision to release the Denshawi prisoners on the anniversary of the Khedive's accession. This will take place on 8th January. It will not be out of place here to recall the fact that some British officers were maltreated near the village of Denshawi and the result was not only wholesale arrest of some suspects living in the village and their trial in the most summary fashion, but public flogging of the accused in the most brutal manner, that caused much indignation in both Egypt and England. The incident of brutalising affected the good name of England. Hence the concession to sentiment which is going to be made is but some sort of a reparation, though a very small reparation of an injustice done publicly."

Extension of the Council.

11. While approving the scheme for the extension of the Council as published by the Madras Government the Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi) of the 23rd December, objects to the manner of selecting the member of each community by the majority of the voters belonging to that community. JEDD-O-JEHAD, 23rd December, 1907.

The editor points out that this system of election involves impracticable difficulties and will lead to unmanageable differences between the heterogeneous sections of the Indian public, and suggests the desirability of electing the members without the restriction that the voters should be of the same community or sect from which the member is to be elected.

He is of opinion that this system of election besides being injurious to the interests of the Government, involves another difficulty, namely that it cannot uniformly be observed in all places and circumstances, and in conclusion he remarks that as the Government puts great confidence in the Muhammadans it is hoped that it will give some appointments to the Muhammadans out of the number of seventeen official members also.

Election of the Honorable Nawab Saiyed Mohammad.

12. The Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi), of the 23rd December strongly denounces the views of a contemporary that, as the Honorable Nawab Saiyed Muhammad is an enthusiastic Congressist, his election as a representative of the Madras people in the Viceregal Council will be of little use to the people. JEDD-O-JEHAD, 23rd December, 1907.

The editor is of opinion that it is a mistake to think that Congressmen always look to the interest of the national body at the expense of their countrymen, and that such an idea is the consequence of the unreasoning distrust by some people of the National Congress.

Advisory Councils.

13. Referring to the proposal for the Advisory Councils, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 24th December, suggests the following amendments :— MASHRIQ, 24th December, 1907.

(1) The number of official members should be curtailed because the President can turn the scale by giving the casting vote to any party.

(2) One member should be selected from every district.

He remarks that experience has sufficiently shown that the election of members for the Councils has hitherto been confined to particular districts and most of the districts that can afford capable members are invariably neglected. The case of Gorakhpur Division is specially remarkable in this respect, and the election of one member from every district will surely result in useful reform, in the administration of so big a division as Gorakhpur, because the representatives from other districts and divisions cannot speak with accurate knowledge regarding the needs of that district and division.

(3) If election of members from every district be inadvisable then at least the election should be made from all such districts as have a big population.

He remarks that five members from Municipalities and three from District Boards are insufficient.

(4) There is no objection against the number of the members from the University and the Cawnpore Chamber of Commerce. But if this Government increase the number of able representatives from districts they will be well informed on all educational and commercial questions.

(5) The Government also can increase the number of official members by including the Commissioners of Divisions in the number of the members, which, as has been suggested by the Hindustani, will remove all complaints of the people, and will be a safeguard for the protection of the interests of the Government.

The editor invites the attention of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to his suggestions, and holds out a promise to discuss the selection of the Muhammadan members in some subsequent issue.

NASIM-I AGRA, 27th December, 1907.

District and Divisional Advisory Councils.

14. Referring to the District and Divisional Advisory Councils, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th December, remarks that the creation of these Councils will be a great blessing provided the members of these bodies be men of worth and ability, who can give sound advice on all questions concerning the good of the people.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 29th December, 1907.

Advisory and Legislative Councils.

15. Referring to the proposals for Advisory and Legislative Councils, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 29th December, that the idea of these Councils has not appealed to the public, and never will, as it is difficult to see what material improvements can be brought about in the administration by such bodies.

He notes that no possible benefit can be derived from the Advisory Council which will receive no legislative recognition, and will not be vested with formal powers, that the Council is to be composed of ruling chiefs and territorial magnates, of whome one or two chiefs might be sufficiently well acquainted with Indian affairs to be able to give good advice, but that the majority would scarcely be good advisers as not being in a position to give advice. He remarks that it is doubtful whether the highest chiefs will feel complimented by being appointed Imperial Councillors and that the Nizam, the Gaekwar, and the Maharana of Udaipur will prefer to be out of the Council.

The editor expresses doubt whether most of the ruling chiefs possess much independence, or the courage of their convictions, and says that they are still in the leading strings of Political residents, and that none of them could speak in the Viceroy's Council with such fearlessness as Mr. Gokhale or Dr. Rash Behari Ghcse.

He remarks that the members elected by Provincial Councils had some importance, and are marked men, but that in the new Council they will be swamped by their own countrymen as the council is to be skilfully designed to exclude the lawyer or to reduce his importance. He notes that in the proposed composition of the Legislative Council of these provinces, the lion's share goes to the Muhammadans, and that to ensure their election Muhammadan electorates will have to be formed even though this does not commend itself to all Muhammadans, as for example to those of Basti. In conclusion he remarks that if Hindus and Muhammadans be divided, neither will ever make any progress, that no amount of Government help will make up for the work of self-help, and that only if the Government modifies its legislation in deference to the real public opinion in the country, will the reforms be substantial.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

Presidentship of the Congress.

16. Referring to the meeting of the Extremist party, recently held at the Sarwajanik Sabha, Poona, and to Mr. Pranjpe's request to Dr. Rash Behari Ghose to retire from the Presidentship of the Congress in favour of Lala Lalpat Rai, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December (received on the 27th December), remarks that from the efforts of the adverse party which gives no credit to the services of Mr. Tilak and Lala Lajpat Rai, it can hardly be expected that Lala Lajpat Rai will be allowed to preside over the deliberations of the Congress this year.

The editor strongly denounces the conduct of the adverse party in this respect, and remarks that considering the disinterested self-sacrifice of Lala Lajpat Rai, he would never have been denied any honour in any civilised country other than India.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th December, 1907.

The Surat Congress.

17. Referring to the Congress at Surat, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 26th December, that this year will decide whether all parties in India will work together or whether there will be a definite schism, that the very best men in the new party are against a secession. The Extremists are unwilling to stand aloof from the Congress as in that case they would be marked men and would come into conflict with the Government, and it is evident that they do not want to provoke such a conflict.

He remarks that there is no likelihood of the Congress accepting the views of the new party in their entirety, that so long as the Congress stands together there is hope for every party, but that if the Congress be broken up the hope of Indian nationalism will assuredly be dead. Every man who really loves his country and is not guided solely by personal rancour realises that the integrity of the Congress must not be assailed on any account. The few men who are determined to act as obstructionists throughout the proceedings should, he thinks, be excluded from the Congress as they are not truly patriotic in the real sense of the word, for it is not wholesome antagonism, but wilfully perverse and wicked partisanship and personal malice, which should be carefully eliminated from the Congress.

The Congress Eve.

18. In an article entitled "The Congress Eve" published in the issue of 26th December, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) expresses his assurance that both parties—Moderates and Extremists will at the last moment sink their differences and work harmoniously together to make the Congress at Surat a success. ADVOCATE, 26th December, 1907.

He quotes from two articles "Wanted—A Real National Congress" and "A Plea for unity," which are to appear in the Modern Review for January, in which the writers emphasise the necessity for unity.

Commenting on the former article the editor expresses his opinion that one of the duties of the Congress is to show a practical example in the act of Self-Government.

There could, he notes, be no self-government without self-taxation and the Congress should therefore take early steps to devise a scheme of self-taxation and bring it into force as soon as possible.

Discussing the arguments advanced by the writer of the "Plea for unity," the editor remarks that while he would be the very last to advocate the forcing of any body of educated men to submit slavishly to the views of another set, he agreed that there should be unity in all essential matters, while there might be diversity in non-essentials and that if agreement were not possible on all points, a resolve should be taken to work in unison only on such as are generally approved and that for the rest independent action should be taken.

Health and wealth should be the ideals for Indians, and education was the means to attain both.

Wanted—a real National Congress.

19. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th December, reproduces an advance copy of the article headed "Wanted—A Real National Congress" contributed by Bharadavaja, for the next issue of the Modern Review (Allahabad). ADVOCATE, 26th December, 1907.

Wanted-a real National Congress.

20. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th December, reproduces from the Modern Review (Allahabad), for January, an article headed "Wanted—A Real National Congress." CITIZEN, 30th December, 1907.

The Indian National Congress.

21. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th December, says that the present is a very hard time for the Congress. Apprehensions arise in the mind of the people that it cannot maintain its existence before the new spirit that is making its influence felt in the country. The number of the people who hold that the Congress does no real good is on the increase, the reason being that the Government has not so far paid adequate attention to its representations. Such a hopeless view is certainly detrimental to the existence of the Congress, and therefore it is incumbent upon all the people equally that instead of winding up the Congress, they should make it a more useful body capable of attaining to its object. ABHYUDAYA, 27th December, 1907.

The editor points out that political reforms, as is evident from the history of every civilized country, take long to be accomplished, even in countries where the government is in the hands of their own people, and this is doubly so in the case of India where aliens are its rulers who have to be convinced of the utility of the reforms over and over again before their adoption. It is therefore to be borne in mind that in the matter of political reforms the Congress proposes to effect, delay or seemingly failure should not dishearten the people. Those who find fault with the Congress should not forget that it is not a monopoly of any particular community, and if there are any flaws in it they are as much to blame for them as others. He says that the most important question is not to indulge in carping criticism of the Congress, but to reform it by mutual co-operation, so as to make it capable of attaining Swaraj which is its ultimate goal.

ADVOCATE, 29th December, 1907.

The Surat Congress.

22. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), publishes in the issue of December 29th an account of the proceedings of the Congress.

Referring to the turbulent scenes in the Congress pandal he condemns the action of the Extremists in having made the holding of the Congress impossible.

CITIZEN, 30th December, 1907.

Messrs. Lajpat Rai and Gokhale at Surat Congress.

23. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th December, writes as follows :— "Lala Lajpat Rai arrived here on Wednesday morning. The whole city turned up to receive the oppressed party. A chorus of Bande Matram went up from a thousand throats when the Lala appeared outside the station. He was taken in a grand procession to his bungalow.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale sat with him in the carriage; but cries of 'Gokhale, get down. You deserve not to sit by Lajpat' compelled him to alight. Public opinion manifested itself in an unmistakeable manner. It was a rude shock to Moderate self-complaisance."

CITIZEN, 30th December, 1907.

The Nationalist Conference.

24. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th December, without discussing the breaking up of the Congress, writes as follows :— "The Nationalist Conference commenced its sessions on Tuesday afternoon, Dr. Mehta welcomed all Nationalists. Srijut Aurobindo Ghose was unanimously voted to the chair. He said :—The creed of Nationalism, though having been propagated for the last two years, has made a progress far beyond expectations. The work accomplished in two years was what last fifty years failed to do, since a clear and undisguised goal was defined and preached. Now organised efforts all over the country were urgently needed. He divided the series of work in three branches, e.g. propagation of principles, conversion of the Congress to Nationalist creed and organisation of our resources. To-day only the conversion of the Congress is to be considered. The remaining two would be taken up on the 29th. The President called upon Sj. Tilak to explain at length the objects of this Conference.

Sj. Tilak in course of his vigorous speech showed how the Nationalists were gaining ground every day and how it was possible for them to convert the Congress to their faith. He declared Independence as their goal. The nation would not be happy unless that goal was reached. The Nationalists would brave any difficulties but would not give up their faith.

Sj. Kelkar, editor of the Mahratta, was elected Secretary for the session. He read three letters to the Reception Committee, the first one requesting the Committee to formulate a scheme for formation of the Subjects Committee on a fair representative basis, the second letter to the Reception Committee and Joint Secretaries asking them to arrange previously for the decision of house on some resolutions including presidential election. The third letter, addressed to all delegates, Moderates or Nationalists, was written with a view to ascertain how many were for passing the same resolutions as those passed in last year and not for thrusting back the Congress if not for progressing forward. All these were unanimously passed.

400 delegates and 1,000 Nationalist visitors attended. On signing the solemn declaration on oath Mr. Dravid and other members of Mr. Gokhale's 'Servants of India Society' were covered (sic) in the Conference. They have solemnly declared on oath that they were Nationalists and were severely rebuked for shamelessness."

HINDUSTANI, 1st January, 1908.

The Congress.

25. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 1st January, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th December 1907, on the Congress.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd January, 1908.

The split in the Congress.

26. Referring to the split in the Congress, the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd January, has the following :—"We are glad that the long-threatened parting has been effected, though in a somewhat tragic fashion. Will there be two Indian National Congresses? Let us see. The Congress so far has not been joined largely by all sections of the community. It has now been deserted by another section. But any movement that sets up the ideal of Self-Government without the Empire will not be recognised as the National Congress, and we very much doubt whether such a movement will be allowed to hold public meetings very long. A repudiation of the British connection will be scarcely permitted by the British so long as they are here. On the other hand, the new party has lost Lala Lajpat Rai, by whom they have been swearing for the last six months. Lala Lajpat Rai values national unity above everything else and he would be no party to the game that was being played at Nagpur and Surat. The Lala is now definitely with the Moderates. Mr. Tilak was never with the Moderates. Lala Lajpat Rai never actually disowned the Moderates. On the whole, the profit and loss account does not show very heavy loss."

The Congress crisis.

27. Referring to the Congress fiasco at Surat, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 2nd January, that he is convinced that Mr. Tilak is responsible for the sad catastrophe, and that no man has a right to oppose the election of the president of a meeting because he is afraid that the meeting may not take into consideration any motion which he wishes to propose.

ADVOCATE, 2nd January, 1907.

In view of what has occurred, he suggests that, so far from any amendment being allowed to be proposed regarding the election of the President, the President should be nominated at least three full months before the date of the Session, and also that the speakers on the most important subjects should be announced at least a month before the dates of the session. In this way alone will the views of the Congress command that respect and consideration to which he thinks they are entitled.

The Congress had not yet declared itself for autonomy, independent of British control, and boycott of foreign, much less of British goods, for the whole of India. It had in no way restrained the Nationalists from preaching boycott and holding up before the country what Mr. Tilak characterised as the more "inspiring ideal" of self-government. Why then was there this haste to force the Congress to the views of the Extremist against the opinions of the majority?

The Moderates had consulted the best interests of the country by naming their organization based upon the creed of constitutional agitation, the National Convention. They had wisely left open the way to a settlement of the difference between the parties, and agreement on certain aims on which the Congress edifice might be reared again.

Could not the Extremists, the editor asks, with a spirit of self-sacrifice submit to the views of the majority and render the Congress possible, while retaining the perfect right to turn the whole body to their way of thinking by reasonable and constitutional methods?

The Surat Convention.

28. In the issue of January 2nd, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), gives details of the Convention which was held by the Moderate party at Surat after the postponement of the Congress. None of the Extremists were allowed access into the pandal. Sir Pherozeshah Mehta opened the Convention, and in his speech declared that his audience had been invited to form a Convention for the purpose of promoting the interests of the country, and proposed that Dr. Ghose should be requested to preside. Mr. Surendronath Banerji and Lala Lajpat Rai seconded the motion.

ADVOCATE, 2nd January, 1908.

Dr. Ghose took the chair and said that the object of the Convention was to select a representative committee, which should formulate a constitution for the Congress, and lay down the lines on which the political agitation should be carried on. The functions of the committee were to frame rules for the orderly conduct of future meetings. Mr. Gokhale was then invited to move the resolution appointing the committee.

Mr. Gokhale said that the committee is to be composed of over a hundred members, which is to meet if possible during Easter, and if not then in September. He read the names of the committee which included leading Congressmen from all the provinces. Mr. A. Chaudhri and Dewan Bahadur Govindaraghava Iyer supported the motion, and Mr. Gokhale and D. E. Wacha were elected Joint Secretaries to the Committee. After a vote of thanks the Convention was dissolved.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd January, 1908.

Mr. Tilak's explanation.

29. Referring to the statement made by Mr. Tilak to his own party after the disruption of the Congress, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 2nd January, that in saying that the Surat Congress proposed receding from the position taken up in Calcutta, Mr. Tilak made a statement for which there was absolutely no evidence.

In doing what he had done Mr. Tilak has, in the writers opinion, placed himself beyond the pale of compromise and no Moderate Congressman will henceforth associate or co-operate with him. No assurance that he may give that neither he nor any other of his party will try to hinder the work of the Congress will be accepted.

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd January, 1908.

The 23rd Session of the Congress.

30. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 3rd January, says that the disgraceful conduct of the Extremists at the last Congress has led some people to think that henceforward the Congress has been divided into two bodies, while others point out that its existence has now come to an end. The editor however exhorts all right-thinking men not to allow the Congress to pass out of existence, seeing that it has succeeded materially in welding the Indians into one nation and promises to be of useful service to them in future. Nor should they allow it to be split into two bodies inasmuch as such an action will be a heavy blow to the formation of the Indian nationality, which is expected to be a very significant factor in the future progress of India. He is not solicitous as to who controls the Congress, whether the Extremists or the Moderates, so long as it is preserved intact, and as it represents all Indians and is actually a working institution. He however advises those who may have to guide the Congress not to do anything which may lead the Government to apply its newly forged Seditious Meetings Act to it, otherwise they will lose this useful instrument in their constitutional struggle with the Government for their rights and privileges, and their progress will be hampered for many years to come.

OUDH AKHBAR, 3rd January, 1908.

The Congress in London.

31. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 3rd January referring to the proposal of holding the next session of the Congress in London, remarks that it would be futile to do so as the English Government is well aware that the Congress does not represent the whole people of India, and as the English will never consider favourably any question in which their interests clash with those of India.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

Extremists versus Moderates.

32. Referring to the difference of opinion between Sir Pheroz Shah Mehta and Mr. Tilak regarding the election of the President for the All-India National Congress, on the authority of the Kesari, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, (received on the 27th December) remarks :—"The entire fuss and difference between the platform parties is simply a matter of opinion. They differ not in their aims and objects but in the way they adopt to achieve those objects. It is clear that the new party (Extremists ?) has sprang out of the old one, when the latter had failed to achieve success by mere petitions and mild representations. Hence it is foolish to think that they will ever be so foolish as to do any harm to the national body simply for the sake of slight differences.

Considering the current of public opinion, the extraordinary success achieved by the new party in other countries outside India and the determination of the people never to submit to the new law, it will not be out of season to say that in the old party will soon recognise the necessity of yielding to the new one, that the signs of the times invite us to betake ourselves to practical measures, and that there is strong reason to believe that the old party will soon sink into oblivion."

ADVOCATE, 26th December, 1907.

Extremist Methods and Ideals.

33. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th December, reproduces the account of an interview with Mr. Tilak by Mr. Nevinson from the Manchester Guardian of December 2nd under the heading—'Extremist' Methods and Ideals.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

Anglo-Russian convention and Indian army expenses.

34. Considering the proposal to impose on India an additional tax of three crores of rupees a year for military expenditure on the army, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December (received on the 27th December), remarks that it was a vain hope that the concluding of the Convention between England and Russia would result in the curtailment of the heavy burden of army charges upon the starving Indians.

The editor in conclusion remarks that India is after all a conquered country and it must bear the additional burden of the tax without murmur or opposition, but that an undue advantage of power can never last for ever, and that before long it will end in irrevocable ruin and destruction.

35. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December (received on the 27th December), strongly criticises the suggestion of Sir B. Fuller, to reform the administration of India by dividing the country into twenty-two small provinces, each to be governed by a Commissioner assisted by a number of advisers.

Sir B. Fuller's suggestion.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

The editor points out that if this suggestion be acted upon, it will make the administration worse, as it is foolish to hope that people will be so self-sacrificing and disinterested as to forego their personal interests for the public good.

In conclusion he remarks that although Sir B. Fuller has no connection with India he imagines himself under some obligation to do the worst he can for the Indians.

36. While pointing out that the progress of a nation in education and its struggles to obtain its rights in politics are the sure signs of its success, regeneration and prosperity, the Qulqul (Bijnor) of the 23rd December, strongly denounces the unsympathetic attitude of the Muhammadans towards the Hindus, who are far more advanced than the former both in education and in the demand for the natural rights of independence and for a greater share in the administration of their country.

What should the Muhammadans do ?

QULQUL, 23rd December, 1907.

The editor regrets the backward condition of the Muhammadans in education, their degeneration, their apathy and sheer indifference in the matter of asserting their independence, and asking for the political rights of their community.

He advises Muhammadans to be scrupulously careful not to be led away by the persuasions of the treacherous and over-selfish Hindus, who profess to be sympathetic towards them, and ask for their co-operation in their struggle for independence, and that it is high time now that they should awaken to the sense of their duty if they care to maintain their own among the rising nations of the civilised world.

He also urges that, as the needs and political interests of the Muhammadans are quite different from those of the Hindus, they should now lose no opportunity to form a political body of their own with aspirations more lofty and genuine than those of their Hindu brethren.

37. Referring to the object of the Decentralisation Commission, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th December, suggests that the scope of the Commission's enquiry should also include the functions of the Cantonment Magistrates and that two different persons should be appointed for the posts of the Cantonment Magistrate and Cantonment Secretary, as it is very necessary for the good administration of justice that no officer should be allowed to try a case instituted by himself.

The Decentralisation Commission.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th December, 1907.

38. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th December, referring to the scare produced in England by Count Okuma's speech at Kobe, remarks that the Government has nothing to fear from Japan, so long as it can confidently command the sympathy of the people. The best way for protecting itself from Japanese aggression would be to cultivate the good-will of the people.

Count Okuma's speech.

RAHBAR, 28th December, 1907.

39. Referring to the return of Lord Minto to Calcutta, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 29th December, that he is in accord with the Indian Daily News in attributing many of the blunders committed by the Local Governments to the absence of the Viceroy from Calcutta. He continues that the need for the Viceroy's presence in the actual capital becomes all the more imperative when it is remembered that the problems that are going to settle the future character of the British rule in India are largely urban and not agricultural. The great failure of the Indian Civil Service is, he thinks, that it does not care about, and has fallen short of appreciating the urban problem of India. If Calcutta had the restraining effect of a resident Government, the writer in the Indian Daily News remarked, it would have never got so far out of hand as it has done of recent years. It is the big cities that are going to count in the future of India, and it is there that the poison of disaffection may be fostered if not manufactured, and the Government ought to be there to supply the antidote. He remarks that what the antidote is to be it is not a hard task to find out, and that it will certainly not be in repression and flogging and what is called strength, but in sympathy and honesty and common sense as would be admitted by all persons with knowledge and experience. This remedy cannot be applied from the hills any more than from London.

The Viceroy in Calcutta and the future problem.

ADVOCATE, 29th December, 1907.

He writes that a personal Government is worth nothing if the Governor is not in the midst of the people in person.

ADVOCATE, 29th December, 1907.

India under Liberal Ministry.

40. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th December, reproduces from the India (London) an article entitled "India under Liberal ministry a period of nine months."

The Hind (Lucknow), of the 2nd January also reproduces a translation of the same.

OUDH AKHBAR, 30th December, 1907.

The rulers and the ruled.

41. While expressing its gratitude for the various favours which the Government has of late bestowed upon its Indian subjects, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 30th December, explains what it considers to be the causes of the friction between the people and the Government.

The editor quotes the views of the Daily News (London) regarding the recent disturbances and agitation in India, which holds the recent conduct of Indians as innocent and justified.

He points out that the Indians are now actuated with a feeling of nationality which the Government can never suppress with harsh and repressive measures, and advises the Government to appease the national leaders by mild and wise measures which will put an end to the existing hostility and friction between the rulers and the ruled.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd January, 1908.

The Old and the New years.

42. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd January, referring to the Old Year remarks :—"Of the many dark years that India has recently known the year 1907 will long be remembered as the darkest. It witnessed the arrest and deportation of Lala Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh on charges which will be never known to the public, but in their case it also witnessed their release. It was in this fateful year that repressive measures, never yet known in the history of the British domination in India, were introduced, and, while the Ordinance about public meetings expired after six months, it was replaced by the Seditious Meetings Act on the statute book for three years. Numerous prosecutions for sedition were instituted in the Punjab, Bengal and Bombay. At Rawalpindi a number of leading lawyers were arrested and detained in the lock-up on charges which proved to be unfounded. Excited alarmists and probably a number of officials were under the belief that India was on the verge of another Mutiny, on the fiftieth anniversary of the first Mutiny—a conjecture as wild as it was baseless. The shadow of a great and terrible famine fell on the country in this year. After ten years this year saw the attempted assassination of a district officer in a part of the country where such an offence would have been deemed impossible. Finally, and bitterest of all, for the first time since its establishment the Indian National Congress could not be held this year owing to the determined opposition of a minority of the delegates who had assembled at Surat. It is enough to make every Indian, of whatever party, hang down his head in shame and weep tears of blood at the arrested progress of the nation. What the bureaucracy could not do, what no repressive measures could have accomplished we have done ourselves, and we stand to-day divided and humiliated in the eyes of the world.

Adverting to the new year, the editor writes as follows :—It is impossible to disguise the fact that the New Year dawns upon a period of grave anxiety in the history of India. The grip of the famine will tighten as the year advances, but this is a calamity with which the country is familiar. Very disquieting is the prospect as regards the future of the country, and the relations between the rulers and the ruled. There is a settled feeling among the rulers that there is an organised movement of hostility against British rule. It has not so far manifested itself in action, but there is an active propaganda carried on by the spoken and the written word to create an inimical feeling against the Government. In the past year the Government took energetic and even despotic measures to suppress these propaganda, but with doubtful success. The new political party that has sprung into existence will not be satisfied with anything less than absolute autonomy, or Self-Government outside the British Empire and this goal is to be attained by boycott and passive resistance. But if this course is pursued for any length of time, or with any success, it must eventually lead to a direct and bitter struggle with the Government, and while the Government is quite prepared there are no signs of preparation among those who will have nothing to do with British rule. To preach a doctrine without any preparation for carrying it into practice is the height of unwisdom, but the unrest that has been agitating India has produced a class of men who do not consider it necessary to make their actions conform to their professions. In the country itself the schism that has been threatening for some time is now complete, the temporary wreckage of the Indian National Congress bearing witness to this internal strife. Instead of the future of India being assured it is more doubtful to-day than it was twenty years ago and the New Year brings with it a message of despair rather than a word of hope."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Nil.

III.—Native States.

Legislative Councils in Native States.

43. Referring to the advantages and public good accruing from Legislative Councils in the British administration, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th December, suggests the desirability of the constitution of similar Councils in Native States also.

NASIM I-AGRA, 27th December, 1907.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

The period of limitation of mortgage suits.

44. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 23rd December, strongly denounces the indifference of the Government in not taking notice of the distress of the people caused by the exacting rates of interests charged by the money-lenders in this country, and condemns the policy of the Government in framing a Bill to counteract the effect of the wise decision of the Privy Council which has curtailed the limitation period of the mortgage suits from 60 to 12 years.

QULQUL, 23rd December, 1907.

He also remarks that in passing the Bill the British Government will be looked upon as more selfish and self-interested than the Government of Russia, as the passing of the Bill will not only bring a handsome income to the Government by the extraordinary rise in sale of stamps, but it will bring great calamities on many noble families which are already in the clutches of the Shylock like money-lenders of this country.

The period of limitation of mortgage suits.

45. A correspondent of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 25th December, complains that in extending the period of limitation of mortgage suits, the Government is acting only in the interest of the bankers, and does not take into consideration the sufferings of the debtors.

HINDUSTANI, 25th December, 1907.

The Rohilkhand Gazette defamation case.

46. The Rhabar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, (received on the 27th December), expresses its gratification at the dismissal of the defamation case brought against the editors of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) and the Mushir Deccan (Hyderabad).

RAHBAR 14th December, 1907.

The editor remarks that the result of these cases shows the healthy development of the vernacular press in this country, and the disinterestedness and honesty of the accused editor in bringing to light the misconduct and malpractices of the discomfited complainants in their capacity of public servants.

In conclusion he advises his contemporaries not to waste their energies in party questions and private attacks, but to direct their whole attention to national questions, and with joint efforts work out the solution of the big problems of the day which will bring them credit and exalt them in the estimation of the public.

HINDUSTANI, 25th December, 1907.

Whipping.

47. A correspondent writing to the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 25th December, suggests the advisability of abolishing the punishment of whipping as being inhuman and as no time is given to the offender to appeal to a higher authority.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th December, 1907.

Reform in the constitution of jury hearing the trial of a European.

48. Referring to the inadequacy of the punishments awarded to Messrs. Moore and Sterling in the rape and shooting cases respectively, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th December, suggests the desirability of deciding all cases in which the accused are Europeans by means of a jury composed of a number of Europeans and Indians.

The editor expresses the hope that this system will remove the suspicions as to racial prejudice and favour which are entertained by the public regarding the decisions in such cases.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th December, 1907.

The Wood's case and the Rawalpindi riot case.

49. Referring to the decision of the British Government regarding the payment of compensation to officers who were put to unnecessary expenses and inconvenience in connection with the Wood's case, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th December, says that many persons in India would impugn this display of generosity of the Government towards its own officers at Home on the ground that no consideration was shown to the innocent accused in the Rawalpindi riot case but that they should bear in mind that to have discharged the accused in the latter case was no little favour towards them.

HINDOSTHAN, 2nd January, 1908.

The Rawalpindi rape and the Lahore shooting cases.

50. The editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), refers in the issue of the 2nd January to the Rawalpindi rape and the Lahore shooting cases and remarks that these were instances of miscarriage and perversion of justice. The Government of India and Mr. Morley, the editor writes, have it in their power to remedy these wrongs, and they should exercise it. This is the testing moment, and they should show that all their professions about doing justice to India and her cause are made in good faith.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 31st December, 1907.

The Lahore shooting case.

51. Referring to the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment awarded to Mr. Sterling for murdering an Indian, the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 31st December, contrasts it with the heavy sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment awarded to an Indian for mutilating the hand of a European sergeant in the recent riots in Calcutta, and attributes it to the racial prejudice of the Anglo-Indian officials in administering justice between the black and the white.

The Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 28th December, expresses a similar opinion in referring to these cases.

ANAND, 26th December, 1907.

The famine and realisation of revenue.

52. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 26th December, says that the demand of one-fourth of the revenue by the Government from the zamindars will compel the latter to squeeze the same from their tenants, which will make the distress caused by the famine doubly acute while the distribution of the taqavi will produce no alleviating effect.

MASHRIQ, 31st December, 1907.

The famine and realisation of revenue.

53. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 31st December, referring to the inability of the zamindars to recover their rent from their famine-stricken tenants, remarks that the Government should instruct its officers to be very lenient in the collection of revenue, and it would be much better if the collections are postponed. When this is done, it would be advisable to make the zamindars pay their dues in instalments and not in a lump sum, as they will find it very difficult to get together large amounts.

(b).—Police.

ADVOCATE, 29th December, 1907.

The Manda murder case and the Allahabad Defence Association.

54. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), publishes in the issue of 29th December, an account of the trial of the accused in the Manda murder case.

After giving details of the case he remarks that as had been expected, the Judge has acquitted all the accused.

The accused were, he writes, at first undefended, but later on some of the local vakils, getting information of the innocence of the accused and the oppression of the police, interested themselves in the case and worked for several days without any remuneration.

The editor invites the attention of Government to the finding of the Judge that the accused were severely beaten while in police custody, and remarks that such a flagrant case of police oppression which might have ended in five human lives being lost, should not be allowed to go unpunished, and the Government should prosecute all those who took part in beating the prisoners and in getting up a false case against them.

He expressed appreciation of the action of the Allahabad Bar and remarked that cases such as the Manda case happen in all parts of the provinces where the accused are unrepresented and that there are Magistrates and Judges who would only be too glad to receive help from professional men on behalf of unrepresented accused. He states that there are members of the Bar, both junior and senior, who would not mind rendering some help to the poor people really in need of legal advice, and that there are districts where accused persons when they come in conflict with influential officers do not get proper legal aid even when questions of principle are involved, and that such cases show the necessity for proper organised work by members of the legal profession. He notes that there was a society in these Provinces organised for the relief of discharged prisoners but that it did not last long, and he advocates in its stead a society for the defence of accused persons which should mainly consist of lawyers willing to help in such a good cause. It would need some funds in order to engage lawyers to help accused persons when honorary services were not available. Fifty intelligent members of the Bar willing to undergo some sacrifice would reform the methods of the police more easily than what scores of memorials and resolutions of Indian public bodies could do. He remarks that there need be no conflict between the organization and the officers and that on the contrary judicial officers would welcome every help coming from disinterested sources.

This is the sort of work that could be undertaken by educated men without much sacrifice or expenditure of money, by which they could make the lives of thousands happier and could prove themselves a terror to wrong-doers. He suggests that what is now being done individually should be done by an organization, and that help should be extended to far off districts in the mufassil.

The Manda murder case.

55. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 1st January, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th December, 1907 and is of opinion that the Government should punish the police officers implicated in the case and that the educated men should form a society to defend innocent people who are oppressed by the police.

HINDUSTANI, 1st January, 1908.

Manda murder case and police.

56. Referring to the acquittal of the accused in the Manda murder case and the remarks of the court condemning the police for illegality of procedure and for torture, the Hind (Lucknow), of 2nd January, asks Government to bring the police to justice for its disgraceful and reprehensible conduct.

HIND, 2nd January, 1908.

The editor further points out that if Government will not take any serious notice of such inhuman conduct by the police, the distress of the people will be past all imagination.

Police torture in Noakhali.

57. Referring to the torture and rape committed by four police constables at village Kazarkhel in the Noakhali district, on an innocent woman whose husband was suspected of a theft, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd December, remarks that the Government should take very serious measures to put a stop to such inhuman atrocities by the police which, unfortunately are of frequent occurrence in this country.

MUSAFIR, 23rd December, 1907.

Conviction of Police officers in Noakhali.

58. Referring to the alleged shameful and inhuman manner in which some police constables tortured a helpless woman in Noakhali and to the subsequent conviction of the aggressors, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 2nd January, expresses the hope that the

HIND, 2nd January, 1908.

United Provinces Government will teach a similar lesson to the police officers for torturing the accused in the Manda murder case.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th December, 1907.

The punitive police force at Jhalakati.

59. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th December, says that those who have been the warmest workers in the cause of the swadeshi movement at Jhalakati have been assessed most heavily to pay for the charges of the punitive police force quartered there, while the Muhammadans have been totally exempted from the assessment. The editor suggest that it may be the Jaziah imposed upon the Hindus.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 3rd January, 1908.

The Agra Police.

60. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 3rd January, complains that thefts have become very frequent in Agra owing to the paucity of the police force in the district The editor is of opinion that it should be reinforced at once.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

ALAMGIR, 15th December, 1907.

The Nickel Coin.

61. The Alamgir (Aligarh) of the 15th December (received on the 2nd January), remarks that considering that the Government makes a profit of 75 per cent. from the nickel coinage it is not more valuable to the people than currency notes.

The editor further remarks that the coin is not approved of by the public, that it is very easy to imitate and counterfeit it, and that it is also apprehended that the profit made out of this coin may lead the Government to think that India is still very rich and prosperous.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

RAHBAR, 21st December, 1907.

Necessity of a separate flesh market in Moradabad.

62. While referring to the objectionable practice of selling all sorts of meat in public streets and open markets in Moradabad, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st December (received on the 27th December), remarks that it naturally wounds the religious feelings of the Hindus and invites the attention of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and the District Magistrate to the matter, suggesting the desirability of constructing a separate market for the sale of meat like Bareilly and other important towns.

BHARAT JIWAN, 23rd December, 1907.

Water supply at Benares.

63. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 23rd December, again complains of the inconvenience to which the people are subjected owing to the shortage of the water supply and invites the attention of the Municipal authorities to the matter.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR, 23rd December, 1907.

Removal of Mr. Khaparde from the Vice-Chairmanship of Amraoti.

64. Referring to the removal of Mr. Khaparde from the Vice-Chairmanship of Amraoti, the Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 23rd December, (receive on the 2nd January), remarks that this measure far from allaying the unrest will all the more increase it. The authorities ought to have thought twice before taking such a step.

UNION GAZETTE, 28th December, 1907.

Bareilly Municipality.

65. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 28th December, complains that the Beharipore road in Bareilly is not properly watered, and invites the attention of the Secretary of the Municipality to remove the nuisance caused by insufficient watering of the roads.

ADVOCATE, 29th December, 1907.

Road lighting in Lucknow.

66. In the issue of the 29th December, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) calls the attention of the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow to the bad lighting of the road between the mosque at Pir Jalil and the Najirabad crossing. The Jhao-Lal-Pul road being under repairs all traffic had been diverted to the Pir Jalil road, and the bad lighting of the latter proves dangerous.

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd January, 1908

Adulteration of milk.

67. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 3rd January, invites the attention of the Health Officer to the local sale of skimmed milk adulterated with arrowroot, and suggests the desirability of steps being taken to stop this pernicious practice as being detrimental to the public health.

(e).—Education.

68. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, (received on the 27th December), refers to a quarrel between the office clerk and the Entrance class students of the Government High School, Moradabad. The students, he hears, refuse to answer the clerk at the roll-call with the usual phrase "present, sir" and say only "Yes", and they have grown so obdurate in their opposition that they do not pay their fees to the clerk in person but remit them by money-order.

Quarrel between the students and the clerk of the Moradabad Government School.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

The editor expresses the opinion that there must be some grave reasons for the trouble, and he promises to find out and inform the public.

69. Referring to the question of the appointment of a European Principal in the Islamia College, Lahore, in the absence of a competent Mnhammadan, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 14th December (received on the 27th December), remarks that the appointment of another Indian would have been much better and more useful than that of a foreigner.

The principal ship of the Islamia College, Lahore.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

The editor further remarks that it is foolish to have the national institution without a head any longer, simply for the sake of racial prejudice, and that any competent Hindu, Parsee, Jew or Christian would do to fill up the vacancy.

70. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, (received on the 27th December), expresses its satisfaction at the opening of various national institutions in Bombay, Madras and at other important centres of the country, and remarks that it is high time now that the education of the nation should be taken into their own hands as the education hitherto imparted by foreigners has lamentably failed to result in the prosperity and in improved condition for the people which is the true aim of all education.

National Institutions.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

In conclusion he regrets the apathy of the United Provinces men in this respect and exhorts them to do something to impart healthy and useful education in these provinces also.

71. A correspondent in the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 23rd December, says that the Hindi text-books at present prescribed for schools contain nothing of the Hindi language beyond being written in the Devanagri character, and consequently are the worst possible instruments of imparting knowledge of the Hindi language to school boys. He expresses a hope that the Director of Public Instruction will bestow his attention upon the matter and substitute better Hindi text-books for those now prescribed.

Hindi Text-books.

BHARAT JIWAN, 23rd December, 1907.

72. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 26th December, comments on the views expressed by the Reverend Bishop Whitehead that education in India should be more largely imparted in the vernacular, and remarks that while there is no doubt that nothing is so desirable as instruction of any nation through the medium of its own vernacular, in India the solution is not so easy as it is in Japan as there are as many as ten important vernaculars spoken in India, each of which is employed by not less than ten millions of the people.

Bishop Whitehead on education.

ADVOCATE, 26th December, 1907.

While admitting that the spread of education is only possible through these vernaculars, he notes that there are impediments in the way which are stupendous.

As public work has to be discharged through English, there is little or no incentive to the improvement of vernacular literature, and the incentive rather is in the opposite direction. The medium of communication between the Provinces, as also the language in which the proceedings of the Congress and the Provincial Conferences are conducted, is English, which is necessarily so because in both the people had to deal with the British rulers and their doings.

73. Referring to the complaints of the schoolmasters in Lucknow regarding the delay in the payment of their salary, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 2nd January, holds the District Board responsible for the delay, and asks the Deputy Commissioner to arrange for its punctual payment.

Complaint of the schoolmasters in Lucknow.

HIND, 2nd January, 1908.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd January, 1908.

74. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), reproduces in the issue of the 2nd January, a letter from a correspondent dealing with the Agra College, in which the writer remarks that the way in which the contract for the building of the new hostel was given to Messrs. Frizoni & Co. of Allahabad, is very unsatisfactory and unbusiness like, and that the conditions of the contract are yet a mystery even to some members of the Managing Committee.

The Agra College.

The Principal of the College and others who did not like the writer's addressing the papers on the subject last year, were dissatisfied with the work done by the contractor. The supervising engineer had pointed out material differences between the quality and quantity of the work shown in the bills and the work actually done.

The writer expresses the hope that before His Honour visits the hostel, the responsible Trustees will, after examining the building and the Engineer's reports, come to some satisfactory settlement, enabling them to meet the further expenses for the the hostel, without having to call on the public again for subscriptions. He remarks that the public and the Trustees themselves are not convinced of the stability of the building, and that the students also do not find their rooms safe and convenient to live in.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 23rd December, 1907.

75. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 23rd December, suggests the desirability of Government interdicting the export of food grains to foreign countries as the surest means of alleviating the distress caused by famine in India. The editor also exhorts all the leading Indians to take steps to save their countrymen from starvation by founding poor houses, charitable dispensaries and orphanages and by giving gratuitious relief to poor respectable families.

The famine.

MOHINI, 24th December, 1907.

76. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 24th December, says that famine in India does not mean scarcity of food grains but scarcity of money, since it had never been seen in this country that grain is not available when money is forthcoming, and suggests that the best means of successfully combating ever-recurring famines in India, is to increase the income of the people, which is possible only by encouraging indigenous arts and industries.

The famine.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 24th December, 1907.

77. Referring to the distress caused by the prevailing famine among the respectable poor people of this country, the Nizám-ul-mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th December, asks Government to help them by providing them with appointments in the famine relief works or by lending them sufficient sums of money at a small rate of interest, in which way many respectable poor people, who out of shame do not avail themselves of the gratuituos relief allowed by the Government, will be saved from starvation.

The famine.

HINDUSTANI, 25th December, 1907.

78. A correspondent of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 25th December, suggests the advisability of constructing a railway line from Rosa to Sitapur, which was surveyed by the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway in 1905, as it will afford relief to a large number of afflicted people.

Relief works and the Rosa-Sitapur line.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st January, 1908.

79. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st January, suggests the advisability of making a small temporary increase in the pay of the railway employés during the famine. Government servants get famine allowances, and there is no reason why the railway servants should not be treated in the same manner.

Famine allowance to railway servants.

(g).—General.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

80. Referring to the conviction of some persons of Madaripur in East Bengal, charged for forcibly throwing away sweetmeats worth a rupee made of foreign sugar and to the award of Rs. 50 as compensation to the complainant, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, (received on the 27th December), remarks that it is an indirect attempt on the part of the officials to encourage the sale of imported articles.

The swadeshi movement.

The editor further remarks that the officials must consider, as sufficient experience of late has shown, that such harsh policy will simply lead to the final success and triumph of the swadeshi movement, and that it is vain to attempt its suppression by means of such oppressive measures.

The Swadeshi movement.

81. The Jain Gazette (Deobund), of the 24th December, says that as the process of manufacture of most of the foreign articles involves the destruction of life, the Jains who are so particular not to injure life will do well not to use foreign articles, particularly foreign sugar and saffron.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th December, 1907.

The attempted assassination of Mr. Allen.

82. Referring to the attempted assassination of Mr. Allen, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 29th December, that the outrage has sent a thrill of horror throughout the country, and that there is great indignation at Dacca where Mr. Allen was very popular.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 29th December, 1907.

Continuing, he remarks that the attempted murder is regarded by the Anglo-Indian press as a political crime, and is associated with the National Volunteers against whom Mr. Allen was compelled to take some action. This may or may not be perfectly true, but there is no evidence on which any theory might be hazarded.

He suggests that the would-be assassin of Mr. Allen may be only a personal enemy, or some one who bears him malice, and that at all events it is no use making matters worse by wild guesses.

Mr. Allen may yet recover, for the bullet has been safely extracted and he is progressing favourably, so that the design of his intending murderer may yet be frustrated.

The attempted assassination of Mr. Allen.

83. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 1st January, referring to the attempted murder of Mr. Allen, remarks that this will afford the Pioneer a fresh opportunity of reviling the educated Indians and that it is not the work of political fanatics, but probably that of some badmash who was punished by him.

HINDUSTANI, 1st January, 1908.

The attempted murder of Mr. Allen.

84. Referring to the attempted murder of Mr. Allen at Goalando, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th December, says that whenever any assault is made upon Europeans, the Anglo-Indian papers attribute it to the sedition in the country, and that the Englishman and the Pioneer in pursuance of that policy have attributed this incident too to the same cause. The editor asks whether all the murders that are committed are the outcome of sedition, and remarks that it is unjust to fasten the crime upon agitators or National Volunteers without having any evidence to support that supposition, and expresses a hope that the Government will institute an impartial inquiry into the matter without being influenced by the insinuations of the Anglo-Indian Press.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th December, 1907.

The attempted murder of Mr. Allen.

85. Referring to the opinion of the Pioneer and the Englishman that the National Volunteers are responsible for the shooting of Mr. Allen, the Magistrate of Dacca, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 2nd January advises the Government not to be misled by the opinion of the Anglo-Indian newspapers but to order a thorough and sifting enquiry to find out the real offender.

HIND, 2nd January, 1908.

The Pioneer and the attempted murder of Mr. Allen.

86. Referring to the attempted murder of Mr. Allen, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 3rd January, says that the Pioneer is of belief that it was the doing of political agitators. The editor points out that if those who are engaged in tracing out the offender will do their work keeping in view the advice of the "Pioneer", they will never be able to inquire properly into the matter, and it is quite possible that instead of the real culprit being found out the crime may be fixed on some innocent student, and that some political leader may be unnecessarily brought into trouble.

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd January, 1908.

He remarks that to take any steps on the bare reports of detectives without any reliable evidence and at the instigation of such papers as the Englishman and the Civil and Military Gazette, will be likely to lead to similar results as at Rawalpindi. He expresses a hope that the Bengal Government, keeping in view the incidents at Etawah and Rawalpindi, will proceed most cautiously in this matter.

ADVOCATE, 26th December, 1907.

A plea for unity.

87. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th December, reproduces an advance copy of the article headed "A plea for unity" contributed by an Indian Nationalist for the next issue of the Modern Review (Allahabad).

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th December, 1907.

The imperative need for unity.

88. Commenting on the article entitled "A plea for unity" about to be published in the Modern Review, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) remarks, in the issue of the 26th December, that the Indian National Congress is an embodiment of Indian nationalism and that all parties stand in the shade of its ample banner. The new party merely desire that the Congress may be converted to its views, but the rank and file of this party trust more to personal bitterness than anything else to bring about this result. The apprehension that these will do their best to wreck the Congress has been filling the mind of the public in India for several months.

MASHRIQ, 24th December, 1907.

Grievances of office clerks.

89. Referring to the suffering of the overworked and low paid clerks, muharrirs and ahlmads in all departments of the public service, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 24th December, asks the authorities to remove their grievances, as insufficient food and overwork makes them entirely effeminate and threatens the development and growth of many a family.

MASHRIQ, 31st December, 1907.

Grievances of clerks.

90. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 31st December, referring to the grievances of the clerks makes the following proposals :—

(1) Gradation lists of clerks in each district should be prepared and reprinted once in every quarter, so that the element of partiality in promotions may be eliminated.

(2) Transfers should not be too frequent. It is true that a clerk should not be allowed to stay in the same place for a long time, but still transfers should be made at reasonable intervals.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 3rd January, 1908.

Work in holidays.

91. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 3rd January, complains that there are certain officers who neglect their work in the working days, and when the holidays come they prevent their subordinates from enjoying their well-earned rest. This has been the case in the recent Christmas holidays in many offices.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th December, 1907.

The proscribed newspapers.

92. Commenting on the rescinding of the order prohibiting the importation into India of the newspaper Justice, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 26th December, that perhaps the Government will be surprised to learn that notwithstanding its prohibition the proscribed newspaper has been all along being coming into the country.

There are numerous complaints that letters and papers and other covers are frequently opened on suspicion of containing seditious or dangerous matter, but the system of inquisition is not so perfect that the contents of every single packet or letter passing through the Post Office can be opened and examined.

Justice had not changed its party nor its politics, and has easily frustrated the attempt to keep it out of India, and has been regularly brought in by the Post Office.

He expresses the opinion that the only result of the order of prohibition had been the whetting of public curiosity, and the withdrawal of the notification will increase the demand in India for the newspaper in question.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th December, 1907.

The Press and the Government.

93. Commenting on the action of Sir George Clarke, Governor of Bombay, in inviting the co-operation of editors of the vernacular press, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 26th December that the relations between the press and Government have never been friendly and that the action of Sir George Clarke is a remarkable and most welcome departure.

The new Governor of Bombay "not familiar with the traditions of the Civil Service, looks upon the Indian Press with different eyes, and his generous friendliness will meet with a cordial response."

94. Referring to the concessions allowed to officials in the purchase of motor cars and to the changed opinions of the doctors that their use improves the health of the drivers, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, (received on the 27th December), warns the Indians not to be misled by the false and selfish opinions of the doctors, who want to encourage the sale of the motor cars and so enrich their countrymen.

Motor cars.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

95. Referring to the conduct of the English in suppressing the people of Zululand, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, (received on the 27th December), eulogises the magnanimity of the Americans who, taking slavery to be a sin, freely give independence to the people whom they conquer, and remarks that the English should be ashamed of their conduct in this respect and know that they can expect only such blessings from God as they grant to those whom they govern.

The trouble in Zululand.

RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

96. A correspondent in Al-Islam (Aligarh) of the 20th December (received on the 2nd January), writes that, considering the position and office work of the Sub-Registrars, it is very necessary that they should be provided with an orderly.

Office orderly for Sub-Registrar.

AL-ISLAM, 20th December, 1907.

He asks the Inspector-General of Registration, United Provinces, to consider this necessity along with the new scheme for the increase of the salaries of the Sub-Registrars from Rs. 50 per mensem to a maximum of Rs. 250.

97. While denouncing the attitude of certain English newspapers in criticising the strictness lately shown by the Chinese Government in beheading some soldiers for trivial disobedience to military discipline, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st December (received on the 27th December), remarks that such harshness and strict observance of orders is necessary in China in reforming its degenerated army, and that it is the tendency of the civilised peeple to find fault with the most petty shortcomings of their neighbours, while they never think for a moment of the greatest faults of their own brethren. If a European murders an Indian he invariably escapes scathless from the grasp of the law, but if any Indian unfortunately happens to kill a European he is hanged without the slightest hesitation.

The selfish policy of the English.

RAHBAR, 21st December, 1907.

The civilised Europeans drive out the Indians from their countries and it is looked upon as justice, but a similar effort and attempt on the part of the Indians is taken to be rebellion and sedition.

98. Referring to the advice of Mr. Nevinson in asking the Indians not to depend too much on the Government but to do everything by themselves, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st December, (received on the 27th December,) strongly denounces the conduct of the Moderates, who have too much theory without practice, and exhorts the Indians to follow the steps of the Extremists who advocate the adoption of practical measures.

Mr Nevinson's advice.

RAHBAR, 21st December, 1907.

99. Referring to the opposition of the people in England to the reception of the Emperor of Germany as involving a useless waste of public money, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd December remarks that similar conduct on the part of the Indians would have been looked upon as seditious and would have involved them in serious difficulties.

The Emperor of Germany in England.

MUSAFIR, 23rd December, 1907.

The editor also points out that therein lies the difference between the black and the white subjects of His Imperial Majesty.

100. Referring to the conviction of the Barisal Hitaishi, under section 124A, Indian Penal Code, the Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd December, comments on the moral courage and undaunted spirit shown by the editor in not submitting to the ignominy of asking a pardon, and remarks that the disinterested self-sacrifice of the children of the soil will not go in vain.

Conviction of the Hitaishi.

MUSAFIR, 23rd December 1907.

MOHINI, 24th December, 1907.

The condition of the United Provinces.

101. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 24th December, regrets to note that while attempts are being made at the formation of nationality and the promotion of unity in other provinces, the United Provinces is being divided and sub-divided by sectarian societies and associations.

The editor points out that so long as this state of affairs continues, so long the United Provinces will remain the most backward province, as sectarian societies only tend to produce narrow-mindedness and want of brotherly feeling among the people. He advises the people to found one common society whose aim would be to ameliorate the general condition of the whole mass of the people.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th December, 1907.

A grave accusation.

102. Referring to Mr. Nevinson's complaints that his private correspondence had been tampered with, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) states, in the issue of the 26th December, that Mr. Wacha had also complained that letters passing between him and Sir William Wedderburn and Sir Henry Cotton were delayed.

He admits the right of the State to examine and seize treasonable correspondence, but expresses the opinion that that right is undoubtedly exceeded when ordinary correspondence is examined on suspicion, and when privacy is violated without justification.

RAHBAR, 28th December, 1907.

A new capital for India.

103. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th December, referring to the choice of a new capital for India, remarks that in this connection the claims of Delhi and Lucknow should not be ignored.

RAHBAR, 28th December, 1907.

The Justice.

104. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th December, complains that the Government has shown partiality to the Justice in allowing it access to India after being interdicted along with the Indian Sociologist and the Gaelic American.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 31st December, 1907.

India's poverty, its causes and remedy.

105. A correspondent in the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 31st December, while pointing out that the main cause of India's distress from the famine and poverty is the enormous export of grain from the country, suggests the desirability of respectfully approaching the Government through the National Congress or some other organised body with the request to suspend free trade in India for at least five years.

He points out that racial prejudice, sectarian quarrels, and above all the absence of any useful education among the Indians are some of the chief causes of the poverty of Indians, and exhorts them to remove these drawbacks, and cultivate useful knowledge and a taste for arts and industries among themselves, which will surely remove the existing lamentable poverty of their country.

HINDOSTHAN, 2nd January, 1908.

Advice to the Indians.

106. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 2nd January, in reviewing the events of the past year advises public men of India to keep within the limits of the law in demanding their rights from the Government, inasmuch as such a course alone is likely to be beneficial to themselves and the country at large.

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd January, 1908.

Factory Commission.

107. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 3rd January, points out that if the wages and the working hours of the labourers in Indian factories are fixed so as to increase the cost of production a very heavy blow will be dealt to the Swadeshi movement at its very outset. The editor hopes with the Times that this danger will be carefully considered in the report to be prepared by the Factory Commission.

V.—Legislation.

VAISH HITKARI, November, 1907.

The Seditious Meetings Act.

108. Referring to the passing of the Seditious Meetings Act, the Vaish Hitkari (Meerut), for November (received on the 4th January 1908), remarks that the provisions of this Act are so vague that besides political other meetings of social and religious nature may also come within the range of "Public meetings" as defined in the Act. It has also given the police and magistracy a fresh power of terrorising the public.

VI.—Railway.

End of the strike on the East Indian Railway.

109. Referring to the conditional reinstatement of the late strikers on the East Indian Railway, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 14th December (received on the 27th December), remarks that the European guards and drivers on this line have weakened their power by not joining with their Indian brethren in a previous strike, and it is now foolish on their part to hope for success by means of strikes. RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

Rajputana-Malwa Railway.

110. A correspondent in the Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad-Hardoi), of the 23rd December, devotes some seven columns to a description of the troubles of the passengers on the Rajputana-Malwa Railway for want of sufficient accommodation, and asks Railway authorities to take prompt measures to remove the inconvenience to the travelling public, by providing sufficient accommodation when necessary. JEDD-O-JEHAD, 23rd December, 1907.

Railway strikes.

111. The editor of the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th December, expresses the opinion that railway strikes are generally the outcome of the relations between the superiors and the subordinates and of the low salaries of the latter, and that unless these causes are removed strikes cannot be stopped. Referring to the suggestion of an Anglo-Indian contemporary that Europeans should be employed on the Eastern Bengal State Railway so as to teach a lesson to the native employés who have gone on strike, he says that unless the grievances of the strikers are removed the employment of Europeans alone cannot be a remedy to strikes, as has but lately been illustrated on the East Indian Railway, where the white guards went on strike. ABHYUDAYA, 27th December, 1907.

Troubles of the Railway passengers.

112. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th December, referring to the troubles of the third and intermediate class passengers caused by the large number of passengers who are packed in each compartment, asks the Railway authorities to warn station masters to examine all trains before they start and to attach extra carriages if they find the passengers inconvenienced for want of sufficient accommodation. NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th December, 1907.

VII.—Post Office.

Head Clerk of the office of the Superintendent of Post Offices, Moradabad.

113. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, (received on the 27th idem, says that its local correspondent has reported various complaints against Babu Jey Narayan, Head Clerk of the Superintendent of Post Offices, Moradabad, and advises the gentleman to mend his ways in future so that it may not lead to the necessity for referring his misconduct to higher authorities. RAHBAR, 14th December, 1907.

Commission on postage stamps.

114. Referring to the abolition of commission on the sale of postage stamps and the consequent trouble and difficulty felt by the public and the trading classes in particular, the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares,) of the 31st December, asks the authorities of the Postal department to take proper measures to remove this trouble. SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 31st December, 1907.

The editor suggests the desirability of opening a number of shops in Benares city for the sale of stamps.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

Rajput Shuddhi.

115. Referring to the Shuddhi of the Rajput Nau-Muslims in the Etawah and other districts by the Arya Samajists, the Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad), for December, urges the necessity for taking prompt measures to stop such discomfiture to the Muhammadan religion in future, and holds out a promise to suggest proper measures after due consideration. ZIA-UL-ISLAM, December, 1907.

Rajput Shuddhi.

116. Referring to the Shuddhi or reconversion of a number of Rajput Nau-Muslims in the Etawah district, the Qulqul (Bijnor) of the 16th December (received on the 27th December) attributes it to the negligence of the religious leaders of Islam. QULUL, 16th December, 1907.

The editor exhorts the religious authorities to take prompt measures to stop such discomfitures to Islam in future in order that it may not bring the progress of Islam to a standstill.

AL-BASHIR, 24th December, 1907.

Rajput Shuddhi.

117. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 24th December, referring to the reconversion of some Rajput Nau-Muslims by the Arya Samajists, remarks that these Rajputs were only nominal Musalmans as they never observed religious ceremonies required by Islam.

The editor strongly refutes the view of the Rajput Gazette that these Rajputs were converted to Islam by force, and points out that they embraced Islam out of their own free-will, as it is foolish to think that the martial Rajputs would ever stoopto the ignominy of changing their religion for fear of life, which they never prized when their honour was at stake.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 30th December, 1907.

The Parasnath Hill.

118. The Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad), of the 30th December, referring to the construction of bungalows on the Parasnath Hill for Europeans, remarks that this is a deliberate insult to the Jain community and directly opposed to the professed policy of non-interference in religious matters, which has been wisely followed by the Government for a long time.

JAIN GAZETTE, 1st January, 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

119. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 1st January, contains a poem deploring the construction of bungalows on the sacred hill of the Jains, pointing out that it is a condign punishment upon them for the sin of making India destitute by dealing in and consuming foreign-made articles, and calling upon the Jains to abstain from using and dealing in them in future, and suggests a recourse to the court for a decision in the matter of the Parasnath Hill.

MUSAFIR, 23rd December, 1907.

Government and the repairs of the Lahore mosque.

120. Referring to the grant of Rs. 56,000 by the Punjab Government towards the repairs of the dilapidated mosque of Aurangzeb at Lahore, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd December, points out the special favour of the Government towards the Muhammadans inasmuch as it did not allow a single farthing for the repairs of the famous temple of Devi ruined by the earthquake at Kangra.

The editor then sarcastically remarks :—"In my opinion the action of the Punjab Government was very wise, because the Devi is worshipped by the Hindus only, and the repairs of her temple by Government would have displeased the Muhammadans and the Christians, and there was no such apprehension in granting Government aid towards the repairs of the house of God (mosque) that is a common object of worship among the Muhammadans, the Christians as well as the Hindus. Besides this the Muhammadan God promises in the Quran to pay, what one lends Him in this world, by thousand times more on the day of resurrection, while the Devi holds out no such promises, so that the conduct of the Punjab Government is entirely based on justice, wisdom and foresight and the Hindus who object to this action are to be condemned as agitators, faithless and seditious."

MUSAFIR, 23rd December, 1907.

The Vilaporam incident.

121. Referring to the shooting of three Hindus by the Police in Vilaporam, Madras, while objecting to the passage of a Christian religious procession, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 23rd December points out the partiality and favour of the officials towards their co-religionists without any consideration of the religious feelings of the Hindus.

The editor further condemns this intoleration of religious feelings of the Hindus on the part of the Anglo-Indian officials.

He is also of opinion that it is this prejudice which actuated the officials to stop the Arya Samaj Nagar Kirtan procession at Moradabad and some other places during recent years simply on the pretence that the procession will wound the religious feelings of some prejudiced Muhammadans.

VEDA PRAKASH, December, 1907.

Dedication of children to the Ganges.

122. The Veda Prakásh (Meerut), for December, (received on the 1st January), invites the attention of the Government to the evil practice obtaining in some places of dedicating children to the Ganges which not unoften results in the loss of their life, and requests Government to put a stop to it, as it has done in the case of Sati and other superstitious practices.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd January, 1908.

The coming Magh Mela.

123. Referring to the coming Magh Mela, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) makes, in the issue of the 2nd January, several suggestions for the improvement in the arrangements.

The first need, the editor points out, is for sheds for the shelter of such of the pilgrims as cannot afford to procure temporary lodging places from the Pandas or in the city.

The absence of any such shelter in the Magh Mela grounds compel a large number of pilgrims with delicate females and children to pass chilly nights on the open maidán, which exposure often brings on attacks of cholera and other diseases.

The existing dharamsalas, sarais, &c., are utterly inadequate to suit the exigencies of a big mela, and he recommends that temporary accommodation for pilgrims be provided at the site of the mela.

The food stuffs which are sold at the mela grounds should be supervised to prevent adulteration, and the vendors prevented from selling short weight and at exorbitant rates. For this purpose he suggests the employment of food inspectors who should be taken from a class of people who are not likely to extort money from the vendors, and pass unwholesome food, and that the Assistant Health Officer, or some one of his standing, would be the best person to do this work.

He advocates that some steps be taken to abate the dust nuisance, and to prevent the contamination of the food offered for sale. In addition to the watering of the streets, sweetmeatsellers should be required to keep their goods covered.

The small patches of water just below the Bund, the remnants of the receding stream, should, he writes, be filled up with earth so that pilgrims may not use this foul water for any purpose whatever.

He remarks that the conservancy arrangements should be more adequate and prompt than last year, and that the sweepers who have already been engaged do not do their work efficiently, as the chur land from the Ramghat to the banks of the Tribeni is very foul.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

Nil.

ALLAHABAD :
The 6th January, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 2 OF 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 11th January, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign :
	Nil.
	(b)—Home :
1.	Extremists and the Congress ...	33
2.	The Surat Congress	33
3.	The Surat Congress	33
4.	The Surat Congress	33
5.	The Surat Congress	33
6.	The Surat Convention	33
7.	The United Provinces Extremists at the Surat Congress	34
8.	The 23rd Indian National Congress ...	34
9.	The Surat Congress	35
10.	The Surat Congress	35
11.	The Musalmans and the Congress ...	35
12.	The Congress fiasco	35
13.	The Surat Congress	36
14.	The Surat Congress	36
15.	The Surat Congress	36
16.	The Surat Congress	36
17.	The Surat Congress	36
18.	The Congress fiasco	37
19.	Mr. Tilak and the Surat Congress ...	37
20.	Mr. Tilak's Statement	37
21.	Indians in the Transvaal	37
22.	Indians in the Transvaal	37
23.	Indians in the Transvaal	38
24.	Indians in the Transvaal	38
25.	Indians in the Transvaal	38
26.	Indians in the Transvaal	38
27.	Boer and the British Indians ...	38
28.	The release of Lala Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh	39
29.	The present situation	39
30.	Military expenditure in India ...	39
31.	Regeneration of India	39
32.	Triumph of political leaders ...	39
33.	Anglo-Indians and India's salvation ...	40
34.	India under Liberal Ministry ...	40
35.	The Oriental in the West	40
36.	The historic shoe	40
37.	Sentiment and Indian Policy ...	41
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
38.	The Amir's intended tour	41
	III.—NATIVE STATES.
	Nil.
	IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
	(a)—Judicial and Revenue :
39.	The Rawalpindi rape case	42
40.	The Rawalpindi rape case	42
41.	Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ...	42
42.	Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ...	42
43.	Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ...	42
44.	Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ...	42
45.	Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ...	42
46.	Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ...	42
47.	Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ...	43
48.	Discharge of Amba Prasad Sufi ...	43
49.	Lala Dina Nath's appeal for mercy ...	43
50.	Punchayat System	43

		Page.
51.	The limitation of period of mortgage suits	43
52.	Tour of Judicial Officers	43
53.	Fines inflicted as departmental punishment	43
(b)—Police:
54.	The Manda murder case	43
55.	The Manda murder case	43
56.	The punitive police force at Jhalakati ...	43
57.	Official report on the Beadon Square riot	44
58.	The Mymensingh outrage	44
(c)—Finance and Taxation:
59.	One anna nickel coin	44
(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:
60.	Sale of meat in Pilibhit	44
61.	The Daraganj Road, Allahabad ...	44
62.	Municipal Vernacular Schools, Benares ...	44
63.	The Benares Municipality	44
64.	Water-tax in Benares	44
(e)—Education:
65.	Board of Scientific Advice	44
66.	The Commissioner of Sindh and the Muhammadans	45
67.	The Sanskrit College and the School at Benares	45
68.	All-India Muhammadan Educational Conference	45
69.	The Church Missionary Society's School at Srinagar	45
(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land:
70.	The famine	45
71.	The famine	45
72	The famine and the export of grain ...	45
73.	Famine gratuitous relief	45
74.	Famine relief in Agra	46
75.	The famine	46
76.	Improvement of agriculture ...	46
(g)—General:
77.	The attempted murder of Mr. Allen ...	46
78.	The attempted murder of Mr. Allen ...	46
79.	The attempted murder of Mr. Allen ...	46
80.	The attempted murder of Mr. Allen ...	46
81.	Government and the newspapers ...	46
82.	Returns prepared regarding newspapers	47
83.	The Press and the Bombay Government...	47
84.	Mr. Keir Hardie	47
85.	Visits of Englishmen to India ...	47
86.	India and Japan	47
87.	A European robber on Indian railways ...	47
88.	The officials and swadeshism	47
89.	The Etawah incident	48
90.	A land of hunger	48
91.	Mr. Nevinson and the Government ...	48
92.	The Surat Industrial Conference ...	48
	V.—LEGISLATION.
93.	The Seditious Meetings Act ...	49
94.	The Seditious Meetings Act ...	49
	VI.—RAILWAY.
95.	Collision on the North-West Railway ...	49
96.	Strike of native drivers on the East Bengal State Railway	49
97.	The Railway disaster in the Punjab ...	49
98.	The Ludhiana Railway collision ...	50
99.	The Ludhiana Railway collision ...	50
100.	Railway goods clerks	50
101.	Registration of Railway passengers' names	50
102.	Women signallers	50
103.	Fyzabad city station	50
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
104.	The postal employés and the famine ...	50
105.	The Post Office working hours ...	51
106.	Benares City Post Office	51
107	A postal complaint	51
108.	South Branch Post office, Budaun ...	51
109.	Cawnpore Cantonment Post Office ...	51
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
110.	Qadiani at the Lahore Arya Samaj Meeting	51
111.	The Pardah System	51
112.	Unity of religion	51
113.	Government aid	51
114.	Repairs of Aurangzeb's Mosque at Government expense	52
115.	The Parasnath Hill	52
116.	The Magh Mela	52
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
	Nil.

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

Nil.

(b).—Home.

1. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for October and November (received on the 6th January), bitterly denounces the policy of obstruction adopted by the Extremists at Nagpur and at Surat.

Extremists and the Congress.

ZAMANA, October and November, 1907.

2. While reserving its judgment as to which of the two parties in the Congress was at fault, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 30th December (received on the 10th January), strongly denounces the shameful conduct of the leaders at the Surat Congress.

The Surat Congress.

MUSAFIR, 30th December, 1907.

3. Referring to the Congress fiasco at Surat, the Prayag Samachar (Allahabad), of the 31st December (received on the 10th January), says that it had always regarded the Congress as a farce and as having been instituted at enormous expense of public money only to show off the powers of speechifying of those who took part in it. The editor without taking sides holds both the Moderates and Extremists responsible for the failure of the Surat Congress, but lays greater blame on the former who had come to consider the Congress as their domain with which they could deal as they pleased. He remarks that the split in the Congress took place last year, but no efforts were made at conciliation between the two parties, and that the Moderates were at fault in that they had no good word for the other party. He concludes with the remark that for the regeneration of India nothing is so essential as unity and harmony among the various sections of Indians, and that, as the Congress has proved incapable of effecting this, the people would be well advised to do away with the Congress and devote themselves to the swadeshi movement and such other measures as promise well for the future of India.

The Surat Congress.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR, 31st December, 1907.

4. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 5th January, reproduces the accounts published in the Patrika of 27th and 28th December, of the disorders at the Surat Congress, noting that seven Nationalists were arrested by the police but afterwards released, that the Moderate version was incorrect and that the Nationalist version was under preparation.

The Surat Congress.

CITIZEN, 5th January, 1908.

The editor later on reproduces the account given by the Patrika correspondent at Surat, dated the 29th December, which showed that the only object of the Moderates at the Congress was to crush the Nationalist party.

5. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 5th January, has the following :—

The Surat Congress.

CITIZEN, 5thJanuary, 1908.

"Nationalists continue Congress. Moderates meet in Convention.

Police with rifles. Hired Goondas.

Surat, December, 28.

Even delegates willing to sign the declaration are not allowed to join the Moderate Convention organised by Messrs. Gokhale and Wacha.

Policemen with rifles are posted round the pandal and hired 'Goondas' are held in readiness for attacking the Nationalists who might venture to approach.

The Moderates are acting in a dastardly and cowardly manner.

The Nationalists continue Congress work in a separate meeting."

6. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 5th January, gives an account of the meeting of the special committee appointed by the Convention on December 28th at which Dr. Rash Bihari Ghose presided.

The Surat Convention.

ADVOCATE, 5th January, 1908.

Resolutions were passed to the effect that members from each province on the General Committee should form themselves into provincial committees, that secretaries for the provincial committees should be appointed at once so as to enable the secretaries of the Convention to have the views of the committees on the draft of the constitution before the end of February and that the General Committee itself should meet in Easter at some central place to be selected by the President and Secretaries.

He noted that Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (Allahabad) and Babu Ram Chandra (Lucknow) were appointed as secretaries for the United Provinces.

ADVOCATE, 5th January, 1908.

The United Provinces Extremists at the Surat Congress.

7. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 5th January, that he was surprised at the statement made by the Times of India that the disturbance at the Congress meeting was commenced by the United Provinces delegates, as the number of Extremists in the United Provinces block was limited to five or six.

He expresses the opinion that the Times of India's correspondent must have misken the Central Provinces delegates for those of the United Provinces, as both were sitting close together, and many of the former occupied seats in the United Provinces block though requested not to do so.

CITIZEN, 5th January, 1908.

8. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 5th January has the following :—

HOW THEY KILLED THE SURAT CONGRESS IN COLD BLOOD.

A Bare Statement of Facts.

(SPECIAL FOR THE Citizen.)

The 23rd Indian National Congress.

"Just before the occurrence of the memorable events we are about to relate a well-known Nationalist delegate from Tanjore met at Surat an equally well-known 'Moderate' delegate from Bombay and what the latter said to the former was: 'Look here, Mr. . . . the Congress this year will be either yours or ours. There will be a trial of strength and as Sir Phirozshah is evidently the master of the situation to-morrow you Extremists will be nowhere.' The words if they showed anything only tended to show that the 'Moderates' had come prepared for the worst, in fact to capture the Congress, if that was practicable, and failing in that, to make at any rate a wreck of the Congress.

Thus it was when on the 25th ultimo the Nationalists formed what might be termed a peace-making Committee composed of a representative man from each province and the next morning the Committee went about interviewing the 'Moderate' leaders what most of the latter attempted was to overawe the Committee rather than to come to any terms. Some of the autocratic democrats, for instance Mr. Malvi of the Reception Committee, went so far as to refuse an audience. Better judgment however prevailed after all, and a guarantee, of course an oral one for that was safer, was given to the Committee to the effect that there would be no going back from the position that the Congress held at Calcutta, and that the all-important resolutions on Swaraj, boycott and national education which the 'Moderate' leaders had proposed to eliminate altogether from the Surat Congress programme would be allowed to stand as they were, or with only such verbal change as might in no way mar the spirit of the resolutions. For reasons however best known to the 'Moderates' no copy of the draft resolutions was forthcoming, and, when one copy was delivered after all at the twelfth hour, it was discovered what game our friends had so long been playing and what mischief they evidently meant to make. The Nationalist leaders as might be expected, resented strongly the backsliding of the 'Moderates' and thought it proper to serve them with a timely notice that unless they maintained the Resolutions intact they would move an amendment to every one of their resclutions, beginning with the one relating to the very election of the President. It may be mentioned here that the Reception Committee had no business to elect Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, the only consideration that led to his nomination having been that he was a 'Moderate" among 'Moderates,' and thus eminently fitted to please the Government. Dr. Ghose's nomination having been on no other principle, the Nationalists were perfectly justified in opposing it. The 'Moderates' however would not first come to terms. They were sure of an easy victory in that safe retreat of theirs, Surat.

But Sir Phirozshah and his men were soon disillusioned. There was an assembly of some fifteen hundred delegates from various parts of India and some seven hundred of them had already declared themselves as Nationalists. Surely, seven hundred out of fifteen hundred was not a negligible quantity. But Messrs. Mehta and Gokhale persisted in ignoring them, and hence the abortive proceedings of the first day. Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji rose to second the proposal of Dr. Ghose's election but such indignation was felt and there ensued such uproar that all proceedings were impossible and the Congress was suspended that day.

With the dawn of the next day better counsel seemed to have prevailed among a certain section of the 'Moderates.' They after all appeared to accept the principle of 'give and take,' and gave an undertaking that Mr. Tilak would receive hearing, provided that Mr. Banerji was allowed to second the President's proposition. Accordingly Mr. Banerji was accorded a hearing, and a most patient hearing too. But, when Mr. Tilak applied for leave to speak, he was denied his right point blank. Mr. Tilak then attempted to appeal to his brother delegates, but afraid that his address might turn the entire house in his favour, a number of 'Moderates' rushed to where Mr. Tilak stood on the platform and attempted to eject him by sheer force. Mr. Tilak's safety at that time being in danger, a number of the Nationalists too rushed forward. Some desperadoes had already been hired for the day by the 'Moderates,' before the proceedings began that day, they had been discovered by the Nationalists, and on an appeal being made to the Reception Committee, they had been turned out. In their emergency some of the 'Moderates' recalled the same desperadoes, and then ensued the scene of violence and disorder, which beggars all description.

That the 'Moderates' came prepared to eject the 'Nationalists' at any cost is evident from circumstantial evidence too. The manifesto they issued as the constitution of the Congress could leave no doubt in the mind of any reader that the Congress was no more to be the national assembly of all India, where there might be a full scope for the discussion of all reasonable views of politics, but that it was to be the private property of the Bombay 'Moderates' and their creatures. Rather than allow Bal Gangadhar Tilak to speak, the same Bombay 'Moderates' and their creatures have allowed the Congress to die, yea, they have killed it in cold blood.

One word more as to Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, and we are done. He had no business to go and occupy the chair, before the Resolution electing him as Chairman was duly passed. With such an amount of vigorous opposition to his election, any other man would have considered it more graceful to retire. But the great doctor rushed in, where Lajpat feared to tread. His consolation evidently must be if he has not been able to sell the Congress, a lawyer as he is, he has certainly succeeded in mortgaging it."

9. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 7th January, notes with regret the ending of the Surat Congress in a fiasco, and says that its deplorable incidents have reflected great discredit on the Indian people as a whole and have given its enemies an opportunity to ridicule them. The editor however appeals to the good sense of the leaders of both the parties to take steps to keep the Congress in tact in future, sinking their mutual differences in consideration of the great cause upon which they are engaged.

The Surat Congress.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 7th January, 1908

10. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th January, refers to the failure of the Surat Congress as showing the unfitness of the Congressists for self-government which they so loudly demand.

The Surat Congress.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 7th January, 1908.

11. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 7th January, publishes a letter from Mr. Anwar Ali, Barrister-at-law of Gorakhpur, who, while referring to the disgraceful scenes at the Surat Congress, cautions the Musalmans against joining the Hindus, who are divided amongst themselves, and who have very little interest in the welfare of the Musalmans as has been shown by their past conduct.

The Musalmans and the Congress.

MASHRIQ, 7th January, 1908.

12. Al-Bashir (Etawah) of the 7th January, referring to the Congress fiasco at Surat, remarks that it was very strange on the part of the Moderate leaders not to include the Swaraj, Boycott and National Education Resolutions in this year's programme, which had been unanimously passed in the Calcutta Congress. The editor is of opinion that this was done by them in order to curry favour with the Government and the sinister motive which has impelled them do this is not yet known. He cautions the Government and the people to beware of their doings.

The Congress fiasco.

AL-BASHIR, 7th January, 1908.

TAFRIH, 7th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

13. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 7th January, referring to the Congress split remarks that if Mr. Tilak had behaved with moderation, as Lajpat Rai did, the Congress would not have proved a failure.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

14. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st and 8th January, writes that the disgraceful conduct of the leaders at the last National Congress, whether they belong to the Moderate or the Extremist party, sadly reflects their shortcomings and incompetency for any great work, seeing that the national good was sacrificed for the purely personal distinction of presiding over the assembly.

ARYA MITRA, 8th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

15. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th January, says that the enemies of India have found a chance for ridiculing the Indians in the disturbances which disgraced the last session of the Congress. Several of the Anglo-Indian organs have begun to enquire on what grounds the Indians demand Swaraj when the Extremists and the Moderates could not agree between themselves to keep up the Congress itself. The Englishman uses its failure to argue the incapacity of the Indians for self-government. He remarks that such a notion on the contemporary's part is an utter misconception, for had not such scenes occurred in England and on the continent, and yet no one could argue that the English or other European nations are unfit for self-government.

HINDUSTANI, 8th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

16. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 8th January, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 2nd January, on the "Congress crisis."

CITIZEN, 9th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

17. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in a leading article in the issue of the 9th January, exonerates Mr. Tilak of the blame of wrecking the Congress at Surat, which has been attributed to him by the Moderates. He tries to show that the Moderates in seeking to ignore the real sentiments of the people were actually responsible for the failure of the session. He remarks that the tactics of the Congress bureaucrats (Moderates) were to ignore the Nationalists, and to treat them merely as camp followers who were to swell at their bidding the chorus of applause, but that Mr. Tilak felt, and rightly, that the Congress must hear all classes and shades of opinion, and that when he failed to come to an understanding outside the Congress, he considered that he had a right to tell the assembled delegates what he had to say. This permission was most arbitrarily refused with the ingenuity of a quibbling attorney's clerk.

He notes that Mr. Tilak's motion was ruled out of order, and that the Congress was called upon to adopt a cut and dry plan of business, and agree with some one who spoke to some stereotyped resolutions.

The farce had, he says, been too often played already, and no good had resulted to the country, and there was no cause for grief that one more needless repetition of the same had been prevented.

Regarding the statement that there had been an organised campaign of rowdyism among the Nationalists, he remarks that assertion is no proof, and that there is not a shred of evidence to establish the fact.

He maintains that it was established that the rowdyism was that of the Moderates and was aimed at Mr. Tilak, and that unless some of the followers of Mr. Tilak had rushed to his aid, he would not have come out unharmed.

He deprecates using harsh epithets about those with whom one may disagree on political matters, and expresses the opinion that it is high time that the autocrats of the Congress should know that every shade of public opinion ought to find a hearing and expression in an assembly that aspired to the ambitious title of the National Congress, and that, when that great institution is employed merely for the expression of the views of a few of those who cannot bear contradiction, and who must have everything in their own way, the sooner the outside world is made to see their real character and disabused of false impressions, the better for all concerned.

18. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad) publishes in the issue of the 9th January, three letters written to him by correspondents, in which the writers declare that the Congress fiasco was due to the Moderates, and that the latter commenced the rowdism. One of the correspondents asserts that the Moderates hired bullies and admitted them into the Congress pandal to assault Mr. Tilak and his party.

The Congress fiasco.

CITIZEN, 9th January, 1908.

19. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th January, remarks that Mr. Tilak and his party in causing the wreck of the Congress at Surat had discredited the whole nation and had placed themselves outside the pale of vilisation.

Mr. Tilak and the Surat Congress.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 5th January, 1908.

The feeling in the country was so strong that at Nagpur and in East Bengal proposals were being considered to excommunicate those who helped to wreck the Congress. The men were anarchists as well as ruffians, and should be treated as such.

He remarks as soon as they attempt to advocate absolute swaraj or the termination of the British rule they will realise for whom the Seditious Meetings Act was intended, and that even more than the heavy hand of Government, social ostracism will prove to those deluded men how greatly they have offended against their country and their people.

20. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) reproduces in the issue of the 9th January the full text of Mr. Tilak's explanation of his conduct at Surat, in which he attempts to justify his action by stating that the reasons for his opposition were that the resolutions passed at the Calcutta session of the Congress had been omitted from the agenda of the Surat Congress, and that there was a strong feeling in the country against Dr. Ghose's election as President and in favour of Lala Lajpat Rai.

Mr. Tilak's Statement.

ADVOCATE, 9th January, 1908.

Commenting on the explanation in a leading article, the editor remarks that Mr. Tilak's statement is insufficient to make him change his opinion as to the causes that led Mr. Tilak to assume a defiant attitude not only towards the Reception Committee but to the entire Congress, and that Mr. Tilak has wrecked his reputation and committed political suicide, as even a Praschit could not rehabilitate him in the estimation of the people outside Poona. He remarks that people who talk of reconciliation, overlook the difficulties due to the one party keenly feeling the intense humiliation and sorrow to which the country had been subjected, and to the fact that the other party after wrecking the Congress proceeded to their home in a triumphal march and allowed themselves to be garlanded.

The Congress cannot die, though it has been paralysed for some months. He expresses the hope that it will rise up with renewed vigour and have a greater career of usefulness before it.

21. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 31st December, (received on the 10th January) contains the following on the Indian situation in the Transvaal, "O ye downtrodden Indians, who have entrusted their independence into the hands of others, so long as you do not take the lesson of self-reliance to heart, so long will your lot remain the same (i.e., so long will you be subjected to the same indignities as you experience in the Transvaal)."

Indians in the Transvaal.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR, 31st December, 1907.

22. Referring to the position of Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th January, remarks that gratitude is not one of the virtues of an English Government.

Indians in the Transvaal.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 5th January, 1908.

During the South African war England had been given offers of assistance by Indian Princes, and she had used Indian troops in China, yet she ignores with impunity the wishes of three hundred millions of loyal Indians while the three hundred thousand Boers who fought against the English must not be interfered with, even in their most unjust actions.

He remarks that Mr. Rees, a retired Indian Civilian who is still living at the expense of the Indian people, feels no shame in deserting the people to whom he owes everything, and has the coolness to state that nobody but the agitators were excited at the legislation against Indians in the Transvaal, and that the lesson is obvious that it is more profitable to be an enemy, than to be a friend of the English Government.

ADVOCATE, 5th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

23. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 5th January, that the attitude of the Indians in the Transvaal is an object lesson to their countrymen in India in that they, though not educated to a high standard in politics, have demonstrated that, provided that the people put their hearts into their work, and have the power to make themselves heard, a very high level of education is not necessary for them to understand their political privileges and responsibilities.

He notes that since self-government has been granted to the Transvaal, all the rights which Indians had previously enjoyed, have been surrendered, and that the British sense of justice had throughout the ill-fated year 1907 been on trial in India as well as in the Transvaal.

In India better sense prevailed before the year was out, but in the Transvaal a voteless and powerless minority of 13,000 Indians still stands face to face with an ignorant and prejudiced majority bent upon putting upon Indians the badge of slavery or the stamp of outlaw.

The Indians in the Transvaal have not asked for the moon, and surely Mr. Morley should have been able to give them more protection from the tyranny of a cruel Colonial Government.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 5th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

24. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 5th January, has the following :—" Two of the British Indians who have been ordered to leave the Transvaal—a British colony—within fourteen days, for no crime other than that of being Indians, are old soldiers, who have fought for the British flag in Burma, Chitral and the Black Mountain and Tirah campaigns. What a humiliating spectacle ! Those who have fought for the Empire being turned out of house and home in a British colony by those who fought against it !"

RAHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

25. Referring to the oppressions committed upon the Indians in the Transvaal and South Africa generally, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th January, remarks that if the Indians had courage, as they have sympathy for their brethren in distress, they would never have been reduced to such a lamentable condition.

ADVOCATE, 9th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

26. Commenting on the position of Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) writes in the issue of the 9th January, that the firm front presented by them to the Asiatic Registration Act has placed the Government in a quandary, but that the agents of the Government were determined to break up the unity among Indians by unfair means. A fresh chance was to be given to Indians to get themselves registered, on the plea that many refused to submit to the operation because some pressure was brought to bear on them by the promoters of the movement of passive resistance.

He remarks that to prolong the period of suspense for people whose all is at stake is the best way to break their power of resistance, but that the step is decidedly mean and unworthy of any honest Government.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 10th January, 1908.

Boer and British Indians.

27. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 10th January, contains a leading article entitled the ' Boer and British Indians, in which the writer declares that in the present struggle the sympathy of the general public rests with the latter.

He notes that the Boers with whom England was only a short time ago fighting, are now in a fair way of realising the aim they have always had of a united Dutch South Africa and that by humiliating and insulting British Indians they are aiming a blow at the British Empire.

The position of Englishmen in the Transvaal is, he says, less secure now than before the war, as without pretext they are being dismissed from offices to which they had been appointed, and Dutchmen employed in their stead.

The editor quotes from a letter of a British Colonial published in the Globe and remarks that the situation described by the writer proves that the Boer may be viewed as an enemy to British progress and as one who hates not British Indians alone, but all British citizens.

He expresses the hope that the Boer being an enemy of the British Empire, the Government which gave him the power to become mischievous, will see that the power is curtailed, while there is yet time.

ZAMANA, October and November, 1907.

The release of Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh.

28. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for October and November (received on the 6th January), notes with gratification the release of Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh and hopes that the Government will never repeat this mistake and in future will deal with the Indians justly.

ZAMANA, October and November, 1907.

The present situation.

29. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for October and November (received on the 6th January) publishes an article in which the writer attributes the present confusion in Indian politics to the introduction of English education and to the revolution in beliefs caused by it. One of these is the doctrine of equality. The Bengalis and Mahrattas do not take into consideration the position of the English and insist on equality with them.

He is of opinion that the best way of settling the difficulty would be for both parties to be considerate of each other's feelings, and to recognise their relative positions.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 31st December, 1907.

Military expenditure in India.

30. Referring to the military expenditure in India, the Almora Akhbar of the 31st December, (received on the 10th January), says that while the Indians have been crying for years for its curtailment, the military authorities have been clamouring for increased expenditure.

The editor remarks that it is mere waste of time and energy on the part of Indians to discuss this question any longer, seeing that public opinion produces no effect on the Government.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR, 31st December, 1907.

Regeneration of India.

31. A correspondent in the Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 31st December (received on the 10th January), deplores the present degraded condition of the Indians and calls upon them to wake up from their deep slumber, to gird up their loins and boldly tell those who treat them like slaves that they are the descendants of the same Indians who had once made their country renowned throughout the world, and that they too inspired by patriotism have begun to realize their position. They should open schools and libraries in order to make their countrymen conscious of their degradation, with a view to goad them on to adopt measures for the betterment of their condition keeping the example of Japan before their eyes, and always bearing in mind the truism that God helps those who help themselves.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 1st January, 1908.

Triumph of political leaders.

32. Referring to the recent unrest and agitation in India and the final success of the leaders of the national party, the Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 1st January, condemns the undignified conduct of those who tried to win over the Government by presenting addresses of loyalty.

The editor then remarks that the Government has after all been convinced that the national leaders were entirely right, and that they never meant sedition when they asked for the natural rights of the people. He points out that the English as rulers of India are quite a different party from both the Hindus and the Muhammadans, and it is foolish to think that they will ever show any undue favour to any of them.

He exhorts both communities that their good and the salvation of their country lie in their mutual good-will and unity and not in quarrels and hostility, which will simply lead to the ruin and destruction of both the parties.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1908.

33. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st and 8th January, writes :—"It is very strange that with all their efforts the Indians have not yet been able to obtain Swaraj. Is it because the Indians have not the ability to wield it or that the Government is reluctant to invest them with self-government? No. It is the selfish Anglo-Indian officials who put obstacles in the way of India's self-government. It is their selfishness which prompts them to show undue favour to Muhammadans and thus excite and turn them against their Hindu brethren. How can the Secretary of State, the Parliament or His Imperial Majesty sitting in London, know of the tricks and guiles of these officials! The ever loyal Indians who at times of extreme danger in the days of Lord Clive showed their faithfulness and sincerity by satisfying their hunger with husk, leaving the grain to their European brother soldiers, are now despised as traitors and sedition-mongers through the wily misrepresentations of self-interested officials!

Anglo-Indians and India's salvation.

But the question now arises, what makes them thus obstruct the way of India's salvation.

The reason is simple and clear as may be gathered from the following story :—

A lion when much harassed by rats, hired the services of a cat to protect him against their depredations. The wily cat always used to frighten away the mice without doing them any actual harm, and thus managed to pamper itself for ever by eating up all that was left by its master, the lion. It so happened that one day the cat made over its duty to its young one and went out for some business. But on return it found the cave heaped with the carcases of dead rats. Instead of praising the young kitten for the services it only said: "My dear child I could also have very easily killed these rats as you have done. But you little know that if they are killed the lion will require me no longer."

Such is the case of Anglo-Indian officials. For what will become of them if His Majesty, the King-Emperor, be satisfied that the Indians are perfectly loyal and that there is no sedition in India?"

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1908.

34. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 1st and 8th January, reproduces an article entitled "India under Liberal Ministry a period of nine months."

India under Liberal Ministry.

ADVOCATE, 9th January, 1908.

35. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th January, has the following :—"While in South Africa the Imperial Government seems to have surrendered its power and privilege of protecting British subjects in a part of the British Empire, in the Far West any such solution of the racial problem is far from the range of possibility. In the Empire on which the sun never sets the King is virtually unable to protect his Indian subjects from the tender mercies of his British citizens. But in the United States the President authorises one of his officials to notify that he would veto any Japanese Labour Exclusion Bill even if passed by the Congress. The contrast is indeed very much to the discredit of the Liberal Ministry. Well, the knottiness of the situation lies on the assumption that any man from the West is free to roam about in any country in the East, particularly in Asia, but an Asiatic has absolutely no right to step into any tract of land in America and the colonies except on sufferance, no matter whether he belongs to a free nation or a subject country."

The Oriental in the West.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th January, 1908.

36. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th January, has the following :—"In no country in the world is the history of the shoe more interesting than in India. In England the dropping of a lady's garter was the cause of the creation of the highest order of knighthood. But the shoe took no part in the formation of English history. In India under the Moghul rule the shoe was always left out of consideration, that is, it was never allowed to be brought into the Imperial presence, or in sight of any of his representatives. Under the British rule the unfortunate Moghul or Delhi shoe has been banished still farther out of levees and darbars, and has more than once been the cause of serious political trouble. Many modern Anglo-Indian Imperialists have inherited the Great Moghul's unconquerable aversion to the shoe. Sir Denzil Ibbetson, when a Deputy Commissioner, was almost speechless with anger when a Statutory Civilian, and Assistant Commissioner, had the effrontery to enter his august presence with English boots on. Sir Steyning Edgerley, when Assistant Commissioner in Sind, was equally indignant when he found an Indian gentleman, a member of a deputation that waited upon Lord Dufferin at Karachi, wearing Punjabi shoes. "Is this the way you show your respect for the Vicerory of India?" queried Mr. Edgerley in righteous indignation. The poor man did not understand English. When the matter was explained to him he meekly left the offending shoes outside the room and came in barefooted. A barrister presented himself in a pair of fine Rawalpindi shoes at a Viceregal levee in Calcutta, and was curtly told that his shoes were not presentable. He took off the shoes and himself along with it. And now we have the famous Deccani shoe, inadmissible at levees and darbars and even in a district officer's room, which was flung at Sir P. M. Mehta and Babu Surendranath Banerjea. The official note says that it hit both these gentlemen, but Mr. Tilak's account goes into more minute particulars and says 'the shoe hit Sir P. M. Mehta on the side of the face after touching Babu Surendranath Banerjea.' We can very well imagine Messrs. Tilak & Co. gloating over the shoe that was so well and truly aimed."

The historic shoe.

Sentiment and Indian Policy.

37. The editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), comments in the issue of the 9th January, on the article of Sir Bampfylde Fuller on the subject of the administration of India. The editor remarks that the article was deserving of the attention of all who claimed to study the subject of Indian policy, for it was the effort of one, whose knowledge of the many and devious paths of Indian administration was unimpeachable, to criticise that administration in a manner thoroughly constructive, and to lay before his readers a scheme for the amelioration of the people of India and the better government of the country.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 9th January, 1908.

The suggestions which he made by way of an endeavour to dispose of the problem in a manner satisfactory to all, should command respect.

The existing arrangements of provincial government were out of accord with the sentiments of Indian character and needed revision, for they obstructed by needless difficulties the gradual admission of Indians to greater influence in State Councils and to more responsible employment in State service.

The suggestions of Sir Bampfylde Fuller for the partition of India into smaller administrations would entirely alter the map of India, but Sir Bampfylde Fuller assumed, not unwisely, that the radical character of the reform would be no bar to its adoption, and he claimed that the new arrangement would involve no untried principles of policy. He notes that the headquarters of a large province may be infinitely more imposing, but that the country districts suffer neglect. The writer notes the difficulty in contradicting the contention that in large administrations the District Officer loses influence, and he expresses the belief that British India would have been more contented, and morally if not materially more progressive, had it been distributed into smaller and more numerous provinces or states, so as to have enlisted more completely the feelings and hopes of a very heterogeneous population.

He remarks that Sir Bampfylde Fuller's proposals show that he possesses views of a singularly broad and sympathetic character, and he expresses the hope that sooner or later, these views will command the attention which they deserve.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

The Amir's intended tour.

38. Referring to the intended visit of His Majesty the Amir to Europe, leaving the administration of his country into the hands of a council, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 30th December, (received on the 10th January) regrets finding an independent Muhammadan ruler so strongly influenced by the Western civilization.

MUSAFIR, 30th December, 1907.

III.—Native States.

Nil.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

ZAMANA,
October and November, 1907.

The Rawalpindi rape case.

39. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for October and November (received on the 6th January), referring to the acquittal of the accused in the Rawalpindi rape case, exhorts the people to sink their differences and to work in union for the great issues that are at stake.

MUSAFIR,
30th December, 1907.

The Rawalpindi rape case.

40. Referring to the dismissal of Mr. Moore, the Assistant Station Master of Rawalpindi, in connection with the well-known rape case and the certificate of good conduct given to him by the railway authorities, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 30th December (received on the 10th January), remarks:—

"Mark the fine sense of morality in the West! Where rapes and outrages of the modesty of married girls are looked upon as marks of good and commendable conduct in a man. Shame! Shame!!

ADVOCATE,
5th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court judgeship.

41. In the issue of the 5th January, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), congratulates Maulvi Karamat Husain on his appointment as seventh Judge of the High Court.

Commenting on the notice in the Pioneer to the effect that the choice of a Judge would be confined on representative considerations to the Muhammadan community, he remarks that the appointment of high Judicial officers on racial grounds, and not on the ground of ability is a departure from the right principles which may yet land Government into many difficulties.

He notes that the Government of India brings itself into contempt of the general public, when, in making a selection for its highest judicial officers, it is guided by principles of expediency and by racial considerations, and that it is said that the ablest Hindu is denied high honours and a high appointment simply because he happens to be a Hindu or because his co-religionists have been engaged in activities not liked by people in high offices.

The editor excuses his remarks on the ground that the people feel strongly on the subject, and not because he is actuated by any feeling of disrespect for Mr. Karamat Husain for whom he has nothing but the highest regard.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court judgeship.

42. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th January, congratulates Mr. Karamat Husain on his elevation to the Bench of the High Court, and the Government on its excellent choice, and remarks that he fufils both the conditions requisite for the new appointment.

ZUL-QARNAIN,
7th January, 1808.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court judgeship.

43. Referring to the appointment of Mr. Karamat Husain as seventh Judge of the Allahabad High Court, the Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th January, remarks that his appointment will be appreciated not only by the Muhammadan community of these provinces but by all the Muhammadans of India, as well as by other Indian communities. The choice of the Government, the editor adds, has fallen upon a deserving candidate and will be gratifying to all parties.

AGRA AKHBAR,
7th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court judgeship.

44. The Agra Akhbar of the 7th January, notes with satisfaction the appointment of Mr. Karamat Husain as a Judge of the Allahabad High Court.

AL-BASHIR,
7th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court judgeship.

45. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 7th January, notes with satisfaction the appointment of Mr. Karamat Husain as a Judge of the High Court, and thanks Government for recognising the claims of the Musalman community. The editor congratulates the Government for making such a good selection.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court judgeship.

46. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th January, notes with satisfaction the appointment of Mr. Karamat Husain as a Judge of the Allahabad High Court.

HINDUSTANI,
8th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court judgeship.

47. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 8th January, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 5th January about the new Judge of the Allahabad High Court.

48. While commending the strong sense of justice and independence shown by the presiding judge in discharging Amba Prasad Sufi prosecuted for sedition, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 30th December (received on the 10th January), strongly condemns the moral weakness of the jury in passing on him the verdict of guilty.

Discharge of Amba Prasad Sufi.

MUSAFIR, 30th December, 1907.

49. Referring to the dismissal of the appeal for mercy of Lala Dina Nath, the editor of the Hindostan (Lahore), the Musafir (Agra), of the 30th December (received on the 10th January), sarcastically remarks that it was very wise of His Honour Sir Denzil Ibbetson in dismissing the appeal as it would have seriously damaged the prestige of the British Government.

Lala Dina Nath's appeal for mercy.

MUSAFIR, 30th December, 1907.

50. While expressing its satisfaction at the way in which civil suits are at present decided in the courts of justice in India, the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th January, suggests the desirability of introducing the system of village punchayats to take cognisance of all civil suits.

Punchayat system.

TOHFA-I-HIND, 4th January, 1908.

The editor is of opinion that the decisions arrived at by these punchayats will be more satisfactory and comparatively less expensive and troublesome, as has been experienced by the working of punchayets in the Mysore State.

51. A correspondent of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 7th January, cautions the Government against hasty legislation on the extension of the period of limitation for mortgage suits, aud asks it to uphold the recent Privy Council ruling, and to take into consideration the hard case of the debtors who are mostly Muhammadans.

The limitation period of mortgage suits.

MASHRIQ, 7th January, 1908.

The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 8th January publishes the same views.

52. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 1st and 8th January, expresses the desirability of the Judicial Officials making a tour within their respective jurisdictions like the executive officers as it will do some good to the people.

Tour of Judicial Officers.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1908.

53. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) in its combined issue of the 1st and 8th January, complains that, although the Board of Revenue has prohibited fines as departmental punishment on subordinates, they are still of frequent occurrence in civil courts, especially in those of Benares.

Fines inflicted as departmental punishment.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1908.

The editor hopes that the Government will take this complaint into consideration and have one and the same rule enforced both in the Civil and Revenue Departments in this connection.

(b.)—Police.

54. Adverting to the strong sense of justice of the Sessions Judge of Naokhali in sentencing to long terms of imprisonment some police officers for torturing a woman, the Rahbar, (Moradabad), of the 7th January, points out to the disgraceful conduct of the police in the Manda murder case, and asks the Government to save its people from the high-handedness of the police, as Sir Antony MacDonnell did.

The Manda murder case.

RAHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

55. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st and 8th January, strongly denounces the disgraceful conduct of the Manda police in torturing four innocent persons and implicating them in an alleged murder case.

The Manda murder case.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1908.

The editor thanks Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya, Babu Hari Mohan Rai, Babu Amir Bahadur and Babu Parsotam Das, vakils, for their sympathy in saving the helpless accused from falling victims to the machinations of the police.

56. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 7th January, condemns the conduct of the Government in making invidious distinctions in the matter of assessment on the inhabitants wherewith to pay the charges of the punitive police force quartered at Jhalakati.

The punitive police force at Jhalakati.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 7th January, 1908.

RAHBAR.
7th January, 1908.

Official report on the Beadon Square riot.

57. Referring to the official report on the Beadon Square riot published in the Calcutta Gazette and to the reluctance of the Local Government to admit the fault of the police as laid down in the report, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th January, remarks that the Government will soon be convinced of its mistake in being over-partial to the police.

CITIZEN,
9th January, 1908.

The Mymensingh outrage.

58. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), publishes in the issue of the 9th January, a long telegram from a correspondent in Mymensingh describing in detail the conduct of fifty or sixty military police who are stated to have looted shops and to have assaulted individuals. The correspondent states in his telegram that quite a panic has been created by the conduct of the military police, who on the night of the 3rd plundered many shops in the heart of the town, and that a most curious fact in this connection was that these fifty or sixty armed police had some of their officers with them, who did nothing to prevent them from plundering several shops.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st and 8th January, 1908.

One anna nickel coin.

59. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st and 8th January, writes:—"Except that the one anna nickel coin is handy to carry about and beautiful to look at, it is altogether a loss to the people and gain to Government. A rupee's worth copper coins can repay at least half its current value if sold as metal, but a rupee's worth nickel coin can hardly fetch 2 pice when divested of its current value and sold as metal. The dissatisfaction of the people is right and it will be better if the Government remove it by substituting silver coin for the one anna nickel piece."

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th January, 1908.

Sale of meat in Pilibhit.

60. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th January, complains that meat and kababs are sold just near the Pilibhit railway station, which is resented by the Hindus, and expresses the opinion that meat should be sold at a less frequented place.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
5th January, 1908.

The Daraganj road, Allahabad.

61. In the issue of the 5th January, a correspondent of the Indian People (Allahabad), complains that part of the road from the city to Daraganj is in a very bad condition and recommends that as there is to be a large influx of pilgrims on the occasion of the eclipse and heavy wheeled traffic it should be repaired.

BHARAT JIWAN,
6th January, 1908.

Municipal Vernacular Schools, Benares.

62. The Bharat Jiwan, (Benares), of the 6th January, invites the attention of the local municipality to the anomaly of the Inspector appointed to supervise the Vernacular Schools being quite ignorant of Hindi which is the language taught in these schools, and asks it to take early steps to remedy the evil complained of.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st and 8th January, 1908.

The Benares Municipality.

63. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), in its combined issue of the 1st and 8th January, notes with satisfaction the increase of Re. 1 in the pay of the employés of the Benares Municipality, but observes that it would have been a better means of support had they been granted grain tickets instead.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st and 8th January, 1908.

Water-tax in Benares.

64. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), in its combined issue of the 1st and 8th January complains that the municipality has exempted only those houses from the water-tax whose annual rental value does not exceed Rs. 12. The editor suggests that in these hard times houses whose annual rental value is not more than Rs. 25 may be exempted from it, as is in the case of drainage-tax.

(e).—Education.

NAJM BAZIG,
24th December, 1907.

Board of Scientific Advice.

65. Referring to the absence of Indian members on the Board of Scientific Advice which will hold its sittings in Calcutta on the 20th January, the Najm Bazig (Moradabad) of the 24th December (received on the 6th January), suggests the names of the well known Indian scientists Drs. Jagdesh Chandra Bose and Bhandarkar, and asks that they should be appointed as members of the board.

66. Referring to the remark of the Commissioner of Sindh, alleged to have been made at theMuhammadan Educational Conference, that he specially preferred Muhammadans in the public service, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th January, remarks that his opinion is in direct opposition to the provisions of Her late Majesty's Proclamation.

The Commissioner of Sindh and the Muhammadans.

RAHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

The editor expresses apprehension that his conduct may lead to deplorable consequences by making the gulf still wider between the rulers and the ruled.

67. While alluding to the mismanagement of the Benares Sanskrit College, about which a reference has already been made, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st and 8th January, says that the present Head Master of the School department is not at all popular with the students and their guardians. The editor asks the Director of Public Instruction to remove him from the school before the matter grows serious.

The Sanskrit College and the School at Benares.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1908.

68. Referring to the sitting of the All-India Muhammadan Educational Conference at Karachi, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st and 8th January, notes with satisfaction the happy sign of the awakening of the Muhammadans.

All-India Muhammadan Educational Conference.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1908.

The editor wishes every success to the Conference, and prays that his Muhammadan brethren may become true friends to the Government like the Hindus by criticising its wrong measures.

In conclusion he points out that the treatment of equality accorded to Hindus and Muhammadans by some prominent Native States, without the least distinction of creed and caste, is sufficient to show that they are like brothers born of the same mother, and that every attempt to create hostility between them must always be regarded with suspicion.

69. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) alludes in the issue of the 9th January eulogisingly to the volunteer corps of the Church Missionary Society at Srinagar, noting that the volunteer students there are taught to help their sick fellow students, to fight the battles of the weak, and in short the art of patriotism in the most effective form.

The Church Missionary Society's School at Srinager.

ADVOCATE, 9th Januay, 1908.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

70. The Zamindar-o-Kashtkar (Bijnor), for November 1907, (received on the 8th January), has a cartoon in which the figure of a European dressed in frockcoat, representing the British Government, holds up an old and decrepit Indian resting on a stick, which is intended to represent Government aid. The old man is pictured with a number of loads on his back labelled Starvation, Anxiety for food and clothing; Government revenue, and Subscription to famine relief fund. The following conversation is printed below the cartoon:—

The famine.

ZAMINDAR-O-KASHTKAR, November 1907.

Government:—"Take courage."

Subject:—(With trembling voice) "How am I to take courage, take off your burden at least."

71. The Almora Akhbar of the 31st December (received on the 10th January), is of opinion that the best way for the Government to provide relief to the people during the prevailing famine will be to open depôts for the sale of grain at cheap rates, so as to arrest the increase of prices, thereby benefiting men of small income who feel the pinch of the distress.

The famine.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 31st December, 1907.

72. While regretting the withholding of rain even at this eleventh hour, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th January, commends the patient suffering of the Indians and remarks: "Alas! Government does not appear prepared even now to stop the export of grain from the country."

The famine and export of grain.

RAHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

73. A correspondent writes from Mahmudabad (Sitapur) in the Sundar Shingar (Muttra), of the 7th January, that owing to the prevailing scarcity there has been a very marked increase in crime in the locality, and that the poor are feeling the distress very severely. He further says that the list drawn up by the Deputy Collector of persons who are to receive gratuitous relief is defective, inasmuch as it includes names of many a well to do person, while those of a large number of really deserving persons find no entry in it.

Famine gratuitous relief.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 7th January, 1908.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

Famine relief in Agra.

74. The Agra Akhbar of the 7th January, complains that in Agra relief is granted in a very irregular manner and that the claims of deserving persons and purdanashin women are often ignored, and that those who distribute the money, often appropriate a large part of it.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1907.

The famine.

75. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) in its combined issue of the 1st and 8th January, complains that it has been decided that Benares will be considered affected by famine only when there are 400 persons in the Kali Shankar Asylum. The editor is of opinion that the high prices of food-stuffs conclusively show that the city is affected, people do not go to poor houses owing to caste restrictions, and to some extent their self-respect deters them from doing so.

HINDOSTHAN, 10th January, 1908.

Improvement of agriculture.

76. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 10th January, makes the following suggestions for the improvement of agriculture in India :—

(1) Primary education should at least be imparted to the cultivators so as to enable them to profit by modern scientific methods of cultivation as practised in Europe.

(2) The indebtedness of the Indian cultivator should be removed by means of an extensive system of agricultural banks.

(3) Adequate arrangements should be made for irrigation so as to free the cultivators comparatively from their dependence on seasonal rains. The editor acknowledges the efforts of the Government in these directions, and advises Indians to co-operate with it in all these measures, for self-reliance alone can help them out of their present material and economic prostration.

(g).—General.

MUSAFIR, 30th December, 1907.

The attempted murder of Mr. Allen.

77. Referring to the attempted murder of Mr. Allen the Magistrate of Dacca, the Musafir (Agra) of the 30th December (received on the 10th January), considers it to be the consequence of the growing hostility between the rulers and the ruled, and remarks that such an event in a peaceful country like India is surely lamentable.

OUDH AKHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

The attempted murder of Mr. Allen.

78. Referring to the attempt to murder Mr. Allen, Magistrate of Dacca, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 7th January, disagrees with the generally rumoured version that it was the action of some Bengalee National Volunteers.

The editor expresses the opinion that this incident and the recent attempt at derailing the special train of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal are the consequences of the ever increasing hostility between the rulers and ruled which can hardly be suppressed by harsh and repressive measures.

AL-BASHIR, 7th January 1908.

The attempted murder of Mr. Allen.

79. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 7th January, referring to the murder of Mr. Allen, remarks that it is strange that people refuse to believe that it has a political significance and that it is not the result of the unrest in Eastern Bengal.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th January, 1908.

The attempted murder of Mr. Allen.

80. While expressing its regret at the attempt to murder Mr. Allen, the Magistrate of Dacca, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 1st and 8th January, attributes it to the dissatisfaction of the people with the Government of East Bengal.

The editor remarks that the state of affairs in East Bengal and the existing hostility between the rulers and the ruled in that province reflect discredit on the officials as being incompetent to manage the affairs of the place.

In conclusion he points out that the officials who put too much reliance in the police and their subordinates can never be popular, and suggests the desirability of replacing the present staff of executive officials in East Bengal by men of recognised capability like Mr. Bell, the Member of the Board of Revenue.

MUFID-I-AM, 1st January, 1908.

Government and the newspapers.

81. Referring to the proposal under the contemplation of Government that before a newspaper is registered the names of its responsible editor and proprietor should be recorded and that a decent sum of money be deposited as security, the Mufid-i-Am (Agra) of the 1st January, remarks that the discouraging of newspapers by putting such obstacles in their way will always be more injurious in its effect than productive of any good, and especially in these days, when it is the only means by which Government can estimate the current of public feeling.

82. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 9th January, has the following:—

Returns prepared regarding news papers.

"There is an official form which is periodically filled up concerning Indian newspapers. The names, caste and age of the proprietor, editor and printer are filled in. There is also a column as regards their antecedents, that is to say, whether they are habitual offenders or receivers of stolen property, whether and how often they have been convicted of sedition or defamation, whether they have been bound down to be of good behaviour and so on and so forth. No antecedent can be worse than any connection with a newspaper, but it must not be supposed on that account that other people have not their antecedents as well. The evidence recorded by the Decentralisation Commission is bringing many curious antecedents to light. The Maharaja of Durbhunga, the premier nobleman of Bengal and Behar, was an Assistant Magistrate in the Statutory Civil Service in early life. More wonderful still, the Nawab of Dacca (whom God does not let work too hard for a living) began life as a Deputy Magistrate, whereas to-day he divides the rulership of East Bengal with the Lieutenant-Governor. Had the Nawab remained a Deputy Magistrate he would have been killed by overwork and there would have been another natural leader less in the country."

83. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 11th January, notes with satisfaction the invitation of the Bombay journalists to the Bombay Plague Laboratory by the Government of Bombay and his friendly advice to them and hopes that this spirit of conciliation will be highly appreciated by the public.

OUDH AKHBAR, 11th January, 1908.

The Press and the Bombay Government.

84. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for October and November (received on the 6th January), referring to Mr. Keir Hardie's visit, remarks that although he has not made any specious promises, he will place the case of India before Parliament and arouse greater interest in England in Indian affairs.

ZAMANA, October and November, 1907.

Mr. Keir Hardie.

85. Referring to the visits of several eminent Englishmen to India, the Almora Akhbar of the 31st December (received on the 10th January), says that it is to be seen what impressions are made upon their minds and to what extent the English nation is influenced by their testimony regarding India. It will be some thing if they can remove the suspicion caused in the public mind of England by the false stories invented about the unrest in this country.

ALMORA-AKHBAR, 31st December, 1907.

Visits of Englishmen to India.

86. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 4th January, referring to Count Okuma's speech, remarks that the people of India should take the sympathy of Japan at its true worth and should remember the cruel way in which Japan has treated its neighbour Korea.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 4th January, 1908.

India and Japan.

87. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th January, remarks that it seems that the English have sworn to make India stark naked and divest it of all that it possesses.

RAHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

A European robber on Indian railways.

He notes that apart from the enormous drain they annually make upon the Indian exchequer in the shape of revenue, and the vast difference in the daily allowances of European and Indian officials of equal rank, they have now determined to rob India in the true sense of the word, as a European robber named A. Branez is making depredations on the railways in India. (Possibly a reference is intended to Askanski alias Condruski, the Russian Railway thief.)

The editor further remarks that there is no doubt that the man can be easily got rid off provided he be awarded a severe punishment as is generally given to Indian robbers, but it can hardly be expected that the Government will ever be so severe towards a European.

88. While regretting the want of interest and enthusiasm shown by the United Provinces people with regard to questions concerning public utility and the good of their countrymen, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th January, commends the work done by other provinces in this respect.

RAHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

The officials and swadeshism.

The editor points out the different treatment of the officials in levying the tax for the punitive police quartered at village Jhalakati in Bakerganj district where a man favouring swadeshism is made to pay Rs. 150 per mensem, while another who is equally wealthy but does not patronise swadeshism is required to pay only annas 4 a month, and remarks that if similar misfortunes were to take place in this province there will hardly be found a man who will face it with courage and fortitude. He exhorts the United Provinces people to take a lesson from their brethren of other provinces.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 7th January, 1908.

The Etawah incident.

89. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 7th January, has the following in connection with the Etawah incident:—"In our opinion the United Provinces Government will be well advised to make public the inquiry it made in connection with the Etawah incident, so that the public, becoming acquainted with the facts established by the Government inquiry, should be able to arrive at a right conclusion. Silence in such a matter is, he considers, likely to give rise to bitterness of feeling between Hindus and Muhammadans, which is extremely dangerous considering the present social and political situation in India. . . . . On this occasion we cannot help pointing out that so far as we have looked into the facts of the case, we admit that some imprudent Muhammadans in their attempt to take advantage of the present policy of the Government left no stone unturned to bring the innocent Hindus into discredit, and that, if Mr. Sharpe had not made use of his talents, and if there had not been a very capable administrator at Allahabad, Munshi Zorawar Singh would have certainly been deported for some period."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th January, 1908.

A land of hunger.

90. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) reproduces in the issue of the 9th January, the article written by Mr. Keir Hardie to the Labour Leader for December 13th in which the latter draws a picture of the "Raiyat at Home."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th January, 1908.

Mr. Nevinson and the Government.

91. Referring to the action of the Government of Eastern Bengal with regard to Mr. Nevinson's complaint that his correspondence was tampered with, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 9th January, that the Government has apparently succeeded in putting Mr. Nevinson in the wrong, and showing that his complaints could not be substantiated. "It has however of set purpose ignored the very serious accusation that Mr. Nevinson has been followed by the police from place to place as if he were in an enemy's country. It is because the charge could not be denied that it has been passed by in silence. It is of a piece with the rest and proves the existence of an espionage of the dirtiest kind, from which neither a member of Parliament nor a member of the Legislative Council, nor a simple tourist is free."

ADVOCATE, 9th January, 1908.

The Surat Industrial Conference.

92. Referring to the Third Industrial Conference held at Surat after the dissolution of the Congress, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 9th January that under the impulse of the Swadeshi movement which is gradually losing its noisy element and is sinking into the hearts of the people, the Industrial Conference is making steady progress, but that to further the industrial progress of India very much more money by way of capital is needed.

He suggests that this must be obtained from foreigners but, on one condition only, namely that Indians do "not pay for it more than other nations" to use the words of the Hon'ble Mr. Vithaldas.

This expression means, he says, that capital must come from outside as borrowed money for which interest is to be paid, and not as share money on which the entire profits of any concern have to be spent which constitutes the great difference between the foreigner as a money-lender, and the foreigner as a capitalist.

He remarks that as a cheap and quick transport is of vital importance to the growth of Indian industries, railway construction should not be deprecated, but that what is more needed is more efficient management of the railways in order to quicken transport and lower freights.

The editor advocates the nationalising of the railways, so that the profits may go to add to the revenue of the Government and not go out of the country.

He points out how the poor and ignorant trader would benefit by adopting uniformity in the matter of weights and measures, and also the importance of establishing a universal currency throughout India in British territory as well as in native states in which matter sentiment should, he thinks, give way to expediency.

Turning to the question of agriculture, the editor advocates that Government should change its land policy and prevent rack-renting by zamindars, that the new knowledge obtained as a result of repeated experiments should be taken to the very doors of the peasant, so that he may reap the benefit of it.

The editor expresses his doubt as to the future of the sugar industry, and remarks that unless a very great reduction takes place in the cost of production the industry seems to be doomed.

V.—Legislation.

93. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for October and November (received on the 6th January), referring to the Seditious Meetings Act, remarks that there was absolutely no necessity for passing this measure, as there was ample provision in the Indian Penal Code to deal with sedition. He notes that sedition has come to mean with the Anglo-Indians even difference of opinion expressed clearly and frankly, and that the discontent, to crush which these measures were passed, was only a figment of the imagination of Anglo-Indian journalists, who ought to have been punished for the false rumours they so assiduously spread. If there was any dissatisfaction among the people, instead of adopting repressive measures, their grievances ought, he says, to have been removed. The activities of the Extremists are mentioned as one of the causes of the severe measures adopted by the Government. But he remarks that, although their methods of work may be different, they are as loyal to the Government as the Moderates, and the latter will neither disavow them nor help the bureaucracy to persecute them.

The Seditious Meetings Act.

ZAMANA, October and November, 1907.

94. A correspondent writing to Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 7th Jauuary, discusses Mr. Gokhale's speech on the Seditious Meetings Bill in the Viceregal Council, and refutes his arguments in detail.

The Seditious Meetings Act.

AL-BASHIR, 7th January, 1908.

VI.—Railway.

95. Referring to the recent collison of the trains at Ludhiana, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 30th December (received on the 10th January), writes as follows :—" If the drivers have resolved (to work destruction) they had better speak out, so that we may drive out the plague and famine from the country, as India has not unfortunately got a sufficent population to satisfy the quickened appetites of the plague, the famine and of the railway as well."

Collision on the North-West Railway.

MUSAFIR, 30th December, 1907.

96. Referring to the strike of the native drivers on the East Bengal State Railway and the grievances put forth by them, the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th January, expresses a hope that the Railway Board will consider their grievances and claims with as much impartiality and leniency as it has done with the claims of the Eurasian guards and drivers serving on the line.

Strike of native drivers on the East Bengal State Railway.

TOHFA-I-HIND, 4th January, 1908.

97. Referring to the accident on the North-Western Railway the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th January, remarks that travelling on this railway has become highly dangerous, and unless the management is thoroughly overhauled and reorganised, the chapter of accidents is not likely to close.

The Railway disaster in the Punjab.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 5th January, 1908.

In recent accidents there were several suits for damages which were awarded in most cases. On this occasion also suits for damages should be instituted against the railway by the victims of the disaster and by the relations of the passengers killed.

AL-BASHIR, 7th January, 1908.

98. Al-Bashir (Etawah,) of the 7th January, referring to the Ludhiana Railway collision, suggests the advisability of doubling the railway tracks on all important lines to prevent the frequent occurrence of such accidents.

The Ludhiana Railway collision.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 7th January, 1908.

99. Referring to the Ludhiana Railway collison, the Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 7th January, strongly comments on the fact that so far no official report of this appalling accident has been published either by the Government or the Railway Company, and says that the occurrence of four accidents on the line within two months is a sad commentary on the working of the North-Western Railway. The editor expresses his surprise at the indifference of the Railway Board, the members of which seem to do nothing beyond making tours here and there and drawing fat salaries.

The Ludhiana Railway collision.

RAFIQ-PUNCH, 7th January, 1908.

100. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 7th January, complains that the Railway goods clerks take bribes from the consignors of goods, which causes great loss to the traders. The editor asks the Government to intervene in the matter.

Railway goods clerks.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

101. The Agra Akhbar, of the 7th January, referring to the railway collision near Ludhiana, suggests the advisability of registering the names of railway passengers when they purchase their ticket, so that when accidents occur, Government may know the number of persons killed, who may be otherwise made away with by the railway authorities, and the heirs of the deceased may thus be easily traced.

Registration of Railway passengers' names.

RAHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

102. Referring to the appointment of some European ladies as signallers, the Rahbar, (Moradabad), of the 7th January, remarks that so far it has been the practice of male Europeans only to divest India of her wealth, but now both male and female will equally lay their hands upon what little has been left to poor Indians.

Women signallers.

ADVOCATE, 9th January, 1908.

103. A correspondent to the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), gives in the issue of the 9th January a list of several reforms and arrangements required to be made at the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway station at Fyzabad city.

Fyzabad city station.

These are as follows:—

(1) Night trains should be available for passenger traffic.
(2) Through working of passengers and parcels with foreign lines.
(3) The immediate necessity of a raised platform, at least a kutcha one, to avoid accidents.
(4) Waiting room accommodation for passengers, especially for ladies and and higher class passengers. Even a couple of waggons would do for the present.
(5) Printed tickets to and from all stations on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.
(6) Local trains from and to Fyzabad should start from the city station or Ajodhia Ghat.
(7) No trains should stop for less than five minutes, or until all the passengers present on the station have been accommodated. Several people have narrowly escaped from serious injury by the train starting after very short halts.

VII.—Post Office.

POSTAL MAGAZINE, December 1907.

104. The Postal Magazine (Agra), for December 1907 (received on the 7th January), publishes a letter from a correspondent who complains that although the duties of the Post office subordinates are very arduous, yet they do not get any famine allowance, and prays that the hardships of the Postal employés may be taken into consider-a tion, and also that, as they very seldom get promotion, a yearly increment in their salaries should be granted.

The Postal employees and the famine.

105. The Postal Magazine (Agra), for December 1907 (received on the 7th of January) notes with satisfaction the Director-General's order for limiting the hours of work in the Post Office, and hopes that it will be made practicable soon.

The Post Office working hours.

POSTAL MAGAZINE, December, 1907.

106. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 7th January, complains of the inconvenience to which the public is put owing to the paucity of the postage stamps for sale at the Benares City Post Office and refers to an instance on the 4th instant when five rupees worth of postage stamps could not be had for several hours. The editor invites the attention of the Postmaster General to the matter and suggests that at least three or four shops should be opened in the city where postage stamps may be procurable at all hours of the day.

Benares City Post Office.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 7th January 1908.

107. A correspondent writing to the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 7th January, says that the men employed by the Government to sell postage stamps outside post offices often charge ignorant men extortionate rates for filling in money order and telegraph forms, and suggests that Government should fix these charges at moderate rates so as to save ignorant men from their extortionate demands.

A postal complaint.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 7th January, 1903.

108. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun) of the 7th January, suggests that the South Branch Post Office should be raised to the grade of an experimental sub-post office, which will be equally convenient to the public and the head office, inasmuch as the former will be enabled to draw money daily from the savings bank and the latter will be relieved of a considerable amount of work involved under the present arrangement.

South Branch Post Office, Budaun.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 7th January, 1908.

109. A correspondent in the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th January, suggests the desirability of the Cawnpore Cantonment Post office being made a delivery office so as to facilitate the delivery of letters, parcels, and money-orders to the cantonment public, which is seriously inconvenienced owing to the delay involved in delivery under the existing arrangements.

Cawnpore Cantonment Post office.

ARYA MITRA, 8th January, 1908.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

110. The Musafir (Agra) of the 30th December (received on the 10th January) quotes some remarks of Qadiani at the last Arya Smaj meeting at Lahore and asks the Punjab Government to take action against him under section 124A, Indian Penal Code, as his remarks excite the Muhammadans to carry on crusades against the Hindus.

The editor quotes various verses from the Quran which enjoins the Muhammadans to be hostile not only to Hindus, but to Jews and Christians also.

Qadiani at the Lahore Arya Samaj Meeting.

MUSAFIR, 30th December, 1907.

111. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 1st January (received on the 6th January) while pointing out the irreligious and immoral tendency of the present age, recommends the necessity of the continuance of Pardah system, and strongly denounces the views of those young men who of late have raised a cry to do away with all pardah restrictions.

The Pardah System.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 1st January, 1908.

112. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 6th January, while commenting on the views expressed by Swami Shugan Chandra of Muttra Shanti Ashram, regarding the unity of different religions, agrees with the opinion of the Swami as every religion taken in its wide sense is identical with others both in spirit and principle.

Unity of religions.

OUDH AKHBAR, 6th January, 1908.

113. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th January, referring to the grant of Rs. 56,000 to the Shahi Mosque of Lahore, remarks that the bounties of the Government should be even-handed and complains that the Government has not contributed anything towards the repair of the celebrated Kangra temple and has deprived the Jains of their sacred place, the Parasnath Hill.

Government aid.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 4th January, 1908.

RAHBAR, 7th January, 1908.

Repairs of Aurangzeb Mosque at Government expense.

114. Referring to the Government grant for the repairs of the Aurangzeb Mosque in the Punjab, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th January, asks if the Government will give a proof of its impartial treatment towards Hindus and Muhammadans by making a similar grant for the repairs of the temple at Kangra.

JAIN GAZETTE, 8th January, 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

115. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 8th January, publishes three lettersexpressing deep regret at the injustice done to the loyal Jain community by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in sanctioning the construction of bungalows for Europeans on the Parasnath Hill, to which the Jains had unanimously objected as wounding their religious susceptibilities, and exhorts them to do all they can to protect their sacred hill from desecration.

CITIZEN, 9th January, 1908.

The Magh Mela.

116. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 9th January, writes :—"The Magh Mela is fast approaching, and we feel it our duty to come back to the theme which about this time last year caused the displeasure of some of the local mandarins. Although famine is raging all over the country, we expect all the same this year a large crowd of pilgrims owing to Ardhodaya yoga and other auspicious combinations of Tithis. The want of common shed for pilgrims is a crying necessity. The Megh Mala funds should be utilised to construct some straw sheds where the pilgrims may take shelter and protect themselves from exposure. Then there should be better arrangements for conservancy. Not only should a large number of sweepers be engaged, but they should be worked by a batch of efficient mates. Small-pox is raging in the city, so that it would be advisable to have segregation huts where patients suffering from the disease may be kept and properly nursed and looked after. The want of some stalls of banias, and other vendors of food stuffs below the bund is also keenly felt by pilgrims on a crowded bathing day. Only one sweetmeat vendor is allowed to have his stall on the sands. It would be better if a limited number of hawkers were allowed to go about offering their articles to the pilgrims. There should also be some check on the barbers, milkmen, malhas and ghatias, most of whom do their level best to fleece the pilgrims of every pie they possess. Some arrangements for latrines and urinals should be made on the sands, and strict measures taken to prevent the pollution of the water. Dead bodies should not be allowed to be thrown into the river above the confluence so that it may not be polluted by germs of epidemic disease. Above all, we shall be happy to see as little of the management entrusted to the police as possible. Is it, we venture to ask, altogether impracticable and impolitic to form a corps of citizen-volunteers, whose duty it would be not merely to strengthen the hands of the authorities in maintaining peace and order, but to see that the prejudices of the pilgrims were respected and their conveniences duly looked after?"

IX.—Miscellaneous.

Nil.

ALLAHABAD :
The 13th January, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 3 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 18th January, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign :
1.	Court martial of Russian generals ...	55
2.	Race antagonism...	55
3.	Japanese in New York	55
4.	Students and politics in China ...	55
5.	Swadeshism and the Chinese Government	55
6.	Indian administration in America ...	55
	(b)—Home :
7.	Indians in the Transvaal	56
8.	Indians in the Transvaal	56
9.	Indians in the Transvaal	56
10.	Indians in the Transvaal	56
11.	Indians in the Transvaal	56
12.	Indians in the Transvaal	56
13.	Indians in the Transvaal and South Africa	56
14.	Indians in the Transvaal	56
15.	Indians in the Transvaal	57
16.	Indians in the Transvaal	57
17.	Transvaal Government and the Indians ...	57
18.	The Boer conspiracy	57
19.	The Surat Congress	57
20.	The Surat Congress	57
21.	Split in the Congress	58
22.	The Times on the Surat Congress ...	58
23.	The Surat Congress	58
24.	The Surat Congress	58
25.	The Surat Congress	58
26.	The Surat National Congress ...	59
27.	The Surat Congress	59
28.	The Congress for 1908	59
29.	The Surat Congress	59
30.	The Congress and Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh	59
31.	The Congress fiasco	59
32.	The Congress fiasco	60
33.	Moderates and Extremists	61
34.	The New party	61
35.	The Moderate Convention	61
36.	The Moderate Convention	61
37.	Proposed excommunication of the Nationalists	62
38.	The Nationalist programme	62
39.	Recent events in Bengal and alleged political bearings	62
40.	Unrest in Bengal	62
41.	Parliamentary institutions in Asia ...	62
42.	India under Liberal Ministry ...	62
43.	A Frenchman on Indian politics ...	63
44.	Swarajya in India	63
45.	Lala Lajpat Rai	63
46.	The Viceroy's sympathy ...	63
47.	The Muslim League at Karachi ...	64
48.	Zamindars and Legislative Councils ...	64
49.	The proposed reforms in India ...	64
50.	The next Provincial Conference ...	64
51.	The Franco-British exhibition ...	65
52.	The educated Indians and the Government	65
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
	Nil.

Page.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

53. The post of the Chief Justice in Mysore State 65

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Judicial and Revenue :

54. Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ... 66
55. Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ... 66
56. Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship 66
57. Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ... 66
58. Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ... 66
59. The appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ... 66
60. The Judicial Redistribution Committee... 66
61. The Rawalpindi riot case 66
62. The Rawalpindi riot case 67

(b)—Police :

63. The Mymensingh outrage 67
64. The Mymensingh outrage 67
65. The Mymensingh outrage 67
66. The Mymensingh outrage 68
67. The Mymensingh outrage 68
68. The Mymensingh outrage 68
69. The Detective police 68
70. Whitewashing the police 68

(c)—Finance and Taxation :

Nil.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :

71. Enhancement of octroi taxes in Moradabad 68
72. House tax in Lahore 69
73. Blocking of streets at Benares ... 69
74. Water-supply and lighting arrangements at Benares 69
75. Licenses for ekka driving ... 69
76. Municipal and District Boards in the United Provinces 69

(e)—Education :

77. The Anglo-Bengali School Prize Distribution 70
78. The Anglo-Bengali School Prize Distribution 70
79. Muhammadan Educational Conference at Karachi 70

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :

80. Improvement in cattle breeding and pasture arrangements for cows ... 70
81. Famine relief abuses 70
82. Famine and the sepoys 70
83. The famine 71
84. The famine 71
85. Famine relief in Lucknow 71
86. Famine relief allowance in Lucknow ... 71
87. The famine and the Banias 71
88. Famine relief 71
89. The famine in the United Provinces ... 71

Page.

(g)—General :

90. The attempted murder of Mr. Allen ... 71
91. Bonus to Mr. Fox 71
92. Count O'kuma's speech 72
93. Misunderstanding in India 72
94. The Cocaine habit in Ajmere ... 72
95. Mr. Nevinson and the Government ... 72
96. India's weakness 72
97. Anticipated departure of the Viceroy ... 72
98. Agra poorhouse 72
99. The swadeshi Conference 72
100. Registration 73
101. Sir D. Ibbetson 73
102. Retirement of Sir D. Ibbetson ... 73
103. Agricultural improvement in India ... 73
104. Agricultural industry 73
105. The Third Industrial Conference ... 73
106. Letters of an American to the Indian people 74
107. Mr. Annie Besant and Bande Matram ... 74
108. Court of Wards 74
109. Excise 74
110. Looting in Campbellpur 75
111 Mr. Morley and Indian editors ... 75
112. Victoria Memorial Fund 75

V.—LEGISLATION.

Nil.

VI.—RAILWAY.

113. Famine allowance to Railway employés ... 75
114. Catering arrangements at railway stations 75
115. Railway accidents 75
116. Railway accidents 75
107. Extension of the railway in India ... 75
118. Ill-treatment on Railway platforms ... 75
119. Railway collision 76

VII.—POST OFFICE.

Nil.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

120. The Parasnath Hill 76
121. The Parasnath Hill 76
122. Erection of stables on the Parasnath Hill 76
123. The Magh Mela 76
124. The Magh Mela 76
125. Wakfs 76
126. Wakfs 77
127. Social reform in the National party ... 77
128. National Social Conference 77
129. National Social Conference 77
130. The Allahabad Orphanage 77
131. Widow marriage 78
132. Pardah parties 78

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

133. The Allahabad Lawyers deputation ... 78

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for December (received on the 15th January), considers the court-martial of General Stoessel and other Russian generals, who surrendered Port Arthur to the Japanese, as a barbarous act on the part of the Russian Government, which, the editor thinks, is intended to humiliate these generals so that they may not behave so disgracefully in the future when the Russians may think of avenging themselves upon the Japanese for their late defeat.

Court martial of Russian generals.

SIPAHI, December, 1907.

2. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for December, (received on the 15th January), notes with regret the growing feeling of race antagonism between East and West, which, the editor apprehends, may one day result in a world-wide conflict. He asks of what use is the much boasted civilization of modern times when it prepares men to cause bloodshed from selfish motives. He goes on to say that the white men apprehending danger from yellow races, have also come to hate the Indians and want to drive them out of their territories, and that it is for this reason that indignities are heaped upon them in the Transvaal and Canada. He concludes by expressing a hope that the Imperial Government will intervene and protect its loyal Indian subjects from the oppression to which they are subjected in the colonies.

Race antagonism.

SIPAHI, December, 1907.

3. While pointing out that the number of Japanese labourers in New York is greater than the people of the place, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th January, praises the enterprising spirit of the Japanese, and asks if Indians will ever be awakened to betake themselves to similar undertakings.

Japanese in New York.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th January, 1908.

4. Referring on the authority of the Englishman to the order of the Emperor of China prohibiting students from taking part in politics, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, remarks that when the Emperor of China has resolved to reform and govern his country on the lines of European Governments, he should like the latter, take no exception to students taking part in politics. Europeans have better administrative ability than the people in the East because they are trained in politics from their infancy.

Students and politics in China.

HIND, 9th January, 1908.

5. While referring to the mistake of the Chinese Government in refusing material assistance to some merchants who applied for it to encourage indigenous arts and industries, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, notes with regret that it is for similar reasons that India is so backward in manufacture of swadeshi articles.

Swadeshism and the Chinese Government.

RAHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

The editor further remarks that it is all the more to be regretted that the Chinese merchants received the same reply from their own Government as the Indians have from a foreign one.

In conclusion he remarks that the Chinese Government should give up this European policy of Government, as it is owing to such causes that there is so much agitation in Egypt and Russia. The forced silence of the people is like the pent up fury of a volcanic mountain which may burst out at any time with added force and violence.

6. Referring to the report that in New York and other cities in America meetings will be held to discuss the Indian administration, in which the wife of a Bombay attorney will be the chief speaker, the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th January, fails to understand how far the trumpeting of the defects of the Indian administration in foreign countries can be of use to Indians. Supposing that the Americans are convinced of the fact that India is not well governed under the British rule, what can they do beyond expressing sentimental sympathy with the Indians, which can be of no service to them.

Indian administration in America.

ARYA MITRA, 16th January, 1908.

The editor is of opinion that so long as the English who have taken upon their shoulders the burden of India and who are bound by principles of morality to remove the grievances of its people, do not take any steps to ameliorate their condition, nothing in this direction can be expected from other quarters.

(b).—Home.

HIND, 9th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

7. Referring to the sentence of 48 hours' imprisonment awarded to Mr. Gandhi, the Indian leader in the Transvaal, and also to five other Indians and three Chinese for refusing to register their names, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, remarks :—"The unanimous refusal of seventy thousand Indians to register their names is a happy sign of the feeling of nationality and shows that Indians have now awakened to their sense of self-respect."

HIND, th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

8. The editor of the Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, remarks that if any other Government oppresses the subjects of a king, the latter immediately declares war against the former. But the British Crown is indifferent to the protection of its most brilliant jewels, the Indians, from the oppressions of a people whom it has conquered by force of arms.

ANAND, 9th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

9. The Transvaalers have gained one more victory, says the editor of the Anand (Lucknow), of the 9th January, inasmuch as His Majesty the King-Emperor has given his royal assent to the Asiatic Registration Act. Perhas the distinction of white and black is acceptable even to God.

RAHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

10. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, while pointing out the troubles of the Indians in the Transvaal, regrets the indifference of the Government in not taking any notice of their lamentable condition. He further remarks that Heaven helps those who help themselves and that unless Indians learn to ward off their misfortunes by their own unassisted strength it is certain that they will never be better off.

TAFRIH, 14th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

11. Referring to the telegram sent by the All-India Conference to His Excellency the Viceroy regarding the lamentable condition of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 14th January, deplores the disappointing reply of his Excellency declining to interfere in the case of Mr. Gandhi, as the law according to which he has been punished has received the sanction of His Imperial Majesty.

The editor further remarks that His Excellency's promise to submit the memorial of the Indians to His Imperial Majesty can be of no good unless His Excellency as Viceroy of India endorses it with some recommendations.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 14th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

12. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow) of the 14th January, again refers to the subject of British Indians in the Transvaal and expresses the hope that the Imperial Government will intervene and compel the Transvaal Government to exercise a humane policy towards its British Indian subjects.

RAHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal and South Africa.

13. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, notes with deep regret the attempt at expelling Indians from the Transvaal and South Africa generally, and remarks :—

"It is simply because the Indians are governed by a foreign nation. Had they been governed by their own nation they would have paid the expellers for their scornful treatment of them in their own coin. Europeans must consider that the Indians will never forget them after they have established their own government. It is better therefore that the brethren of our rulers should be careful to abstain from such dangerous and foolish actions, otherwise it will be understood, that they are prepared to be accorded similar treatment."

ARYA MITRA, 16th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

14. Referring to the order of expulsion of two Indian ex-soliders from the Transvaal, the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th January, declares that this is the misfortune of the Indians. The Boers who were but lately the inveterate enemies of the English, having obtained self-government from the latter are committing indescribable oppressions upon the British Indian subjects, while the same Indians who for the last hundred and fifty years have been shedding their blood in Egypt and the Far East for maintaining the dignity and reputation of the British Empire, are being to-day turned out from a part of it for no fault of theirs. The editor asks if the Imperial Government will not stand on its right of seeing that Indians are not maltreated in the Transvaal, and if expelled, they should be accorded compensation, which were the conditions imposed upon its Government when it was conceded self-government.

15. Referring to the position of British Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Adocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 16th January, regrets that while indignation at the action of the Transvaal Government is being publicly expressed in England and elsewhere, no measures to do the same appear to be made in India.

Indians in the Transvaal.

ADVOCATE, 16th January, 1908.

16. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th January, in various leaderettes on the sufferings of the Transvaal Indians, expresses its regret at the indignities heaped upon them ; the flat refusal of the Viceroy to back them, and thinks that when such is the case it would be in vain for the Government to expect sentiments of loyalty in the Indians. He praises the constancy of the Indian leaders and is thankful to the British people for the warm interest in their Indian fellow subjects in the Transvaal.

Indians in the Transvaal.

HIND, 16th January, 1908.

17. Referring to the action of the Transvaal Government with regard to Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 16th January, that it was a good eye-opener for all Indians, and ought to be a powerful incentive to an intense agitation.

Transvaal Government and the Indians.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th January, 1908.

18. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th January, has the following :—

The Boer conspiracy.

ADVOCATE, 12th January, 1908.

"The Boers were and are for independence, de facto if not de jure. What they failed to secure by the use of arms, they are on the fair way to get, if they have not got already, by trickeries. As sincere enemies of the British nation they measured arms but found their weapons fall short. They submitted to the inevitable in the battlefield. In the chessplay of politics they have gained immensely, hoodwinking a Liberal Ministry, and what is more, even the eagle-eyed imperialists of South Africa and England. The enemies, deadliest enemies, of yesterday, are now the ultra-loyalists of to-day. They have been so recognised by the British Ministry and have as a reward been given a responsible government. How is this new weapon being used ? Simply to break up the British power, in South Africa at least, and jeopordise the British Empire and make the Imperial Government a laughing-stock of the world. While on the one hand British Indians are being persecuted ruthlessly and hunted down, Englishmen are being either ousted from important offices in the Transvaal or kept out of them. A British Colonial describes in the columns of the Globe the story of all such doings. He says in the course of his letter :—

"We, who live out here and have to look on while these things are done, know that the talk of the decline of racial feeling is a farce. Certainly we English have never felt so bitter towards the Boers, but the bitterest pill of all is that we have been put in this helpless position by our own people—the weak-kneed Liberal Government. We fought and, in many cases, sacrificed our all to do so, in the late war and have been rewarded by being again sacrificed on the altar of conciliation. It is only those who have to live through and witness the constant humiliations of our own good men, that can realise how bitter our feelings are, the more so for having been put under the heel of the people whom we helped to conquer, and who, metaphorically slapping us in the face, shout and preach 'loyalty' and brotherhood in their public utterances."

So a United Dutch South Africa is not a dream—an idle dream—but about to become a reality at the cost of Indians and—also Britons who fought and won."

19. Referring to the Surat Congress fiasco, the Mohini (Kanauj), of the 7th January (received on the 13th idem), says that it is well that the Congress, involving as it did waste of enormous money, has come to an end. It is to be hoped that it will be replaced by a really efficient working institution which will do good service to the country by teaching the people to rely on themselves and not to look to others for their salvation.

The Surat Congress.

MOHINI, 7th January, 1908.

20. Referring briefly to the unseemly behaviour of, and the dissensions between the National and Moderate parties at the Surat Congress, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th January, remarks that it will be more significant to designate these parties as the Liberals and Conservatives of India.

The Surat Congress.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th January, 1908.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 8th January, 1908.

Split in the Congress.

21. While deeply regretting the disgraceful conduct of the leaders at the Surat Congress, the Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) of the 8th January, holds the Nationalists entirely responsible for the shameful event, and remarks that although each party blames the other for creating the fiasco, yet it is certain that this sad incident has split the Congress and in future each party will hold its sittings independently of the other.

The editor feels himself quite at a loss to account for the curious fact that either party takes the incident to be a lucky omen for itself.

He is of opinion that it would have been much better if, instead of bringing the Congress to such a lamentable end, the leaders had dispensed with it altogether and patiently trusted in the British justice in granting them the rights asked for.

He further remarks that it is also the opinion of some persons that it is simply a sham and collusive fight to hoodwink the third party (the Government?). It is also rumoured that the well known Punjab leader Lala Lajpat Rai has joined the cause of the Moderates, while Sardar Ajit Singh, discarded by the Moderates, has joined the opposite side.

HIND, 9th January, 1908.

The Times on the Surat Congress.

22. Referring to the remarks of the Times (London), that the dissension between the Congress parties at Surat, has given a golden opportunity to the Moderates to rise, provided that they do not foolishly cry for the moon, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, remarks:—"If Indians cry for the separation of the judicial and executive functions, their effort to obtain self-government on the lines marked out by the Congress and their remonstrations against the disgraceful treatment accorded to their brethren in the Transvaal, are taken to be as crying for the moon, what other good on earth will the English confer on the Indians!"

HIND, 9th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

23. While reproducing the Extremist version of the lamentable incidents of the Surat Congress as described by Mr. Kolhatkar, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 9th January, holds both the parties to be at fault; the Moderates because they denied interview to Mr. Tilak, published some provoking remarks against him and declined to act upon the resolutions passed at the Calcutta Congress; the Nationalists because they lost all patience and were led away by blind enthusiasm.

The editor admits the personal merits and capabilities of the leaders of either party and expresses a strong hope that they will soon consider their mistakes and be speedily reconciled and work all the more harmoniously for the attainment of their common object—the salvation of their brethren.

ANAND, 9th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

24. Referring to the Surat Congress fiasco the Anand (Lucknow), of the 9th January, says that either party throws the blame on the shoulders of the other, and that the matter would have been easily settled if the Indian public were really at the back of the Congress. It would have sat in judgment upon the conduct of both parties and deciding as to which of them was to blame, would have made the delinquent party admit it. But that is not a fact, since the masses are quite ignorant of the Congress and the leaders of each party are now left alone to arrogate innocence to themselves and lay the blame on the other.

The editor is of opinion that both the parties being equally to blame inasmuch as the Moderates behaved autocratically while the Extremist disgraced the Congress by their persistent obstinacy and rowdyism, they should make up their differences and act as hitherto in unison for the good of their common country.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

25. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th January, gives under the heading of "Who is responsible for wrecking the Congress," its own version of the Surat Congress fiasco, and holds Mr. Tilak responsible for wrecking the Congress. The editor remarks with extreme regret that the Anglo-Indian official, Sir Saiyid Ahmad, and the Anglo-Indian papers, the enemies of the progress of India, could not, with their combined efforts for years, deal such a heavy blow to the Congress as has been dealt to it by Mr. Tilak, one of its own most highly educated and honoured supporters.

26. The Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 11th January, publishes an article entitled " The real facts of the Surat Congress." He holds the Moderate leaders entirely responsible for the split in the Congress.

SWARAJYA, 11th January, 1908.

The Surat National Congress.

He minutely describes the efforts of the Nationalist leader Mr. Tilak to persuade the Moderates to settle the dispute amicably, but they were obstinate in their resolve and denied audience to Mr. Tilak who opposed the carrying on of the Congress on the lines marked out by it at Calcutta. They even attempted to assault Mr. Tilak when he ascended the platform to oppose their amended resolutions and the election of the President.

He points out that the conduct of the Moderates was selfish, prejudiced and disgraceful in not allowing Mr. Tilak the right of addressing the delegates.

He also attempts to prove the falsity of the official report, that the election of Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, as President of the Congress, was carried out unanimously amidst cheers and loud applause.

He further remarks that even granting for a moment that the election was unanimously carried out as has been asserted by the opponents, it was done in a most clumsy and unnecessarily hasty manner to avoid the opposition, notice of which was already given by Mr. Tilak.

27. While reproducing the presidential speech of Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, prepared for the Surat Congress, the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th January, characterises it as thoughtful, eloquent and highly impressive.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 12th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

The editor strongly denounces the conduct of the Extremist leader, Mr. Tilak, and holds him entirely responsible for the lamentable incidents in the Congress pavilion.

28. Referring to a statement made by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose that the Moderates will hold the next Congress again in Surat in December 1908, the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 13th January, asks if there is any guarantee that it will not be interfered with by the Extremists or that they will not hold their own Congress. He remarks that under the circumstances the difference of opinion will lead to a further split in the Congress, making it dwindle into one of the many existing insignificant institutions which are of little service to the country. The editor is of opinion that if the Congress is to be held at all, it should be held by the unanimous opinion of all parties, otherwise it is already dead and there is no use speaking about it.

BHARAT JIWAN, 13th January, 1908.

The Congress for 1908.

29. While regretting the disgraceful conduct of the leaders at the Surat Congress, the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 14th January, strongly denounces the action of the Moderates in insulting Mr. Tilak by burning his effigy.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

The editor remarks that this incident is a serious stigma on the character of the Congress leaders who sacrificed the public cause for private and personal distinctions.

In conclusion he advises them to set aside all party differences and work harmoniously to make the Congress a success.

30. Al-Bashir (Etawah) of 14th January, referring to the warm reception accorded to Lala Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh in the Congress Pandal, remarks that there was a time when the Congress and Arya Samaj organs emphatically disavowed all connection, with them and now a large section among them wanted to make Lala Lajpat Rai, President of the Congress, and gave Ajit Singh a seat on the dais reserved for the leaders and other influential men.

AL-BASHIR, 14th January, 1908.

The Congress and Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh.

31. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, referring to the strictures of the Anglo-Indian papers on the Congress fiasco, remarks that dissensions and quarrels are not uncommon in European public bodies and have been witnessed in the British Parliament and the French Council.

HIND, 9th January, 1908.

The Congress fiasco.

AL-BASHIR, 4th January, 1908.

32. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 14th January, makes in its editorial columns the following comments on the Congress fiasco at Surat :--

The Congress fiasco.

The chief cause of the split was the controversy about the Presidentship and the inclusion of Swaraj, Boycott, and National Education Resolutions in the Congress programme. The Extremists had proposed Lala Lajpat Rai, he was equally esteemed and honoured by the Moderates. Why were the Moderates then so much opposed to his election? The three above-mentioned resolutions were unanimously passed at the Calcutta Congress, why did the Moderate leaders then think it imprudent to consider them this year too? The only safe conclusion that can be drawn from these events is that the split was due to party feeling. Now if the Hindus are so much divided among themselves, and their leaders are so selfish, will they be just when their interests clash with those of the Muhammadans?

The Congress leaders have made great efforts in the past to convert the Musalmans to their creed, but have always failed in their attempts. Their bribes, threats and temptations have alike failed. Can the Congress papers say how many Musalmans were present in this year's Congress? It is a great comfort that their number was very small, or else they would have been held entirely responsible for rowdyism in the Congress.

One of the permanent items on the Congress programme is the abolition of the Arms Act. Had the Government granted its prayers, the bloody scenes of the Mahabharata would have been repeated on the 27th December, at Surat.

Protestation against police 'zulum' (oppression) has been another important feature of the Congress. The police has been held responsible for the deportation of Lala Lajpat Rai, the imprisonment of the Rawalpindi leaders and the riots in Calcutta and East Bengal. What is the reason of this crusade against the police? Simply because the Musalmans form a majority in it. And this much-reviled force was called in by the Congress leaders to settle their unseemly disputes. This shows that they are wanting in self-dependence, self-respect and sense of honour. It would have been very creditable on their part to have settled their differences amicably, and should not have had recourse to the police, which they took every opportunity to revile.

The Hindu papers should thank their stars that the Musalmans have been kept back by their leaders and their press from joining the ranks of the Congress. Had they mustered strong in the Congress Pandal, they would have taken the principal part in the free fight and would have never allowed the police to disperse them without offering strong resistance. As a result many of them would have been hanged or imprisoned. But their number was very small, and the few who were there, will not in future repeat their folly.

Referring to the attack made on the Moslem conquerers of Persia by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose in his undelivered Presidential address, the editor thinks it a deliberate attempt to create bad blood between the Musalmans and Parsees. The learned Doctor should have also mentioned that Surat was the place which was twice sacked by Sivaji, whose worshipper Tilak has now wrecked the Congress at the same place.

Dr. Ghose's undelivered speech shows that the ideals and aspirations of the Moderates and Extremists are identically the same. He has indulged in the same platform platitudes which the Extremists so glibly and indiscreetly blab out, but in a guarded and lawyer-like fashion.

The Government and the Musalmans have more to fear from the hypocritical Moderates than the frank and outspoken Extremists.

The learned Doctor has deliberately insulted the Musalmans present in the Congress by holding them responsible for the Calcutta riots and other heinous crimes. Can there be a Musalman who is so wanting in self-respect as to attend the deliberations of such a meeting again? He has made a foolish allusion to the Etawah incident and has given a conclusive proof of his folly by alluding to an incident the details of which are not yet public.

The different versions of the Congress fiasco published by the Extremists and Moderates differ considerably in detail. Many of the inci dents mentioned are quite imaginary. Can we not deduce from this untruthfulness that the calumnies published by these papers against the Government and the Musalmans are false and must be treated with the contempt they deserve.

The shameless way in which they (the Moderates) have treated Mr. Tilak by holding monster meetings against him and burning him in effigy brings out in relief the hidden fierceness of this "Moderate" body and shows to what extent it can annoy the Government and obstruct its work if in any way molested.

Moderates and Extremists.

33. Referring to the burning of Mr. Tilak's effigy by the Moderates, their attempt to pass on him a public vote of censure, and disgrace him by burning his journal, the Kesari on the Congress platform, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, strongly condemns the shameful conduct of his opponents. HIND, 9th January, 1908.

The editor further remarks that the matter will grow very serious if the Extremists also retaliated, and advises both parties to settle their differences amicably.

The New party.

34. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th January, has the following:—"The new party is anxious to be known as Nationalists and not Extremists, but surely those who have been in the fold of the National Congress for twenty-three years have a stronger right to that name than those who have put a spoke in the wheel of the Congress. Names do not hurt, and whether the old party is called Moderate or Mendicant it does not at all give up its claims to be called Nationalist. The position of the new party is now clear. Its voice is against the Government and its hand is against its own countrymen, men who have grown grey in the service of the country and whose names are honoured throughout the land. Those whose voice has been raised too high against the Government have already felt the weight of its heavy hand on their mouths, and most of them now crow several octaves lower. But their own countrymen are fair game, and it is after them that the young pack is in full cry. Exciting and exhilarating as this recreation may be, it is obvious that it cannot be protracted very long, and we think the last of the tally-ho was heard at Surat. The experience of Surat has pulled up the veterans and stiffened their backs and they already present a united and compact front. The other party feels its isolation and Mr. Tilak was the first to speak of reconciliation on the day that the Congress broke up. Unfortunately, Mr. Tilak has made himself personally impossible to the old party. The new party may stand by him until it finds that there are autocrats everywhere, and Cæsar was not the only tyrant of history. But to what work will it put its hand? The newspaper abuse may be kept up—only the Government must be left severely alone. No more tirades against the Feringi. But will there be other opportunities of abusing the old leaders and flinging shoes at them and attacking them with lathis? Provision against that will be made. The Extremists have made their own bed and they must lie on it; they have chosen their path and they must tread it, but so far as we can see at present a coalition between them and the old party is not possible because the strife is personal and very bitter and there is a radical difference in the methods. We know that in division and natural strife there is weakness and a shrinkage of force, but there is no way out, and with our own hands we have pushed the goal further from us." INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th January, 1908.

The Moderate Convention.

35. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th January, has the following:—"A meeting of the committee of "Moderate" Convention which has been called into existence at Surat will be held at Allahabad when a constitution will be finally settled. The date fixed is, we understand, the 1st of April." CITIZEN, 12th January, 1908.

The Moderate Convention.

36. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th January, has the following:—"The Executive Committee of the United Provinces Association meets this afternoon at Allahabad to decide the dates on which the Provincial Conference of the United Provinces should hold its second meeting in Lucknow. It is necessary that the Conference should meet at an early date in order to submit its opinion to the Local Government on the reform scheme. We hope that the earlier part of the Muharram ADVOCATE, 12th January, 1908.

vacation which happens in the second week of February will be utilized for the purpose. The notice will be short, but in view of the fact that opinion on the reform scheme cannot be delayed any longer, the Conference cannot but meet early next month."

RAHBAR.
14th January, 1908.

Proposed excommunication of the Nationalists.

37. While pointing out the intention of the Conservative party at Nagpur to cut off all social and political connections with the Liberals, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, remarks "that the patriots have been persecuted in all ages, and they should never forsake the right path which they have taken even if the whole of India turned out to be conservative to obstruct their way. We should earnestly work for the good and the salvation of our country and patiently trust in Providence for the result."

CITIZEN,
16th January, 1908.

The Nationalist programme.

38. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), sets forth in the issue of 16th January, a declaration of the policy of the Nationalists.

The Nationalists claimed to be more practical than the Moderates, whose present policy of conservatism was not suited to the needs of the present time.

To make provision for the changing needs of the people, and re-adapt the institutions which exist, was the policy which was required in India, and the Nationalists sought to supply it.

They recognised the need of industrial expansion and better education on thoroughly national lines, and their efforts to secure these could not be construed into sedition.

They aimed at so training the people that there might be more dependence upon self and less on the foreign Government in their industrial, educational, and economic affairs.

The Government could not take exception to this programme, for from its avowed intentions, it is the cherished object of the Government that people should be brought up well on those lines, so that they might enjoy a large share in the government of the country. The Government might carry on its own work on its own lines, and the Nationalists would never think of opposing it in the affairs of administration. They declared that in their own affairs they might well afford to do without any foreign help, and that they should be allowed to carry on their programme in peace.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th January, 1908.

Recent events in Bengal and alleged political bearings.

39. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th January, is at a loss to know why the attempts to wreck Sir A. Fraser's special train and to murder Mr. Allen should be supposed to have a political bearing. There have been murderous attempts on British officials in former times also, but they were always attributed to private dissatisfaction or grudge, but now they are supposed without any foundation to be due to sedition.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th January, 1908.

Unrest in Bengal.

40. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th January, referring to the unrest in Bengal, remarks that if the Bengalis persist in their present tactics their fate will be the same as that of the Boers. He however advises the Government to be patient with them and adopt a policy of conciliation.

SIPAHI,
December, 1907.

Parliamentary institutions in Asia.

41. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for December, (received on the 15th January), says that every country in Asia is making an attempt to grant popular Government to its people on the lines of European countries, and expresses a hope that the British Government too, in view of the new spirit animating the Orientals will reform its Indian administration and accord greater consideration to Indian public opinion so as to win over the good-will of the educated Indians.

RASTGO,
10th January, 1908.

Indians under the Liberal Ministry.

42. The Rástgo (Allahabad) of the 10th January, reproduces an article headed "India under the Liberal Ministry, a period of nine months" from the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st and 8th January.

43. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 10th January, publishes a letter from one H. L. Varma, who is at present in France and gives the opinion of a Frenchman on Indian politics. ABHYUDAYA, 10th January, 1908.

A Frenchman on Indian politics.

"The Frenchman could not believe that there could be three hundred million people in India possessing life and vitality who could remain in such degraded condition. The first thing that the Indians should do is to learn, keeping under the English, all their virtues and sterling qualities and then try their level best to attain Swaraj. They should not depend on the sympathy of foreign Powers and would deserve nothing if they do not practise self-reliance. Co-operation should be one of the cardinal points of their programme. Their progress will certainly be hampered by some narrow-minded English officials. But notwithstanding all this if they work in unison and harmony they can achieve a great deal. Industrial enterprise must be fostered by floating large companies with unlimited capitals. Students should be sent to foreign countries for technical education. The Government cannot put any obstacles in this."

The writer thereafter narrates the story of William Tell and says "that Europeans look with contempt upon the people who are under the subjection of others, while they think highly of those who are independent. They consider the Afghans superior to the Indians, i.e. Europeans respect those only who belong to a free country."

44. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of 11th January, reproduces the following article from Parkash (Lahore):—"The desire for independence is common and natural to all things living. SWARAJYA, 11th January, 1908.

Swardjya in India.

Those Indians who say that they need no Swaraj display a lamentable want of knowledge and insight into human nature, as no man can ever endure to live in servitude for ever and naturally tries to defy all restrictions."

The editor further points out that although the English are the most civilised people yet after all they are men and prone to human weakness, and consequently it is vain to hope that they will ever be so generous and superhuman in their nature as to give Indian Swaraj out of their own free will. It is therefore the essential duty of all true Indians to aim after that sublime aspiration, the salvation of their country. They may differ, it is true, in the methods they adopt for its attainment, but they cannot in any way deny the existence of a natural desire for independence in themselves.

The editor further remarks that had the English withheld Swaraj from Indians on the ground that they were still incapable to wield it, there could have been no objection to it. They were indeed unfit to carry on the administration of their country without the help of the English; that it will simply create chaos and disorder in the country. But they deny it on the ground that the Indians had no notion of Swaraj, the idea of which has been created in them by Western education. They even go too far and call the Indians savage, uncivilised and by nature servile. This is certainly objectionable.

In conclusion he cites various verses from the Vedas to establish the supremacy of the East over the West in point of culture and civilization, and points out that the Indians enjoyed perfect freedom and Swaraj in ancient times.

45. Referring to the visit of Lala Lajpat Rai to Bombay, theeditor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in his issue of 12th January as follows—"As regards the Congress he said his opinions had not changed; he had friends in both parties and intended to keep the friendship of both. We do not quite see how he can do so. His Extremist friends gave him a wide berth at Calcutta just as they did at Surat. They have not yet denounced him as an autocrat, but that may happen any day. 'Whoever is not with us is against us' is the creed of Extremists, and excellent as Lala Lajpat Rai's intentions may be, they are not likely to be appreciated." INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th January, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai.

46. Referring to His Excellency Lord Minto's reply to the telegram sent by Babu Surendranath Banerji on the question of the Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) writes in the issue of the 12th January—"What Lord Minto cannot ADVOCATE, 12th January, 1908.

The Viceroy's sympathy.

do officially, His Excellency may be expected to do in his private capacity. It is high time that the despatch of the resolution on the subject to the King-Emperor should be followed by prayers for intervention from the people."

The meeting held in Caxton Hall, under the chairmanship of Lord Ampthill, had expressed its disapproval of the restrictions placed on Indians in the Transvaal and regretted that the Imperial Government sanctioned such legislation.

It behoved Indians in India to also express their feelings in a wider and open manner.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 12th January, 1908.

The Muslim League at Karachi.

47. While reproducing in brief the speech of Sir Adamjee Peerbhoy, President of the Muslim League, at Karachi, the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th January, characterises it as moderate in tone, loyal, eloquent, and highly impressive.

The editor further remarks that although the speech may not please the officials yet it cannot be denied that it was sincere and meant for the good of the country.

AL-BASHIR, 14th January, 1908.

Zamindars and Legislative Councils.

48. A zamindar writing to the Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 14th January, asks the Government to consider the claims of zamindars for representation in the Councils, as this class keeps itself aloof from seditious agitation and has an important stake in the country. It is not necessary that their representatives should be big zamindars, but men of modest means having ability may be made their representatives. He also advocates the formation of local Advisory Councils in tahsils having equal numbers of Hindu and Mussalman members.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th January, 1908.

The proposed reforms in India.

49. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 16th January, notices an article entitled " The proposed reforms in India" which appears in the January number of the Hindustan Review. Following the writer's (Mr. S. H. Swinny, M.A., President of the Positivist Society) arguments, the editor remarks that when the concession in the shape of a representative element in the Indian Legislative Councils was first made, it was not without reason regarded as containing a future promise for the enlargement of popular liberties on the same lines. Now when the time had come, it would seem that the promise ought to bear fruit, some other motives must dictate the policy of the Government. In 1892 Indians had qualified themselves by educational tests, and had given indubitable proof of their intellectual fitness. In 1908 the advance of education, it would appear, was the sole reason for disqualifying educated Indians as a class. Unless the present policy was to hold intelligence and intellectuality at a discount in the highest councils of the land, he failed to see why it should now be justified on the ground that the landed aristocracy and the great body of moderate men should thus find scope for the exercise of their legitimate influence. It was true that the " mass " did not take any interest in such matters. This had been the case in the beginning in every country, but the spirit of the times has been permeating the lowermost stratum of the people. The result was the inevitable growth of an educated middle class which must be importunate for recognition. The reason as now put forward could also have been cited in 1892. It was not contended that the concession must be granted piecemeal, each class being recognised as fit for the donation after the lapse of a quarter of a century. It was not strange, therefore, that this policy should be regarded as reversing the natural order of things.

There remained the question of the special representation of Muhammadans. The interests of the common country of Hindus and Muhammadans should bring the two greatest communities in India together to make them work for a common cause, for whatever the present might yield, in the end they were bound to stand and fall together.

ADVOCATE, 16th January, 1908.

The next Provincial Conference.

50. Referring to the next meeting of the Provincial Conference at Lucknow, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 16th January, writes that the meeting would take place under very exceptional circumstances. Owing to the adjournment of the last Congress, the country had not been able to express itself on the " Reform " proposals of the Government of India and the scope of the Decentralisation Commission. What the Congress could not do for the whole of India each province had to do according to its needs and requirements.

Each province had to consider the scheme formulated by the Government of India and the Provincial Government scheme from its own point of view, and the educated Indians in these provinces could not do better than meet together and after mature deliberation express their views through the Conference. Before the opinions of those individuals whom the Government had consulted were expressed to the Government in the name of educated Indians, it was only proper that those interested should meet and compare notes on the subject. The opinions of the Conference would have a value of their own, and doubtless they would influence the decision of the Government. A similar course had to be taken about the Decentralisation Commission.

Indians had every reason to feel encouraged with the result of the first Conference. Some of the most serious grievances of the people discussed by the first Conference had received the attention of the Local Government and several matters referred to it were still under deliberation. There was also the question of the constitution of the Congress about which these Provinces had been asked by the National Convention to express their views through the members of the committee appointed by the Convention.

The meeting of selected men from all parts of these provinces at Lucknow in the next month could not but prove extremely advantageous to the general interest of the province, and it was trusted that the opportunity thus offered would be availed of by all interested in different kinds of activities for the good of the province.

The Franco-British Exhibition.

51. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th January, notes with regret the grant of Rs. 15,000 to the Franco-British Exhibition by the Government of India, and remarks that this sum could have been very usefully spent on the industrial development of the country itself.

HIND, 16th January, 1908.

The educated Indians and the Government.

52. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th January, referring to the alleged hostility of the educated community towards the Government, remarks that it is entirely unfounded. No doubt they are doing their best to awaken their countrymen from their sleep of ages and to infuse into them the vitality and the force that has been developed in them by a study of Western literature, history and sciences. They found their countrymen poor and destitute and are trying to ameliorate their deplorable condition by inaugurating the swadeshi movement. This unprecedented activity on their part was misconstrued by some narrow-minded Englishmen into sedition and unrest. Their demands are neither immoderate nor unjust, and they do not want the 'man in the moon' as Mr. Morley says.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th January, 1908.

A happy and prosperous India will be of immense value to England, so a policy of conciliation must be followed, and educated men should not be branded as traitors.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Nil.

III.—Native States.

The post of the Chief Justice in Mysore State.

53. While pointing out that the office of the Chief Judge of the Mysore High Court is going to be filled by a European, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, notes with regret that the Maharaja of Mysore is a mere puppet in the hands of the Europeans.

RAHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

The editor remarks that it is all the more to be regretted that the Maharaja is disgracing himself and his countrymen by offering the high office to a European, specially when he can find competent men among the Indians whose mental, intellectual and moral superiority and high attainments have been admitted even by so prejudiced a critic as Lord Curzon.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

HIND, 9th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship.

54. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, notes with satisfaction the appointment of Mr. Karamat Husain as a Judge of the Allahabad High Court, and hopes that he would discharge his duties impartially.

RASTGO, 10th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship.

55. The Rastgo (Allahabad), of the 10th January, notes with satisfaction the appointment of Mr. Karamat Husain as a Judge of the Allahabad High Court, and congratulates him.

TOHFA-I-HIND, 11th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship.

56. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 11th January, expresses its gratification at the appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain as the seventh Judge of the Allahabad High Court.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 12th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship.

57. Referring to the appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain as a Judge of the Allahabad High Court, the Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 12th January, remarks that perhaps his appointment has been made to make good the promise made by the Government of India to the Muhammadan deputation.

The editor then quotes the view of the Pioneer on this subject and expresses his regret at the policy of the Government in making the appointment on the consideration of race instead of on merit.

In conclusion he remarks that such partial policy of the Government will lead the people to believe that in awarding high offices the Government is mostly influenced by expediency and racial favouritism, and advises it to be equally well-disposed and impartial to all its subjects.

TAFRIH, 14th January, 1908.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship.

58. While praising Saiyid Karamat Husain for his high attainments in Arabic and deep insight in politics, the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th January, says that his appointment as a Judge of the High Court has been equally hailed by the Muhammadans and the Hindus of the United Provinces.

The editor further remarks that his selection has been very satisfactory, as after Justice Mahmud, he was the only man competent to occupy the chair on the High Court Bench.

OUDH AKHBAR, 14th January, 1980.

The appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship.

59. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 14th January, notes with satisfaction the appointment of Mr. Karamat Husain as seventh Judge of the Allahabad High Court.

SAHIFA., 12th January, 1908.

The Judicial Redistribution Committee.

60. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 12th January, makes the following suggestions for the consideration of the committee appointed to reorganise the work of civil courts:—

(1) In order to ensure a speedy and honest performance of the work of executing orders by the civil court nazirs, it should be confined within the towns and within a circumference of three miles of them.

(2) The attachment of immoveable property, and the obtaining of (dakhal) possession on landed property by means of amins involves unnecessary expenditure in the shape of fees, etc. and can be easily performed by civil court chaprasis.

(3) In cases of standing crops, taken possession of by distraint, the appointing of amins as receivers may be easily dispensed with by classifying the term 'standing crop' as 'moveable property,' which at present is regarded as immoveable property by the Civil Procedure Code.

(4) The appointing of commission with amins in cases of partition (batwárá) has proved very satisfactory and as it promises good results, the adoption of a similar procedure when he amins are required to make local enquiries or to perform some other important functions, is very desirable.

ADVOCATE, 12th January, 1908.

The Rawalpindi riot case.

61. Referring to the Rawalpindi riot case, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 12th January, that the Magistrate who tried the case passed some strictures on the conduct of the police.

The Legal Remembrancer to the Punjab Government now asked for the expunction of those strictures from the body of Mr. Martineau's judgment.

This anxiety to protect the police from the consequences of their obvious and mischievous pranks was hardly consistent with the neutral position which the Government is expected to preserve. If bad, the department should be reformed, but the even course of justice should not be hampered.

62. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 15th January, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th January on the Rawalpindi riot case.

Rawalpindi riot case.

HINDUSTANI, 15th January, 1908.

(b).—Police.

63. Referring to the Mymensingh disturbances, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 10th January, declares that had such incidents occurred some two or three years ago, quite a panic would have been caused in the country. But now the people have become quite accustomed to them, which consequently cause no great surprise in the public mind. The editor is of opinion that had the Government punished the officers at whose instigation the Muhammadans had committed atrocities upon the Hindus in East Bengal and dismissed those who had failed to stop those riots, the public would have heard no longer of disturbances. But the Government did not do so. Now a belief is growing in the public mind in Eastern Bengal that instead of preserving the public peace, the police and soldiers themselves become its disturbers, and the Government affecting indifference, hands the helpless people over to their mercy. The officials who encourage such a belief by their conduct are in reality traitors to the British rule and so long as such officials are not punished there is no use enacting such measures as the Seditious Meetings Act since the real unrest owes its origin to the acts of these officials. The editor is at a loss to understand why a general attack should have been made upon the people and a disturbance created throughout the town for the offence of one or two individuals who may have removed the notices of reward in connection with the Allen case. Even if the police could not arrest the real culprits, it had no right to create a row. He concludes with expressing a hope that in view of the frequency of such occurrences His Excellency the Viceroy will personally make an inquiry into the present disturbance and adopt measures so as to make similar occurrences impossible in future.

The Mymensingh outrage.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th January, 1908.

64. Referring to reports of the conduct of the police at Mymensingh, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) writes in the issue of the 12th January, that they are neither vague nor general, and may easily be verified. Shops have been broken into and looted, women of the town have been robbed and outraged. Under the pretext of searching the Charn Mihir Press it has been so utterly wrecked that the publication of that paper has stopped; and as invariably happens in these cases a number of men who are the actual sufferers have been arrested and are in custody.

The Mymensingh outrage.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th January, 1908.

No action whatever has been taken against the police. The panic is so great that numbers of people have sent their families away from Mymensingh.

The editor expresses his indignation and asks how long these things will be permitted and the administration brought into disgrace. The hostility to Government cannot die out if such wanton outrages are not put down with a strong hand, and the desire for vengeance is allowed to rankle in the hearts of the people.

65. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th January, has the following :—

"It is regrettable indeed that the police should not have yet succeeded in tracing the perpetrators of the dastardly crime committed on Mr. Allen, it is much more regrettable that the handbills offering rewards to people giving information which would lead to the detection of the perpetrators of the crime should be removed. But surely there can be no excuse for letting the police loose on people, all of whom cannot be party to the cowardly crime. The unrest created by these indiscriminate assaults is greater than that caused by seditious speeches and is to be condemned in the strongest possible terms."

The Mymensingh outrage.

ADVOCATE, 12th January, 1908.

HINDUSTANI, 15th January, 1908.

66. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 15th January, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 12th January, on the subject of the Mymensingh outrage.

The Mymensingh outrage.

HIND, 16th January, 1908.

67. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th January, referring to the Mymensingh outrage, remarks that this seems to be one of the fruits of the partition of Bengal, which Lord Curzon and Mr. Morley praise so much. But as far as the people can see, it means nothing but anarchy and maladministration.

Mymensingh outrage.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th January, 1908.

68. Commenting on the treatment of the people by the police in Mymensingh, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), writes as follows in his issue of the 16th January :—

The Mymensingh outrage.

"The exasperation to which the people are being driven may again lead to some terrible crime which will be described political and upset persons in high places. To treat a city as if it had been carried by storm and could be legitimately plundered is not the best way to aspire for authority. The people of Mymensingh are no cowards and even the residents of West Bengal have outlived that opprobrious reproach. If sheer police oppression leads to reprisals and an outbreak of crime the authorities will have to thank themselves."

ANAND, 9th January, 1908.

69. The detective police officers, writes the Anand (Lucknow), of the 9th January, are such a thick-headed lot that the secrecy of their shadowing their victims is not in the least maintained. The public became acquainted how Messrs Keir Hardie and Nevinson were followed and watched by the detectives. Government ought to reform its secret police service and employ really clever men who should do their work without the public being aware of it, or if that be impossible, it should be entirely abolished since the existing staff only reflects discredit on the Government itself.

The Detective police.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th January, 1908.

70. In an article entitled "Whitewashing the Police," the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), refers in his issue of the 16th January, to Mr. Weston's report on the conduct of the Calcutta Police, which was accepted by the Bengal Government. The Government had in its Resolution "whitewashed" and rehabilitated the police in its own estimation, though the public had very little faith in the commission and very few witnesses appeared to give evidence.

Whitewashing the police.

Similar was the action of the Punjab Government in applying for the expunction of certain strictures passed on the Punjab Police in connection with the Rawalpindi riot cases.

If the Punjab Government had appealed, he remarks, against the Special Magistrate's order, it would have been at least legal if unwise, but to acquiesce in the finding and merely to object to the just and severe strictures passed on the police was monstrous. Is the Chief Court, he asks, so entirely devoid of independence that it will accede to the unreasonable and unjustifiable demand of the Punjab Government, or will it have the courage to refuse to be a party to the suppression of a part of a judicial finding of which the accuracy and partiality cannot be challenged ?

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

ZIA-UI-ISLAM, January, 1908.

71. While objecting to the enhancement of octroi duty on articles of commerce in Moradabad, the Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad), for January, strongly condemns the action of the Municipal Commissioners, and asks the District Magistrate, the Commissioner of the Division, and the Lieutenant-Governor to consider the matter and save the Moradabad public from the increase of taxation.

Enhancement of octroi taxes in Moradabad.

House tax in Lahore.

72. While eulogising the straightforwardness of the Municipal Commissioners in candidly admitting the undesirablity of imposing house tax in Lahore, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th January, desires the members of all other municipalities to act with similar candidness in recognising their mistakes. CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th January, 1908.

Blocking of streets at Benares.

73. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 13th January, says that the public is seriously inconvenienced by several of the streets being blocked by building materials and points out that in view of the heavy traffic in Magh the municipality should see that house owners, building houses should clear the streets of the obstruction, and that it should instruct the Inspectors to see that the streets are not thus blocked up in future. BHARAT JIWAN, 13th January, 1908.

Water-supply and lighting arrangements at Benares.

74. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 13th January, notes with gratification that the municipality has taken steps to remedy the shortage of water supply, of which the editor has complained more than once. He further points out that in a good many lanes and streets there are either no water-posts at all or if there are, they are situated at such a long distance as to cause very serious inconvenience to the residents making use of them, and remarks that this is a most crying want which demands the immediate attention of the municipality. He also complains of several of the streets being not lighted at all, and suggests that Inspectors should be called upon to go about the town and find out where light is wanted so that the municipality should be enabled to make arrangement for it at its meeting in March next. BHARAT JIWAN, 14th January, 1908.

Licenses for ekka driving.

75. Referring to the conviction of an ekka driver, an ex-convict, to four years' rigorous imprisonment for causing serious injury to a cloth merchant and his servant with a gandásá at Moradabad, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, suggests the desirability of municipalities making enquiries into the antecedents of ekka drivers before granting them licenses, and remarks that only those persons who bear a good character should be licensed, as the safety of the lives and property of the travellers is to a great extent entrusted into the hands of the drivers. RAHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

Municipal and District Boards in the United Provinces

76. Referring to the District Boards in these provinces, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 16th January, that Local self-government is becoming a reality. The delegation of wider administrative and financial powers had not failed to stimulate interest in the members as was testified to by the Commissioner of the Lucknow Division. The sense of responsibility created by the new District Boards Act and the rules made under it had already had an effect in improving the administration. This was highly satisfactory and marked a growing desire to co-operate more and more with the Government. The adoption of the procedure laid down in the recent Government Resolution would mean that the District Boards would, to a great extent be placed on a footing almost equal to that of the Municipal Boards; it meant the investment with powers that called for greater sense of responsibility in the members. It was to be hoped that local patriotism would readily respond to this call of public duty. ADVOCATE, 16th January, 1908.

Discussing the text of the report, he remarks that the average attendance of less than half the strength of the boards at meetings was not satisfactory, but it must be remembered that members of District Boards were scattered over a very wide area, and could not conveniently manage to attend meetings very easily.

The finances of the District Boards were anything but satisfactory, as the figures showed a deficit of about 17 lakhs.

The sum expended for the purpose of distribution of medicine and improvement of village sanitation, including vaccination operations, was very little and showed a very poor consideration paid to a matter of vital interest to the people. Certainly more money must be made available towards the provision of good drinking water in villages and improvement in rural drainage.

With regard to education greater activity on the part of the members was expected.

(e).—Education.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th January, 1908.

The Anglo-Bengali School Prize Distribution.

77. Mr. De la Fosse, Director of Public Instruction, in a speech made at the prize distribution at the Allahabad Anglo-Bengali School drew a parallel between some Japanese and Indian students.

He stated that when Japan recognized that a political organisation of her students known as Sochis was prejudicial to the interests of the State, she took immediate steps to put it down. Similarly it was no less a danger to permit students in India to take an active part in politics.

The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in his issue of the 12th January, commenting on this portion of the Director's speech agrees with him, and remarks that students should certainly take an interest in politics, as in everything going on around them, but only from the student's point of view, with a desire to learn. The line must be drawn when it comes to active interference, and a determination to shape political deliberations.

CITIZEN, 12th January, 1908.

The Anglo-Bengali School Prize Distribution.

78. Commenting on the report of the Secretary of the Anglo-Bengali School at Allahabad read on the occasion of the prize distribution, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), remarks in his issue of the 12th January, that the Secretary had made no reference to the work done by the tutorial staff, without whose labour the success of the school could never have been possible. The Secretary and the Assistant Secretary might be very capable men, but their proper sphere was to record the decree of the managing committee. It was not they who taught the boys, nor they who joined in their sports or who watched the conduct of the students. The internal management of the school rested entirely upon the Headmaster assisted by other teachers of the staff. The Secretary, however, had not a word to say about any of these.

The evidence that the school was worked on non-sectarian lines was gratifying.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 12th January, 1908.

Muhammadan Educational Conference at Karachi.

79. While reproducing the speech of Maulana Hali at the Muhammadan Educational Conference held at Karachi, the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th January, remarks that it is highly instructive and deserves the immediate attention of the community.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

KSHATRIYA, September and October, 1907.

Improvement in cattle breeding and pasture arrangements for cows.

80. The Kshatriya (Meerut), for September and October (received on the 16th January), suggests as a means of improving the breed of oxen the desirability of founding cow-sheds and reserving pasture ground for feeding cattle.

The editor further suggests that committees should be formed in every village to raise funds, which should be devoted to saving cows from falling into the hands of butchers.

ZIA-UL-ISLAM, January, 1908.

Famine relief abuses.

81. While pointing out the abuses and partial conduct of the members appointed to draw up the list of respectable poor widows and other persons who stand in need of gratuitous relief, the Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad), for January, regrets to note that they have entirely abused the trust put in them by awarding the allowances to those who had any connection with them.

The editor further remarks that although it is very difficult for the Government to carry on this work without trusting some persons, yet it is hoped that it will try to get rid of such abuses by entrusting the work to some truly sympathetic, God-fearing and honest persons.

SIPAHI, December, 1907.

Famine and the sepoys.

82. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for December (received on the 15th January), in view of the prevailing famine, the severity of which is equally felt by all classes, requests His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to grant famine allowance to the sepoy like civil servants, to abolish the deductions that are at present made from his pay, to regulate carefully the rations given to him, and to allow him to wear dyed or coarse clothes when leaving the lines so as to enable him to make some saving in his clothing.

83. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th January, makes the following proposals for famine administration :— NIZAM-UL-MULK, 8th January, 1908.

The famine.

(1) To postpone the collection of revenue for the next three years.
(2) to prevent the patwaris from misappropriating the taqavi grants.
(3) The taqavi granted should be sufficient to cover the cost of irrigation and zamindar's dues.
(4) To make special arrangements for sinking wells and constructing other irrigation works.

84. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, in a leading article appeals to the Government and influential people to alleviate the intense distress caused by famine by opening grain markets and selling grain at cheaper rates than the banias. HIND, 9th January, 1908.

The famine.

85. A correspondent of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 10th January, notes with satisfaction the arrangements for famine relief made in Lucknow. MASHRIQ, 10th January, 1908.

Famine relief in Lucknow.

86. While eulogising the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow for the thorough manner in which he has arranged for the distribution of the gratuitous relief allowance to the respectable and poor widows of Lucknow, the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th January, commends the good and honest work done by the Municipal Commissioners in this respect, but at the same time suggests the advisability of scrutinizing the list of the recipients of the allowance, as it will be more satisfactory both to the Government and the people. RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 12th January, 1908.

Famine relief allowance in Lucknow.

87. Referring to the great increase in the prices of grain made by Banias, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), remarks in his issue of the 12th January, that Government should take steps to fix prices in order to save the ruin of the labouring classes, and of poor families among the middle classes. There appeared to be no justification for the behaviour of the banias in raising the price of food stuff at the rate they had been doing during the last two weeks. Their conduct has been outrageously scandalous and calls loudly for interference. CITIZEN, 12th January, 1908.

The famine and the Banias.

It was high time now to stop the foreign export of grain.

88. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, remarks that considering the high prices of food stuff, the famine relief allowances of 5 pice, 4 pice and one pice given by the Government to each man, woman and child respectively are very small, and asks the Government to raise them. RAHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

Famine relief.

89. Adverting to the famine, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 16th January, praises the policy of Sir John Hewett for all the practical work done to mitigate its severities. CITIZEN, 16th January, 1908.

The famine in the United Provinces.

The conduct of the Allahabad 'leaders,' he remarks, stands in remarkable contrast to that of the Government, for while wasting their energies over their mendicancy policy, not one of them has vouchsafed to spend a single rupee to come to the aid of their starving countrymen.

(g).—General.

90. Referring to the opinion of the Pioneer that the attempted murder of Mr. Allen must have been the act of some political fanatic of Bengal, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, asks the Government to order a thorough and sifting enquiry into the matter and keep a strict eye on the conduct of the police in this connection so that they may not, like the Rawalpindi police, run in some innocent politician for the offence. HIND, 9th January, 1908.

The attempted murder of Mr. Allen.

91. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, referring to the grant of Rs. 20,000 as a bonus to Mr. G. R. Fox, Manager, Court of Wards, Ghazipur, questions the advisability of this measure and is of opinion that Mr. Fox did not do anything specially meritorious to deserve this bonus. Besides this he is 80 years old, and had the 55 years rule operated in his case, he would have retired long ago. HIND, 9th January, 1908.

Bonus to Mr. Fox.

HIND, 9th January, 1908.

92. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th January, referring to Count Okuma's recent speech in India, remarks that the Japanese should not hope to hoodwink the people of India, as they know too well what they (Japanese) have done to Korea.

Count Okuma's speech.

MASHRIQ, 10th January, 1908.

93. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of the 10th January, referring to the misunderstanding existing between the Government and the different parties in the country and between the parties themselves, remarks that these can be easily removed if they have patience with each other and take into consideration each other's difficulties.

Misunderstanding in India.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

94. A correspondent in the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 14th January, writes from Ajmere that the use of cocaine is every day on the increase in the city and regrets at the indifference of the local leaders in not asking the Government to stop the use of cocaine and the consequent immorality so prevalent in Ajmere.

The Cocaine habit in Ajmere.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th January, 1908.

95. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th January, has the following:—"Mr. Nevinson has favoured us with the following communication dated the 9th instant:—"In your note of to-day's issue under the above title you say that the Government of Eastern Bengal has apparently succeeded in putting me in the wrong. But you will perhaps allow me to mention that the Government's statement issued to the newspapers is not a fair reproduction of my letter in answer to their enquiries. The Government's version puts it that 'in reply to their communication, Mr. Nevinson has stated that the reference in his speech was to correspondence 'about him.' What I really wrote in my answer to the Government was: 'I was careful to say in my speech that the correspondence was 'about me' and the words are so reported in the most accurate reports. The difference between what I wrote and the Eastern Bengal Government's method of reproducing it is obvious.

Mr. Nevinson and the Government.

I went on to say that the correspondence was from one Indian gentleman to another and I further added that my chief personal complaint with regard to Eastern Bengal was that police constables in plain clothes followed me from place to place. Of this last point, as you rightly remark, the Government of Eastern Bengal has declined to take any notice."

RAHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

96. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, remarks that 'might is right.' India has grown weak and effeminate. It must first acquire might and then the whole world will stoop before it and follow its time-honoured civilisation which its poverty and weakness have brought to disgrace.

Indians' weakness.

RAHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

97. While pointing out that His Excellency the Viceroy is about to leave India to celebrate the marriage of his daughter, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, remarks:—"His Lordships departure from India will do no harm to the Indians as there are others in the country to carry on the policy of His Excellency's Government."

Anticipated departure of the Viceroy.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

98. A correspondent in the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 14th January, thanks the District Magistrate of Agra for ordering the local police to put all beggars who might be found begging in the streets, in the poorhouses where they are provided with work and sufficient food.

Agra poorhouse.

He further remarks that this policy has proved very successful and beneficial in Agra, and suggests that it may with advantage be adopted in other districts also.

AL-BASHIR, 14th January, 1908.

99. Referring to the statement made by Lala Lajpat Rai that he was saluted by Muhammadan dhobis during his walks in Mandalay, the editor of Al-Bashir (Etawah) remarks in the issue of the 14th January, that the courtesy shown to Lala Lajpat Rai showed that Muhammadans were not prejudiced against Hindus. However, were these illiterate men to read the papers and learn how the Congress and Arya-Samajists were persecuting their co-religionists, they would never have been so polite and sympathetic.

The swadeshi Conference.

100. A correspondent of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 15th January, makes the following proposals for the improvement of the Registration Department :— HINDUSTANI, 15th January, 1908.

Registration.

(a) The Sub-Registrars should be of good family.
(b) They must have at least passed the Entrance Examination.
(c) Their age should be above 25 years.
(d) They should have a good knowledge of Registration and Stamp laws.
(e) They snould be of good physique.
(f) Their pay should be increased and their names should be published in the Gazette.
(g) They should be made Honorary Magistrates and Munsifs as in Bengal.

101. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 15th January, referring to the retirement of Sir D. Ibbetson, remarks that although he for some time permitted the persecutions in the Punjab, yet when he came to know of his mistake, he did not persist in his policy but sought to remove the causes of the discontent. HINDUSTANI, 15th January, 1908.

Sir D. Ibbetson.

102. Referring in a leading article in his issue of January 16th, to the coming departure of Sir Denzil Ibbetson, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), writes as follows :— "People in India are superstitious and they will be disposed to see the hand of a Higher Power in these events." INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th January, 1908.

Retirement of Sir D. Ibbetson.

103. Commenting on agricultural improvement in India, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 16th January, that he is in accord with Dr. Mann in regretting that the Agricultural Departments all over India had failed to be of practical use. The great difficulty was the question as to who should carry out the instructions of the Agricultural departments, and become a link between them and the people. Small agricultural associations seemed, he says, to be the best agency to start this good work. ADVOCATE. 16th January, 1908.

Agricultural improvement in India.

104. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), reproduces in the issue of the 16th January a letter written to him by H. L. Ray, Lucknow, in which the writer states that the greatest problem before the Government of India is the conservation of the agricultural industry of India. There were three sources of national wealth—commerce, manufacture and agriculture—and of these the last-named was the sole resource remaining to India. ADVOCATE, 16th January, 1908.

Agricultural industry in India.

The Government not only gave no real protection against famine, but also did nothing by way of facilitating cultivation by excavating canals, digging wells, &c. Pukka wells and canals were more wanted than railways, and agricultural and technical institutions more than medical colleges. He concludes with a hope that Sir John Hewett, to whom the province owed many boons, will turn his attention to this.

105. Commenting on the Industrial Conference, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 16th January, that its utility was now placed beyond doubt. Mr. Desai's Presidential address, although it might not claim the broad economic outlook, and the practical experience of trade and industries, which the utterances of the two last Presidents evinced, was yet full of information and contained certain suggestions of a practical character. There was no doubt that technical education on a broad scale was needed. The Government might be reasonably expected to take the lead, but the question was a national one and the whole nation ought to combine to provide for it. There was certainly a stir among Indians in this direction, but more impetus was needed and more funds should be forthcoming to make such education available. INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th January, 1908.

The Third Industrial Conference.

Turning to the question of capital, he remarks that the higher returns of trade and industries ought to prove a strong argument to Indians to divert more of their capital to industrial concerns.

The best way for creating this diversion was the establishment of banks under Indian supervision. Bank management required just those qualities in which Indians excelled, and it was not at all a difficult thing for men of character to inaugurate banking institutions. Indian productive industry required more capital than all the ways suggested could be expected to secure.

With regard to agriculture, this needed further development, and free education of the right sort must be placed within the reach of the agricultural population, but without the intervention of the Revenue authorities. Village communities must be formed, and village model farms established so that the villager might be approached in his house and put in possession of such knowledge as he lacked. The progress made in several industries was satisfactory, though that of the cotton industry was still hampered by the tax. Sufficient agitation for the removal of this obnoxious tax had not been made. The revenue from it was increasing, and financial considerations might stand in the way of its abolition.

The United Provinces supplied half the home grown sugar, but the industry was losing ground in competition with Java, Mauritius, and Germany.

Difficulties and dearness of railway transport, the variety of weights, measures and coinage were also deterring factors in the efforts for industrial advancement. The variety of coinage was always in the way of small traders.

The deficiency of rolling stock on all the principal railways was growing to be very distressing, and the delay in the despatch and the handling of goods after arrival were often scandalous. Some of the large surplus revenue which railways yielded ought to be utilized to reduce freight charges on all internal manufacture.

A reduction of freights would, as Mr. Desai stated, act on Indian industries like fresh capital on a new market.

Some new industry ought also to be created for the employment of the agricultural population which for more than six months in the year remained unemployed. Near industrial centres some might work for wages, but for the greater part of them the handloom or knitting or lace-making might be introduced with much profit.

CITIZEN, 16th January, 1908.

Letters of an American to the Indian people.

106. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), reproduces in his issue of the 16th January a long letter from Myron H. Phelps of the New York Bar, the writer of "Letters of an American to the Indian People."

Mr. Phelps sets out at length the costs of technical education in America for Indian students, and the prospects in the way of employment for Indians in America.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th January, 1908.

Mrs. Annie Besant and Bande Matram.

107. Referring in the issue of the 16th January to the reply of Mrs. Annie Besant to addresses presented to her on her return to Benares, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), hopes that the advice of one who has so great a claim upon the affection and loyalty of Indian students will not be lost.

Older people, he remarks, who ought to know better, have not been setting a bright example to the younger generation, for while they shout Bande Matram with the loudest they behave like common rowdies devoid of a sense of common decency.

HIND, 16th January, 1908.

Court of Wards.

108. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th January, asks the Government to take into consideration the following grievances of the employés of the Court of Wards :—

(1) They are extremely underpaid, and the scale of their pay was fixed long ago when articles were not so dear.

(2) Their posts are neither stable nor pensionable. They are dismissed as soon as the estates are removed from the supervision of the Court of Wards.

(3) They are not taken into Government service, and their claims are not considered when new estates are placed under the Court.

(4) A sum of one anna per rupee is deducted from their salaries on account of the Provident Fund, but when their services are dispensed with, they get only half of it.

The editor is of opinion that their prospects can be considerably improved, if they can be made eligible for pensions, and may be taken into Government service, whenever feasible.

HIND, 16th January, 1908.

Excise.

109. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th January, referring to the increase of one anna per gallon on the duty on country-made liquor, remarks that it would be futile to check the consumption of liquor by this method. The only way of checking this effectively would be by closing shops and stopping distillation of liquor altogether.

110. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th January, reproduces from the Jhang Sial (Punjab), an account of the looting of a bazar in Campbellpur Cantonments by European soldiers, who had been sent there to extinguish a fire which had broken out in the bazar, and hopes that these soldiers will be duly punished.

Looting in Campbellpur.

HIND, 16th January, 1908.

111. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th January, referring to Mr. Morley's recent order about the handcuffing of Indian editors when charged with sedition, remarks that it would have been much better if he had entirely freed them from the law (sedition law) so that they might have criticised everything freely.

Mr. Morley and Indian editors.

HIND, 16th January, 1908.

112. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th January, is of opinion that the funds at the disposal of the Victoria Memorial Hall Committee should be utilized in establishing a technical school.

Victoria Memorial Fund.

HIND, 16th January, 1908.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

113. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th January, suggests the advisability of granting famine allowances to railway employés.

Famine allowance to railway employees.

UNION GAZETTE, 7th January, 1908.

114. While complaining of the abnormally high prices and the unwholesomeness of the eatables supplied at railway stations, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th January, remarks that there seems to be no reason why the railway authorities should not make suitable arrangements for the supply of wholesome food stuffs to Indians as they have done for the Europeans. The former also pay for their journeys.

Catering arrangement at railway stations.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th January, 1908.

115. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th January, referring to the frequency of accidents on Indian railways, remarks that Government and public bodies should do something to prevent them.

Railway accidents.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 8th January, 1908.

The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th January, expresses the same opinion.

116. While pointing out that the accidents on the railways have of late become of very common occurrence, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 9th January, suggests the desirability of the Government ordering the construction of double tracks.

Railway accidents.

HIND, 9th January, 1908.

117. Alluding to the intended allotment of one crore and fifty lakhs of rupees by the Government of India towards the extension of railway and canal construction in India, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th January, remarks :—" It is no wonder if the Government is going to widen and extend these perennial sources of income and benefit to itself and of utter ruin and loss to India, and specially this year when these extensions will be like the killing of two birds with one stone. They will, to a certain extent, relieve the starving Indians and insure the facility and progress of the English trade in the country.

Extension of the railway in India.

RAHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

Alas ! the Government is not inclined to hear us otherwise we should have plainly told it that we are not prepared to waste our hard earned money to procure the instruments of our own destruction by affording facility for the exploitation of the country."

118. While regretting the ill-treatment accorded by the police and ticket-collectors to respectable persons on railway platforms, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 14th January, refers to the case of a respectable Nawab turned out of the platform at the Cawnpore station for not producing the platform ticket.

Ill-treatment on Railway platforms.

MASHRIQ, 14th January, 1908.

The editor is of opinion that in most cases such incidents are the result of personal grudge, and asks the Railway Board to take proper measures to stop such malpractices.

OUDH AKHBAR, 17th January, 1908.

Railway collisions.

119. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 17th January, referring to the recent collisions, thefts and outrages on railway lines, remarks that it is the duty of the Government to impose heavy punishments on railway servants by whose negligence such things take place and to make the Railway Company liable for damages on account of injuries received by the passengers.

VII.—Post Office.

Nil.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th January, 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

120. Referring to the order of the Bengal Government, allowing the construction of European quarters on the Parasnath Hill, in spite of all the remonstrances of the Jains who hold the Hill so sacred, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th January, remarks that Government ought to consider the grievances of its people.

JAIN GAZETTE, 6th January, 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

121. Referring to the proposed construction of bungalows for Europeans on the Parasnath Hill, which will thereby be desecrated according to the faith of the Jains, a correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 16th January, remarks that what the Muhammadan rulers noted for their religious persecution did not venture to do is being openly done by the English who boast of their just rule and whose declared policy with regard to religious matters has always been one of non-interference. He points out that His Honour Sir A. Frazer is wholly mistaken in holding that the Raja of Palganj can lease out portion of the hill in accordance with his zamindari right since he has no proprietary right over it and holds it only as a sacred trust.

In conclusion he appeals to his co-religionists to loosen the strings of their purses and display their munificence as well as love for religion by either buying up the entire hill afresh or fighting out their cause even up to the Privy Council so as to save their sacred hill from the intended desecration.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th January, 1908.

Erection of stables on the Parasnath Hill.

122. The Jain Gazette (Deoband) of the 16th January, notes with regret that the Magistrate of Giridih has already begun to erect stables on the Parasnath Hill which the editor thinks are the precursor of the construction of bungalows later on and a direct violation of the rights of the Jains over the hill. He says that this fact shows that the higher authorities are now openly bent upon committing oppression upon the Jains, and exhorts them to take early steps to prevent the erection of stables on the hill.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th January, 1908.

The Magh Mela.

123. One Madan Lal, Pragwal, writes to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 10th January, that pilgrims on the occasion of the Magh Mela are subjected to extremely serious inconvenience and unnecessary high expenses owing to bad accommodation huts and unwholesome articles of food stuffs sold at a very high price. He attributes this state of affairs to the heavy taxation by the Government on the Pragwals who erect these huts and on the vendors of eatables.

He expresses a hope that the Government will bestow its attention on the matter and will abate these assessments which cause inconvenience to the pilgrims, and that it will appoint some Hindu to look after the Magh Mela arrangements, for a Hindu official alone can understand the wants and needs of Hindu pilgrims.

CITIZEN, 12th January, 1908.

The Magh Mela.

124. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), referring in the issue of the 12th January, to the coming Magh Mela, hopes that the question of accommodation for pilgrims on the site of the mela, and the supervision of food stuffs will receive the due attention of the authorities.

OUDH AKHBAR, 14th January, 1908.

Wakfs.

125. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 14th January, publishes a letter from Shams-ul-Ulama Shibli Nomani on the subject of wakfs in favour of one's own children which although permissible under the Muhammadan law, has been declared illegal by the Privy Council in a recent ruling. He suggests the formation of an association to invite opinions from the leading maulvis and scholars and then to submit a detailed memorial to the Government on the subject.

126. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 14th January, referring to Maulvi Shibli Nomani's letter on the subject of 'wakfs,' remarks that if due representation is made to the Government it will certainly recognize its mistake and will thus help the Musalmans in the preservation of their ancestral property.

Wakfs.

AL-BASHIR, 14th January, 1908.

127. The Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 11th January, notes with gratification the interdining of Mr. Tilak and his colleagues with all the members of the national party.

Social reform in the National party.

SWARAJYA, 11th January, 1908.

The editor points out that this incident is sufficient to refute the serious accusation very often made against Mr. Tilak that he is a very orthodox Hindu of the old school and obstructs the growth of social reform in the country.

This incident also shows what signal progress the Nationalists have made in social reform during the last two years.

128. Commenting on the National Social Conference at Surat, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), notes with interest in his issue of the 12th January the presence at the Conference of some three hundred Indian ladies from all grades of society, some of whom took an active part in the proceedings.

The National Social Conference.

ADVOCATE, 12th January, 1908.

In Gujrat he remarks, the ladies had received the benefits of Western education, but they had not denationalised themselves in the matter of dress like their sisters in Bengal. Those of Surat who were present in such large numbers at the Conference presented an object lesson to the people from North India. Surat had been claimed to be the home of the reforms of social advancement in Gujrat, and no better proof could be furnished for this action than the advances of female education made by this town.

Mr. Mehta was not despondent of progress of social reform in his part of the country. In the matter of raising the marriageable age there had been appreciable advance, and baby marriages were no longer heard of.

Much could be done by concerted action to dispel the superstition about the marriage of girls before puberty.

The law which had been promulgated in Baroda prohibiting the marriage of girls below twelve and of boys below sixteen had been working smoothly.

In other parts of the county a strong current of feeling for the abolition of the prohibition of widow remarriage had set in.

The diminution of caste prejudices, inter-marriage in sub-divisions were the principal features of the social reform movement in Gujrat.

The resolutions of the Conference in this and other directions covered a wide ground, and for the first time the question of sanitary reform had been included in the programme of social reform.

The resolution on endowments was also important. The cause of social reform in the country would be much strengthened if the Government were to secure the co-operation of the people in the proper administration of trust moneys set aside for educational and religious purposes.

It was trusted, that the voice of the Conference would prove helpful to Dr. Rash Bihari Ghose in order to press amendments in the Civil Procedure Code Bill.

129. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 13th January reproduces the comments of the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 12th January, on the National Social Conference.

National Social Conference.

HINDUSTANI, 13th January, 1908.

130. In the issue of the 12th January, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), makes an appeal to his Indian countrymen to support the Allahabad Orphanage with charitable donations of money. He shows that charity to orphans is directly enjoined by Hindu religious books.

The Allahabad Orphanage.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th January, 1908.

Now with the change of time and the circumstances of the country, Indians must adapt themselves to the altered conditions of the present day, and organise their charitable societies in accordance with present day views.

TAFRIH, 14th January, 1908.

131. While expressing its satisfaction at the celebration of a widow marriage at Baroda, and the sympathy of His Highness the Maharaja of Baroda towards the movement as shown by his participating in it with princes and state officials, the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th January, remarks that the sympathy of such rajas and notables in this matter is sure to make widow marriage more popular among the people.

Widow marriage.

HINDOSTHAN, 16th January, 1908.

132. Referring to the pardah party to be given by Her Excelleney Lady Minto at Calcutta in February next, the editor of the Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 16th January, declares that he is highly in favour of such Pardah parties being given inasmuch as they are the best means of bettering the condition of Indian womanhood. He urges the free intercourse of Indian women with European and American ladies. On occasions such parties should be given by both Europeans and Indians.

Pardah parties.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

CITIZEN, 12th January, 1908.

133. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), refers in the issue of January 12th to a deputation of vakils and barristers of Allahabad which waited on Mr. McNair, Collector of Allahabad, to discuss the house problem in Allahabad. He expresses a hope that the request that land be allotted for building purposes may be received favourably by the authorities.

The Allahabad lawyers deputation.

I. L. FERRIER,
Assistant Superintendent of Police,
For C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

ALLAHABAD:
The 20th January, 1908.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 4 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 25th January, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign:
1.	The French and Morocco	81
2.	The French and Morocco	81
3.	Coronation of the King of Sweden ...	81
4.	The Parsis in Persia	81
5.	Japanese and other Asiatics in Canada ...	81
	(b)—Home:
6.	Indians in the Transvaal	81
7.	Indians in the Transvaal	81
8.	Indians in the Transvaal	82
9.	Indians in the Transvaal	82
10.	Indians in the Transvaal	82
11.	Indians in the Transvaal	82
12.	Indians in the Transvaal	82
13.	Indians in the Transvaal	83
14.	Indians in the Transvaal	83
15.	Indians in the Transvaal	83
16.	Indians in the Transvaal	83
17.	Indians in the Transvaal	83
18.	Indians in the Transvaal	83
19.	Indians in the Transvaal	84
20.	Indians in the Transvaal and Mr. W. Churchill	84
21.	Mr. Churchill and the Indians ...	85
22.	The Surat Congress	85
23.	The Surat Congress	85
24.	The Surat Congress	85
25.	The Surat Congress	85
26.	The Surat Congress	85
27.	The Surat Congress	86
28.	The Surat Congress	86
29.	The Congress split	86
30.	Split in the Congress	86
31.	The Surat Congress	86
32.	The Surat Congress and Mr. Tilak ...	86
33.	Dr. Ghose's speech	86
34.	The Moderates and Extremists ...	86
35.	National Regeneration	87
36.	Parties in Congress	87
37.	The Advisory Council of Notables ...	90
38.	The expansion of Legislative Councils ...	90
39.	The proposed reforms in India ...	90
40.	United Provinces Provincial Conference ...	91
41.	Provincial Conference	91
42.	United Provinces Conference ...	91
43.	The present situation in India ...	92
44.	Unrest from peace	93
45.	The Indian situation	93
46.	Unrest in India	93
47.	Indian affairs	93
48.	State interference in England and India	93
49.	England and India	94
50.	Intellectuality of the Hindus ...	94
51.	Indians and politics	94
52.	The Decentralization Commission ...	94
53.	Educated Indians	95
54.	The spirit of Nationality in Asia ...	95
55.	Lala Lajpat Rai at Cawnpore ...	95
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
	Nil.

Page.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

56. Jam Ranjit Singh 95

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue :

57. Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship ... 95
58. Mr. Justice Karamat Husain ... 95
59. The conviction of the Yugantar ... 96
60. The conviction of the Yugantar ... 96
61. The conviction of the Yugantar ... 96
62. The Rawalpindi rape case 96
63. The Rawalpindi judgment 96
64. Separation of the judicial and executive functions 96
65. The Dinajpur assault case 96
66. Prosecution of Sufi Amba Prasad ... 97
67. Limitation of mortgages 97
68. The Villapuram riot case 97
69. Conviction of a Bengali boy in East Bengal 97
70. Famine and Government Revenue in Hardoi 97
71. Naib Tahsildars 97

(b)—Police :

72. Affairs at Mymensingh 97
73. Affairs at Mymensingh 98
74. Affairs at Mymensingh 98
75. Affairs at Mymensingh 98
76. Affairs at Mymensingh 98
77. Affairs at Mymensingh 98
78. White-washing the Rawalpindi police ... 98
79. White-washing the Rawalpindi police ... 99
80. Gambling in Agra 99
81. Conviction of a Muhammadan for outraging a Hindu girl 99

(c)—Finance and Taxation :

Nil.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :

82. Municipalities 99
83. Municipal taxation 99
84. The Water-Works Inspector of Allahabad 99

(e)—Education :

85. Students and politics 99
86. Sanskrit College, Benares 99
87. District Board school 100
88. Appointment of Mr. Earle as Director of Public Instruction, Bengal ... 100
89. Musalmans and Government Scholarships 100
90. Primary Education 100
91. Teachers in Government Model Schools ... 100
92. Muhammadan Educational Conference in Calcutta 100

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :

93. The famine and the respectable poor ... 100
94. The famine and costof grain... ... 101

Page.

95. Famine and grain tickets at Benares ... 101
96. The Canal Commission 101
97. Irrigation in the United Provinces ... 101
98. The Co-operative Credit Societies ... 101

(g)—General :

99. Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson ... 101
100. Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson ... 102
101. Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson ... 102
102. Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson ... 102
103. Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson ... 102
104. Handcuffing of journalists ... 102
105. Handcuffing of journalists 102
106. Handcuffing of journalists 102
107. Women clerks in the Telegraph Department 102
108. Meeting of the local telegraph employés, Allahabad 103
109. "Shall we remain slaves for ever?" ... 103
110. Quarrel between Hindu and Muhammadan labourers in Calcutta 103
111. Official favour towards Muhammadans at Panipat 103
112. The attitude of Indians towards Japan ... 104
113. Anglo-Indian and Eurasian in Indian Public Service 104
114. Darbars 104
115. Mr. Nevinson's remarks on Indian affairs, 104
116. Indian students in England 104

V.—LEGISLATION.

Nil.

VI.—RAILWAY.

117. Indian employés on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway 104
118. Grievances of the native employés of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway ... 105
119. Grievances of Indian staff on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway 105
120. Railway accidents 105
121. Railway accidents 105
122. Alleged fracas on the A. B. Railway ... 105
123. Railways 105

VII.—POST OFFICE.

124. Proposed extension of the Value Payable System in England 106
125. Clerical appointments in Postmaster General's Office 106

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

126. Wakfs and Maulvi Shibni Nomani ... 106
127. Wakfs and Maulvi Shibni Nomani ... 106
128. The Arya Samaj and politics 106
129. The Ajmer Dargah 106
130. The Musafir versus the Shahna-i-Hind ... 106
131. Bakr-Id in Allahabad 106
132. The Magh Mela 107

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

133. House question in Allahabad ... 107

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Nájm-i-Bazígh (Moradabad), of the 1st January, referring to the conduct of the French in Morocco, remarks that the French who profess to be the champions of liberty are massacring innocent people who are defending their country from foreign aggression, which reflects very little credit on their much vaunted civilization.

The French and Morocco.

NAJM-I-BAZIGH, 1st January, 1908.

2. Referring to the invasion of Algeria and Morocco by the French, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th January, remarks that the French have given a death blow to the Muhammadan rule in Africa, and also that this invasion by the French will be very beneficial to Africa as a European Government is in every respect better than the Muhammadan one.

The French and Morocco.

MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

3. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st January, referring to the refusal of the new King of Sweden to have any expensive ceremonies at his coronation, remarks that this affords a striking contrast to the Viceroy of India, who held a pompous pageant at Delhi, when people were perishing of hunger.

The editor hopes that this will be an object lesson to the rulers of India.

Coronation of the King of Sweden.

RAHBAR, 21st January, 1908.

4. Referring to the panic created in the Parsi community of Persia by the murder of its two foremost leaders, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd January, remarks as follows :—

"It is certain that only a handful of men have now been left in Persia who believe in Zoroaster, but as nearly all the Asiatic communities have been animated with a fresh spirit it will now simply be a hopeless task for the Persians to convert the few Parsis left to Islam at the point of the sword, as the latter will desperately protect the honour of their faith. Two Parsi leaders murdered within a few days! It may be a wonder in the eyes of the civilised world, but those who know the traditions of the Allahmiyan cannot be impressed in the least, as they know that such things are everyday occurrences with them."

The Parsis in Persia.

MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

5. While pointing out that the Canadian Government is intending to pass a law to drive out the Japanese from its territories as it has forciby driven out the Indians and the Chinese, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd January remarks :—"The Canadian Government must take care not to treat the Japanese like other Asiatics. They are not to be tamed so easily, as their Government can also frame similar laws to exclude all Europeans from their country."

Japanese and other Asiatics in Canada.

MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

(b).—Home.

6. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 16th January, compares the inability of the Imperial Government to protect its Indian subjects in the Transvaal with the decision of President Roosevelt to veto the legislation if any measure be enacted to exclude the Japanese from America, and thus emphasizes the difference between the English and American governments.

Indians in the Transvaal.

ANAND, 16th January, 1908.

7. While pointing out the lamentable condition and the oppressive and inhuman treatment to which the Indians are subjected in the Transvaal, the Rastgo (Allahabad), of the 17th January, remarks :—

Indians in the Transvaal.

RASTGO, 17th January, 1908.

"Mere lip-sympathy on our part will do no good to our unfortunate brethren in the Transvaal.

We must go a step further and plainly tell the firinghi Government of India that we can submit to the treatment of these savage firinghis no longer ; and that either it should take it upon itself to protect the Indians in the Transvaal, or else make us free, so that we may treat these rude firinghis in the same way in our country as they do our brethren in the Transvaal."

ABHYUDAYA, 17th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

8. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 17th January, says that the determination with which the Transvaal Indians are opposing the Asiatic Registration Act proves without doubt that they really feel this enactment as a degrading restriction upon them. It is to be regretted that the Imperial Government does not still pay any attention to the serious situation in the Transvaal, which is calculated to produce a very bad effect upon the minds of all Indians. The editor points out that the Indian National Congress has for the last twelve years been protesting against the ill-treatment of British Indians in the Transvaal, but unfortunately the Imperial Government has paid very little attention to the matter even after the Boer War. He remarks that if the British Government will not extend the privilege of the protection of the empire to the Indians, they will come to think that the proclamation of the late Queen Victoria, and the subsequent endorsement of the same by the King-Emperor at his accession, has no meaning for them in this respect; but if, on the other hand, it protects them against the oppression of the Boers, they will feel grateful to it and their devotion to it will be strengthened. It is a time of hard trial for the Government of India and the Imperial Government, and it is to be hoped that both of them will rise to the occasion.

SWARAJYA, 18th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

9. Referring to the ill-treatment of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 18th January, remarks as follows:—"Justice and our strong sense of loyalty to the British Crown compel us to say that this aggression of the Transvaalers and the indifference and disregard shown by the British and Anglo-Indian officials will certainly drive the oppressed Indians into desperate hostility towards the English.

What Indians can there be who, knowing these facts, will love the English Government, and will not naturally wish to pay the aggressors in their own coin and to close the door of India as strongly against them as they have done in their colonies against Indians? What law can hold them guilty if such ill-treatment creates these feelings in Indians? Would that our officials did not take undue advantage of our loyalty and weakness, and that they would desist from exposing us at every step to dismay and helplessness, thus forcing upon us the belief that we cannot endure and live long upon the earth even with all our loyalty towards them. I shudder to think of and forecast the evil consequences of this belief if forced upon the Indians.

Consequently we advise our officials that, instead of kicking us into vigilance, it will be better for them and for the British Government if they lull us into a heavier sleep with the pleasant fanning of their justice, and let us dream of the coming swaraj."

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 18th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

10. Commenting on the request of some Indians in the Transvaal to be shot on the sites of the battle fields on which they had been under fire if the Imperial Government could not protect them from the Boers, the editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), remarks, in the issue of the 18th January, that the appeal should rouse the patriotic spirit of every Britisher throughout the Empire. If the Indians who had fought for the Empire could not be honoured, they should at least be saved from dishonour.

ADVOCATE, 19th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 19th January announces that a mass meeting of the citizens of Lucknow will be held on Friday evening, the 2nd of February, on the Rifa-i-Am grounds to condemn the Asiatic Registration Act, and to express deep sympathy with the troubles of the Indians residing in the Transvaal.

ADVOCATE, 19th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

12. Referring to the question of Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 19th January, remarks that in the matter of fighting for the right to get justice in the empire as subjects of the King-Emperor, Indians in India have failed to do their duty, and that the fact that Government is endeavouring to represent the cause of Indians to the authorities in the Transvaal is enough to show that it shortly expects to receive memorials from several parts of India on the subject.

He expresses gratification that Lucknow means to move in the matter, and that a mass meeting will be held shortly to protest against the obnoxious measures, to express sympathy with their countrymen in the Transvaal, and to request the Government of India to protect Indians from humiliation.

13. Referring to the treatment of the Indians in the Transvaal, a correspondent to the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 20th January, writes that it is causing widespread indignation in the country that wise counsels appear to be at a discount, and that tact, good sense and moderation appear to have forsaken the Council Chamber of the Transvaal Government. HINDOSTHAN, 20th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

He remarks that unless the Imperial Government brings pressure to bear upon the Transvaal Government to annul or modify the recent immigration law, Indian confidence in British justice, which is one of the main props of British power in India, will be entirely shaken, and that the consequences will be anything but desirable.

14. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st January, referring to the exclusion of Indians from the Transvaal, accuses the Government of trampling on the Queen's Proclamation. He notes that the Indians cannot retaliate, but that the Chinese will do something. The editor sarcastically remarks that this is the reward which the Indians have received for planting the British flag in distant countries. The Boers and the British have now become one and are vying with one another in persecuting the Indians. In conclusion he says :— RAHBAR, 21st January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

"Indians, arise, awaken and show these people who hate you that you can pay them in the same coin. Never expect mercy or justice from the selfish nations of Europe. They always retreat before the aggressors and pursue the runaways, so unless you adopt a policy of aggression you should not expect anything."

15. Referring to the position of British Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 23rd January that the Imperial Government can interfere for three very definite reasons. ADVOCATE, 23rd January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

Because while granting self-government to the Transvaal, it reserved for the King the power of veto.

Because it maintains a garrison in South Africa which costs the taxpayers of the United Kingdom three millions a year, which by its presence reduces the expense of the police force, and brings British money into the colony ; and thirdly because the Transvaal has obtained an Imperial loan of five millions.

He remarks that the failure of the Imperial Government to intervene is engendering a silent sullenness in the people.

16. While pointing out to the cry unanimously raised by the Indian journalists against the oppressive and disgraceful treatment accorded to the Indians in the Transvaal, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd January, remarks :—" It is a foolish cry and to a certain extent useless as well. Oppressive treatment towards Indians is not a rare thing ! It is not peculiar to the Transvaal. It is common to all countries alike, as they say that a sheep is always to be fleeced no matter where it goes." MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

17. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th January, eulogizes the Transvaal Indians for the brave stand they are making against the Registration Act in the Transvaal, which shows that Indians have not yet forgotten their sense of self-respect. Referring to Mr. Gandhi's remark that the Indians should continue their struggle in the Transvaal to the bitter end, the editor remarks that they should bear in mind that the goddess of liberty is thirsty for blood, and that their present sufferings will clear the way for their descendants in future. ARYA MITRA, 24th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

18. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 25th January, has the following on the Indian situation in the Transvaal :— "The British Indians in the Transvaal have resolved to continue the struggle against the unjust, anti-Imperial and anti-Asiatic legislation now in force against them in that country to the bitter end and at any cost. Will INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 25th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

the people of India support them ? If they do not, and in a very determined fashion, all talk of unity and patriotism must cease, for here is a common cause, than which none could be worthier of adoption, and if all parties do not sink their differences, and rising to the occasion do their utmost to bring about measures of relief for their kinsmen in South Africa, the shame of it will remain with them and the effect will bar the way considerably to their own progress.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad) for 19th January, contains a leading article entitled " The Lesson of the Transvaal", in which the editor remarks that in the Transvaal the real conflict for a long time was between Boer and Briton, that the Boers were first in the field, and they proceeded to make the Transvaal a white man's country though God had given it to the black.

Referring to the last Boer war, the writer remarks that the Boers were borne down by sheer weight of numbers, and were beaten, but never defeated. He notes that in less than five years the franchise was restored to that indomitable people, because it was found that they could be broken but not bent, that a Boer General is now Prime Minister , that Boers and British live now on terms of equality, and that all civil rights have been won back by the Boers who are now no worse off than they were before the war. They may not have an independent Republic again, but they will certainly become as independent as Canada or Australia.

The Boers, he writes, have won in the end, and their victory this time will be an abiding one.

He remarks that when England was being driven to war one of the strongest grounds for indignation against the Boers was their brutal treatment of Indian subjects in the Transvaal, and that when the Boers were ultimately defeated it was believed everywhere that the Indians in South Africa and the Transvaal would be somewhat better lreated, and that at least they would be treated as their countrymen are in India.

He notes that under the new enlightened regime some more perfect legislative machinery has been set in operation, and that Indians are compelled to register themselves by recording their thumb impressions just as if they were a tribe of criminals whose identity may be easily traced whenever necessary.

The Indians in South Africa are, he says, engaged in trade, they are industrious, sober and law-abiding, yet there is nothing to choose between them and habitual criminals. All Asiatics, brown, black and yellow, are under the common Boer.

He remarks that the doings of the Transvaal Government do not differ from those of the most despotic and barbarous races in history.

The Indians in South Africa are, he says, as a body superior to their countrymen in India for they are more enlightened and there is greater solidarity among them. It must not be supposed that the men whom the Transvaal authorities are persecuting are common labourers and immigrants, for they represent the best commercial intelligence of India, and they are a class of men who could hold their own anywhere.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 23rd January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal and Mr. W. Churchill.

20. Referring to Mr. Winston Churchill's speech at the National Club, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd January, remarks that if responsible ministers of England would hold their tongues about the treatment of Indians in the Transvaal, it would be preferable to their impotent lip-sympathy.

He notes that the helplessness of the Government is manifest enough, without confessions of impotence from men in office.

The Indian population of South Africa had appealed to the British Government just as it had appealed to its own countrymen in India, but if we were powerless to help our countrymen in the Transvaal, the British Government was precisely in the same position. The only solution of the difficulty will be for the Indian population in South Africa to return to India in a body, but Mr. Gandhi and his followers will not give up the struggle so easily. They are now being imprisoned in batches, but there is no sign that those who are yet free are prepared to accept the Registration Act or to submit to it.

Mr. Churchill and the Indians.

21. Commenting on Mr. Winston Churchill's proposal that Indians should settle in Uganda, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 23rd January, asks what guarantee there is that a similar fate to that which has overtaken Indians in South Africa, will not pursue them in East Africa in the near future.

ADVOCATE, 23rd January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

22. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for December (received on the 21st January), is of opinion that the bitterness of party spirit such as displayed itself during the Surat Congress will be productive of very harmful results. The editor maintains that although the failure of the Surat Congress has disappointed most people, and has given the enemies of the progress of India a chance for ridiculing Indians, yet the future of the country seems to be still hopeful. Unrest will go on increasing among the people if the rulers persist in their repressive policy. He goes on to say that the hostile English and Anglo-Indian press are adding fuel to the fire by their offensive writings. The London Times says that the Moderates will be listened to afresh, but that they should not ask for the moon, in other words it means that they will be accorded some trifling concessions, provided they do not ask for substantial rights. He remarks that it is such in sinuations that have made the Extremists to betake themselves and to self-reliance, and to deprecate the mendicant policy of the Moderates. He writes that the former ought not to have wrecked the Congress, for with all its defects it was an institution which gave Indians an opportunity of meeting at one place to discuss the means of their political salvation, which in itself was no inconsiderable advantage.

HINDI PRADIP, December 1907.

The Surat Congress.

23. While reproducing the remarks regarding the Surat Congress from the Advocate (Lucknow), the Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad-Hardoi) in its combined issue of the 6th and 13th January, holds the Nationalists entirely responsible for picking the quarrel which, but for the foresight and patient forbearance of the Moderates, would have resulted in serious consequences.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 6th and 13th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

24. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra) of the 15th January, is of opinion that both parties are to blame for the failure of the Congress at Surat—the Extremists for the disturbances they made on the occasion of the first sitting, while the Moderates are no less blameworthy, inasmuch as they were impatient of according a hearing to Mr. Tilak on the second day, and that for the disturbances later on both were equally responsible. The only consolation, the editor observes, is to be found in the fact that both parties are grieved at the sad fate of the Congress, and that there is no bitterness of feeling between them, which shows that the Moderates and the Extremists are ready for reconciliation, and it is to be hoped that ere long a new but a more vigorous Congress will come into existence, and that it will last longer, for the existence of party spirit is a healthy stimulus to vigorous action.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 15th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

25. While referring to the incident in the Surat Congress, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th January, notes with satisfaction that it is a sure sign of the healthy development of the Congress, and shows that its advocates have some energy and earnestness of purpose in them.

MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

The editor further remarks that since struggle and activity is a sign of life, the advocates of the Congress need not apprehend any danger from the split, which will only facilitate the performance of the Congress work by dividing it into two sets of workers.

The Surat Congress.

26. The Kayasth Hitkari (Agra), of the 16th January, notes with regret the quarrel between the leaders at the Surat Congress, and remarks that it reveals the incapability of Indians for successfully carrying on any big movement.

KAYASTH HITKARI, 16th January, 1908.

SWARAJYA, 18th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

27. In connection with its previous articles on the subject, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 18th January, again refers to the quarrel in the National Congress at Surat.

The editor draws a comparison between the last year's Congress at Calcutta and the Surat Congress, and holds that the opposition on the part of the Nationalists was based on the fact that the Moderates made material changes in the resolutions of swadeshi, boycott and national education, and that they refused to work on the lines of the Calcutta Congress.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 23rd January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

28. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) of the 23rd January publishes an article entitled "The Congress and After" in his issue of January 23rd.

He remarks that the Convention have appointed a strong committee which will probably meet at Allahabad after Easter, and expresses the hope that its meeting will not be put off till September as then adequate time will not have been left for arranging for the Congress Session in Christmas week. If possible, the Central Provinces and Punjab Provincial Conferences should arrange to hold its meetings either in the Moharram or the Holi holidays.

The business before the conference is, he notes, to frame a constitution for the Congress. He advises the old party to prepare a programme with which it can go to the country and which can be taken up by the people and pushed forward to success.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th January, 1908.

The Congress split.

29. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 17th January, contains an article under the heading "What is the real truth?" in which the writer attempts to refute the charges made against Mr. Gokhale in connection with the Congress fiasco at Surat, by Mr. Tilak and his party, and characterizes them as inspired by malicious motives rather than from love of truth. He remarks that such personal recriminations only make the Indians a laughing-stock of the world, and that such action will not result in their obtaining swaraj, for the attainment of which self-sacrifice, forbearance, mutual love, respect for patriots and practical work are necessary, and whose progress is barred by men who prefer personal distinction to the good of the country. He writes that the time has come when the Indian should do some real work and thereby show to the world that whatever the present lot of India, its future is not slavery.

RASTGO, 17th January, 1908.

Split in the Congress.

30. Notwithstanding the public opinion to the contrary, the Rastgo (Allahabad) of the 17th January, is of opinion that the quarrel between the Moderate and National parties in the Surat Congress will prove most beneficial to the cause of the Congress and the nation.

MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

31. Referring to the split in the Surat Congress and the prejudiced attitude of political journals in holding Mr. Tilak responsible for it, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd January, notes with regret that this quarrel will destroy all political spirit and enthusiasm in the people, and advises the advocates of swaraj that it is not the way of obtaining it.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 16th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress and Mr. Tilak.

32. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th January, in a leading article passes severe strictures on Mr. Tilak for deliberately insulting the Moderate leaders at Surat.

MASHRIQ, 21st January, 1908.

Dr. Ghose's speech.

33. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 21st January, notes with regret the uncalled for attacks of Dr. Ghose in his Presidential speech on the Muhammadans, and remarks that by these opinions they can never be won to the Congress.

'BRAHMAN SARVASWA, August 1907.

The Moderates and Extremists.

34. The editor of the Brahman Sarvaswa (Etawah), for August (received on the 25th January), is of opinion that Moderates and Extremists are equally necessary in Indian politics to work in their respective spheres. He says that it is a mistake to hold that the Extremists desire the overthrow of the British rule. They only advocate self-reliance as the means of the salvation of India, being goaded to this conclusion by the Government disregarding the prayers and petitions of the people for years.

35. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for December, (received on the 21st January), contains the following under the heading "The National Regeneration":—Can any nation make any progress, if it is confined in the cage of servitude with chains of slavery upon its hands and feet? When did the fall of India begin? If one were to go over the history of India attentively, he will find that our arts, literature and sciences began to decay since we lost all political power. No one is to blame for this. All the subject races have had to suffer and will continue to suffer the consequences of slavery. The nation which is grovelling in servitude is first of all concerned with the question of its maintenance, and if any leisure time is left after the satisfaction of this want, the condition of subjection deals such a blow to its thoughts and aspirations, that beyond living a degraded life it gives no consideration to its advancement. If the present degraded condition of India be studied, it can be ascertained how far the above statement is true. Not only India, but other countries in similar circumstances are labouring under these disadvantages, and there is no wonder if they endeavour to become independent, as they are stagnating in such a degraded condition. If the Indians are proud of being the descendants of their (glorious) ancestors and are desirous of restoring India to its pristine glory, they ought to awaken from their inert condition and reform themselves. . . . . Our greatest failing is that we have forgotten to achieve anything by ourselves, and look to others for support in every undertaking—a condition which is a great obstacle to our national regeneration. Independence is the first step in the ladder for giving scope to our physical and mental faculties. . . It is impossible that we should be able to make any progress, living in a state of distrust, fear and anxiety, like those who, being dependent upon others, have service as their sole means of subsistence. If they make any advancement under such circumstances it is only to the advantage of those who govern them. In such a case boycott is the one easy means of removing the condition of servitude. Through it is possible the extension of one's power, such seems to be the will of God, since patriotism is sprouting forth in the minds of the people and is gradually gaining in strength. Our youths never fail to take advantage of an opportunity to spread national spirit in the country. Their enthusiasm ard ardour promise well for the future of their country. It cannot but bear fruit sooner or later.

National Regeneration.

HINDI PRADIP, 21st January, 1908.

36. The Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 11th January, publishes an article of which the following is a literal translation :—

Parties in Congress.

SWARAJYA, 11th January, 1908.

"How daring must the thieves be
Who carry a lamp in their hands.
God knows, if these ill-mannered persons ever feel ashamed,
When they recklessly calumniate the innocent."

"The immortal Mazzini has characterised the Moderates of his time as morally degraded and dead. Judging from this point of view, the present Moderates of India can be said to have no better life than those of Italy. The unholy policy of Western education has destroyed all moral virtues they had in them. So far they had been labouring under a serious mistake of befooling the Government by their disgraceful policy, and have in this way lost all their courage and manliness, and defeated their own purposes. Failing to match their opponents in real work and controversy, they are now hopelessly disgracing what little goodness was left in them, by insidiously spreading misunderstandings about their adversaries.

In order to court the favour and win the smile of the foreigners they have forsaken their own countrymen at the critical moment, when it was urgently required of all Indians to join determinedly in boldly facing the tyranny and oppressions of the foreigners, and in bravely standing against all coming misfortunes, while working for the good of their brethren and the salvation of their motherland. Instead of looking with greedy eyes at the hollow titles and favours of the Government, instead moreover of trying to obtain them, like starving beggars ruthlessly trampling underfoot the rights and good of their brethren, without the least regard for the pious duty of defending the rights and privileges of their nation and instead of frequenting the tables of the officials to gratify their own desires, they ought to have contemptuously spurned these advantages, and, undergoing all hardships and scorning all temptations, to have earnestly and sympathetically worked side by side with their virtuous and independent brethren for the good and progress of their dear country, and have smilingly said to the enemies of their nation that :—

> Their heart is (that of) a dauntless lion and cannot feel fear for the foreigners,
> It should not be taken for a covetous and greedy dog of the world.

But a hundred pities, rather a hundred thousand pities that these men, who acting on their policy had altogether lost their courage, manliness, patience and forbearance, have so lamentably failed in this trial. Afraid of the imaginary troubles and hardships they have shown their cowardice at the Surat Congress. Seeing a piece of bread in the hands of the officials, their mouth began to water, and, throwing off the lion's skin that they had put on, they like submissive dogs ran to get it, wagging their tails in recognition of the favour. The saying that " The Arabs beaten, the Turks tremble " exactly suits the case of these jackals in the skin of lions, when they saw some brave cubs (political offenders ?) being thrown into the cage (jail ?) and flogged by cruel officials. In order to save themselves from the grasp of the cruel officials these cowards lost even the courage of a jackal and crouchingly threw themselves prostrate to lick the feet of the oppressive officials.

In order to conceal their shameful conduct from the eyes of the public they have now resolved to blind their vision by raising the dust storm of insinuating misrepresentations. But it cannot last too long. Only one gust of healthy and unprejudiced wind (understanding) will suffice to clear away the thick storm of calumnies and false accusations and replace it by clear light.

Most of the readers of the Swarájya must be acquainted with the false rumours and misrepresentations spread by these traitors of the country, and those who have no knowledge of these things may satisfy their curiosity by perusing any of the Moderate journals. It will show the readers how the Moderates have falsely accused Mr. Tilak of forcibly occupying the presidential chair, the Nationalists of assaulting La'a Lajpat Rai and of picking quarrel in the Congress Pavilion. But those who know will tell them which party was at fault.

They will tell them how the followers of the Shah (Sir P. Mehta ?) in order to carry out his wishes, hired Muhammadan goondas to lay their hands on the gentlemen (Nationalists ?), did not allow the National Volunteers to serve in the pavilion, but replaced them by men of their own party who had neither the volunteer's uniform nor any other badge with the exception of a belt. The Nationalists with no other intention but simply to save the honour of mother Bharat (India) tried to the best of their power to win over the followers of the Shah (Sir P. Mehta?), but they would not come face to face and always kept aloof. A peace-loving man, like Lala Lajpat Rai tried his best to bring about reconciliation; but the Shah (Sir P. Mehta ?) and his followers were seeking to obtain the certificate of official favour, the good opinion of the Anglo-Indian Press and to protect the honour of their official titles of A. B. C. D., and would not listen to his persuasions. The Nationalists went even so far as to ask them that, if they had not the mind or courage to step forward, they should not at least, for the sake of the starving Indians and the children undergoing hardships in jails, retrace their steps, from the position that had been gained last year under the presidentship of the venerable Dadabhai Naoroji, the pride of India. But they were obstinate and would not listen to it. And how could they listen when they had already received instructions from Mr. Morley to separate themselves from the Nationalists, and resolved months before to drive out the Nationalists like flies from the Congress. They strongly believed that if the Nationalists were left in the Congress this year they will themselves be driven out by them from it next year. They were determined never to leave the Nationalists in the Congress even if the Congress itself was to be broken up and lost. It was for this reason that they tried to swell the number of their delegates by enlisting the names of each and everybody (lit. their cooks, khansamas, munshis and clerks) whom they could persuade to take their side. The door was wide open for the Bombay men in general, blank forms duly signed by Mr. Wacha were kept ready in store and anybody could sign his name upon them as a delegate provided that he promised to side with the Shah (Sir P. Mehta ?).

But with all this the number of the followers of the Shah (Moderates) could not rise to any considerable preponderance over the Nationalists. At the greatest computation they were in preponderance only by 50 or 60. It was on this account that the Moderates hesitated to settle the dispute by a majority of votes.

The easy device adopted to exclude the Nationalists from the Congress was to make some peculiar conditions, which will be dealt with in some subsequent issue binding for the delegateship of the Congress without which nobody on any account was to be admitted as a delegate. The followers of the Shah were perfectly conscious of the moral strength of the Nationalists and knew that no true and sincere Nationalists will ever yield to be bound by those conditions, and that they will consequently leave the Congress of their own accord. But perhaps they never thought that the Nationalists had the illustrious Mr Tilak on their side, and that a single trick devised by his exceptionally inventive brain would suffice to overthrow all their plans and cobwebs.

The Nationalists on the other hand planned that in case the Moderates could not be dissuaded from their mean device, and made to adhere to the resolutions passed at the last year's Congress, they will vehemently oppose the election of the President himself, so that in case of a defeat owing to the preponderance of votes in favour of the other side, they (Nationalists) could be under no obligation to agree to the resolutions passed by their opponents. This was accordingly done. But the followers of the Shah (Sir P. Mehta?) who prided themselves and relied upon the mercenary strength of the goondas and the police, could not withstand the brunt of such a terrible opposition. Their men began to offer insults to Mr. Tilak when he ascended the platform to oppose the election of the President and attempted to lay their polluted hands upon his holy person. One of the scoundrels intended to wield his chair as a weapon for the attack. But could the admirers of Mr. Tilak brook the sight of such meanness? No. Mr. Madhu Soodan Bhagat, a barrister espied this from the Panjab camp and crying 'Mr. Tilak in danger'! he instantly made to the place where the dauntless Mr. Tilak was standing alone amid hosts of his opponents. Mr. Bhagat was promptly followed by two youthful and enthusiastic Bengalis who were roused by his cry. Many others from the Bengal and the Panjab camps intended to go up for their help, but they were dissuaded from bringing their intention into action by some national leaders, who said that the Mahrattas could defend themselves very well without any auxiliaries. Mr. Khaparde was controlling the Madras and Central Provinces delegates and did not allow any one except some 14 or 15 men to quit their chairs. If the ominous incident had not been avoided in this way it would have despatched the Moderates if not in hundreds at least by twenties and fifties to the Surat Hospital for treatment; and for this kindness they should feel grateful to Mr. Khaparde and Babu Shiyam Sundar Chakravarti. But such delicacy of feeling can hardly be expected from the Moderates, for if they ever feel grateful to any one, they do so under compulsion without any sincerity of feelings and simply for the sake of show.

Readers, in view of these facts, is it not the duty of every one of you individually to show to your friends the falsity of the baseless rumours spread by the Moderates and help them in learning the real facts.

Not only this, but it must also be the duty of every one among you to impress your friends with the feelings of self-sacrifice and self-denial evinced by the Nationalists, so that they may realise some of the difficulties of their sincere and true well-wishers and of their dear country, and in this way frustrate the attempts made by their malicious antagonists to bring their names into disgrace.

May God soon remove the misapprehensions of our Moderate brethren so that they may realise their mistakes, and instead of wasting their means and energy in foolishly trying to please the officials and to discredit the Nationalists, that they may utilise them in the service of their nation and country.

Otherwise the day is not far off when all of us like Amelio Benderi and Italio Benderi, the dutiful sons of Italy, shall impeach those enemies of their country before the national court of their dear motherland, for having delayed for a longer period the attainment of swaraj by mother Bharat. Their names will be recorded in the history of the nation along with those of Jai Chandra, Mir Jafar and others, as traitors to their nation and enemies of their country.

Besides, the officials also are not so foolish as to consider them (Moderates) to be their sincere well-wishers and to put implicit confidence in them, but this much is certain that the Government will employ these brethren of Joseph as instruments in persecuting the National party.

But both these parties (the Government and the Moderates) must know that it is ridiculous and vain to stem the tide of time and to interfere with the will and working of Providence, things which are entirely beyond human control; that God is the source of justice, that He upholds the true and the righteous, protects the brave and the valorous, and hates eternally those who are grovelling sycophants and slavish by disposition. Consequently He will not let the Nationalists be totally destroyed, and the more they will be persecuted the more He will give them the power of patient suffering and forbearance, as it is true that God helps those who help themselves."

ANAND KADAMBINI, May to November 1907.

The Advisory Council of Notables.

37. Referring to the proposed formation of the Advisory Council of Notables the Ánand Kádambini (Mirzapur) in its combined issue for May to November, (received on the 22nd January) remarks that it will be a mere sham and cannot be expected to have any influence with the general public. Those who had formed very high hopes, adds the editor, on the hopeful words of Mr. Morley on the occasion of his budget speech have been too cruelly disappointed.

ANAND KADAMBINI, May to November, 1907.

The expansion of Legislative Councils.

38. The Ánand Kádambini (Mirzapur), in its combined issue for months from May to November, (received on the 22nd January) expresses its disappointment at the proposed extension of the Legislative Councils and wonders what good the Liberal Ministry could have in view in proposing such a hollow reform which will not add to the substantial rights of the people beyond increasing the number of their representatives on those councils which is no reform worth the name. The editor points out that the public is neither satisfied with such a reform nor feels grateful to the Government for it. He concludes with the remark that the class representation which is the chief feature of the reform, and which is intended to lay the Muhammadans under an obligation, will only possibly lead to alienate the sympathies of both Hindus and Muhammadans from the Government, if they come to believe that the measure is simply meant to sow discord between the two communities.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, January, 1908.

The proposed reforms in India.

39. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for January, contains an article entitled "The proposed reforms in India" by S. H. Swinny. The writer states that the addition of a representative element to the India Council has long been regarded as one of the most popular concessions made to the Indians since the establishment of Imperial rule, and that few as are the elected members and slight as are their opportunities for influencing legislation, their presence at the Council Board is recognised as a sign that the people of the country are entitled to some voice in the management of its public affairs. It was, he says, expected that the enlargement of popular liberties in India, however slow, would be sure, that the English rulers of the country would follow the English precedent of ordered and well considered change in a definite direction, without wavering and without retrogression.

He writes that it is the wish of all those classes in India who take an interest in public affairs that any change made in the composition of the Legislative Councils should be in the direction of enlarging the elected element as represented by such men as Sir Pherozeshah Mehta or Mr. Gokhale.

He remarks an enlargement has indeed been proposed but that it is marked by certain restrictions which make the new reforms very far from being an extension of the old, and make it doubtful whether the proposals of the Government make for reform or retrogression. He expresses the opinion that the constitution of the Council as proposed by Government will not increase the representative character and efficiency of a deliberative assembly. He recognises that several of the ruling chiefs have shown themselves capable and enlightened administrators in their own dominions, but says that few of them will be inclined to give unpalatable advice at the risk of offending the Government, without whose goodwill their own task of administration would become very difficult. He remarks how important it is that a Government, and especially a despotic Government, should keep itself informed of the wishes of the people, but disagrees with the contention that to take the case of Bengal, the people are better represented by a few territorial magnates than by all the other channels of information open to the Government, such as the elected members of the Provincial Legislative Council, or the widely circulating press, both English and vernacular. With regard to the representation of minorities, he expresses himself as doubtful whether it is to their benefit to be made independent of the goodwill of their fellow-countrymen, or whether a community gains in the end by finding that its position does not depend on the active exertions of their members.

He notes that the two greatest communities in India—the Muslims and the Hindus—in the end whatever their present attitude may be, must stand or fall together, and that, though special representation of the Muhammadans may for the moment be a disadvantage to the popular cause, still that cause in the fulness of time would unite all that was best and wisest in both communities in the love and service of their common country.

United Provinces Provincial Conference.

40. Referring to the coming United Provinces Provincial Conference the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) writes in the issue of the 19th January as follows :— INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th January, 1908.

"The first Conference has been productive of good results as the attention of the Local Government has been directed to the begar system, and the civil administration of Kumaun is also under consideration. The election of delegates from the various districts should take place as early as possible so that the Reception and Working committees may make the necessary arrangements. The attempt that was made at Allahabad to introduce an element of discord into the Conference is not likely to be repeated at Lucknow where the smooth current of public feeling has not been disturbed by 'irresponsible politicians' from outside. The United Provinces Association may elect all its members as delegates and the number may be supplemented by others elected at public meetings which accept the creed of the National Convention."

Provincial Conference.

41. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 22nd January, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th January, on the 'Provincial Conference.' HINDUSTANI, 22nd January, 1908.

United Provinces Conference.

42. With reference to the United Provinces Provincial Conference which is to meet in Lucknow in February, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 23rd January, writes as follows:— CITIZEN, 23rd January, 1908.

"We see an announcement that the second sitting of the so-called Provincial Conference would take place at Lucknow on the 29th February 1908 and the following days. The gentlemen who are responsible for this announcement have again unfortunately omitted to formulate a constitution for the Conference and a clear definition of its aims and objects. It is needless to say that the way in which the Congress had been carried on for the last twenty-three years has done but little good to the country. We are accustomed to such platitudes that twenty-three years were nothing in the lifetime of a nation, and that the expansion of the Legislative Councils and some other small modicums of reform were the achievements of the Congress. We have always held the view that the British Administration of India has always been a progressive administration in the past, and that the Congress and the way in which it had been carried on had rather retarded than accelerated the rate of progress. As was pointed out by the late lamented Kristo Das Paul of Calcutta in a series of brilliant and thoughtful articles that he wrote in answer to the speeches delivered by Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji when he inaugurated the so-called National fund of 1884, the system of agitation brought into vogue by a few educated Indians, who founded what was termed the Indian Association of Calcutta, had produced but little good. There have been a few measures during the last quarter of a century which showed the generous intentions of the Government towards the people, but there had been many such measures in the first three quarters of the last century before any agitation on the lines of the Congress had ever come into existence. As was remarked by that talented editor of the Hindu Patriot, whose statesmanlike grasp of Indian problems the agitators of the later period have not made the slightest effort to follow or imitate, the freedom of the press conferred by Lord Metcalfe, the introduction of English education by Lord William Bentinck and Lord Macaulay, the extension of the jurisdiction of Civil Courts over European British subjects, the Charter Acts of 1833 and 1853, the Queen's Proclamation of 1858, the establishment of the new Legislative Councils by the Indian Council's Act of 1862, the appointment of Indian members to the High Court bench were all made by the British Indian Government long before the present system of agitation came into force or any Indians had crossed the seas to address the British public on Indian grievances. If these concessions to the Indians in the past had been made long before the birth of the Congress, and before those so-called leaders of public opinion, who have been making a little noise in the Presidency towns for the last quarter of a century, had ever entered what they are accustomed to call public life, why should the small measures of concession such as the further expansion of the Councils, the raising of the age for the Civil Service and the abolition of the Jury notification be claimed times ad nauseum among the achievements of the so-called Indian National Congress? The Congress had, during the 23 years that it existed, no constitution at all. Its angry speeches and its eloquent resolutions had no effect whatever on the Government of the country, and the annual picnics, where the greater part of the delegates went without any serious purpose whatsoever and merely to enjoy an annual holiday with people from other provinces, produced not the slightest influence on the counsels of the Government, which pursued its even tenor undisturbed by the noisy declamations of Indian agitators, which, in the language of a leading journal of Anglo-Indian opinion, added more to the gaiety of nations than had any good results whatsoever. The Congress is now dead with but a poor record of work done, and we should think that it would be better for all the parties concerned to let it go into deserved oblivion and not try to resuscitate it under another name. Those in the United Provinces who may desire to take a holiday trip to Lucknow are quite welcome to do so. If they want to talk and pass resolutions and gain a little notoriety for themselves, which would enable them to see their names and speeches in print in some journals which want their patronage, we do not grudge them this amusement and picnic, but let them not promulgate it, through such journals in the press as would do their bidding, that they are doing anything useful or that they are doing any good to the country. For all the attention that their resolutions would receive from the Government they might well save their breath and their money, their paper and their ink, for the Government knows it very well that all men who have a stake in the country, or who are really bent on doing solid good to their countrymen, not by writing and speaking frothy rhetoric, and by raising subscriptions which are spent at the discretion of those who raise them, would give the so-called United Provinces Conference a wide berth. Is it any good for just a few lawyers, who are importations from other provinces, some of whom are fond of acquiring what they consider an importance in the eyes of the public, to waste their time and money and then claim in paragraphs and articles written by themselves and published to order, that they have done great and abiding service to the country of their birth, fully knowing that the majority of their countrymen repudiate their representative character for one reason or another. Our advice to these tall talkers and this noisy set is to mind their own business, and, if they were unable to come to the help of their poorer countrymen in better ways than passing resolutions and abusing the Government, to keep quiet and allow that statesman who now presides over the Local administration to pursue his career of useful reforms and give him any assistance if they can in men and money and not to let their love of self-advertisement get the better of themselves."

ANAND KADAMBINI, May to November, 1907.

The present situation in India.

43. Reviewing the present situation in India, the Ánand Kádambini (Mirzapur), of the combined issue for May to November (received on the 22nd January), declares that although a very limited number of speakers and journalists at times indulge in wild talk and seditious writings (for which they are justly punished), yet the Anglo-Indian papers, on account of their abusive and inciting writings and the authorities on account of their ignoring the public opinion, are mainly responsible for the unrest in the country. The editor thinks that unless the Government adopts measures to restrain the Anglo-Indian press, which is so powerful for doing evil, the present unrest cannot subside. He further suggests that in order to win the goodwill of the Indians, Government ought to administer justice without distinction of colour. It should pursue a policy of reconciliation rather than that of repression and coercion, which it has unfortunately been doing for the last few months.

HINDI PRADIP, December, 1907.

Unrest from peace.

44. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for December (received on the 21st January), contains an article under the heading "Unrest from peace." The writer remarks that the English rulers of India boast of establishing peace in the country, which in his opinion has not been so much beneficial to the Indians as to those who have established it. The Indians became destitute in proportion as peace and comfort increased. India which in ancient times was full of prosperous cities and villages, now appears, with the exception of a few important cities, to be verging on extreme poverty, especially under the stress of the prevailing famine. It may accordingly be said without contradiction that the former state of disorder and confusion in India was much better for its inhabitants, inasmuch as they lived in affluent circumstances, not a single farthing of their money going out of the country and all the corn remaining in it to provide sufficient subsistence for them. On the contrary they are now left mere skeletons for want of sufficient food and clothing, and the country looks like one desolate plain on all sides. The writer asks if this is what is meant by peace, and says that if so, it is worse than the greatest disorder and confusion. Indians do not want such peace. It has done them no good, although it has certainly made England the richest country and the English one of the wealthiest nations. He goes on to say that side by side with this peace, was spread a kind of tempting net which prevented its being disturbed for long. But how long was this delusion to last ? The secret of the policy of the rulers was at last disclosed. Railways and other means of convenience and comfort were adopted not for the benefit of the Indians but of those who introduced them for the purpose of establishing peace. Realizing all this, the Indians are now fluttering like birds divested of their wings, unable to do anything. Even this does not satisfy them (the rulers ?)

"The swadeshi and the boycott movements which the Indians are adopting for their benefit is perturbing them and creating dissatisfaction, so that the peace is now assuming the form of unrest. The Indians have realized it after a very long time and at the cost of their all. This unrest is now daily on the increase and there is no hope of its being allayed."

SARASWATI, January, 1908.

The Indian situation.

45. The Saraswati (Allahabad) for January, says that it is highly desirable in the interests of both India and England that Mr. Morley should visit India and accord personal interviews to the leaders of this country, or that the latter themselves should see him in England, or that hostile English journalists should be invited to India to study the present situation.

RAHBAR, 21st January, 1908.

Unrest in India.

46. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st January, referring to the various steps taken by the Government to nip in the bud the unrest and discontent in India by persecuting journalists and others, remarks that the Government should note that it is only by a policy of conciliation that a government can retain its hold over its subjects, and that, however weak the oppressed party may be, patience has a limit, and when it gets infuriated the stronger party can only with great difficulty control it.

ADVOCATE, 23rd January, 1908.

Indian affairs.

47. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd January, reproduces from the Reformer's Year Book for 1908, Mr. Gokhale's article on Indian affairs in 1907.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, January 1908.

State interference in England and India.

48. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for January, contains the second of the articles entitled "State interference in England and India" by Mr. N. N. Gupta, M.A., continued from the September number.

The writer states that the most important and at once the most complex aspect of State administration, lies in the administration of schools, that it may be premised once for all that education in this country is at a scandalously low ebb, and that though Government subsidises some schools and colleges, the grant per head is not to be compared to that in other countries.

He remarks that while Government interference in the matter of education is always to be looked upon with suspicion, primary education is one of those things which the State should freely subsidise, leaving the administration of such education in the hands of local governing bodies.

He writes that one of the benefits accruing from compulsory education is the raising of the status of the population, and that the illiteracy of the masses and of the manhood of a later generation is a crying shame under a democratic government, professedly the most enlightened in the world.

While in Great Britain higher education is the monoply of private enterprise, in a country like India, which is pre-eminently poor and under foreign hegemony he recognizes that higher education must perforce be undertaken initially by Government. He considers the continental system desirable, with a certain modification.

The writer says that recent legislative enactments, aiming practically a death-blow at higher education, have justly alarmed the public, and he advocates a system in India of State aid hand in hand with popular control.

He notes that the pressing need of the hour is industrial reform and consequently of technical education.

The question of indentured labour for foreign countries has of late years assumed increased importance, and, in view of the attitude adopted by self-governing colonies towards British Indian subjects, he expresses the hope that the Government of India will maintain its previous attitude, which he considers a correct one.

Adverting to the administration of justice, the writer remarks that the anomalous union of the Executive and Judicial imperils the whole legal fabric and vitiates the administration of the law.

While recognising that the real crux in the problem of the Governmental legislation lies in the sphere of taxation, he remarks that the party cry of no taxation without representation, is meaningless to Indians, although the desire for a voice and a larger share in the executive administration of the country is legitimate.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 20th January, 1908.

England and India.

49. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit) of the 20th January, referring to the increasing attention that is being paid to Indian questions in England, remarks that it is the manifestations of the national spirit that have caught the eyes of the British people, and not the visits of Messrs. Keir Hardie and Nevinson or Reuter. The editor is of opinion that further progress is required in this direction.

HINDI PRADIP, December, 1907.

Intellectuality of the Hindus.

50. The editor of the Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for December (received on the 21st January), commenting on the intellectual powers of the Hindus declares that they are superior to every nation in this respect, and that whatever department of life they turned their attention, they distinguished themselves in it above all others. They are now engaged in politics and in promoting their indigenous arts and industries, which has consequently made them an eyesore to the foreigners, who are throwing obstacles in their way with a view to retard their progress. He notes that but for their vigorous intellectual powers the foreigners would have crushed and have decimated them like the African negroes and the American Red Indians.

He expresses the hope that their talents will yet be rewarded and that they will attain swaraj.

SARASWATI, January, 1908.

Indians and politics.

51. A correspondent of the Saraswati (Allahabad), for January, notes with regret that Indians take very little interest in politics, and remarks that good government is the only panacea for the evils to which India at present is a victim. He accordingly urges the necessity of Indians devoting their energies to the study of politics and seeing that measures are carried out to reform the present system of administration in India.

ADVOCATE, 19th January, 1908.

The Decentralisation Commission.

52. Referring to the decision come to by the Decentralisation Commission to hear the evidence of the Government of India in camera, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 19th January writes as follows :—"Is there something rotten in the state of Denmark, too rotten to stand the public gaze, or has Mr. Hobhouse yielded to the charm of Anglo-Indian exclusiveness?"

53. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 20th January, publishes a letter from a correspondent who, while referring to the present position of the educated Indians, remarks that they have made immense progress in the various departments of life and have reformed themselves to a great extent. Now the time is ripe for granting them substantial political privileges. The writer appeals to the English in the name of liberty, which they hold so dear, and asks them to do their duty to the people of India.

Educated Indians.

OUDH AKHBAR, 20th January, 1908.

54. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st January, referring to the refusal of the native troops in Indo-China to take up arms against their own countrymen, remarks that the spirit of nationality has at least asserted itself in Asia, and the people are beginning to distinguish between their own kith and kin and foreigners.

The spirit of Nationality in Asia.

RAHBAR, 21st January, 1908.

55. A Cawnpore correspondent writes to the Citizen (Allahabad) of the 23rd January as follows :—An audience of over 4,000 Indians filled the McWright Hall on Saturday evening to listen to Lala Lajpat Rai's lecture on "Swadeshi," which was delivered in Hindustani. Some 2,000 people, who were unable to find sitting room, stood outside. Although Lala Lajpat Rai's reception was wildly demonstrative, order was maintained. After the lecture the populace dragged his carriage through the city with shouts of "Bande Matram." Lala Lajpat Rai leaves on Sunday evening for Lahore, touching en route possibly at Delhi. His mission on behalf of the famine stricken in the Punjab, for whose relief he has collected a goodly sum of money, has been, he said, fairly successful, and he is now, on his return to the Punjab, about to organise relief parties to begin operations.

Lala Lajpat Rai at Cawnpore.

CITIZEN, 23rd January, 1908.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Nil.

III.—Native States.

56. Referring to Jam Ranjit Singhji, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) of the 23rd January, remarks that the absentee ruler did not make a very promising start in carrying out the reform which promised well in the beginning, and he supposes that in Prince Ranjitsinghji's absence his state and people will look after themselves while the Prince will spend his money in England like a king.

Jam Ranjit Singh.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 23rd January, 1908.

Lord Curzon's circular about Native Princes absenting themselves without leave would hardly apply to "Ranji," for was he not a great cricketer before he became a small ruler, and many sins were forgiven to great cricketers.

He remarks that for his own sake Prince Ranjitsinghji ought to have maintained appearances by staying a little longer among the people who were providing him with funds.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

57. Referring to the appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain as a Judge of the Allahabad High Court, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th January, regrets to point out that since the beginning of political agitation in India and the courting of official favour by Muhammadans, there have been four vacancies of judgeship in different High Courts in India which have invariably been filled up by Muhammadans.

Appointment of Saiyid Karamat Husain to the High Court Judgeship.

MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

The editor says "Was there no Hindu vakil or barrister competent for the vacancy in the Allahabad High Court save Saiyid Karamat Husain ? This Fullerism of the Government is not derogatory to itself alone, but it puts a disgraceful blot on the character of the English as a nation."

58. Referring to the appointment of Mr. Karamat Husain to the High Court, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd January, remarks that Mr. Karamat Husain will not be entitled to a pension.

Mr. Justice Karamat Husain.

INDIAN PEOPLE 23rd January, 1908.

He asks whether in making situations from the Indian Bar, only such men are to be chosen as will not be entitled to a pension as it seems very unfair to the Indian Judges that the age limit should affect them alone.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th January, 1908.

The conviction of the Yugantar.

59. Referring to Mr. Kingsford's remarks about the Yugantar in his judgment, the Indian People (Allahabad) of the 19th January, contains the following remark :—

"This shows how well Mr. Kingsford has earned the handsome increment to his salary sanctioned by the Local Government. Surely the suppression of a newspaper ought not to prove a more difficult matter than the deportation without trial of an individual.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th January, 1908.

The conviction of the Yugantar.

60. Commenting on the conviction of the printer of Yugantar, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 19th January, that the case is an important one, and shows that if there is an organisation and determination to defy the law, the present machinery of justice is quite inadequate to suppress an offence. Mr. Kingsford himself said that the printer was merely a cat'spaw, and the real offenders were behind him, and there was no means of getting at them.

Would it not be much better, the editor asks, to make the printer a king's witness and offer him free pardon if he discloses the names of the real delinquents ? That would enable the law to reach the real culprits, and probably to put an end to the campaign of persistent calumny and sedition.

CITIZEN, 23rd January, 1908.

The conviction of the Yugantar.

61. Commenting on Mr. Kingsford's judgment in the case against the Yugantar, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad) of the 23rd January, remarks that the judgment unfortunately contains remarks which a judgment should not do.

The considerations which had made Mr. Kingsford pass on the printer of the Yugantar the highest punishment which he could possibly award were not relevant for the purpose. But the part of the judgment which was most open to objection was that passage in which he lamented the impotence of Government to suppress the class of papers of which he calls the Yugantar one. A Magistrate while on the bench should not be a politician, and no observation of a political character should find a place in his judgment, whether these observations were in favour of or against the executive Government.

In this connection the editor takes strong exception to the suggestion made by the editor of the Indian People that the printer might have been made a king's witness in order that the real offender might be punished.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 18th January, 1908.

The Rawalpindi rape case.

62. The editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 18th January that there does not appear to be any truth in the rumours which had been spread by certain Indian journals to the effect that the woman who was the complainant in the Rawalpindi rape case had committed suicide. She was certainly alive on the 14th of last month.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 23rd January, 1908.

The Rawalpindi judgment.

63. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd January, notes that he has received a disclaimer from the Punjab Government Advocate denying that any application is being made for the expunction of strictures on the conduct of the Punjab Police from the body of Mr. Martineau's judgment. He remarks that he is very pleased that the rumour is baseless.

NAJM-I-BAZIGH, 1st January, 1908.

Separation of the judicial and the executive functions.

64. The Najm-i-Bazigh (Moradabad), of the 1st January, notes with satisfaction that the proposal is again brought forward for separating the judicial from the executive, and hopes that it would be soon brought into effect.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th January, 1908.

The Dinajpur assault case.

65. Referring to the sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment passed by the Sessions Judge of Bogra on Babu Durga Charan Sanyal in the case known as "the Dinajpur assault case," the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 17th January, says that neither the Judge nor the prosecution could explain what motive the accused could possibly have in making the assault upon the complainants; while the plea of self-defence set up by the accused appealed even to ordinary common sense. The editor remarks that the Judge, disbelieving this plea, has awarded such a heavy sentence to the accused who is an old and respectable man, and that it will cause grief and resentment to the entire public.

Prosecution of Sufi Amba Prasad.

66. While eulogising Mr. Martineau for his strong sense of justice and straightforwardness in the case of Sufi Amba Prasad prosecuted for sedition, the Swarajya, (Allahabad), of the 18th January, remarks :— SWARAJYA, 18th January, 1908.

"It is such just officials who maintain the honour of British Courts, otherwise officials of the type of Messrs. Boyd, Agnew, Maunt appear to have left nothing to undermine justice to its very root.

But alas ! the present tendency of the Government is to honour the latter class of officials and disregard the former.

But as virtue is its own reward, these just officials need not care for the opinion of their shortsighted superiors in office."

Limitation of mortgages.

67. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 21st January, notes with regret that the Government is showing undue favour to mortgagees at the expense of the poor debtors. MASHRIQ, 21st January, 1908.

The editor is of opinion that the mortgagees should not be allowed any grace for recovering their money from their debtors.

The Villapuram riot case.

68. While referring to the facts of the Villapuram riot case in connection with the religious procession of the Christians, and to the prosecution of some 23 local Hindus held responsible for the riot before a special Magistrate, the Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd January remarks :—" Is it true ! Is justice forsaking the British Government ! We wish the Anglo-Indian officials to be just and impartial in religious matters at least." MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

The editor hopes that Indians will take a lesson from this.

Conviction of a Bengali boy in East Bengal.

69. Briefly referring to the facts of the case against one Sudesh, a school boy, prosecuted for pushing Dr. Anderson, the Civil Surgeon of Chandpur in East Bengal, the Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd January, strongly condemns the entire disregard for justice on the part of the trying magistrate, in convicting the accused on the strength of only the evidence of the complainant, who could not identify the accused when he was shown to him for the first time, and on the presumption that a respectable European like Mr. Anderson will not tell a lie. MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

Famine and Government revenue in Hardoi.

70. While pointing out the deplorable and serious effect of famine in the United Provinces, as shown by the sudden and abnormal increase in the number of labourers on the famine relief works in the province from fifty-eight thousand to one lakh and fifty thousand during the last week, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th January, notes with regret that in some districts the poor zamindars are still being harassed to pay the Government revenue, and asks His Honour to look particularly into the condition and troubles of the zamindars in the Hardoi district. MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

Naib Tahsildars.

71. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 22nd January, publishes a letter from a Naib Tahsildar of the Province of Agra, who complains that the pay of Naib Tahsildars is very small (Rs. 50 a month), that they have to spend Rs. 20 a month on a horse, and that very little is left to support themselves and their families. Besides this their duties are very onerous, and they are made to do all the hard work. HINDUSTANI, 22nd January, 1908.

He is of opinion that their work would be considerably lightened if some of their duties were delegated to the Sub-Registrars who have very little work, and he recommends that their pay should be raised and status improved.

(b).—Police.

Affairs at Mymensingh.

72. While denouncing the disgraceful and oppressive conduct of the police in Mymensingh, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th January, remarks that it shows that the place is not under the British administration. The news regarding Mymensingh has sent a thrill of horror throughout the country and seriously threatens the prestige of the British rule in India. MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th January, 1908.

Affairs at Mymensingh.

73. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 17th January, states that accounts received from Mymensingh show that complete anarchy is reigning there. Such a state of affairs under British rule reflects great discredit on the Government. It ought to take prompt steps to quell the disturbance and thus save itself from calumny and the people from suffering losses and insults. It is alleged that the police unable to find out the murderers of Mr. Allen by means of lawful methods are committing atrocities on the people in the hope that they may be frightened into giving information about the real culprits in the case. If it be a fact, it is needless to mention that such action is highly reprehensible. He notes that it is suspected that these atrocities are committed with a view to frighten the people so that they may not venture to commit further outrages like the Goalando incident. He writes that it is not yet proved that this sad incident was due to political causes or to the action of some secret organization while the public opinion condemns the incident in no uncertain terms, and for that reason he reproaches Government for not protecting respectable, innocent and helpless people from police oppression, and it is consequently suffering in public estimation. He advises the taking of prompt steps to check police violence, bearing in mind that seditious speeches produce their effect upon a very limited number of indiscreet and imprudent people, while the sight of such atrocities being committed upon their countrymen is calculated to estrange the sympathy and affection of millions from the Government.

SWARAJYA, 18th January, 1908.

Affairs at Mymensingh.

74. Referring to the search of the Charu-mihir press at Mymensingh, the Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 18th January, strongly denounces the alleged lawless and atrocious conduct of the police in destroying the type and other materials of the press and divesting it of articles of value and cash, which they could lay their hands upon.

The editor advises the Government to take measures to stop such high-handedness on the part of the police and to discourage this alleged destructive manner of conducting a search.

TAFRIH, 21st January, 1908.

Affairs at Mymensingh.

75. While referring to the state of affairs in Mymensingh, the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st January, remarks that while taking proper measures to find out the real culprits who attempted the murder of Mr. Allen, the Government must also keep an eye on the conduct of the police so that they may not abuse the power entrusted to them.

SWARAJYA, 18th January, 1908.

Affairs at Mymensingh.

76. Referring to the alleged disgraceful conduct of the Mymensingh police in conducting the search of houses in connection with the case of attempt to murder Mr. Allen, the Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 18th January, deplores the unprotected condition of the Mymensingh people left to the mercy of the cruel police, and remarks that the proverb—a blind King, darkness in the city, exactly describes the situation.

MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

Affairs at Mymensingh.

77. Referring to the state of affairs in Mymensingh, to the alleged outrageous conduct of the European officers in taking the city by surprise at the dead of night with the help of the armed police, in breaking open the houses of the Hindus, divesting them of their valuables and intruding into their zananas, the Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd January, remarks:—"We are at a loss to understand if such shameful and outrageous conduct will add anything to the prestige and credit of the Government. It may be, who knows, save the officials."

SWARAJYA, 18th January, 1908.

White-washing the Rawalpindi police.

78. Referring to Mr. Martineau's remarks on the conduct of the police in the Rawalpindi case, the Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 18th January, strongly denounces the conduct of the Punjab Government in attempting to whitewash their shameful character, and remarks:—

"What rare justice! May God repay you for that! Why speak of bringing wrong-doers to justice when an attempt is being made to gloss over such misconduct! Will this ugly spot be left to blot Mr. Morley's Government for ever? Is this the justice of which the officials boast so much while they expect Indians to be faithful and loyal? It is hoped the Chief Court will not disgrace the name of justice by granting the appeal for mercy (made by the Punjab Government on behalf of the police.)

79. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 18th January, strongly condemns the conduct of the officials in attempting to justify the conduct of the police in connection with the Rawalpindi cases as such favour towards the police is likely to lead to deplorable consequences. TOHFA-I-HIND, 18th January, 1908.

White-washing the Rawalpindi police.

80. The Agra Akhbar, of the 21st January, complains that gambling is rife in Agra, and asks the local authorities to take measures to put a stop to it. AGRA AKHBAR, 21st January, 1908.

Gambling in Agra.

81. While eulogising the Sessions Judge of Mymensingh for his strong and impartial sense of justice in convicting Shaikh Alam for kidnapping and outraging the chastity of a young Hindu girl, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd January, strongly condemns the prejudiced conduct of the Sub-Inspector of Police, a Muhammadan, in charge of Mymensingh police station, for not taking down the report of the relatives of the outraged girl and contemptuously driving them out of the thana. MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

Conviction of a Muhammadan for outraging a Hindu girl.

The editor further remarks that with all other disadvantages and the calamities in the shape of the plague, famines and starvations, the Hindus, after a long and despotic reign of the Muhammadans have been sincerely grateful to and contented with the English Government as it allowed the freedom of religion and protected the honour of their women which they prize above their life.

In conclusion he expresses a hope that the Government will not suffer the spotless fame of British justice to be soiled by allowing such outrageous and lawless actions, so that the Hindus may not lose their faith in its justice and live grateful and contented praying for the British Crown.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

82. Regretting the inconvenience experienced by the public owing to the delay and indifference of the Municipal Commissioners in granting applications for the construction of buildings, the Zul-Qarnain (Budaun) of the 21st January, notes with satisfaction the that the High Court has held as justified the action of a man in Cawnpore, who was prosecuted for building a house without waiting permission from the municipality. ZUL-QARNAIN, 21st January, 1908.

Municipalities.

The editor asks the municipal authorities to take a lesson from this precedent, and pay immediate attention to such applications in future, as delay and indifference in such matters causes much annoyance to the public.

83. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 21st January, suggests the advisability of recovering municipal taxes in four instalments, as it would be of much convenience to the poor people. The editor also suggests that Municipal Secretaries should issue distress warrants only when they have made proper enquiries, and not on the reports of their subordinates. SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 21st January, 1908.

Municipal taxation.

84. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 23rd January, comments on the frequent changes in the post of Water Works Inspector in the Allahabad Municipality. He remarks that he is informed that the several incumbents have found it impossible to work with Mr. Wasdell, the Water-Works Engineer. CITIZEN, 23rd January, 1908.

The Water-Works Inspector of Allahabad.

(e).—Education.

85. Referring to the order prohibiting students from taking part in politics, the Musafir (Agra), of the 15th January, denounces it as an attempt to undermine the mental development of the coming generations of Indians, and advises his countrymen to spurn such a defective system of education, and to educate their children at the Gurukul institution. MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

Students and politics.

86. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th January, complains that much corruption prevails in the Sanskrit College, Benares. The European Principal, it is alleged, takes very little interest in the college, and the Pandits do whatever they like. They refuse to admit members of the Arya Samaj and of lower castes into the institution, and distribute scholarships just as they like. AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 16th January, 1908.

Sanskrit College, Benares.

The writer asks the Government to make an inquiry into its working.

TOHFA-I-HIND, 18th January, 1908.

District Board schools.

87. While pointing out that the District Boards have sufficent income from abwabs (cesses), the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 18th January, suggests that the educational authorities should increase the salaries of the teachers in the District Board schools, and also grant them pensions on retirement from the service.

HINDOSTHAN, 20th January, 1908.

Appointment of Mr. Earle as Director of Public Instruction, Bengal.

88. Referring to the appointment of Mr. Earle as Director of Public Instruction in Bengal, a correspondent of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 20th January, writes that at the time a cry of protest was raised at a member of the Indian Civil Service being introduced into the highest office of the Educational Department. However whatever objections there may have been in principle, the appointment had by the results fully justified itself.

AL-BASHIR, 21st January, 1908.

Musalmans and Government Scholarships.

89. Al-Bashir (Etawah) of the 21st January, complains that very few Musalman students are granted Government scholarships and have their fees remitted, although Headmasters are empowered to remit the fees of 4 per cent. of the students.

The editor requests the Secretary of the Muhammadan Educational Conference to bring this matter to the notice of the Educational Departments of different provinces.

RAHBAR, 21st January, 1908.

Primary education.

90. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st January, complains that the Government which could pass the Seditious Meetings Bill in such a short time has not as yet decided whether it could make primary education free, although small feudatory states are taking the lead in this matter.

HINDUSTANI, 22nd January, 1908.

Teachers in Government Model schools.

91. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 22nd January, publishes a letter from a correspondent who suggests the advisability of increasing the pay and prospects of teachers in Government Model Schools.

MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

Muhammadan Educational Conference in Calcutta.

92. Referring to the promise of Mr. Earle, the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, at a recent conference of the Muhammadans held in Calcutta, to make some special arrangements to facilitate the spread of education among the Muhammadans, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd January, remarks :—

"Are not the Government schools and colleges already existing sufficient to impart education to Muhammadans? The only drawback in the existing educational institutions is that they do not teach the Quran; and if it is only for this reason, we will advise the Government not to undergo the trouble and expense of making fresh and special arrangements for their education but to introduce a mullás (religious) class in schools and colleges.

Happily the teachings of the Quran are not so attractive, convincing and impressive as to change the religious convictions of the Hindu boys and (sarcastically?) moreover it will, as the proverb goes, kill two birds with one stone; also save us (the Arya Samajists?) the trouble of wandering about to show the real state (lit. photos) of God of the Quran."

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

The famine and the respectable poor.

93. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th January, publishes an article entitled "The appeal of the Safaid-posh paupers" in which the editor, while describing the serious distress caused by the terrible famine prevalent in the country, deplores the lamentable condition of the respectable poor who can hardly manage to get even one plain and insufficient meal in twenty-four hours.

The editor while eulogising the Government for taking prompt measures against for the calamity, opening various relief works and for granting gratuitous relief allowances, regretfully points out that the heavy burden of various taxes imposed upon the people &c., is very harassing to the poor, especially in such hard times, and he makes a pathetic appeal to His Imperial Majesty on behalf of the respectable poor, and prays that they might be relieved from the unbearable burden of heavy taxation.

94. While pointing out the inadequacy of the relief works started by the Government, to arrange for the provision of so many starving millions, the Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd January, suggests the desirability of Government fixing rates for the sale of corn in the market.

The famine and cost of grain.

MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

95. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 23rd January, referring to the issuing of grain tickets to the poor people of Benares by Mr. Radice, the Collector of the district, suggests the advisability of opening grain shops in Lucknow where the holders of such tickets may obtain grain at concession rates.

Famine and grain tickets at Benares.

HIND, 23rd January, 1908.

96. Referring to the conduct of the Canal Commission in the Punjab, in refusing to have an interview with the zamindars, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 18th January, remarks:—"It is a rare sympathy! Is it on account of such conduct that the Government hopes to enlist the sympathies of the people? Is it for such treatment that the Government expects the people to offer their lives and be faithful to the British flag?

The Canal Commission.

SWARAJYA, 18th January, 1908.

No. It is vain and foolish to hope so. The unsympathetic attitude of the present day officials is fast shaking that confidence of the people which had been obtained by their predecessors in office, and the Government must be on its guard against these enemies of the British Crown."

97. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 22nd January, complains that the distribution of water from irrigation canals is very irregular. The requisite quantity of water is not allowed and the charges have now become exorbitant. Besides this the quantity of water allotted to villages is not distributed among all the cultivators, so the strongest appropriate most of it.

Irrigation in the United Provinces.

HINDUSTANI, 22nd January, 1908.

The writer is of opinion that enquiries like the one going on in the Punjab are needed in this Province also.

98. Referring to the report on the working of the Co-operative Credit Societies, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th January, remarks that it is on the whole a record of welcome advancement in all three forms of societies—central, urban and rural.

The Co-operative Credit Societies.

ADVOCATE, 19th January, 1908.

The gradual increase of the societies proves, he considers, that the idea is filtering down to the lower strata and spreading itself out among all classes of society.

Adverting to the closing balance of Rs. 25,000 odd of the rural banks, he remarks that from the notice of the work done by banking institutions a large balance means more money in cash or kind lying idle, so that this is no reason to congratulate the manager of the societies. He considers the fact that the net profit from those 130 bodies resulted in Rs. 8,181, is not an indication of very efficient management, and expresses surprise that in the face of the progress of the swadeshi movement, public spirited men should fight shy of this branch of constructive work for the good of the people, and for the majority as India is in the main agricultural.

He notes that great advance may easily be made in this direction if a fair start be made considering the fact that the entire machinery of Government specially put up for this purpose, can be utilized without let or hinderance, and that therefore the swadeshi movement should materially help in this great work of co-operation.

(g).—General.

99. Referring to the retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 17th January, declares that there is no doubt that almost all the European officials and Anglo-Indian papers will be grieved at His Honour's departure from India, but the Indians, particularly the Panjabis, will not be sorry for it although they may cordially sympathise with him for his illness.

Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th January, 1908.

SWARAJYA, 18th January, 1908.

Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibetson.

100. Referring to the resignation of Sir Denzil Ibbetson, the Swarájya (Allahabad) of the 18th January, remarks that although it is given out that the resignation has been tendered in consequence of His Honour's ill-health and medical advice, yet there are rumours afloat which give it a political significance. Some attribute it to the release of Lala Lajpat Rai, some to the discharge of the Rawalpindi lawyers in the riot case, while others base it on the refusal of the Chief Court to whitewash the conduct of the police in the Rawalpindi cases, as required by His Honour.

The editor further remarks that although these surmises may be entirely false and unfounded yet they sufficiently show the failure of His Honour's government in securing popularity, and consequently His Honour deserves the sympathy of the Indians in every way.

CITIZEN, 19th January, 1908.

Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson.

101. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 19th January, reproduces an article from the Hindu (Madras) entitled "Sir Denzil Ibbetson."

MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson.

102. Referring to the retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson, the Musafir (Agra) of the 23rd January, remarks :— "A cunning and skilful physician, in order to fill his purse and acquire fame in his profession, alarms the friends of a patient slightly indisposed with cold, by diagnosing the disease to be a serious case of pneumonia and then easily curing the slight disorder, makes his money, establishes his reputation and at the same time confers an obligation on the friends of the patient, who were entirely ignorant of the real state and extent of the disease. Exactly a similar trick of deception has been played by Sir Denzil Ibbetson. He alarmed Mr. Morley and Lord Minto by giving out the slight disorder in the Punjab to be a serious outbreak of rebellion, put them under deep obligation by easily suppressing the so-called rebellion, and established his reputation in the country."

In conclusion the editor remarks that although he has so skilfully befooled his ignorant superiors, yet his name will be regarded with hatred by all who know the real state of affairs.

ARYA MITRA, 24th January, 1908.

Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson.

103. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 24th January, congratulates the Punjabis on the retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson, at the same time wishing a speedy recovery to him.

SWARAJYA, 18th January, 1908.

Handcuffing of journalists.

104. While strongly denouncing some Indians for expressing gratitude to Mr. Morley for exempting political prisoners from the use of handcuffs, the Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 18th January, remarks :—

"Political offences are no offences at all and therefore in our opinion it will be nothing short of oppression, even if Mr. Morley were to order to lead the political offenders in a procession to jail and then treat them with all the consideration of a guest. No just man will ever hold them responsible to any law based on justice, without an entire disregard of the principle of justice and without stifling his own conscience, and the law which allows him to do so is not worth the sacred name of law."

RAHBAR, 21st January, 1908.

Handcuffing of journalists.

105. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st January, referring to the abolition of the custom of handcuffing journalists, remarks that Mr. Morley is trying to win popularity by inaugurating little reforms, but he should remember that unless he reforms the greater evils, people of India will remain discontented.

OUDH AKHBAR, 22nd January, 1908.

Handcuffing of journalists.

106. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 22nd January, notes with satisfaction the abolition of the custom of handcuffing journalists. The editor is of opinion that they should never be sentenced to rigorous imprisonment, and, if a policy of conciliation is adopted, such occasions will never arise.

MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

Women clerks in the Telegraph Department.

107. While pointing out that almost all the well-paid offices had already been monopolised by Europeans, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 15th January, expresses regret at the order of the Government sanctioning the employment of women in the Telegraph Department.

The editor also points out that the conditions laid down for the employés clearly show that the service has been reserved for European women only, as besides the want of education among the Indian women, they are not also prepared to remain unmarried to the age of thirty. It is a blessed characteristic of their European sisters only. In conclusion he remarks that by this policy it is evident that even the low-paid offices will, in course of time be monopolised by Europeans, and the only consolation for the Indians will then be that they will be entirely freed from the infamy and bondage of service.

Meeting of the local Telegraph employees, Allahabad.

108. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 24th January, publishes as follows:—"A well-attended and representative meeting was held at Allahabad on Sunday, the 19th instant, by the local Telegraph employés, to consider, among other points, the advisability of joining the new Union, called the "Telegraph Subordinate's Emergency Relief Fund," which has for its object the promotion of the Union and the protection of the interests of the staff. HINDOSTHAN, 24th January, 1908.

It was unanimously resolved, by all present to join the Subordinates' Relief Fund, and further to enlist all absentees in the same cause. All present also agreed to become whole or part subscribers to the Recorder, the organ of the subordinate establishment. The meeting was unanimously of opinion that the new system of watches, to be introduced on the recommendation of Mr. Newlands, the Traffic Expert, would be quite unsuitable for the department generally, and for the Allahabad office in particular, and that a general protest should be lodged by the staff against its introduction.

The best thanks of the meeting were conveyed to the General Secretary for the able way in which he represented the cause of the subordinates before the Director of Traffic in the recent deputation at Rangoon, and more particularly for his studious avoidance of personalities, as far as possible."

"Shall we remain slaves for ever?"

109. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for December (received on the 21st January) contains an article under the marginally noted heading. The writer notes that all the customs and institutions of Hindus breathe the spirit of servitude, and remarks that unless they give up their love of servitude it is impossible that they should attain swaraj, the end of all national liberty, and be counted among the free nations. The Hindu youths express their intention to bring about the unification of all Indians into one nation, but they do not see on what a weak foundation they want to erect this superstructure. They do not see how rotten internally the Indians are and how the poison of slavery has permeated their whole system. They should bear in mind that they cannot develop strong political power unless their society is reformed, a task which is feasible only when men wedded to old ideas and customs by their innate conservatism no longer exist, and when education permeates through all the ranks of society. The writer is of opinion that patriotism cannot be expected to be awakened in the hearts of Indians who are taught servitude as a means of obtaining spiritual salvation, and who far from leading celibate lives in youth are burdened with marriage in their very infancy, and remarks that it is this deplorable state of society which makes him apprehend that Indians may remain slaves for ever. HINDI PRADIP, December, 1907.

Quarrel between Hindu and Muhammadan labourers in Calcutta.

110. Referring to the serious quarrel of the Muhammadans against the Hindus working in some English factory near Calcutta, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 15th January attributes it to the partiality and indulgence of the Government towards the Muhammadans, and remarks:—"Since the indulgence of the Bengal Government has spoilt the Muhammadans, the Hindus find it impossible to live in Bengal and are fast forgetting the oppressive time of Aurangzeb and Shaista Khan." MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

Official favour towards Muhammadans at Panipat.

111. Referring to the prejudiced and partial conduct of the Deputy Commissioner of Panipat in renewing the license of a saltpetre factory to a Muhammadan and withholding the same from a Hindu on the ground that the factory of the latter was too near to the town and should be removed to some distance, the Musafir (Agra), of the 15th January, remarks:— MUSAFIR, 15th January, 1908.

"Will the Muhammadan factory have a different and more salubrious effect on the town? Alas! The officials have put an offensive blot on British justice by creating such racial distinctions in India."

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 16th January, 1908.

112. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th January, referring to Count Okuma's speech, remarks that the people of India, are not in any way biased in favour of Japan. They know full well, how she has treated Korea and will boycott her manufactures just as those of Europe.

The attitude of Indians towards Indian Japan.

HINDOSTHAN, 18th January, 1908.

113. The editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 18th January reproduces an article from the Advocate of India in which the latter regrets the poor prospects of the Anglo-Indian and Eurasian youths in India, owing to the difficulty in obtaining suitable employment in Government service, due to Indian competition and the gradual closure of avenues which were open to them until a few years ago.

Anglo-Indians and Eurasians in Indian public service.

The writer suggests that the three associations which professed to represent domiciled interests should take this question up, and urges them to put forward at least one champion who should voice the modest desires of the community.

MASHRIQ, 21st January, 1908.

114. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 21st January, notes with satisfaction Sir J. Hewett's proposal of holding darbars at different centres in the Province at regular intervals, and thinks that these darbars will be very useful, inasmuch as they will serve as conferences between the Government officers and the people, and their usefulness can be still more enhanced if educated men are also invited to attend.

Darbars.

MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

115. Referring to Mr. Nevinson's remarks on the lamentable condition and absolute poverty of India, as published in the Manchestor Guardian, the Musafir (Agra) of the 23rd January, says that it ought to be a matter of shame to such Europeans as dream that India is still rich and prosperous.

Mr. Nevinson's remarks on Indian affairs.

ARYA MITRA, 24th January, 1908.

116. Referring to the suggestion of a correspondent of the Times regarding the control of Indian students in England so as to save them from falling into bad society, the Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 24th January, remarks that the real object of the correspondent in making such a proposal is only to restrict the liberty which the Indian students at present enjoy in England, and which produces a very healthy effect upon their minds.

Indian students in England.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

ADVOCATE, 19th January, 1908.

117. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th January, publishes in extenso a list of the grievances of the Indian members of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway These grievances, he remarks, have often been brought to the notice of the higher officers of the Government, but they have not yet been removed.

Indian employees on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

Encouraged by the treatment given by the higher railway officials to the guards, and finding that the grievances of the latter are likely to be removed by combined representation, several members of the Indian Staff sent in printed memorials to the Manager through the District Traffic Superintendent, praying him to receive a deputation that would represent to him their grievances. The Indian Staff claimed the same considerate treatment which had been shown to the European and Eurasian guards.

But this has been refused. The District Traffic Superintendent returned the application with the remark "that such letters cannot be forwarded. If any of the staff have grievances they must write them out."

The story of the grievances of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway employés is long, and the best way to examine their seriousness is by discussion with the suffering people. While on the one hand the railway officials are ready to extend a helping hand to the guards, to receive deputations from them, on the other hand they cannot even encourage combination among the Indian employés for the purpose of making respectful representation.

He characterises the injustice of the situation as too patent to deceive anybody and enumerates the following as the points on which the Indian Staff wish to approach the higher authorities :—

(1) Pay and promotion.
(2) Hours of duty.
(3) Inadequate number of the menial staff.
(4) Punishment.
(5) The abolition of police prosecution until after a thorough departmental enquiry has been made.
(6) Transfers.
(7) Travelling and famine allowances.
(8) Uniform clothing.
(9) Loan in case of sickness, and medical treatment.

Grievances of the native employees of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

118. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 22nd January, referring to the memorial presented by the native employés of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to the railway authorities, remarks that it is the duty of the Government to compel them to remove the grievances of their native employés just as they have done with those of the European guards and drivers.

HINDUSTANI, 22nd January, 1908.

Grievances of Indian staff on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

119. A correspondent, on behalf of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Indian Station Staff, writes to the editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), in its issue of the 23rd January, as follows :—

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 23rd January, 1908.

"The Manager has not given a reply to the petition submitted by the Indian Station Staff. There appears no reason why their grievances should not be amicably settled, as was done in the case of the drivers and guards. The public will suffer if the staff adopt other means to gain their demands. I hope you will bring this matter, through the medium of your paper, to the attention of the Manager who, I trust, will redress the grievances of the Indian Station Staff, the only men now on this line who are left dissatisfied."

Railway accidents.

120. Referring to the serious railway accident at Ludhiana the Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad-Hardoi,) in its combined issue of the 6th and 13th January (received on the 21st January), asks the Government to take prompt and suitable measures to prevent such accidents, which of late have unfortunately become of common occurrence.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 6th and 13th January, 1908.

Railway accidents.

121. The Kayasth Hitkari (Agra), of the 16th January, referring to the increase in the number of railway accidents, suggests the desirability of the construction of double tracks on all lines.

KAYASTH HITKARI, 16th January, 1908.

Alleged fracas on the A. B. Railway.

122. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 19th January, has the following :—"Shahatali station on the A. B. Railway was, we hear, the scene of a great uproar on the 15th instant. It happened that when the passenger train reached the station at about 4 P.M. a good many passengers alighted from the train and the station became a vast ocean of human heads owing to the rush of the passengers. Immediately a noisy quarrel arose and there was a tumult. A quarrel arose between the railway ticket checker and some of the passengers. It is reported that the ticket checker suspected that some were travelling in the train without ticket. The quarrel soon assumed a gigantic proportion and high words began to pass between the irritated parties who from words came to blows. The ticket checker, we hear, administered the first lathi blow upon the head of passenger, who returned the same without delay by giving him a sound beating. Seeing this dreadful situation an unloaded gun was fired from the train towards the crowd probably by the T. I. of the railway to disperse them. In the meantime the train steamed away for Chandpur carrying two men from the crowd, of whom one is a boy, under arrest as the alleged assailants of the ticket checker."

CITIZEN, 19th January, 1908.

Railways.

123. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 23rd January, referring to the large dividends that the railway companies are paying to their shareholders, remarks that it is high time that they should make some substantial improvement in the method of the work, and makes the following suggestions which he hopes the Railway Board will note :—

HIND, 23rd January, 1908.

(1) The strength of the staff has been increased but nothing has been done to improve their prospects. The result is that they have become corrupt.

The shortage of staff is directly responsible for the frequency of accidents on railways.

(2) Fares and goods and luggage rates should be reduced, and attention should be paid to the comfort of third class passengers.

(3) To make arrangement for special trains for Hindu pilgrims.

(4) Ticket-collectors and guards should be mostly Indians.

VII.—Post Office.

HINDUSTANI, 22nd January, 1908.

Proposed extension of the Value Payable System to England.

124. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 22nd January, referring to the protests of the Anglo-Indian trading community against the extension of the Value Payable System, remarks that they are actuated by self-interest and are simply afraid of losing local patronage. The editor is of opinion that the Government should not pay any attention to their protests, but should simply have in view public good.

ADVOCATE, 23rd January, 1908.

Clerical appointments in Postmaster General's Office.

125. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd January, complains that outsiders have been given appointments in Postmaster General's Office, of Rs. 30 and Rs. 40 a month, while the claims of junior clerks have been passed over, and remarks that nobody can object to the bringing in of outsiders in a large office like the Postmaster General's, but consideration ought to be shown to the claims of men who have been long in service, or who have been working as unpaid apprentices in expectation of some day securing an appointment.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th January, 1908.

Wakfs and Maulvi Shibli Nomani.

126. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th January, reproduces Maulvi Shibli Nomani's letter to the press on the subject of wakfs in favour of one's own children.

AGRA AKHBAR, 21st January, 1908.

Wakfs and Maulvi Shibli Nomani.

127. The Agra Akhbar of the 21st January, publishes Shams-ul-Ulama Shibli Nomani's letter to the Press on the subject of wakfs and emphatically endorses it.

ZAMANA, December, 1907.

The Arya Samaj and politics.

128. The Zamana (Cawnpore) for December, (received on the 24th January), contains an article headed 'Arya Samaj and politics,' in which the writer defends the Arya Samaj from the charge of disloyalty, on the ground that the Samaj should not be held responsible for the actions of its individual members, however prominent they may be, and that, had it been a political body, it would have sought to conciliate other communities instead of offending them by making attacks on their religions.

The writer maintains that the chief aim of the Arya Samaj is to regenerate the Hindus, to purify their moral and religious life and to make them self-reliant. Its spirit is no doubt aggressive, but in no way inimical to the Government.

AL-ISLAM, 21st December, 1907.

The Ajmer Dargah.

129. Al-Islam (Aligarh), of the 21st December, (received on the 21st January), notes with deep regret the appointment of a Hindu as the Manager of the dargah (shrine) of the well-known Moslem Saint Khwaja Sahib of Ajmer.

The editor expresses the opinion that this is a great insult to the Musalmans, and that if a Musalman had been appointed manager of a Hindu temple, there would have arisen among the Hindus a tremendous agitation against the Government.

MUSAFIR, 23rd January, 1908.

The Musafir versus the Shahna-i-Hind.

130. The editor of the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd January, devotes eight columns to an article entitled "The Actor of Meerut" in which he enters into a religious controversy with the editor of the Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut). The whole controversy is full of vituperative repartee and sarcasm.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 23rd January, 1908.

Bakr-Id* in Allahabad.

131. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 23rd January, comments adversely on the conduct of the Allahabad Police in not taking sufficient precaution beforehand for preventing a breach of the peace during the Bakr-Id. A cow was sacrificed this year at a place where it had never been allowed before, and in consequence an angry demonstration of a number of Hindus took place, and the tiles of the houses of the offending Muhammadans were broken.

132. Referring to the Magh Mela, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) of the 23rd January, notes with satisfaction the arrangement made this year by the authorities for the accommodation of pilgrims, and sanitation. He regrets the absence this year of the many shops in which articles of indigenous manufacture and curiosities were offered for sale, and suggests that both the public and the managing committee should do something to induce vendors to come to the Mela.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 23rd January, 1908.

The Magh Mela.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

133. Referring to the house question in Allahabad the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) remarks in the issue of the 19th January, that he is gratified to note that his articles on the subject have drawn the attention of the Government and of the public to this most pressing need of Allahabad. If there is any nazul land available for the purposes of building houses, the Government can at once settle the matter notifying the fact. But if there be none the Government should acquire land and let it to the public at reasonable rates.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th January, 1908.

House question in Allahabad.

ALLAHABAD :
The 27th January, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 5 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 1st February, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign :
	Nil.
	(b)—Home :
1.	Indians in the Transvaal	111
2	Indians in the Transvaal	111
3.	Mr. W. Churchill and the Transvaal Indians	111
4.	Indians in the Transvaal	111
5.	Indians in the Transvaal	112
6.	Indians in the Transvaal	112
7.	Indians in the Transvaal	112
8.	Indians in the Transvaal	112
9.	Indians in the Transvaal	112
10.	Muhammadans in the Transvaal ...	112
11.	Indians in the Transvaal	113
12.	Indians in the Transvaal	113
13.	Indians in the Transvaal	113
14.	Indians in the Transvaal	114
15.	Indians in British colonies	114
16.	Indians in the Transvaal and the colonies	114
17.	Colonial Civil Service	114
18.	The Surat Congress	114
19.	The Surat Congress	115
20.	Dr. Ghose's speech	115
21.	The National Congress	115
22.	The Congress split	115
23.	The future of the Congress	116
24.	Parties in the Congress	116
25.	Reform in India : Decentralization ...	116
26.	The Decentralization Commission ...	116
27.	Decentralization and Deputy Collectors ...	117
28.	The goal of Patriotism : an article by Lajpat Rai	117
29.	Lala Lajpat Rai in Cawnpore ...	118
30.	Lala Lajpat Rai in Calcutta ...	118
31.	Intended visit of Lala Lajpat Rai to Allahabad	118
32.	The expansion of Councils	118
33.	The expansion of Councils	118
34.	Bengal Provincial Conference at Pubna ...	119
35.	The genesis of Indian loyalty ...	119
36.	The Government and the educated Indians	119
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
	Nil.
	III.—NATIVE STATES.
	Nil.
	IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
	(a) Judicial and Revenue :
37.	Judicial Redistribution	119
38.	The third conviction of the Yugantar ...	120
39.	Comments on the police in judgments ...	120
40.	Comments on the police in judgment ...	120
41.	Comments on the police in judgements ...	120
42.	Period of limitation for mortgages ...	120
43.	The Rawalpindi case	120
44.	Conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain ...	120
	(b)—Police :
45.	Police officers and rewards	121

		Page.
46.	Thefts and accidents in Moradabad ...	121
47.	Zamindars and the police	121
48.	Mymensingh disturbances	121

(c)—Finance and Taxation :

Nil.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :

49.	Mr. Kanno Mul, Octroi Superintendent, Agra	121
50.	Inconvenience to the travelling public through octori rules at Benares ...	121
51.	Suggestion to the District Boards ...	122
52.	Benares municipality	122
53.	Bengal Municipal and District Boards' report	122

(e)—Education :

54.	Female education	122
55.	Female education	122
56.	The Indian Educational service ...	122
57.	Government High School, Aligarh ...	123
58.	National Colleges	123
59.	The proposed Rajput College at Agra ...	123
60.	Education	123
61.	Students and politics	123

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :

62.	Famine and the export of grain ...	123
63.	The famine	124
64.	Forests	124
65.	His Honour's speech at the inauguration of the famine fund in Lucknow ...	124
66.	His Honour's speech at the inauguration of the famine fund in Lucknow ...	125

(g)—General :

67.	Handcuffing of political offenders ...	125
68.	Handcuffing of journalists... ...	125
69.	India and Ireland...	125
70.	India and Ireland...	125
71.	Government and editors	125
72.	Sir George Clarke and Bombay editors ...	125
73.	Liberty of the Press	126
74.	Lord Minto's Government	126
75.	Fresh orders of the Bengal Government...	126
76.	Evil of intoxicants	126
77.	Sir D. Ibbetson	126
78.	Sir Louis Dane's appointment ...	126
79.	Attempted murder of B. C. Allen ...	126
80.	Weaving industry in Bengal... ...	127
81	Injustice to Pandit Brij Lal ...	127
82.	Proposed memorial to Mr. Butler ...	127
83.	Rumoured leave of Sir Lancelot Hare ...	127
84.	Dacca outrages	127
85.	Small-pox in the United Provinces ...	127

V.—LEGISLATION.

86.	Regulation III of 1818	128
87.	Proposed admendment in the Indian Press Act	128

VI.—RAILWAY.

Nil.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

88.	Revenue money-orders	128
89.	Value-payable parcel system between England and India	128
90.	Complaint against Postal department ...	129

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

91.	The Parasnath Hill	129
92.	Rajput Suddhi	129
93.	The Magh Mela and volunteers ...	129
94.	Pardah parties	129

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Nil.

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

Nil.

(b).—Home.

Indians in the Transvaal.

1. Referring to the sufferings of the Indians in the Transvaal owing to the enforcement of the obnoxious Registration Act, the Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 23rd January, expresses a hope that the Imperial Government will take early steps to protect the Indians from the oppressions to which they are subjected by the Transvaal Government.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 23rd January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

2. Referring to the Indian situation in the Transvaal, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 24th January, urges that if the Imperial Government and the Government of India cannot take any steps to protect British Indians in the Transvaal owing to its being a self-governing colony, they should at least interdict the entry of South Afrikanders and their goods into India, and that the Indians themselves should cease to have any dealings with the Transvaal and with other colonies where their countrymen are insulted and humiliated.

ABHYUDAYA, 24th January, 1908.

Mr. W. Churchill and the Transvaal Indians.

3. Referring to the advice of Mr. W. Churchill regarding the settlement of the Transvaal Indians in East Africa where their rights would be carefully protected, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 24th January, declares that this arrangement will not clear the situation in the Transvaal, inasmuch as the Transvaal Indians are fighting not for a place to live in but to preserve their self-respect. They are claiming the rights accorded to them by Queen Victoria's Proclamation which include equal treatment with other subjects of the British Empire. The editor says that Mr. Churchill's advice amounts to saying that if the English allow the Indians to live in their midst, the latter should regard it as a favour, and that they have no right to claim equal treatment with the former. He remarks that such advice only adds insult to injury and undermines the faith of the Indians in British justice and their power to protect their rights and privileges.

ABHYUDAYA, 24th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

4. While giving a pathetic description of the sufferings of Indians in general, and of the Indians in the Transvaal in particular, the Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 25th January remarks as follows :—" Kind officials ! this is the woeful tale of the houseless Indians ! Owing to the vicissitudes of time and the envy and pride of your brethren these poor men do not find a corner in your vast kingdom to hide themselves in, nor bread to satisfy their hunger. These words of the Indians must surely be displeasing to you ; but they have already sacrificed all that they had and have now nothing left that they should fear their enemies. Place yourself for a moment in our position and place us into yours, then think of your treatment of us and say honestly if you can expect Indians to be faithful and devoted to you.

SWARAJYA, 25th January, 1908.

Only a few years ago these faithful Indians shed their blood like water to make you masters of the country, whence they are being now disgracefully kicked out by your brethren. Not long ago some of your greatest statesmen advised the declaration of war against the Boers simply because they ill-treated Indians. What better treatment is accorded to them now, and what good have these poor men derived from the war, and from making the Boer subject to the British Crown.

On the other hand the more the Indians become submissive and loyal, the more they are ill-treated. You look with disfavour on the Nationalists simply because they have the insolence to tell you of your weakness and shortcomings, and show the public the dark side of your government. They warn the public not to rely too much on the Government, and, believing in their own unassisted power, sacrifice their lives, property and all for the good of the country and of their brethren.

Now think a little of the desperate state of affairs when fifty thousand Transvaal Indians will, driven by the oppressive treatment of your despotic and cruel brethren, come back to their homes in India. Be sure that you will never be able to tempt and persuade these victims of oppression to hang round your tables like your Honorables and K.C.S.I.'s. They are stricken with calamity and will not fear the chains. They are already inured to tyranny and will never be afraid of going to jail. They have lived in an independent country and must have naturally become more independent and fearless than the Extremists of India, who are as it were shut up in a cage.

Now think for a moment if the fire of revenge will not naturally be kindled in their breasts when they will so disgracefully be driven back to their homes from your colonies ?

Can you ever hope to live easy while they are burning with the fire of revenge within their breasts and seeking to take revenge upon you. We are not in a position to answer this question. You can better judge for yourself. In view of these facts will it not be better for you, if not for the sake of Indians at least for the sake of your own good and comfort, to restrain your Transvaal brethren from such oppressive and disgraceful actions, and if they neglect your advice, to ask the English Government to make them desist from such shameful conduct in order to save you from difficulties ? It is the only means in your power by which you can secure the confidence of disaffected Indians and make them submissive and loyal to you.

There is an old saying to the effect that you need not resort to harshness if you can do a thing with kindness.

It is the easiest way to drive all seditious feelings from the hearts of Indians and make them eternally grateful to you. . . . . It is better therefore that you take a lesson from the lives of Akhbar and Aurangzeb and forego your outrageous conduct, and try to win over Indians with love and kindness so that they may not be compelled to answer your Russian measures with a similar spirit and with insolence."

CITIZEN, 26th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

5. Referring to the arrest of British Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad) writes in the issue of the 26th January as follows:—"The last act of the painful drama of the humiliation of our countrymen is now being enacted with a shamelessness so barefaced and injustice so gross that it would fill any man with a spark of self-respect in him with indignation."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

6. Referring to the position of British Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 26th January, that if the struggle be maintained in the present spirit and with unabated firmness it is difficult to say who will tire first, and that unless a wise intervention puts an end to a conflict in which all the honours belonged to the persecuted, it is likely to continue for long.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

7. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th January, referring to the disabilities of the Transvaal Indians, remarks that as passive resistance has proved useless, they should pay the Boers in their own coin, by adopting force.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

8. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 28th January, while expressing its regret at the disgraceful treatment of the Indians in the Transvaal, agrees with the opinion of the Sultan-ul Akhbar (Bombay), that all classes of Indian society should unite themselves to respectfully approach the Government and ask it to consider the troubles of their brethren in the Transvaal.

RAHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

9. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th January, referring to the persecutions of the Indians in the Transvaal, remarks that the dictates of conscience should compel the Imperial Government to stand by the Indians for they have no arms to protect themselves and because it is owing to sterling services that the British Empire has reached its present position.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 28th January, 1908.

Muhammadans in the Transvaal.

10. Referring to the meeting recently convened in Aligarh to express sympathy with the oppressed Muhammadans in the Transvaal, the Zul-Qarnain (Budaun) of the 28th January deplores their pitiable condition, and suggests the desirability of all the Muhammadans of India holding similar meetings throughout the country, and asking the Government to look into the lamentable condition of their unfortunate brethren.

11. Referring to the disgraceful treatment accorded to Indians in the Transvaal, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 20th January declares that such oppression will never cease unless the Indians similarly retaliate as iron can be best beaten with iron.

HIND, 20th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

12. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), refers in his issue of the 30th January to the letter of a Bengali gentleman published in the Bengalee in which the writer enumerates the disabilities he would have to undergo if he were living in South Africa, and asks whether any one will venture to say that the Registration Act is not humiliating after hearing this.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 30th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

In another column he remarks that the resolution passed at the Madras meeting to boycott all foreign and British goods best portrays how the treatment of Indians and Asiatics is affecting India, and that no other protest is left to the country.

He expresses the opinion that, if the Imperial Government will not step in to protect British Indian subjects, it will be the duty of all Indians to cease to trade with England, and that Lord Elgin could very easily have vetoed or modified the Registration Act, but he was unwilling to do so.

He noted that the Asiatic question involves China as well as India, and in both countries a violent anti-European feeling is likely to arise.

13. Referring to the position of the Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), writes in the issue of the 30th January, that there was not the slightest doubt that the news of the indignities which are being heaped upon their countrymen in the Transvaal will excite an outburst of sympathy in this country, and unless the Imperial Government soon intervenes, compelling the Transvaal to treat British subjects with justice, it may be called on to face a much more serious position. The matter is one which can be dallied with no longer, and probably when Parliament meets the question of the treatment now being meted out to British Indians in the Transvaal by the Government of that Colony will be the first to be discussed. Until such time it would be wise for the people of India to be patient, but unless the situation is then relieved, the consequence as regards British administration, not only in this country, but in every country where there are British Asiatic citizens may be disastrous. It is a source of wonderment that the British Government was unable to see through the deception that it does not understand that this cry of a White South Africa, is in reality but a cry of a Dutch South Africa. The Dutch in the Transvaal resent the presence there of the British Indian just as they resent the appearance of the Britisher, and probably they resent the presence of Indians the more because they are Britishers than on any other account. It is quite true, however that there is fierce opposition also to the presence of British Indians in the Transvaal on the part of the Jews and Levantine Greeks, and such undesirables who have settled there, and who find the honest British Indian trader a great hindrance to them in their nefarious trading operations, and it is not to be denied that the great issue raised is that of the general relationship between the white and coloured races. It is in this aspect that the present in the Transvaal is of such vital interest from an Imperial point of view. All these years we have been telling Indians that they are citizens of the great British Empire, that all the benefits which accrue to a man who is a British citizen are theirs. Confident in these assurances, some of the more daring and resourceful have crossed the kala pani and founded now homes and contracted new ties in British dominions over the sea, and now, when they are beginning to look around to reap the rewards of years of patient industry, they are confronted with legislation of a most unbearable character, and informed that unless they submit to it, they must leave the land and sacrifice all they have striven and toiled for. What can be the result, but that, unless this great wrong is speedily righted, every Indian will accuse the British Government of having played the traitor, of having told him one thing and having meant another. If an Indian is a British subject he must be treated as such in whatever part of the Empire he visits, and in foreign countries also he must be accorded the full rights of British citizenship. There is no half way house, he cannot be a British citizen here and merely an Asiatic there, just as it pleases the whims and fancies of Colonial legislators, and the sooner it is settled once for all whether it is to be affirmed, decisively, that he is to be treated as a British citizen, the better.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 30th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

ADVOCATE, 30th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

14. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of 30th January, that reports of meetings held all over the country to condemn the Transvaal measures and to express sympathy with the Indians there, continue to come in.

He expresses regret that at the Bombay meeting there was some discussion when a resolution was passed to boycott British goods among colonial goods.

ABHYUDAYA, 24th January, 1908.

Indians in British Colonies.

15. Referring to the ill-treatment of Indians in the Transvaal and to the recent order of the Canadian Government regarding the prohibition of Indian immigration to Canada, unless the intending immigrants can defray the charges of their direct passage from India, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 24th January, remarks that so long as Indians do not enhance their power and self-respect in their own country they will not be respected in foreign countries.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th January, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal and the Colonies.

16. Discussing the prospects of self-government in India the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 26th January, writes as follows :—" The goal is either absolute self-government, or self-government like that of Australia, Canada and South Africa, but certainly not like that of the Crown Colony of Ceylon. The two goals are different, and the second does not necessarily lead to the first. Absolute self-government would of course simplify matters considerably, for it would leave us free as the birds of the air, with power over our own affairs and the world. The only doubt is whether such a goal can be constitutionally, or if another word is preferred, lawfully attained, for the business of law-making is in the hands of men who are likely to claim a hearing before clearing out of the country, and the claim may be urged with the compelling eloquence of the Maxim gun and the Magazine rifle. It is not by persuasion but by compulsion that the British rule in India can be brought to an end, and the entire resources of passive resistance do not include any resort to violence. Putting that vision on one side, self-government within the Empire is the next goal, though we are not likely to be helped to its attainment by the present Government. Let us, however, assume that the time will come when we shall be permitted to make arrangements for our own country and our own people, just as General Botha's government manages affairs in the Transvaal. How should we deal with the question of undesirable outsiders? The Transvaal, by process of chemical transmutation in which gunpowder was the most powerful solvent, has been converted into a white man's country, though originally intended for the Zulu. But India never will be a white man's country. The white man does fairly well for twenty or thirty years, but for permanent settlement India is not good for him. He deteriorates most unaccountably and his descendants are indistinguishable from the poor whites, or the dirty whites. It has been established that the white man can rule India, but he cannot colonise it. If there is self-government there must also be the right to legislate and pass measures like the Registration Act of the Transvaal, the reserving of local habitations and pathways for the people of the country as well as superior railway accommodation. Is not that a very fascinating prospect and a powerful incentive to eloquence? Will only Boers or all Europeans be required to register themselves by putting their thumb impressions on the register? Will they be held disqualified to open shops in fashionable quarters, or stalls in markets, and will they be compelled to travel third class on railways? It would be worth while for the more advanced people in this country to frame draft bills for the control of the white population in view of the self-government that is bound to come. It would be at any rate a more innocent occupation than abusing one another.

RAHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

Colonial Civil Service.

17. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th January, complains that Pandit Brij Lal Nehru, who passed the Colonial Civil Service examination, has not been as yet posted to any colony.

URDU-I-MUALLA, December 1907.

The Surat Congress.

18. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh) for December (received on 31st January), gives in detail the Extremist version of the Congress fiasco, holding the Moderates entirely responsible for the split and extenuates Mr. Tilak from all blame.

19. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 20th January, reproduces the Extremist version of the Congress fiasco at Surat, and attempts to make out that the Moderates were the wreckers of the Congress, inasmuch as for fear of losing official favour they wanted to omit the Swadeshi, boycott, national education and swaraj resolutions which were adopted at the Calcutta Congress and which the Extremists insisted upon retaining in the Congress programme this year too. The editor further remarks that the conduct of the Moderates just before and during the abortive sittings of the Congress showed that they had already determined upon severing their connection from the Extremists, and when they were prevented by the good intentions of the latter, they wrecked the Congress itself.

The Surat Congress.

MOHINI, 20th January, 1908.

20. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th January, referring to the severe strictures passed by Dr. Ghose in his presidential speech on the Musalmans, remarks that this betrays the real feelings of the Hindus towards them, and that no self-respecting Musalman should in future attend the Congress.

Dr. Ghose's speech.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th January, 1908.

21. Referring to the National Congress, the editor of the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), in the issue of the 24th January, says that it is some consolation to find that those who wrecked the last session of the Congress are now deploring the sad incident and are looking about to set things right. But it is to be regretted that they are still persisting in their obstinacy and endeavouring to fasten their guilt upon others who are innocent. He remarks that if there is any anxiety to counteract or at least to mitigate the effects of the Surat Congress fiasco upon the growing national unity, the parties should cease to indulge in personal vilification. The writings of Mr. Gokhale and Mr. Tilak make it quite clear which party has been responsible for the break up of the Congress, and it is no use adding to the bitter strife by charges and countercharges. The offending party should feel remorse for what it has done in the past, and should pledge that it will not prefer party interests to the National cause in future, if the Congress is to be revived and is to work harmoniously as heretofore.

The National Congress.

ABHYUDAYA, 24th January, 1908.

22. Referring to the National Congress, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 26th January, remarks that no one believed for a moment that because the Congress has failed to meet for one session it therefore is dead, or that political activity in India is defunct.

The Congress split.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th January, 1908.

The only question that arises is whether the antagonism that has become so pronounced is likely to help the development of the common cause or retard it.

He writes that it is a mistake to say that there are only two parties, Moderates and Extremists, and that the Extremists can no more encompass the salvation of the nation than the Moderates can, for either the nation must stand together or it must be ready to be driven in a body by a few impetuous and impassioned spirits. He remarks that it is impossible to leave the Muhammadans out of account when the national well-being is in question, and that they do not as a body stand either with the Moderates or the Extremists, and will be neither led nor driven, but that as they will not relinquish their present position they may well be left alone.

The other two parties had parted after a physical struggle, behind which was a concentrated force of bitterness and personal resentment which time was not likely to heal.

The recent pronouncement of Sir Bhal Chandra Krishna, that the Moderates will on no account associate with the Extremists, may be taken as the final declaration of the Bombay Moderates, and in this the United Provinces, the Punjab, and the larger portion of Madras will acquiesce.

He remarks that the National Congress was weak before because of the non-allegiance of the Muhammadans as a community, but that even if it be weaker now because of the defection of the Extremists, it is still the organisation of the Moderate partywhether it be called Convention or Congress.

The Extremists, if they merely affirm the resolutions of the older body, will be looked upon as a part of it, but if they go ahead and declare for absolute swaraj, though it is certain that they never will, the authorities will pounce down on them with the greatest ease, for there is nothing easier than to attack and capture a house divided against itself.

OUDH AKHBAR, 27th January, 1908.

23. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 27th January, after reviewing the Surat Congress, makes the following proposals for its better working :—

The future of the Congress.

(1) To make colonial self-government its ideal.
(2) To co-operate with the Government in reforming the present methods of administration, and in removing the differences of opinion between the different sections of the people.
(3) To restrict the number of delegates attending the Congress, and to take guarantees from them that they would obey the orders of the President implicitly and will behave decently.

OUDH AKHBAR, 29th January, 1908.

24. While describing the aims of the Moderate and Extremist parties, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 29th January, remarks that the recent dissension between the parties in the Surat Congress is due to the fact that either party has misunderstood the aims and objects of the other. The editor further remarks that if this difference between the parties be not amicably squared it will greatly weaken the cause of the Congress as a whole.

Parties in the Congress.

ADVOCATE, 26th January, 1908.

25. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), comments in the issue of the 26th January, on Sir Charles Dilkes' views on the question of the reform in Indian administration.

Reform in India : Decentralization.

With regard to the position of and interference with ruling Princes, he expresses agreement with Sir Charles Dilkes that all restrictions upon them should be relaxed, and remarks that since Lord Curzon took up the reins of Government Indian ruling Princes had become mere figure-heads in their own territories, and that even their anxiety to take advantage of the experience gained by Indians in civil administration in British India was not looked upon with favour, as it was not long ago that a circular was issued that the permission of the Government of India was to be obtained for the employment of Indian Civilians after they had retired.

He writes that coming as it did after Mr. R. C. Dutt's appointment as Revenue Minister of Baroda, Indians read in it a fresh attempt to deny Indian Princes any opportunity to profit by the experience of enlightened people gained in British India, and that it is all the more regrettable when it is remembered that the Supreme Government, no less the Provincial, does not afford facilities to Indians to serve in posts of power and responsibility for which they are duly qualified, except on the High Court Bench.

Referring to the proposal to give more local freedom in large parts of India, he remarks that it was neither advisable much less possible, to reduce the whole of the vast territories directly under British control to one dead level.

He expressed the opinion that in Native States, where the rulers and the ruled belong to the people, hereditary or feudal authority might not be resented, but that it was out of place in British India, where the efficiency of administration in municipal and rural affairs is best secured by the general introduction of the local representative system.

Decentralization in the government of the country should, he states, proceed on these lines, and on no account end with investing local governments with more power without the compensating control of the popular voice with a view to prevent abuses of new powers.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 28th January, 1908.

26. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th January, suggests the desirability of the Decentralizatian Commission investing Deputy Collectors with more powers in administrative work, because so far they have been treated as working machines and have been allowed little or no power in administrative matters independent of the sanction of District Magistrates.

The Decentralization Commission.

27. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th January, publishes the translation of the letter written to the Pioneer of the 23rd January by a member of the Provincial Civil Service, entitled "Decentralization and Deputy Collectors." ZUL-QARNAIN, 28th January, 1908.

Decentralization and Deputy Collectors.

28. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for January, (received on the 31st January) contains an article written by Lala Lajpat Rai entitled the "Goal of Patriotism," of which the following is a literal translation :— ZAMANA, January, 1908.

The goal of Patriotism : an article by Lajpat Rai.

"From the transcendental beauty which Joseph had, I came to know that it was love which caused Zulaikha (Pharaoh's wife), to throw off the veil of chastity."

For the last two years the treatment that has been meted out to the people of India has produced a feeling of deep resentment and irritation in our countrymen. But if we take time to think over what the Government has done, we would see that it is not extraordinary. We are not prepared to admit that oppression (of the weak) and dishonesty are inherent in the nature of man, but still we learn from human experience that, when an individual or community usurps the rights and property of another individual or community, and derives benefit from it for a long time, it becomes very hard for it to surrender those rights when the governed community demands them.

We generally see that after a long period of usurpation a change is produced in the mental and moral condition of the usurping party, by which it regards the demands of the oppressed party as unnatural and frivolous, and it thinks it proper to retain its privileges and protect its sovereign rights by all the means available.

The oppressed party is not only told that its demands are worthless, but the efforts which it makes in claiming rights are met with harshness and cruelty.

When we see such incidents generally in our daily social life, it is not strange to see them in the world of politics. In one of our former writings we pointed out that we do not believe that the English have come to India for the good of its people, or that they govern the country in the interests of its people. The English nation derives immense benefit by holding India in subjugation. 'India is the brightest jewel in the crown of the king of Britain.' Besides fame, prestige and power, the English derive much material benefit from India. When such is the case, it is not unnatural that the body of Englishmen which governs India and holds in its hands the destinies of millions of Indians, should regard with disapproval the efforts which Indians are making for the reduction of their (Englishmen's) privileges and for the restoration of their own rights.

First of all they wanted to impress upon the people of India that their future welfare consists in the continuance of the present method of Government, and they (the English rulers of India) think it their duty to adopt repressive measures towards those who are not hypnotised by this magic spell.

Up to this time the Indians were fondly hoping that whenever they will claim their rights the English will concede them cheerfully. But the experience of the past two years has damped their hopes and has taught them that the English will never concede these rights, simply by being requested to do so. We are glad that we have all learnt that our idea was mistaken. We knew full well beforehand that as soon as the Indians would demand their rights and try to form themselves into a united and strong nation, the British rulers would become at once bitterly opposed to them and would not refrain from adopting repressive measures. And this is what has happened.

We were never astonished at these oppressive measures of the rulers nor are we now. In our heart we were quite ready for it and so we did not suffer much for we were prepared for this oppression. We want to impress it upon our countrymen very sincerely that the path of national service is not easy to traverse :

"Love is not a thing to be trifled with, for, O heart, it is necessary to lose one's life ; as the ball of love cannot be hit with the racquet of selfishness," which means that self-annihilation is necessary for those who wish to devote their lives to the service of their country.

Those who want to save their country should be prepared for hardships and oppression or they should not tread in this path. What the Government of India is doing now is only a repetition of what former Governments have done in the past.

The treatment that is being meted out to us now has been meted out to patriots of other countries also. So it would be wise and prudent for us to act with gravity and discretion, leaving aside bitterness and resentment. We should remember that we would be subjected to the same sufferings which have fallen to the lot of others, for without suffering it is impossible to progress. Complaints are vain and we should refrain from misusing our powers, for in this path there is little room for consideration of complaints or personal loss or gain.

"If you wish that the mysteries of love, (patriotism) should be revealed to you, you should ask it of the candle (? suffering patriots) and not of the breeze (? blatant politicians)."

"In the book of the Physician of Wisdom there is no chapter on love (there is no healing balm for love) O heart; become inured to pain and do not ask for medicines."

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 15th and 23rd January, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai in Cawnpore.

29. The Cawnpore Gazette in its combined issue of the 15th and the 23rd January, notes the arrival of Lala Lajpat Rai at Cawnpore and the enthusiastic welcome accorded to him by the citizens of the place.

HINDOSTHAN, 25th January, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai in Calcutta.

30. Referring to the visit of Lala Lajpat Rai to Calcutta and the reception accorded to him, the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 25th January, remarks that the Lala had done a great deal of useful and self-sacrificing work for which he might very well have been thanked long ago, or honoured in a way that might be considered fit. Still he did not see that there was now any occasion to give him a reception in Calcutta. Lajpat Rai was in Calcutta before, but no reception had then been accorded to him.

Something had happened which might justify an expression of sympathy with him if his deportation was considered unjust, but it was one thing to express sympathy with an innocent sufferer, and a very different thing to give a reception or othewise do honour to a heroic worker.

CITIZEN, 26th January 1908.

Intended visit of Lala Lajpat Rai to Allahabad.

31. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 26th January, notes that Lala Lajpat Rai sent a telegram to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya stating his intention of breaking his journey to Lahore at Allahabad, but that Madan Mohan Malaviya apparently did not make the news public, which the editor characterises as objectionable, and expresses regret that Lajpat Rai was not offered a suitable welcome.

ADVOCATE, 26th January, 1908.

The expansion of councils.

32. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), quotes in the issue of the 26th January the opinions expressed to Government by the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal, the Hon'ble Raja Partab Bahadur, C.I.E., and Babu Gobind Das, on the subject of separate Muhammadan representation in the Legislative Council, and remarks as follows:—"This expression of opinion does not come from the class of so-called Hindu agitators, but from men who have the largest stake in the country. Will the Government not pay any heed to these warnings from a representative Taluqdar of Oudh, from a zamindar and banker in touch with all sections of the community, and from a scion of an old banking family, none of whom has ever been charged of harbouring any ill-feeling towards their Muhammadan fellow-subjects? They have been compelled to speak plainly in the general interest. It is for Government either to pay heed to these warnings or adopt a course which may for the time being be considered expedient, but which is sure to prove extremely dangerous to the best interest of the country."

HINDUSTANI, 29th January, 1908.

The expansion of Councils.

33. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 29th January, reproduces the comments of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 20th of January on the expansion of Legislative Councils.

34. Referring to the proposed Bengal Provincial Conference at Pubna, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks, in the issue of the 26th January, that no prophesying powers are needed to foretell disaster for the next Bengal Conference, as there has been no earnest effort to effect a reconciliation, nor the slightest attempt to sink personal differences in the common cause.

Bengal Provincial Conference at Pubna.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th January, 1908.

He notes that the Extremists think it their paramount duty to drive the Moderates out of the field, and that it is possible that the Moderates reciprocate that sentiment cordially.

He remarks that so long as this state of things continues it is useless to expect the two parties to meet and transact public business smoothly, and that whether the meeting be at Surat or at Pubna, the warning elements are the same, the same methods of imitation will be pursued, and the result will be the same.

35. In the Advocate (Lucknow), of 30th January, is reproduced the letter of an "Indian Nationalist" to the editor on the subject of "The genesis of Indian Loyalty," in which the writer declares that for some short time after the Mutiny there was undoubtedly some disloyalty and a desire to subvert the British rule, but that it had long ago ceased to exist, and that to-day there is no active disloyalty in the country except perhaps among a few hair-brained fanatics in Bengal.

The genesis of Indian loyalty.

ADVOCATE, 30th January, 1908.

He writes that the bulk of the people of India, including the educated classes, are loyal in the sense that they regard the present Government as the best possible government not only for their present comfort, but also for their future progress, but that it is another question whether they will remain loyal five hundred or even two hundred years hence, when they have become conscious of their capacity for independent government.

He expressed the opinion that if they are wise and true to themselves they probably will not.

He remarks that in spite of some foolish talk indulged in now and then, it is known that Englishmen have come to India not from philanthropic but from selfish motives, and that England continues the connection not for the sake of conscience and humanity, even though Mr. Morley may say so, but for the sake of certain stated advantages which accrue to her. So it was a case of enlightened self-interest on both sides, and the sooner the fact is made plain the better.

36. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th January, publishes a translation of "Alexander and the Robber," and remarks that while a despotic monarch like Alexander was magnanimous enough to reward a robber who expressed his opinion of him fearlessly, the British Government has thought it fit to gag the educated class which is always loyal to it, simply for criticising its measures.

The Government and the educated Indians.

HIND, 30th January, 1908.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Nil.

III.—Native States.

Nil.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

37. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), in its combined issue of the 16th and 24th January, makes the following proposals for the consideration of the Committee for redistribution of Judicial work in the United Provinces:—

Judicial Redistribution.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 16th and 24th January, 1908.

(1) To have separate Sessions Judges for Budaun and Bijnor.
(2) To abolish the Nagina Munsifi, and transfer it to Najibabad or Dhampur.
(3) To empower the Munsifs of Bijnor and Chandausi to try cases up to Rs. 2,000.
(4) To appoint an Assistant Sessions Judge in Moradabad.

ABHYUDAYA, 24th January, 1908.

38. Referring to the recent conviction of the Yugantar, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 24th January fails to understand what harm the article on which the printer of the paper was convicted could do to the Government written as it was in Bengali, and could not consequently catch the ear of the Sikhs to whom it was addressed. Punishments being intended to have disciplinary effect, the editor objects to the conviction of the printer, on the ground that he was not the real culprit. It is not a right principle to punish an innocent man because some one must be punished for the crime committed.

The third conviction of the Yugantar.

He condemns the conduct of those editors who, as in the case of the Yugantar, work mischief behind the screen and sacrifice others when it comes to suffering its consequences.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th January, 1908.

39. Referring to the request of the Bengal Government asking the courts not to pass strictures on the conduct of the police in their judgments, and inform the Government confidentially if they have anything to say against the force, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 24t January congratulates the Bengal Police in having the Government on their side to help them in their exploits against the people.

Comments on the police in judgments.

ADVOCATE, 26th January, 1908.

40 Commenting on the proposal of the Government of Bengal to restrict the freedom of comment on the conduct of the police, at present enjoyed by courts, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 26th January that the reasons advanced in support of the proposal are so flimsy that one can scarcely believe that they emanate from a Lieutenant-Governor.

Comments on the police in judgments.

He thinks that the High Court Judges cannot have given a thought to it, much less have approved of it, and he suggests that perhaps the quondam President of the Police Commission who as such had many hard things to say of the police, means to atone for it by stultifying himself.

RAHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

41. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th January, referring to Sir A. Fraser's proposal that the Judges should not make any disparaging remarks on the police in their judgments, doubts whether this will in any way improve the situation and expresses the opinion that the police will become still more uncontrollable.

Comments on the police in judgments.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

42. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 28th January, referring to the agitation carried on by some people against the recent ruling of the Privy Council on mortgages, remarks that the Government should take time to legislate on this, and that it should do something to preserve the properties of indebted zamindars.

Period of limitation for mortgages.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 30th January, 1908.

43. Referring to the result of the appeal of the Rawalpindi lawyers, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) writes in the issue of the 30th January as follows :—" The judgment of the Chief Court in the case rejecting the appeal of the men convicted by Mr. Martineu is quite worthy of the recent traditions of that court. When the Chief Judge and another could pass an unheard of judgment in refusing an application for bail, it is very little further for another judge to have taken to task Mr. Martineau for having damned the police. This in itself is an iniquity that so important an appeal should be tried by a single judge.....The entire tone of the judgment is objectionable. It finds fault with the special Magistrate without being able to assail his judgment at any part.....The Chief Court of Lahore is no longer a palladium of justice but the bulwark of the executive."

The Rawalpindi case.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 30th January, 1908.

44. Referring to the conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 30th January, that as the Maulvi has been sentenced to a long term of imprisonment, it would be wise to withdraw the two charges which are still pending against him so that the prosecution may not appear vindictive. The whole thing was a trumpery affair, for Liakat Husain never succeeded in doing much mischief and is in reality a harmless old man.

Conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain.

(b).—Police.

45. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th January, complains that the police officers who investigate intricate and complicated cases and then bring the culprits to justice, do not receive any recompense for their trouble.

Police officers and rewards.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th January, 1908.

The editor is of opinion that they are in need of encouragement in this respect.

46. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th January, complains that thefts have become very common in Moradabad owing to the paucity of the chaukidars, and that accidents are very often caused on public roads by marriage processions. The editor is of opinion that the former can be remedied by an increase in the number of policemen, and with regard to the second that the police should keep itself informed of processions, and control the traffic accordingly.

Thefts and accidents in Moradabad.

RAHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

47. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 29th January, publishes a letter from a zamindar, who complains that the zamindars as a class are put to much trouble by police officers, and is of opinion that in future officers of a higher standing than a Sub-Inspector should be deputed to investigate cases, in which a respectable zamindar is a party.

Zamindars and the police.

HINDUSTANI, 29th January, 1908.

48. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th January, publishes an account of Mymensingh affairs based on Mr. Digby's article to the Indian Daily News, in which the latter had discovered that an undercurrent of the deepest suspicion existed between the Indians and the officials. Commenting on Mr. Digby's article he remarks that there was no gainsaying the fact that the situation in Mymensingh, as well as that throughout Eastern Bengal and to some extent in Bengal too, was brought about by a few influences of considerable importance, which were the partition and the Hindu Muhammadan disturbances, and that a sensible official should not read sinister motives behind the actions of the people.

Mymensingh disturbances.

ADVOCATE, 30th January, 1908.

He lays no stress on the record of Mr. Digby as to the attack on the police patrol and the arrests and searches that followed and expresses the opinion that what Mr. Digby had sought to establish and had succeeded in doing was that the officials acted as if a mammoth conspiracy existed behind every action on the part of any section of the people.

The editor recommends that a mixed commission be appointed to investigate the whole affair which should consist of an independent European, an experienced European official from B ngal, if not from a sister province, and an Indian from Eastern Bengal, all to be men who enjoy the confidence of both Indians and officials, and he hopes that Government will not be deterred from following such a course by considerations of prestige

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

49. The editor of the Agra Magazine for December, refutes the charges made by certain local papers against Mr. Kannu Mal, M.A., Octroi and Refund Superintendent of the Agra municipality.

Mr. Kannu Mal, Octroi Superintendent, Agra.

AGRA MAGAZINE, December, 1907.

50. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th January, complains of the inconvenience to which the travelling public other than merchants are put owing to their being required to attend the head octori office if they carry dutiable goods worth Rs. 50 or more, and suggests the desirability of the procedure being abolished and of ordering the payment of all duties ordered at the octroi outposts without any restrictions.

Inconvenience to the travelling public through octroi rules at Benares.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th January, 1908.

The editor also objects to the provision of section 73B of the Municipal Account Code inasmuch as it disallows the refund of duties below one rupee within the limits of the Benares municipality, and remarks that there seems to be no reason why such an exception should be made in the case of the Benares municipality, when other municipalities have to make refunds even to the amount of two annas and when it levies duty even to the amount of a pie.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th January, 1908.

Suggestion to the District Boards.

51. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th January, suggests the desirability of a class being opened by all municipalities which have a health officer other than the Civil Surgeon, in which the health officer should once a month instruct his subordinates on matters relating to conservancy and sanitation of the town.

The editor likewise suggests the desirability of starting a class on week days in all District Board schools for the instruction of the teaching staff by the supervising officer.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

Benares municipality.

52. Referring to his previous articles on the subject, the editor of the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 28th January criticises the conduct of the Benares municipality in allowing dead animals to be dragged along the public roads. He further remarks that the disposing of dead bodies in this way is very troublesome to the people and injurious to public health, and suggests the desirability of the Benares municipality removing such carcases by means of carts specially made for the purpose.

ADVOCATE, 30th January, 1908.

Bengal Municipal and District Boards, report.

53. Commenting on the report of the working of Municipal and District Boards in Bengal, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 30th January: that the praises given by Sir Andrew Fraser to the former, would be more satisfactory were freedom given to municipalities in doing their work, and that the unwholesome effect of holding the leading strings in official hands in the management of local and district boards is very marked.

He notes that, covering an area wider than that of the municipalities, it is only natural that the income of district boards should be more than that of municipal boards, but he considers the sum of 72 lakhs is not as much as it should be.

(e).—Education.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th January, 1908.

Female education.

54. The editor of the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th January, while describing the advantages of female education, points out that it is the surest way for raising a nation from its fallen condition.

He exhorts his countrymen and national leaders to devote themselves entirely to the cause of female education in this country, for unless it is done all their efforts to get swaraj will be futile and vain, a cry for the moon as Mr. Morley would call it.

SWARAJYA, 25th January, 1908.

Female education.

55. While pointing out the difficulties encountered by women in England in obtaining their rights, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 25th January, impresses upon the Indians the importance of female education, and remarks that if they are really anxious to throw off the yoke of foreign slavery they must first educate their women.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th January, 1908.

The Indian Educational service.

56. Referring to the Indian Educational service, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 26th January, that he has already called attention to the fact that Indians even though they may have taken first class honours at Oxford and Cambridge are refused admission to the Educational service, and that what makes the case worse is that the Secretary of State can no longer obtain the best Englishmen, as most of the Englishmen in the Educational Department leave India thoroughly dissatisfied with the service and with the treatment they are sometimes accorded by the Local Government.

He remarks that, when scholars like Mr. Gough and Mr. Lewis find themselves slighted and their opinions ignored by men who have neither scientific nor literary distinction and with no practical experience as teachers, it is natural that they should be discontented, and that the only remedy would be, as Mr. Gokhale suggested, to remove the control of education from the Local Governments and put it in the hands of the Government of India.

But there was not the slightest likelihood that this would be done, and Indians must look for a continued deterioration of the Educational service, and they must rely more and more on their own efforts.

In this connection the editor notes with satisfaction that Mr. Manohar Lal, who, notwithstanding a distinguished carer at Cambridge and the strongest recommendations from Professor Marshall, was refused a post in the Educational Department, has been appointed a lecturer by the Punjab University.

57. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 28th January complains that the Musalman boarders of the Government High School, Aligarh, are very unjustly treated. They have to pay a fee of Rs 2 per month while the others pay only annas 8 a month. Forty-four students have been accommodated in four rooms. The Superintendent of the Boarding House is a Hindu, which fact explains all these difficulties. Musalman students of this school are seldom exempted from paying fees, however poor and deserving they may be.

Government High School, Aligarh.

AL-BASHIR, 28th January, 1908.

58. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th January, referring to the success of the Bengal National College, urges the necessity of establishing a college on the same line in these provinces.

National Colleges.

RAHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

59. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow of the 30th January) notes with pleasure that the proposed Rajput College and High School with Boarding Houses at Agra is to become a reality. He congratulates Raja Balwant Singh, C.I.E., of Awa and Raja Uday Partab Narayan Singh, C.S.I. of Bhinga, on their public spirit in making such munificent donations.

The proposed Rajput College at Agra.

ADVOCATE, 30th January, 1908.

60. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 28th January, makes the following remarks on the quinquennial report of the Educational Department :—

Education.

MASHRIQ, 28th January, 1908.

(1) The new rules which have been introduced into schools are very rigorous: they should be put into force gradually, otherwise they may retard the progress of education.

(2) The teachers in schools are very much underpaid, and therefore the tone of the schools is very low.

(3) The number of Indians in the higher appointments is very small, and at least half of the inspectors should be Indians.

(4) There has been an appreciable increase in the amount of money spent on education, but compared to European countries it is still very low.

(5) The introduction of manual instruction in schools must give universal satisfaction.

(6) Principals of colleges should not interfere in the management of boarding houses.

(7) The teaching of the English language is generally defective, and competent men should be appointed to teach English only, and they should not be made to do any other work.

(7) The growing attention paid by the Government to female education is highly commendable. Separate schools should be established for high class Hindu and Musalman girls, and Christian and other low caste girls should be excluded from them.

(8) Special attention should be paid to technical education, the physique of scholars and to the inculcation of the principles of morality.

61. While pointing out that the success of the competitors Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Lord Curzon, for the office of the rectorship of the Glasgow University, depends entirely on the choice of the students, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th January notes with regret the different treatment accorded to students in England and India where they are entirely shut out from taking any share in politics.

Students and politics.

HIND, 30th January, 1908.

The editor wishes success to Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman as hardly any good can be expected from the election of Lord Curzon.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

62. The Kshatriya (Meerut), for November and December (received on the 31st January) is of opinion that as the ever-recurring famines in India are not so much the result of failure of monsoons as of the enormous export of grain from India in exchange for foreign

Famine and the export of grain.

KSHATRIYA, November, and December 1908.

made goods, the adoption of simple habits and the development of industrial enterprize by Indians will go a good deal towards checking the exports of grain and thus prevent the occurrence of famines of a severe type.

RASTGO, 24th January, 1908.

The famine.

63. In continuation of his open letter (vide Selections No. 51, para. No. 58) the editor of the Rastgo (Allahabad), of the 24th January, again asks His Honour Sir J. Hewett to order the opening of grain shops to sell corn at concession rates, as it is the only possible way to save the sufédposh poor from the distress caused by the terrible famine.

RAHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

Forests.

64. Referring to the tendency of the Government to make the forests a means to fill its own treasury, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th January, remarks that, besides depriving many poor men of their means of livelihood and cattle of abundance of pasture land, this makes the country unhealthy and subject to malarious diseases. The editor suggests the desirability of Government preserving the forests while leaving them for the free use of the poor and cattle.

ADVOCATE, 30th January, 1908.

His Honour's speech at the inauguration of the famine fund in Lcknow.

65. Commenting on Sir John Hewett's speech at the public meeting held in Lucknow to inaugurate the famine fund, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th January, remarks that it should cheer up sinking hearts, and prove a message of hope to the poor afflicted.

He expresses the hope that the officials in charge of famine operations will fully appreciate the spirit of His Honour's declaration, and that they will, without regard to percentages be ready to relieve every existing case of distress.

He remarks that one portion of Sir John Hewett's speech was open to argument, and very few of the Indian public would agree with him, which was the statement that within the last eleven years the condition of the masses had so improved and their power of resistance had so increased that they were now better able to face the famine.

He said that sufficient arguments could be adduced to refute this contention.

In the first place, unlike the past, the Government has not been taken unawares, as this time before the enemy had taken the field, Sir John Hewett was ready to combat him by the most timely distribution of takavi, which enabled the cultivators to plough and sow to the largest possible extent, and also the partial outturn of kharij enabled him to store grain for his own use till the next harvest.

He had the work nearer home, and therefore the agricultural labourer did not leave his village or join famine relief works.

Secondly, the weaver class, which formed a good number in certain districts and which had taken to agriculture, could easily find work at the hand looms, which they kept on working to meet the demand from Bengal and other places. Thirdly, eleven years is a short period, and cultivators who then joined famine relief works returned to their homes with the feeling that the works do not give a good return for labour and that a labourer could barely earn sufficient to live on after a full day's work.

Badly stricken as the Indian cultivator is, he is willing to pass a few months with half his belly full rather than join works where he cannot get sufficient wages.

He notes that cultivators have no doubt benefited by the high prices of grain, as he has stored some and has taken full advantage of the advance in prices, but that the zamindars and their dependents had suffered and will soon be reduced to poverty, and will at the next harvest attempt to take away from the cultivator the major portion of the outturn in order to maintain themselves and partly repay the loan secured for the payment of revenue in the past, and to meet the Government demand in May next.

While allowing that there are fewer waifs and strays in the poor houses, the editor contends that it is because the people themselves have begun to value the advantage of work on co-operative lines, and because agents of the several Arya Samaj orphanages are roaming all over the affected area in these provinces and taking charge of such waifs and strays as are found willing to go to the Punjab. He remarks that this organization is so complete, that there will be no excuse for any district officer to hand over even an Indian orphan to the Christian missionaries.

The reason that no rush of pilgrims from Rajputana is seen this year is, he says, that those parts are not badly affected.

He remarks that Indians are thankful for what the Government has done to combat the famine, but till such time as means are devised to keep sufficient store of grain in the country to prevent the sudden rise in prices at the very first approach of famine, and till such time as by means of artificial irrigation a large tract of land is not protected from the eccentricities of the monsoon, there will be no way to get rid of the spectre of famine, which has come to stay in the land.

At present the slightest failure of monsoon rain renders the people utterly helpless, and renders the lot of the middle classes, as they are men who do not ask for aid, but whose capacity for saving has not increased, very deplorable.

His Honour's speech at the inauguration of the Famine fund at Lucknow.

66. Referring to Sir John Hewett's speech at Lucknow on the occasion of the inauguration of the famine fund, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) remarks in the issue of the 30th January, that His Honour's contention as to the growing prosperity of the cultivator is open to argument and the frequency of famines is its strongest answer. INDIAN PEOPLE, 30th January, 1908.

In these provinces, he writes, actual emaciation or deaths from starvation are not yet reported, but were they so reported even when they did occur? In Orissa people were dead and dying of starvation, for which fact there is Mr. Nevinson's unimpeachable testimony, though this is not officially admitted. He remarks that this reluctance to recognise facts is the worst feature of the administration of relief.

He expresses the opinion that the expenditure of Rs. 50,000 received from the Indian People's Famine Trust on blankets was a most wise and welcome form of relief, and advises that in order to make the work of relief successful, local men of influence and energy should be freely associated with the committees.

(g).—General.

Handcuffing of political offenders.

67. Referring to the handcuffing of Maulvi Liakat Husain the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 25th January, remarks that the order of Mr. Morley exempting political offenders from the use of handcuffs was simply nominal and never meant to be actually brought into force. SWARAJYA, 25th January, 1908.

Handcuffing of journalists.

68. The Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad-Hardoi), of the 27th January, notes with satisfaction the abolition of the practice of handcuffing journalists, and hopes that they will be exempted from rigorous imprisonment as well. JEDD-O-JEHAD, 27th January, 1908.

India and Ireland.

69. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th January, referring to the indulgent way in which Ireland is being treated, and the hard treatment that India is receiving at the hands of England, remarks that this partiality is due only to racial prejudice. RAHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

India and Ireland.

70. The Hind (Lucknow), of 30th January, referring to the murderous attack on a bailiff in Ireland, and to other outrages, remarks that if such things had happened in India the papers of the Pioneer fraternity would have at once proclaimed at the top of their voices, that India was on the verge of another mutiny. HIND, 30th January, 1908.

Government and editors.

71. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 29th January, referring to the proposal for taking sureties from editors of vernacular newspapers, remarks that by this means the number of such papers will be greatly reduced, and the expression of opinion checked. HINDUSTANI, 29th January, 1908.

Sir George Clarke and Bombay editors.

72. Referring to the second meeting between Sir George Clarke and the Bombay editors, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), writes in the issue of the 26th January:—"If we had another Viceroy like Lord Ripon, and Governors like Lord Reay and Sir George Clarke matters will mend quickly and the attempt to force the pace will be abandoned." INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th January, 1908.

Referring to Mr. Tilak's reply to the Governor's speech on this occasion, he remarks that it was almost a phonographic reproduction of Sir George Clarke's utterance, and that the exchange of ideas and friendly intercourse between the people and the Government which is now advocated by Mr. Tilak is not perhaps in consonance with the ideal of colonial self-government, but that it certainly conflicts with the theory of complete aloofness from the Government which seemed to be one of the cardinal doctrines of the new political party of which Mr. Tilak is the professed leader.

"If there are platforms on which the Government and the people could meet, why should they not be raised, and if there are Governors like Sir George Clarke who were fully resolved to conciliate popular opinion why should they not be encouraged?"

He notes that Mr. Tilak was not always a stranger to Governors and high officials, and that, though he now thinks Indians in the Legislative Councils are useless, he was not of that opinion when he himself was a Member of the Bombay Legislative Council. He asks whether, if the Governor were to invite him to garden parties or "At Homes" Mr. Tilak would decline the invitation, and remarks that the new cult seemed a very independent and heroic one at the first glance, but it was probably due to the indifference and repressive policy of the present rulers.

RAHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

Liberty of the Press.

73. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th January, referring to the proposal to allow the Police to confiscate presses in which seditious newspapers are printed, remarks that this will give additional power to the police, which has failed to use justly what power has been already entrusted to it.

SWARAJYA, 25th January, 1908.

Lord Minto's Government.

74. While agreeing with the remark of Capital regarding Lord Minto's Government, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 25th January, strongly denounces the attitude of the Anglo-Indian journalists in extolling Lord Minto, and remarks that all their attempts to change the opinion of the Indians will be entirely vain and useless.

RAHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

Fresh orders of the Bengal Government.

75. Referring to the action of the Bengal Government in adding some fresh provisions to section 45, Criminal Procedure Code, and in making it binding on the mukhias and other headmen of villages to inform the nearest magistrate or police officer of all matters regarding which information is required by the aforesaid section, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th January remarks that instead of restoring peace and order in the country such orders and restrictions will only tend to make the people still more noisy and dissatisfied.

MASHRIQ, 28th January, 1908

Evil of intoxicants.

76. While eulogising some members of the Parliament, and specially Mr. Caine for their sincere efforts to restrict the use of intoxicants, the Mashriq, (Gorakhpur) of the 28th January notes with satisfaction the awakening of China in taking strenuous efforts to stop the use of opium among its people.

The editor further remarks that the use of intoxicants has greatly damaged the mental, moral and physical development of Indians, and asks the Government to take strong measures to put down the use of intoxicants in India, as mere enhancement in the taxation on intoxicating liquors and drugs cannot remove the evil entirely.

AL-BASHIR, 28th January, 1908.

Sir D. Ibbetson.

77. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 28th January, referring to the retirement of Sir D. Ibbetson, says that every one who is not a Swarajist will feel sorry at the retirement of such an able ruler, who kept the Punjab quiet in such stormy times.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 28th January, 1908.

Sir Louis Dane's appointment.

78. Referring to the retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson and the appointment of Sir Louis Dane, the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 28th January, remarks that his appointment will prove most beneficial and satisfactory as he has personal experience of the Punjab Province.

AL-BASHIR, 28th January, 1908.

Atempted murder of Mr. B. C. Allen.

79. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 28th January, referring to the attempted murder of the Private Secretary of the Nawab of Dacca, remarks that this clearly shows that the attack on Mr. Allen was not merely malicious, but it had deeper root and that it was done by the same person or party.

80. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 28th January, notes with satisfaction the attempts made in Bengal by various District Boards to encourage the weaving industry there, by means of the increased employment of handlooms, and urges that similar efforts ought to be made in all the provinces so as to make India capable of supplying its local want, so far at least as piece goods are concerned.

Weaving industry in Bengal.

HINDOSTHAN, 28th January, 1908.

81. Referring to the injustice done to Pandit Brij Lal who lately passed the Colonial Civil Service examination, in ignoring his right for appointment in preference to his juniors on the list, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 30th January attributes it to his taking part in swadeshi meetings in England and to his being a nephew to Pandit Moti Lal Nehru, who takes interest in politics and other national movements.

The editor further remarks :—" Alas ! look how the rights of Indians are ignored and their prayer for redress is said to be a cry for the moon."

Injustice to Pandit Brij Lal.

HIND, 30th January, 1908.

82. Referring to the proposal of Mr. Bashir Husain to raise a statue in honour of Mr. Butler, late Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th January, remarks that it will be a useless waste of money which may be better spent in helping orphanages and starting art schools in the country.

Proposed memorial to Mr. Butler.

HIND, 30th January, 1908.

83. Referring to the rumour that Sir Lancelot Hare may have to proceed home, the editor of the Citizen, (Allahabad), writes in the issue of the 30th January, as follows :—" We did not for a moment believe that we would so soon after Sir Denzil Ibbetson be called upon to express our sympathy with Sir Lancelot Hare, who has also been in an unsatisfactory state of health for some months past and for which, we are told, he will probably be compelled on medical advice to take leave home in the next spring. The ailment, we believe, must be of so very serious a nature as to be beyond the power of medical aid in India. But what strikes one is that, of late Anglo-Indian big officials one after another are being seized with a disease of such a type as to baffle the medical skill available in India. The nature of the malady with which Sir Lancelot Hare has been afflicted is not known as yet. We are afraid, his Gurkha rule has probably somewhat to account for bringing this misery about him. To indulge invariably in temper is to invite cankers into a healthy system. The remedy for such a derangement, we fear, rests entirely within oneself. If we are not mistaken in our diagnosis, Sir Lancelot, we hope, will not fail to appreciate our recipe. If not, a few months' hence, perhaps Sir Lancelot Hare will also be compelled to place his resignation with the Viceroy like Sir Denzil Ibbetson.

Rumoured leave of Sir Lancelot Hare.

CITIZEN, 30th January, 1908.

84. Referring to the "Dacca outrages", the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 30th January, that the mystery of the attempted murder of Mr. Allen has not been solved, but that, in the absence of authentic information it is merely guesswork to call it a political crime. He notes however that if the recent doings at Mymensingh become common, the assassin's hand will become oftener visible, and political crimes will become the rule rather than the exception.

Dacca outrages.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 30th January, 1908.

85. Referring to the epidemic of small-pox raging in these provinces the editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), writes in the issue of the 30th January, that there should be an earnest endeavour on the part of the authorities to do everything to lessen the ravages of the disease. It is little short of a scandal that Indian small-pox patients should be allowed to parade themselves in public thoroughfares whilst their bodies are covered with small-pox sores, and to mix freely with their relatives and friends, thus sowing the seeds of their complaint broadcast. Yet, he remarks, he has received trustworthy information that in Lucknow, at any rate, sights such as these have been witnessed, and an instance has been recorded of a sweeper going to the house of a European resident to perform his duties whilst his lower limbs were a mass of small-pox sores.

He suggests that some method of segregation should be introduced, or at least that it should be made a criminal offence for persons suffering from small-pox to appear in public.

Small-pox in the United Provinces.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 30th January, 1903.

V.—Legislation.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, January, 1908.

Regulation III of 1818.

86. The Hindustan Review for January 1908 contains an article entitled "In the name of justice" by Mr. B. I. Wadia, M. A., barrister-at-law.

The writer, referring to Regulation III of 1818, remarks that the powers embodied in a regulation so repugnant to the British constitution and to every instinct of Liberalism might have been necessary in those days when British rule in India was still in its infancy, and when peace and order were in jeopardy, but that it was hoped by the public that, after nearly a century of British rule, when its foundations are so well and deeply laid, both in its own strength and in the loyalty and contentment of all classes and communities, except on very grave and urgent occasions, Government would never exercise those exceptional powers.

He notes that these hopes were first without any justification shattered in the case of the Natu Brothers ten years ago, and then again lately in the summary deportation of Lala Lajpat Rai and Sirdar Ajit Singh.

He expresses doubt, whether, if these two men had had an open trial the advertisement which the trial might have given to the objectionable matter would have been in any way inconvenient for the officials, and remarks that it would have been of great value to the cause of true progress under British rule in India to show its people that they could be governed without such arbitrary powers as are given by the Regulation of 1818, and that in the case of every British subject in India as elsewhere the elementary principles of justice are always jealously guarded and observed.

He characterises the Regulation in question as a standing menace to honest and independent citizenship, and advises Mr. Morley and the Government of India to remember that if civilization has any meaning at all, the arm or weapon for the suppression of native disorders should be framed with due regard to enlightened jurisprudence.

Here asks whether now that the situation has changed, it would be too much to suggest that the obnoxious Regulation should give place for special legislation of the kind to which other Governments have recourse whenever public interest may demand temporary suspension of laws in particular tracts, and says that deportation is an act of coercion and a violation of justice, which is bound to sap the moral basis of any Government, and that until such methods are given up, until the policy of latter day repression is withdrawn, and until the officials realize the force of the deeper currents of India's political life, Mr. Morley may go on appealing to the better mind of the people as long as he liked, but he will only appeal in vain.

HIND, 30th January, 1908.

Proposed amendment in the Indian Press Act.

87. While pointing out that the Government is intending to pass another law to impose restrictions on the freedom of the press and of editors, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th January, prays the Government not to make all editors suffer for the conduct of some imprudent and insolent editors.

VI.—Railway.

Nil.

VII.—Post Office.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 16th and 24th January, 1908.

Revenue money-orders.

88. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad) in its combined issue of the 16th and 24th January suggests the advisability of reducing the rates of revenue money-orders.

SAHIFA, 26th January, 1908.

The value payable parcel system between England and India.

89. While referring to the proposed introduction of the system of value payable parcels direct between England and India, and the objection of the Anglo-Indian merchants to it, the Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 26th January, strongly denounces the selfish policy of the English, and remarks that if the Government is prepared to withhold this system of value payable parcels for the good of its countrymen, it should also be prepared to stop the export of grain from India for the sake of its Indian subjects.

90. Referring to the general complaints among the subscribers of newspapers about their non-receipt, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th January, remarks that it is possible that all such missing papers are retained by employés of the Postal department, and asks the Postal authorities to take proper measures to check this growing evil among their subordinates.

Complaints against Postal department.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th January, 1908.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

91. In connection with the question of the construction of bungalows for Europeans on the Parasnath Hill, the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 24th January, notes with regret that stables and outhouses are already in process of construction there, and suggests that Jains should forcibly stop all that work even at the risk of their lives, and should boycott foreign goods as a protest against such action of the Government.

The Parasnath Hill.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th January, 1908.

92. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 28th January, contains a eulogistic note of the work of the Rajput Shuddhi Sabha started at Aligarh under the presidency of Kunwar Udeybir Singh.

Rajput Suddhi.

HINDOSTHAN, 28th January, 1908.

The objects of the society are to help the work of reconversion as well as to secure all the rights and privileges of an ordinary Rajput to all who return to their original faith. Already useful work has been done. The first suddhi (purification) performed under the auspices of this Sabha was at Kapurpore, a village in the Mainpuri district. On this occasion a whole family of 26 persons were taken back into the fold of Hinduism, and the audience ate the food cooked by the women folk of this family the same evening.

Other similar meetings at which Muhammadan Rajputs were readmitted into the fold of Hinduism have been held in Muttra, at which applications for re-admission were received from Etah, Etawah and Unao.

93. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th January, notes that parties of volunteers are being formed to help the authorities to regulate the traffic at the Magh Mela on Sunday, 2nd February, the big bathing day.

The Magh Mela and Volunteers.

ADVOCATE, 30th January, 1908.

94. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th January, contains a letter in which the writer ('Indian') expresses doubt as to the utility of pardah parties as a means to the furtherance of social intercourse between the English and Indians. The following is an extract from his letter :—"When a European official does not think of inviting Indian gentlemen to his parties, and in some cases does not receive Indian visitors of education and position with much courtesy and politeness, little hope can be entertained that these Indian gentlemen will be willing to send their wives to the house of that official to cultivate friendly feelings with his wife. A wife will not go to a place where her husband does not receive the treatment which is his due."

Pardah parties.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 30th January, 1908.

The editor remarks that there is a great deal of force in the arguments of the writer, and that, while his sympathy and best wishes are accorded to the organisers of these parties, social amenities should begin with the male sex if they are to be successful. In India the prospect of men and women mixing freely is, he notes, a distant one, but if European and Indian ladies can meet on friendly terms, it is all the more necessary that gentlemen should do so. In Hyderabad for instance, there is free and intimate intercourse between English officials and the Nizam's officials and noblemen, though the purdah of the harem could not be lifted. He records that in British India there is absolutely no intercourse between Europeans and Indians, and that the relations between them are merely official and not particularly pleasant. Indians who have some self-respect avoid calling on Europeans, and also European officials had got a settled notion that no Indian visited them except to ask for some favour. The editor asks how while this state of things lasts anything is to be gained from pardah parties, especially as the Indian gentlemen who send their ladies to such parties should have the assurance that they are also treated as gentlemen by European gentlemen. Pardah parties by themselves cannot, in his opinion, do much to promote social cordiality unless they be supplemented by parties outside the pardah where men may meet on friendly terms.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

Nil.

ALLAHABAD: } C. E. W. SANDS,
The 3rd February, 1908. } Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 6 OF 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 8th February, 1908.

CONTENTS.

Page.

I.—POLITICS.

(a)—Foreign:

Nil.

(b)—Home:

1. Indians in the Transvaal 133
2. Indians in the Transvaal 133
3. Indians in the Transvaal 133
4. Indians in the Transvaal 133
5. Indians in the Transvaal 134
6. Indians in the Transvaal 134
7. Settlement of the Indian situation in the Transvaal 134
8. Indians in the Transvaal 134
9. Indians in the Transvaal 134
10. Indians in the Transvaal 134
11. Indians in the Transvaal 135
12. Indians in the Transvaal 135
13. The National Congress 135
14. The Surat Congress 135
15. The Surat Congress 135
16. The Surat Congress 136
17. The Surat Congress 136
18. The National Congress 136
19. The Surat Congress 137
20. The Surat Congress 137
21. The Times and the Congress 137
22. The Decentralization Commission ... 137
23. The Decentralization Commission and Honorary Magistrates 137
24. Decentralization and the separation of the Judicial and the Executive ... 137

Page.

25. Lord Roberts on the efficiency of the Native Army 137
26. Foreign mercenaries in the Indian Army 138
27. Alfred Russel Wallace on the Indian Crisis 138
28. Discontent in India: Its cause and cure 138
29. A serious situation 140
30. Discontent in India 140
31. West versus East 140
32. Struggle between East and West ... 140
33. A plea for unity 141
34. The rights of Indians 141
35. Panic 142
36. Lala Lajpat Rai's visit to Allahabad ... 142
37. An Indian in the Viceregal Executive Council 143

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

Nil.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

38. Bikanir State 143
39. The Maharaja of Kapurthala... ... 143
40. Marriage of the Maharaja of Kapurthala 143
41. Marriage of the Maharaja of Kapurthala 143

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue:

42. Comments on the police in judgments ... 143
43. Comments on the police in judgments ... 144
44. Comments on the police in judgments ... 144
45. Comments on the police in judgments ... 144
46. The Rawalpindi riot case 144

		Page.
47.	The Rawalpindi case	144
48.	The Rawalpindi riot case	144
49.	Conviction of Liakat Husain ...	144
50.	Conviction of Liakat Husain ...	145
51.	Judicial Reorganization	145
52.	Mr. Karamat Husain	146
53.	The Muharram holidays in the Allahabad High Court	147
54.	Cocanada riot case	147
55.	The press and the powers	147
56.	Whipping	147
57.	Partition of the Calcutta High Court ...	147
58.	Want of accommodation in the Criminal Courts at Allahabad	147
59.	Racial prejudice in Law Courts ...	147
60.	Punchayats	147
	(b)—Police :
61.	The Caclutta riot and the police ...	147
62.	The Sirsa police station	148
63.	The Mymensingh disturbances and the Englishman	148
64.	Mymensingh affairs	148
65.	State of affairs in Mymensingh ...	150
	(c)—Finance and Taxation :
	Nil.
	(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :
66.	Moradabad Municipality	150
67.	The post of Octroi Superintendent in Agra	150
68.	The post of Octroi Superintendent, Agra	150
69.	Roads in Benares...	150
70.	Rat destruction in Pilibhit	150
71.	The octroi tax	150
72.	Municipal voters in Agra	151
	(e)—Education :
73.	Female education...	151
74.	Education in the United Provinces ...	151
75.	Japan students	151
76.	Indian students in America	151
77.	Government grants to Colleges in the Punjab	151
78.	Urdu School Books	151
79.	Education	151
80.	Students and politics	151
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :
81.	Causes of famine	152
82.	Famine relief in Azamgarh	152
83.	Famine allowance for Government servants drawing Rs. 30	152
84.	Causes of famine	152
85.	Co-operative Credit Socities... ...	152
86.	Irrigation at Lakhimpur	152
	(g)—General :
87.	The Swadeshi movement	152
88.	Government printing work and local presses	152
89.	Sir George Clarke and the Bombay editors	153
90.	Government and journalism... ...	153
91.	Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson ...	153
92.	Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson ...	153
93.	Illicit sale of cocaine	153
94.	Mr. Tilak and the Government ...	153
95.	Registration	153
96.	A shooting accident at Allahabad ...	153
97.	Outrages on Hindu women	153
98.	A dakaiti on the railway near in Calcutta	154
	V.—LEGISLATION.
99.	Proposed amendments in the Press Act...	154
100.	Legislation against mendicancy ...	154
	VI.—RAILWAY.
101.	Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway ...	154
102.	Grievances of the Indian guards on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway ...	154
103.	Complaints of Indian guards of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway	154
104.	Mr. Rainier	155
105.	Female waiting-room at Moradabad station	155
106.	Female compartments in railways ...	155
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
107.	The V.-P. P. system between England and India	155
108.	The V.-P. P. system between England and India	155
109.	Defective sorting in the Allahabad Post Office	155
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
110.	Wakfs...	155
111.	Al-Islam versus the Musafir... ...	155
112.	The Paras Nath Hill	155
113.	Arya Samaj and the Musalmans ...	155
114.	The Magh Mela	155
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
115.	Strike of Telegraph peons in Calcutta ...	156

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

Nil.

(b).—Home.

1. Referring to the position of Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 29th January, that the statement issued by the leaders of the British Indians in the Transvaal should rouse a wave of indignation throughout India.

Indians in the Transvaal.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 29th January, 1908.

The gravity of the situation, he remarks, increases daily, and, with the continuance of the spirit of determined resistance now shown, it will continue to increase, until the Imperial Government will be forced either to intervene or to face a difficult situation not only in India, but in every part of the British Empire where there are coloured British subjects.

He expresses indignation at the language used by the Pioneer in publishing the news that some Indian soldiers had petitioned to be shot if their grievances were not redressed.

2. Referring to the ill-treatment of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 30th January, says that Indians being equally the subjects of the British Empire with the Boers and other colonists, the Imperial Government should espouse the cause of the former, and turn out the Transvaalers from and prohibit their entry into India, and that Indians themselves should boycott Transvaal goods.

Indians in the Transvaal.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 30th January, 1908.

3. Referring to the position of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 31st January, says that it was at the persuasion of Lord Milner and on his giving a distinct pledge that the Indian question in the Transvaal was finally settled, that Indians residing there agreed to have their permits renewed, giving their descriptive rolls and thumb impressions in 1903. But now this pledge likemany other pledges made by the English, is being broken and the Transvaalers are strenuously engaged in attempting to oust them from the Transvaal and confiscate their property, and the British Government though it calls itself a just one, is at one with the Boers in oppressing them.

Indians in the Transvaal.

ABHYUDAYA, 31st January, 1908.

Referring to Mr. Birrel's recent speech in justification of the action of the Transvaalers, the editor notes that it shows what the Indians may expect at the hands of the English, and as to how the Indians are being treated in accordance with the Proclamation of Queen Victoria, and remarks that Mr. Birrel's utterances should not offend the feelings of the Indians, for had they not been plainly told by Mr. Morley that as far as his imagination went he could not conceive their equality with the English! He goes on to point out that it is not certain that the Transvaalers had framed the Asiatic Registration Act only to restrict Indian immigration into their territory, but that it may be, as Mr. Cox has shown in the Times, that it was only a trick to take advantage of the trade connections built up by the British Indians. Commenting further upon Mr. Birrel's speech, he asks what the British Government would do if the English were to be turned out from any country, and whether it is not a fact that they have readily shed blood in various parts of the world when it was threatened to drive out their missionaries from other countries.

In view of England's policy of the open door and of free trade, he remarks that no Englishman should say that the colonies or England itself should be a forbidden ground to the Indians, and that if the Transvaal Indians energetically maintain their passive resistance they may rest assured that they will gain the victory in the end.

4. Referring to the position of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st February, deplores the indifference of the Government of India in the matter. The editor points out that had the Indians been independent they would never have been ill-treated in such a manner, nor would the British Government itself have allowed them to be humiliated in this way in the territories of any other Power, for that would have been an indirect insult to itself, but it is the misfortune of the Indians that they are not protected from the oppressions of the colonists. The editor however expresses the hope that the Imperial Government will intervene even now and see that they are not illtreated in the Transvaal, keeping in view the pledges made by Queen Victoria in her Proclamation of 1858.

Indians in the Transvaal.

ARYA MITRA, 1st February, 1908.

SWARAJYA, 1st February, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

5. While deploring the lamentable condition of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 1st February, strongly condemns the conduct of the British Government in not listening to their grievances.

The editor exhorts his countrymen that as their cries have failed to obtain redress at the hands of their rulers, they should unanimously take a firm vow to boycott all foreign goods and particularly those from England, as it is vain to pray for mercy.

He also warns the Government to mend the matter before it has grown too serious so that the people may not rise in open rebellion.

ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd February, has a long leading article on the Transvaal Indian question at the close of which the following passage occurs :—" Lord Elgin, who was Viceroy of India, has tampered with one of the links in the chain that binds India to England ; he has sown the seeds of the revolutionary spirit in the Indian, who by his training and traditions never forms a congenial soil for such a spirit to thrive—so much the better for England ; he has put an undue strain on Indian loyalty. When Lobenguela paid a visit to Queen Victoria, Her Majesty presented him with a Bible, for the Bible represented the spirit of Pax Britannica. Lord Elgin has substituted the bayonet for the Bible. To the Indian the struggle is a process of purification—a process that will fit him for a nobler and higher national life."

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 2nd February, 1908.

Settlement of the Indian situation in the Transvaal.

7. Referring to the settlement of the question of registration of Indians in the Transvaal, the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 2nd February, has the following :—" It may be in one sense but a fair compromise, as Mr. Gandhi says, but in another and a wider sense it is certainly a victory. It demonstrates the fact that it is no longer possible for white British subjects to act unjustly towards coloured British subjects, that each have equal rights, and that these are recognized by the Imperial Government. On this sure basis the British Empire was built and on this it will stand—for justice and freedom, and, should it ever give up this high standard for a lower one, the Empire will fall.

HIND, 6th February, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

8. While expressing its regret at the sufferings of the Indians in the Transvaal and the enormous loss incurred by them, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 6th February, remarks that it is very disgraceful that neither any Asiatic nor any European Power takes any notice of their deplorable condition. It is all the more lamentable in that the British Government, which was so much distressed at the persecution of missionaries in China, has entirely neglected to save its Indian subjects from calamities.

The editor advises his countrymen that, as it is a cause common to all Indians alike, the leaders of every community should unite and respectfully approach the Government asking them to save the Transvaal Indians from oppression.

In conclusion he remarks that in order to revenge themselves upon the Transvaalers, Indians and the Government should both act upon the resolution passed by Mr. J. Subramanca Aiyer, in a meeting held at Madras to express sympathy with the Transvaal Indians, and boycott all trade with the colonies.

HIND, 6th February, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

9. Referring to the concession made by the Transvaal Government of accepting signatures of Indians instead of taking thumb impressions, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 6th February says that the passive resistance of the oppressed Indians have at last achieved a triumph.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 6th February, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

10. With reference to the question of British Indians in the Transvaal, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 6th February, remarks that in the Transvaal the rule for the taking of finger impressions was invented to emphasise the inferiority of the Asiatic races.

He remarks that Mr. Smuts thought that by threatening Mr. Gandhi and others, he would cow down the rest; and that he never thought that even the average Indian in the colony must have some grit in him and some force of character, while even General Botha is now constrained to admit that the Asiatic question should be considered from the Imperial, and not from the Boer point of view.

The editor expresses the opinion that the Imperial Government itself never realised the gravity of the situation, and that the compromise is a distinct victory for the Asiatics in the colony, whose successful opposition was the first example in the history of the world of an Asiatic combination for a common purpose.

He notes that in this case Indians and Chinese having been drawn together by a common persecution have stood shoulder to shoulder through the prolonged conflict, which was the more remarkable because it was a passive resistance, and that this may be the beginning of a great Pan-Asiatic movement for self-protection and self-defence.

The instinct of self-preservation alone should, he says, bring the Asiatic races together, and it will be a great gain if the Indians and Chinese immigrants in the Transvaal, on their return home, strive to promote goodwill and friendliness between the two countries, and the two races, and to impress upon them the imperative need of concerted action.

Indians in the Transvaal.

11. While expressing its regret at the sufferings of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 7th February, advises Indians to go on agitating until their brethren in the Transvaal and all other Asiatics have been granted all rights equal to the colonists as mere compromises and concessions will be of little or no use.

TAFRIH, 7th February, 1908.

India and the Transvaal.

12. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow) for 7th February, in referring to the remarks of the Pioneer in support of the action of the Transvaal Government, that the Indians in the Transvaal had no real grievance in the matter of religious susceptibilities, maintains that the contrary is the case and that their susceptibilities were grievously wounded. It was not, the writer remarked, a question of caste, but one of religious hatred and intolerance.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 7th February, 1908.

The National Congress.

13. While pointing out that, notwithstanding the efforts of representative Lucknow like Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and others, the Congress has proved a failure, the Mahávidyálaya Samáchár (Hardwar), of the 23rd January, remarks that the chief cause of its failure is that its advocates are insincere and ostentatious.

MAHAVIDYALAYA SAMACHAR, 23rd January, 1908.

The editor expesses the opinion that the easiest way to compass the salvation of India is to do away with all such bodies as the Congress, and to silently work with sincerity and earnestness to spread education in art and science among the masses, which will gradually put an end to the enormous drain of wealth from India.

He expresses disapproval of Arya Samajists taking interest in these movements, and advises them to confine themselves to their religious mission of spreading the spiritual light of the Vedas not only in India, but in the whole world, which will be far better and nobler than seek to improve the material prosperity of the people.

The Surat Congress.

14. The Mohini (Kanauj) of the 28th January, has a long article on the Surat Congress in which the editor attempts to prove that the Moderates were responsible for the break-up of the Congress. He remarks that it is still not too late for them to make up for their past mistake by joining the Extremists who are ready for reconciliation.

MOHINI, 28th January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

15. A correspondent in the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 31st January, says that it is not the time for Extremists and Moderates to indulge in personal recriminations and thereby lose sight of the good of the country in looking to party interests. He points out that if the leaders of both the parties will not make up for their mistake at the

ABHYUDAYA, 31st January, 1908

Surat Congress, the consequences will be simply disastrous to the cause of the country. He warns them against organizing two separate political institutions inasmuch as that will deal a heavy blow to national unity, indefinitely postpone the date of India's salvation and involve waste of energy and time in mutual recrimination. He sees no reason why the two parties should not be able to work together when their goal is the same.

SWARAJYA, 1st February, 1908.

16. The Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 1st February, publishes a translation of an article entitled "Who was in the wrong?" from the Mahratta (Poona) written in refutation of the charges against the Nationalists regarding their conduct in the Surat Congress.

The Surat Congress.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 1st February, 1908.

17. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 1st February, referring to the split in the Congress, remarks that this is merely a ripple on the surface, and will pass off in the course of time. The Moderates and Extremists are at heart one and in the end will stand together. Some of the leaders were frightened by the repressive measures of the Government, and to this is due their reactionary policy. The editor however exhorts the people to have faith in their leaders, as it is vitally necessary for political progress.

The Surat Congress.

ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

18. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) in the issue of the 2nd February reproduces a letter written to him by 'I. N.' on the subject of the congress and its future.

The National Congress.

In this connection I. N. writes that the history of the last six or seven years of the Congress is a record of vague discontent with its working, that people felt that some change was necessary, but failed to appreciate the direction in which reform was necessary.

He remarks that all sorts of motives were attributed to some of the Congress leaders, till a section of the Congress men began to become actively hostile, and a deliberate attempt has for the last two or three years been made to thwart them at every step.

While the view of the so-called autocrats has consistently been that the old scheme for regularly carrying out the work of the Congress, as laid down by Mr. Hume and others in the beginning, had to a certain extent failed not because of any serious defect in the scheme itself, but because people were so apathetic that no regular work could be carried on by the different Standing Congress Committees in the districts, the activity of the delegates who used to attend the annual sessions of the Congress ceased with its sittings.

He notes the policy of the old leaders seems to have been that, till more interest is evinced in political matters, it is wiser to keep the Congress constitution elastic and flexible, but that there are indications now that that time is fast approaching owing to the reactionary policy of the Government during the last ten years.

He expresses the opinion that since Lord Curzon's resignation no bold and genuine attempt has been made to conciliate the public, and that therefore people are beginning to realise more and more the necessity for self-help, and the truth of the saying that nations are made by themselves.

Some of the responsible leaders, while desiring that people should be stirred to activity for love of their country, unfortunately bring too much to the forefront the doctrine of hate, with the result that men gifted with energy and enthusiasm feel very much attracted by such doctrines, and are fast losing that balanced sense of their rights and responsibilities, without which political freedom is hard to attain and impossible to preserve.

He remarks that at present there is great confusion in the minds of the public as regards the function of the Congress and the scope of its work, and also as to the lines on which the work should proceed, and that as a great deal of bitterness has arisen on account of this confusion, it has become absolutely necessary to define the creed of the Congress, and lay down a constitution for it, not so much with the object of excluding any particular person or class of persons as to remove the present class. He expresses the hope that by inculcating a similar enthusiasm as the swadeshi movement has aroused, they will be able to make the rank and file work more strenuously and in a more systematic and organised form.

19. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd February publishes a letter from the official in charge of the internal arrangements for the Surat pandal in which he says that there were several attempts at incendiarism and therefore it was necessary to keep a large staff of khulasis always ready in case of fire. He notes that the Extremists call these men hired goondas. ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

20. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 3rd February, condemns the personal recrimiuations which are still being made in the press in connection with the incidents of the Surat Congress, and points out that they are only calculated to widen the gulf and lead to very undesirable consequences, and he advises the Congress leaders to sink their personal differences and unite cordially for future work. BHARAT JIWAN, 3rd February, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

21. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 8th February, referring to the comments of the Times (London) on the Congress fiasco, remarks that the criticism of the Times is not given in a friendly spirit as it regards the Congress as hostile to the British Empire, and that it would be glad if the Congress is not revived. OUDH AKHBAR, 8th February, 1908

The Times and the Congress.

22. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 30th January, questions the advisability of the Decentralization Commission taking the evidence of the officers of the Government of India within closed doors, and asks if their opinion is such as cannot be made public. SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 30th January, 1908.

The Decentralization Commission.

23. A correspondent in the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 5th February, has the following objections to the policy of the Government conferring the powers of an Honorary Magistrate on raises within the local area of their residence :— HINDUSTANI, 5th February, 1908.

The Decentralization Commission and Honorary Magistrates.

(1) They generally use these powers to satisfy their grudges against their enemies of whom they generally have many.

(2) The majorty of them are illiterate or semi-literate and can hardly be expected to understand the law properly.

(3) They make friends of the police and with their assistance carry on the work of persecuting the people.

He suggests the desirability of the Decentralization Commission considering the following points in connection with the post of Honorary Magistrate :—

(1) They should be educated men and have also some knowledge of law.

(2) They should never be allowed the power of accepting complaints directly but that such should always be made over to them by Magistrates.

(3) They should never be allowed to exercise their powers of a Magistrate within the local areas where they reside.

(4) If any party to a suit before an Honorary Magistrate prays for transfer of the case the petition should be at once granted.

(5) They should never be allowed to try a case singly. There must always be a bench of at least three such Magistrates.

(6) The Honorary Magistrates like the Municipal Commissioners, should always be elected by voters.

24. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 8th February, notes with regret that the separation of the judicial from the executive has not been included in the programme of the Decentralization Commission, as it is still being considered by the Secretary of State. The editor is of opinion that so long as the District Magistrate is the supreme Judicial authority in the district, the Subordinate Judicial officers can never have the courage of their convictions, and their judgments will never be unbiased. OUDH AKHBAR, 8th February, 1908.

Decentralization and the separation of the Judicial and the Executive.

25. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for January, contains an article entitled "Lord Roberts on the efficiency of the Native army," in which the writer quotes Lord Roberts' views that the efficiency of the army would be increased by substituting men of the more warlike and hardy races for the Hindustani sepoys of Bengal, the Tamils and Telegus, and the so-called Mahrattas of Bombay, and remarks that his Lordship cast MODERN REVIEW, January, 1908 an unmerited slur on the races of the Bombay and Madras Presidencies which furnished soldiers to the East India Company's army, and with whose help the English were enabled for at least one century to fight all their battles in India.

Lord Roberts on the efficiency of the Native Army.

With regard to Lord Roberts' opinion that Indian soldiers did not possess the qualities that go to make leaders of men, and that native officers in this respect can never take the place of British officers, he asks how Lord Roberts could have ventured in the face of historical facts to so libel Asiatics.

He notes that the Japanese who beat the Russians were officered by Asiatics, and that Sivaji, Haider Ali and the Sikhs at Chillianwalla were Indians, and that he fails to understand Lord Roberts' opposition to the scheme for establishing an institution on the model of Sandhurst in India.

He remarks that at present, the native officers rise from the ranks and they are men of no education and social position, and moreover they can have no ambition to show their ability, when they know that they have to be subordinate even to the youngest subaltern. The Government of India has, he says, committed a great mistake in increasing the number of British officers without at the same time doing anything to improve the position and prospects of native officers.

Of Lord Roberts he writes as follows:—"It should be remembered that Lord Roberts never had any pretension to wide culture or even any high education—a fact which his Lordship has himself admitted in the preface to his work from which an extract has been made above. Again, his scrupulous regard for veracity was exhibited in the despatches he wrote in 1900 from the Transvaal. In his 'Forty-One Years in India,' he should have mentioned the arrangements of which he was the author for gratifying the lust of those soldiers who are his co-religionists and compatriots. He appointed procuresses whose duty it was to procure good looking women as prostitutes for the Christian while soldiers in India. He at first denied the existence of such an arrangement. But his denial was proved to be a lie by some American ladies. He has also omitted to state in his work that he opposed the establishment of an institution in this country on the method of Sandhurst for the training of native officers. These remarks of ours are neither irrelevant nor spiteful, but are meant to show that he is not a truthful and unbiased judge and critic."

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

Foreign mercenaries in the Indian Army.

26. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for February, contains an article entitled 'Foreign Mercenaries in the Indian Army' in which, after an introduction pointing out that the Indian Army, both European and Indian, is composed of mercenary troops, the writer remarks that the East India Company issued circular letters on the 21st May and 16th June 1858, putting certain questions to leading civil and military officials of the day.

One of the questions is described as calling for opinions as to the advisability of raising regiments from other parts of the empire for service in India. Quotations are made by the editor from the replies said to have been given to these questions by the various officers.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

Alfred Russel Wallace on the Indian Crisis.

27. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for February, has a short article entitled 'Alfred Russel Wallace on the Indian Crisis.' It purports to be an account of an interview of Dr. A. R. Wallace by Mr. John Page Hopps, in which the former is recorded as expressing his sympathy with the aspirations of Indians for self-government. Dr. Wallace is also described to have advocated the restoration of village communities as self-governing bodies, the restoration to the people of their land, making it inalienable, the remission of the land assessment for some years, and, as the last measure for repairing the fortunes of the cultivator, the establishment of free irrigation throughout the country.

ADVOCATE. 2nd February, 1908.

Discontent in India: Its cause and cure.

28. The editor of the Advocate publishes in the issue of 2nd February a letter entitled "Discontent in India: Its cause and cure" written by 'an Indian Nationalist,' in which the writer ascribes the present discontent in India to three causes :—

(1) The failure of the Government to give the people a larger share in the administration of the country.

(2) The omission to rectify and remove grave injustices under which Indians suffered both in India and in British colonies.

(3) The shameful treatment of Indian gentlemen by Englishmen on railway platforms and in railway trains, and the hostile attitude of the Anglo-Indian Press.

Dealing with the first cause, he remarks that Indians believe that the British administration in spite of its defects is a progressive one, and that the British democracy in whose hands ultimately the destinies of India are placed is honest, enlightened, and to some extent even generous, and that anything tending to undermine this belief is liable to also undermine their loyalty.

He notes that Western education and the spread of Western modes of thought have imbued Indians with the idea of progress, and that the Indian National Congress was started by men who were permeated with these political ideas which have made England what it is. He remarks that two ideas formed and do still form the basis of the agitation carried on by the Indian National Congress, one of which is that the British Government by its enlightened and progressive policy, is fitting Indians for a larger share in the administration of this country, and is consequently creating in their minds new aspirations, and the other is that the British people are willing to fulfil the hopes which the policy of the British rulers and the plighted words of their sovereign had created in Indian minds.

The British rulers themselves have, he says, acknowledged the correctness of these two ideas; but difficulty arises when they are asked to put their profession into practice, and either refuse to do so or try to dilute them beyond recognition.

The Congress aims at the association of the people more and more with the Government, and also to bring about certain administrative reforms, chief of which is the separation of the executive and judicial functions.

He notes that in both these matters for many reasons the action of the Government has been exasperating the people, and that Indians are treated shamefully in the British colonies, while the British Government acknowledged itself unable to dictate to the Colonial Governments.

He asks if it is a matter for surprise that the people come to the conclusion that the empire is not only based on injustice, but that it is also growing weak and imbecile.

He expresses the opinion as regards self-government that certain misconceptions in connection with it ought to be removed, that with the sober and thoughtful leaders of the people Swaraj means the colonial form of self-government within the empire, and that what the leaders want is that this goal should be steadily kept in view and that the Government should advance towards it honestly and courageously, which can only be done by giving more and more heed to the voice of the people, and by associating their leaders with the administration.

He contrasts the action of Lord Curzon with this policy, and remarks that he insulted the people of India publicly in his Convocation speech, tried to contort the words of the Queen's proclamation and inflicted a cruel and wanton wrong on the people of Bengal.

He remarks that since his time Government, instead of advancing on the right path and giving more and more heed to the voice of the people, is deliberately taking retrograde steps.

He quotes as additional causes of discontent the insults offered to Indians by Englishmen on railway platforms and in railway trains, the failure of justice in British courts of law in cases in which one of the parties is a European, and the abusive tone of a considerable section of the Anglo-Indian Press, and it is no exaggeration to say that the British subalterns who insult Indian gentlemen in railway trains and the British civilians who treat their Indian visitors with ill-concealed disdain do more to embitter the feelings of the Indians against the British rule than perhaps half a dozen acts of Legislation.

He expresses the opinion that it is not the Moderates but the Government alone which can remove the present discontent by a conciliatory and honestly progressive policy.

With regard to the proposed Council of Notables he remarks that the scheme is more spectacular than real, and that, such as it is, it has lost all its grace and more than half its efficiency by being delayed so long, and that it is such a faint echo of the hope raised in Indian minds, that many of them almost believe that the Government is mocking them. He writes that before the present unrest can be removed, the belief in the honesty of rulers must be re-established by courageous acts of conciliatory statesmanship, and that if a false notion of prestige is allowed to stand between the people and their rulers, if obvious cases of injustice are allowed to occur like the oppressions of the Police in India and the tyranny of the Boers in the Transvaal, if public opinion continues to be flouted and strangled, and the Anglo-Indian Press be allowed to sow poison broadcast, then there can be no hope of peace in the near future without which there can be no progress.

He denies that the Moderate leaders are urging on the Extremists, and says that it is the Government which is doing it by its exasperating measures, and that nobody deplores the present state of affairs more than the Moderate leaders.

In conclusion he remarks that the future of India is very dark and gloomy, but that there is one thing which sustains the people and that is their trust in the sense of honesty and justice of the great British democracy and their hope that a way will be found out of the present political labyrinth.

ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

A serious situation.

29. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd February, has the following:—"Sir Louis Dane's sudden departure for England on two months' leave, Lord Ripon's statement in the House of Lords about threatened relations between England and Turkey and the silence of the Amir of Kabul about the terms of the Anglo-Russian Convention are significant indeed. Who knows these signs may not lead to some serious development?"

OUDH AKHBAR, 5th February, 1908.

Discontent in India.

30. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 5th February, referring to the discontent in India, remarks that it is not due to disloyalty, but it is only a desire for justice to their just claims, nothing more or less, that India belongs to England, and the people of India do not want to wrest it from the English but simply desire that their claims should not be ignored and that they should be treated as British citizens wherever they may be.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 1st February, 1908.

West versus East.

31. A correspondent who signs himself as H. L. Varma Faryard, contributes a letter entitled "West versus East" to the Cawnpore Gazette, of the 1st February, in which he describes the influence of the West over the East in adopting its manners, customs and dress, and thereby shows that the East is entirely dependent on the West and cannot do without it.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd February, 1908.

Struggle between East and West.

32. Referring to the struggle between East and West, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) in the issue of the 2nd February remarks that the antipathy of the West to the East has become more marked since the epoch-making victory of Japan over Russia, and that except in European countries, there is now a general movement noticeable in all colonies and new kingdoms of the white races to exclude the Asiatic races rigorously, while on the other hand there is an unparelleled national awakening throughout the East.

The experience of America and Australia is not, he says, likely to be repeated in Asia, and that Asiatic races will not become so easily extinct as the Red Indians or the Maoris

He deduces, as the lesson of this struggle, that the decadence of Europe, or at least of its outlying offshoots, has commenced and will proceed steadily.

33. The January number of the Modern Review (Allahabad), contains an article entitled "A Plea for Unity" written by 'an Indian Nationalist,' in which the writer surveys the points of difference between the Moderates and Extremists and concludes that they are not at variance on material points, as both have at heart the good of the country, though they cannot agree as to the means whereby it is to be attained. He urges them to sink their differences and to work in unison to obtain those reforms on which both are agreed.

MODERN REVIEW, January, 1908.

A plea for unity.

He specifies the following objects as being those on which both parties can agree and adopt as a congress programme:—

(1) The appointment of Indians as members of the Executive Councils, the expansion and reform of the Legislative Councils, the extension of local self-government by enlargement of the powers of municipal and local bodies, and the creation of District Advisory Councils, as being the first steps in the direction of self-government.

(2) The holding of examinations for the Civil Service simultaneously in England and in India, the creation of a separate Judicial Service which should be recruited mostly from among Indian lawyers which involves the separation of judicial and executive functions, and generally obtaining equality of treatment for Indians and Europeans in the matter of appointments in the public service.

(3) The reduction of Home Charges and Military expenditure and the increase of expenditure on education in all its branches, in sanitation in urban and rural areas, in medical relief and in irrigation.

(4) The reduction of land revenue and of other taxes which press unduly on the mass of the population.

(5) The improvement of the status of Indian settlers in British colonies.

(6) The swadeshi movement, comprising the production as well as consumption of indigenous wares.

(7) National education.

(8) The popularising of arbitration courts for settlement of disputes instead of resort to litigation.

The writer remarks that if the new party are not prepared to combine with the older party, still there is nothing to prevent them from cordially co-operating with the latter to this extent, and from working independently of them in matters in which their views are at variance.

34. In an article entitled "Airy Nothings" published in the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd February, the editor remarks that Indians talk of their rights, of constitutional agitation, and of going to the country with a programme, and that these high-sounding phrases have a sort of fascination for them, in consequence of which they never stop to consider that they are a laughing stock for those who are conversant with the actual conditions of Indian life.

CITIZEN, 2nd February, 1908.

The rights of Indians.

He writes that the Netherlanders, even in the worst days of Spanish tyranny, had rights which their Spanish masters repealed, that the Roman slaves had rights, but that Indians have none. He asks if they have won any rights by force, whether they have got any such as the Flemish burglars bought from their masters and with their money, and whether in fact they had even got a country, to speak of or to appeal to.

He remarks that when they speak as if there were a living country at their back, participating in their ideas, feelings, thoughts and aspirations they merely deceived themselves and remained satisfied with airy nothings. He asked whether when they talk of programme, the leaders have any programme at all, as they have not even imitated with any real earnestness, the political methods of their English teachers, whose phrases are always on their lips.

Their services had never taken any tangible form, and there was no political association except that which was ushered into life last year, and it was stillborn.

He remarked that in Bengal, in Bombay, in the Punjab some attempts though feeble and spasmodic, have been made from time to time to reach the heart of the country, but that there has been none in these provinces and that no attempt has been made to explain to the masses by the dissemination of pamphlets, what is the object that is to be attained and how to obtain it.

The writer in conclusion advises the leaders to discard the borrowed clothes which had made their whole lives a tissue of dreams and which imparted a hollow and unreal ring to their activities, as the morbid habit of indulging in things that were entirely foreign to them has eaten into their vitals and sapped their strength.

INDIAN PEOPLE, th February, 1908.

Panic.

35. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th February, has the following:—"Mr. Keene in his "A Servant of John Company" relates an incident which has a striking resemblance to the Etawah case. It was during the time of the Mutiny, and he was at Dehra Dun when an informer came to him and denounced a certain munshi as being in correspondence with a rebel Nawab. We give the rest of the story in Mr. Keene's own words: 'When the munshi was arrested and brought into Court next day, the informer stuck to his tale, producing documents which he professed to have found in the sarai at Dehra concealed in the shoe of the accused. One was a draft letter to the Nawab, another purported to be the Nawab's answer. The evidence looked thin; on the other hand was the testimony of Major Wriford, to the effect that the munshi was a faithful and loyal servant; and on a more careful scrutiny, the draft letter and the supposed answer appeared to be in one and the same handwriting, and to contain a common error of orthography. As this consisted of a misspelling of the prisoner's own name, my first very natural impulse was to discharge the man at once, but there were some suspicious circumstances brought forward; and on the whole I decided to let the case go before the sessions. It may serve to show the heated state of feeling among the Christian inhabitants when I add that on this foundation a charge of lukewarmness was framed against me, and the censure of the Government of India invoked because I had not hanged this man straight off—I, to whom powers of life and death had never been intrusted. Lord Canning ordered an inquiry, which, of course, ended in my complete justification; and when the case came for trial before Mr. Spankie, the Judge, and a bench of assessors, the accused was absolutely and unhesitatingly acquitted.' It is not a pleasant spectacle to see a whole community clamouring for the death of an innocent man. We wish we could believe that such incidents belonged entirely to the past. Unfortunately the events of last year show that the Anglo-Indians of to-day have as little of the judicial temper as their predecessors. With a few honourable exceptions, they applauded when Lala Lajpat Rai was imprisoned without trial. They knew of no evidence against him: for that matter, none has ever been given. The mere fact that he was accused was in their opinion sufficient to prove his guilt. Any rumour however absurd was believed. The Indian soldiers in their thousands were ready to rise and mutiny at the summons of Lala Lajpat Rai. Now there have been many mutinies in history, but we never yet heard of a mutiny being led by a lawyer. The English, however, were as terrified as if the peaceful reformer had been a Napoleon escaped from Elba. Surely, as a matter of policy, this readiness to be frightened at shadows is not wise. We put aside all questions of justice and humanity as of minor importance, and ask Anglo-Indians to consider whether they add to the prestige of a ruling class by exhibitions of unreasoning panic."

CITIZEN, 6th February, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai's visit to Allahabad.

36. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 6th February, publishes the following letter from Lala Lajpat Rai:—"My attention has been drawn to a paragraph in your issue of the 26th January making certain adverse comments upon the Hon'ble Madan Mohan Malaviya which to me appears to be based upon wrong information and wholly unjust. The facts are that during my stay at Calcutta I received a telegraphic message from the Hon'ble Pandit asking me to let him know by wire the date of my arrival at Allahabad. In reply I informed him of the date and time but begged of him to keep it strictly private and to let nobody know of it. I added that I would be going straight and could not stay at Allahabad. Consequently the Honorable Pandit came to see me and the only two companions he had with him were his two sons who had very kindly brought food for me. Under the circumstances you will see how unmerited your remarks were and will, I trust, gladly withdraw the same. Pardon my presumption in adding that if there ever was a time when Indians stood in particular need of being more charitable towards one another than they generally are, it is the present."

An Indian in the Viceregal Executive Council.

37. Referring to the suggestion for the appointment of an Indian member in the Executive Council of the Viceroy, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 6th February, sarcastically remarks that the services of a member will be very useful to the country provided the man appionted be of the type of Mr. Bilgrami or Mr. Gupta.

HIND, 6th February, 1908.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Nil.

III.—Native States.

Bikanir State.

38. While pointing out that the payment of the salaries of the employés of the Bikanir State has been stopped on account of the terrible famine there, the Union Gazette (Bareilly) in the combined issue for the 21st and 28th January, (received on the 3rd February), complains of the extravagant expenditure of money on amusements, and asks the Maharaja to consider the miserable condition of his people.

UNION GAZETTE, 21st and 28th January, 1908.

The Maharaja of Kapurthala.

39. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 1st February, notes with regret the marriage of the Maharaja of Kapurthala to a Spanish lady, and is of opinion that this is a sign of the Kali-yuga (the Dark Age).

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st February, 1908.

Marriage of the Maharaja of Kapurthala.

40. Referring to the recent marriage of the Maharaja of Kapurthala with a Spanish lady, the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 3rd February, expresses its surprise at His Highness taking a foreign lady as his wife in the very life-time of his first wife who is a very highly educated lady, and asks if this is the result which one should expect from foreign travels.

BHARAT JIWAN, 3rd February, 1908.

Marriage of the Maharaja of Kapurthala.

41. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 6th February, disapproves of the conduct of the Maharaja of Kapurthala in marrying a Spanish lady, especially when there is not a single instance of any respectable European official marrying an Indian lady.

HIND, 6th February, 1908.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

Comments on the police in judgments.

42. Referring to the suggestion of the Bengal Government as to the inadvisability of strictures being passed on the police in judgments by the judiciary, and proposing their separate communication to the Government, and to the acceptance of the same by the Calcutta High Court, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of 31st January, expresses its surprise at such a proposal being made at all, considering that the evil of the combination of the executive and judicial has been proved even to the satisfaction of Government, and remarks that the step is not an improvement but a disregard of justice. It is not to be expected that the Government will take proper notice of the conduct of the police at the mere instance of Sessions Judges, when it has failed to do so, even on being persistently urged by the entire public when they have become cognizant of police illegalities. He concludes with the remark that to give publicity to the crimes of the guilty is the best corrective of his conduct, while their concealment is only a further incentive to his indulgence in evil, "that violent writings and speeches do not produce such bad feeling among the people towards the administration as police oppression, and that the law-courts have hitherto been looked upon as independent pillars of justice, but now they will be regarded as willing subordinates and confederates of the executive."

ABHYUDAYA, 31st January, 1908.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd February, 1908.

Comments on the police in judgments.

43. In an article entitled "Police and the Powers" published in the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd February, the editor comments on the action of the Bengal and Punjab Governments in seeking to restrict unfavourable comments on the police from being embodied in judgments.

In the Punjab, he remarks, the Chief court has tried to shield the Rawalpindi police at the expense of Mr. Martineau, one of the most distinguished Judges of the province, and in so doing it has serously affected the confidence and veneration with which the people of this country regard the highest courts of justice in the land, and that if this is the state of things in the Punjab, the action of the Bengal Government is likely to produce worse results in that province.

He notes that certain judgments in recent cases have given rise to all this trouble, and asks whether it can be maintained that police high-handedness was not really laid bare in these cases, and why if private persons can be charged with perjury, public officers should not put up with a little verbal castigation.

He considers the action of Sir Andrew Fraser all the more surprising when it is considered that when he was President of the Police Commission he emphatically recorded his concurrence in Sir John Woodburn's condemnation of the police.

The fund of independence of the subordinate judiciary is not unlimited.

In conclusion he remarks that as British fairness and impartiality, at least in the judicial courts, are among the mainstays of British rule in India, any line of policy, which can even faintly be tinged with the idea that the Government will work for the curtailment of judicial independence in any way, is always liable to be viewed with suspicion.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd February, 1908.

Comments on the police in judgments.

44. Referring to the acceptance by the Calcutta High Court of the suggestion of the Bengal Government about strictures on police officers in judgments, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 2nd February, remarks that the Calcutta High Court could scarcely have forgotten the case in which a Judge of that court, presiding over the Sessions, sent a copy of his judgment with a long covering letter to the Local Government for action, and in which the Local Government only reviewed the judgment and the letter of the Judge, and declined to take action on the ground that it was not satisfied as regards the finding of the Judge.

With this experience fresh in their minds the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court have, he writes, delivered over the judiciary, bound hand and foot, to the executive authorities.

HINDUSTANI, 5th February, 1908.

Comments on the police in judgments.

45. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 5th February, reproduces an article entitled the "Police and the Power" from the Advocate without any comments of its own.

HINDOSTHAN, 30th January, 1908.

The Rawalpindi riot case.

46. Referring to Mr. Justice Robertson's judgment in the Rawalpindi riot case, the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 30th January, is sceptical as to the advisability of such strictures as were passed on Mr. Martineau's method of dealing with this intricate case.

ABHYUDAYA, 31st January, 1908.

The Rawalpindi case.

47. Referring to Mr. Justice Robertson's judgment in the Rawalpindi appeal case, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 31st January, notes that it is merely a strong criticism of Mr. Martineau's judgment, and remarks that the latter had with difficulty removed the bad feeling occasioned among the people by the case arising from the Rawalpindi riots, but that now Mr. Robertson has attempted to revive it.

ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

The Rawalpindi riot case.

48. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd February, condemns Mr. Justice Robertson's criticism of the judgment of Mr. Martineau, the Special Magistrate, dealing with the Rawalpindi case.

SWARAJYA, 1st February, 1908.

Conviction of Liakat Husain.

49. While expressing deep regret at the conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain and Dr. Abdul Ghafur, the Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 1st February remarks:—"May these good men after partaking of the British hospitality, come out of the jail with renewed vigour and spirit and defyingly say :—"Not to speak of one, we will sacrifice a thousand lives. We are of India and we shall die for her

50. Referring to the conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 1st February, remarks. that, if the Bengal Government is not satisfied with the award of three years' rigorous imprisonment to the accused, who is an old man over sixty and cannot be expected to come alive out of the jail, and still proceeds with the two cases pending against him, it will be thought that it loves vengeance more than justice.

Conviction of Liakat Husain.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st February, 1908.

51. The Allahabad Law Journal of the 16th January contains the following on the Judicial reorganization scheme : —

Judicial Reorganization.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL, 16th January, 1908.

"The appointment of the Committee to reconsider and report upon questions relating to the redistribution of the work of the courts and the increase of the judicial establishment in these provinces has caused general satisfaction.

Anybody who knows anything about the courts in the United Provinces cannot but be aware that one of the factors which in many places has been detracting from their efficiency, is congestion of work.

It has been suggested that the time of officers might be economised without danger of impairing the public confidence, if they were invested with summary powers. The wisdom of this policy is very much to be doubted. It may be that in other countries there is not so much reason to value the right of appeal as there is in this country, but there can be no question that public confidence would be very much shaken, if junior and inexperienced officers were entrusted more largely with summary powers.

What is absolutely essential is that the litigating public should have no reason to complain that they are not getting proper value for the court-fee which they have paid.

The proper way of setting about the thing is to determine the amount of work that may be disposed of in a satisfactory manner by a Subordinate Judge and a munsif. Excluding Sundays and holidays there are about two hundred and fifty working days in the year. The usual practice now is to devote Saturday to execution and miscellaneous judicial work. Considering the important and complicated nature of many an execution case, it may be doubted if the time actually allotted to such work is sufficient.

The High Court has remarked on more than one occasion that judicial officers do not give sufficient attention to execution work. It is clear therefore more time should be allotted to miscellaneous (mut/arriqa) work.

Taking the present practice as it stands and deducting Saturdays, there were only about two hundred days left for trying original suits.

After a Munsif has disposed of office reports, cases fixed for settlement of issues, uncontested cases, &c., &c., and even examined six witnesses in a contested case the hour of the rising of the court, 4 P.M., will have passed. It is clear that he cannot in a satisfactory manner try more than one contested suit per diem.

For a Munsif therefore, the fair amount of work in a year will be two hundred contested suits, one thousand uncontested and a corresponding number of execution and miscellaneous cases.

Considering the value and importance of original suits in a court presided over by a Subordinate Judge, he cannot be expected, if the work is to be properly done, to try more than seventy-five contested suits in the course of a year, and this, if he is not saddled with additional work in the shape of appeals, &c.

The evil to be remedied is congestion of work, and this evil can be remedied not by giving them all an equal amount of work to do, but by giving each no more than the amount that he can do.

Judging by the figures of cases tried last year, and applying the scale indicated above, the work was quite sufficient for nearly double the number of officers actually employed. The average of 1,200 (including 1,000 uncontested suits) suggest d for a Munsif is in no way too low.

In making additional appointments, however, one consideration that should be attended to above all others is that the strengthening ought to come from the top.

It is desirable to have a larger number of officers who by reason of being invested with higher powers, and being possessed presumably of riper experience, may be expected to be generally more useful in the disposal of the multifarious duties that may be imposed upon them. It will be found more useful to appoint some Small Cause Court Judges instead of some more Munsifs, as the former will be able to deal more quickly and effectively with ordinary money claims, and their ranks being recruited from those of Subordinate Judges they will be in a position if need be, to try heavy and intricate suits of high valuation also.

A Small Cause Court Judge will also be able to hear and decide appeals, and thus he will be in a position to relieve not only the Munsif and the Subordinote Judge, but also the District Judge.

Such a combination of advantages cannot be secured if one or more Munsifs were added to a heavily congested district.

An objection has been taken in some quarters that the old landmarks should not be disturbed, but these were not based on sufficient grounds. As districts grow in importance they are bound to attract good men and since in many important cases even at the present day lawyers of eminence are requisitioned from outside no practical inconvenience will be found to arise by reason of Subordinate Judges being posted in the mufasil.

Some people think that litigation should be made costlier, but in an impoverished country like India, the suggestion does not deserve serious consideration.

To suit the litigating public courts ought to be so situated as to be readily accessible to them. If tahsils or other local areas were so redistributed with reference to their respective situations, their relative importance, and to the means of communication and conveyance as they exist at present some arrangement might be arrived at which would secure at once a more equal distribution of the work and greater convenience to that large section of the public which finds itself under a necessity to resort to the courts of law.

For instance a Subordinate Judge might be conveniently posted at Muzaffarnagar. In a similar manner Aligarh might be split up into two or more districts for purposes of judicial work. Again the headquarters of the Hamirpur Munsifi might be fixed at Mahoba. As a general principle it will probably be desirable to place a civil court within a radius of about twenty miles from the furthermost tahsil or pargana or village that likely suitors may inhabit, and if this cannot in every case be managed, Munsifs or Subordinate Judges may if need be go on circuit.

It is clear that if a Munsif be appointed for Garhwal as people desire, he will have to be empowered to go on tour.

In Oudh there is a Subordinate Judge in each district, and there is surely no reason why thirty-three districts in the Province of Agra should only have nineteen Subordinate Judges.

In a district like Mirzapur the Subordinate Judge may be invested with Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 500.

But where the work is heavy as in Benares, it is not desirable to have the same officer do the work both of the Subordinate Judge and the Small Cause Court Judge.

In the recent past an endeavour has sometimes been made to reinforce the hard-worked judiciary of a district by appointing temporarily Assistant Judges. As Assistant Judges are generally invested with the powers of an Additional Judge to enable them to render assistance on the civil side too, it is clear that officers should be chosen for this purpose from among men who have already acquired sufficient experience of civil work. They should be recruited from the ranks of the higher grades of Subordinate Judges and successful barristers and vakils of over five years' standing. Public confidence can be secured only by having in responsible positions, men of ripe experience and undoubted ability."

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL, 1st February, 1908.

Mr. Karamat Husain.

52. The editor of the Allahabad Law Journal in the issue of the 1st February, expressed in strong terms approval of the selection of Siayid Karamat Husain as Judge of the Allahabad High Court.

53. With reference to the Muharram holidays, the Allahabad Law Journal of the 1st February, suggests a reversion to the old practice of closing the High Court for the entire period as being welcome not only to the Muhammadan section of the Bar, but to the entire body of practitioners, as also to the public at large.

The Muharram holidays in the Allahabad High Court.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL, 1st February, 1908.

54. Referring to the decision of the case against Dr. Kemp in connection with the Cocanada riot, the Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 1st February, strongly denounces the conduct of the Madras Government in being unduly partial to the accused, and remarks that had such a case been against any Indian he would have been awarded an exemplary punishment.

Cocanada riot case.

SWARAJYA, 1st February, 1908.

55. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd February, reproduces an article from the Indian Daily News severely criticising Mr. Justice Rampini and remarking on the tendency of the Bench and of officials to consider the Press as always wrong.

The Press and the powers.

ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

56. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 4th February, referring to whipping sentences passed on juvenile and other offenders, remarks that great discretion ought to be exercised in passing such sentences, as they have a very demoralizing influence on the criminal, that juvenile offenders should be sent to Reformatory Schools, and that such sentences should be passed after due consideration, as the offender has no opportunity of appealing to a higher court.

Whipping.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 4th February, 1908.

57. Referring to the remarks of the Chief Justice Sir Francis Maclean on the partition of the Calcutta High Court, the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 5th February, remarks that as on account of the loss to the European merchants, the officials excite them to oppose the partition of the High Court, the Bengalis should not be blamed for opposing the partition of Bengal.

Partition of the Calcutta High Court.

HINDUSTANI, 5th February, 1908.

58. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 6th February, has the following:—

"The seating arrangements in the Criminal Courts at Allahabad are simply scandalous. When any important case is on and a large number of counsels is engaged on either side it is painful to see how barristers, vakils, pleaders, mukhtars, parties to the case, etc., etc. are huddled together one over the other in the narrow semi-circular bench, the only one in the Joint Magistrate's Court, and hardly sufficient to accommodate more than ten persons with comfort. The provision for seating is worse in the Deputy Magistrate's Courts. In some there are half-broken tables with a couple of benches the canework of which had given way long ago, in others the luxury of a small table is even denied. Very often respectable people have to attend these Courts as witnesses or complainants, and it is very annoying for them to be standing behind the prisoner's boxes or trying to keep their balance sitting on the hundredth part of a bench already groaning under the load of a host of persons. Surely this state of affairs can be remedied at a very small expenditure."

Want of accommodation in the Criminal Courts at Allahabad.

CITIZEN, 6th February, 1908.

59. Referring to the alleged murder of an Indian woman at the hand of a European in Calcutta and to the request of the accused that he may be tried as a British subject, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 6th February, strongly condemns the racial distinctions allowed by the law, and remarks that law should be universal and applicable to all alike without any distinction of race, colour or nationality.

Racial prejudice in Law-Courts.

HIND, 6th February, 1908.

60. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 6th February, reproduces Mr. Kelkar's article on Punchayats in the Indian Review (Madras), and expresses the hope that they will be revived.

Punchayat.

OUDH AKHBAR, 6th February, 1908.

(b).—Police.

61. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 31st January, adversely comments on the leniency shown by the Government to the police officers concerned in the Calcutta riots in charging them only for neglect of duty, and not of partaking in the riots and plunder

The Calcutta riot and the police.

ABHYUDAYA, 31st January, 1908.

and remarks that, had the Government treated the people with one-fourth of the leniency with which it has judged the conduct of the police, it would have been next to impossible that there should be so much discontent in the country.

ABHYUDAYA, 31st January, 1908.

The Sirsa Police Station.

62. A correspondent in the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 31st January, notes with regret the abolition of the Sirsa police station and its amalgamation with the Meja thana. He points out that the new arrangement is calculated to put the inhabitants of the town to serious trouble and heavy loss at the hands of burglars, robbers and dacoits, and expresses a hope that in view of the importance of the town and the interests involved the Government will reconsider its decision and allow the town to retain its police station,

ABHYUDAYA, 31st January, 1908.

The Mymensingh disturbances and the Englishman.

63. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 31st January, writes that there is no doubt that certain incidents in India during the last one or two years have occasioned needless anxiety to European officials of almost all grades, and that Anglo-Indian papers have added fuel to the fire by publishing baseless reports. Whatever incident has occurred they have attempted to connect it with political causes or sedition in the country with a view to cause alarm to the Government. He remarks that only recently the Englishman spread the report that in the search at Mymensingh two rifles and some ammunition were found, and that the search undertaken was in connection with the Goalando incident which report Mr. Craven, the District Magistrate of Mymensingh has now contradicted, when asked by the special correspondent of the Bengalee as to their correctness, the editor asks why Government does not punish the Englishman and other papers like it for attempting to create race-hatred by publishing such false reports, or whether those papers alone are the objects of its wrath, of which the editors are Indians.

CITIZEN, 2nd February, 1908.

Mymensingh affairs.

64. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 2nd February publishes the following from one of its correspondents at Mymensingh :—

"The search of the Charumihir press took place on January 6th, three days after the police tour through the town and two days after the attack on the patrol.

Here again one is quite at a loss to understand the reason for the search, and certainly the method of carrying it out shows a disgraceful lack of discipline or worse among the policemen conducting the investigation.

I visited the office during my stay in the town, and it presented a very dilapidated appearance. The floor was covered with scattered types. All the 'cases' had been overturned and then thrown back pell-mell upon their stands. Some of the job matter standing had been broken. Almirahs had been forced open carelessly and smashed. Drawers had been ransacked and the documents not needed left scattered in hopeless confusion. The place looked as if a diminutive cyclone had struck it.

Now I wish to be perfectly fair to the police, so I will say at once that the damage, if done by them as alleged, appears to have been accomplished in a spirit of careless, unsystematic and callous mischief, not as a deliberate systematic and thoroughly organised plan of destruction.

It is as if the police conducting the search knew of the prejudice that existed in higher official circles against the journal and considered that nothing much would be done if they were careless in their work. They seem to have planned to 'make a mess of everything' rather than completely to wreck and gut the place.

The spirit was, I should say, one of wanton and contemptuous 'mischief.' That it was possible for them to show this spirit explains why the police are hated and despised with such venom and fury by all quiet law-abiding and respectable men.

If there had been anybody present at the time possessing any force of character he would have been quite justified in ordering these men out of the premises directly they began to overturn the case and scatter the type. If they did not go he would have been justified in turning them out, though the consequences might have entailed personal loss of liberty and a recurrence of the panic cry that Eastern Bengal is bubbling over with sedition.

But instead of a prompt punishment of the men committing this mischief and a proof to those who should have restrained them, the proprietors of the press found that the authorites were rather more than half inclined to disbelieve their account of the matter.

Subsequently, I understand, Mr. Garlic investigated the case, and the day before I visited the press I heard that some of the witnesses of the search had been called to the thana, probably to make their statements. So it looks as though some reparation might ultimately be done.

It is to be hoped that the authorities, in dealing with the matter, will not be misled into treating it as a minor affair, merely because the damage done was small. The fact that such a situation could at all arise is one that calls for report and punishment from the local Government.

As regards direct damage, I do not think it could exceed one or two hundred rupees. But that is a very rough estimate. The main losses in matters of this character are the consequent ones owing to inability to fulfil orders, the costs of setting job work already in hand, and the loss of profits in the Charumihir, which has not been issued since the occurrence. Of these it is impossible, of course, for an outsider to make any estimate.

One of the witnesses to the search, Babu Surendranath Chowdhary, a pleader of the Judge's Court, told me that he was summoned about nine o'clock that Monday morning by a constable to go at once to the Charumihir office as one of the official witnesses of the search. At first he demurred, but ultimately went and found the operations in the hands of Inspector Gopal and six other police inspectors and sub-inspectors together with forty constables and military police. He remained in the verandah and saw the constables upsetting the type cases and scattering the type on the floor. An almirah was thrown on to the floor and a cash box broken open. Inspector Saratsasi and others were then looking over the papers. When the cash box was opened he saw a bag taken out, and he exclaimed: 'Is this a search: it is down-right looting!' He admits, however, that this observation was made generally, and that he did not summon up sufficient courage personally to remonstrate with the Inspectors to keep their men under control. He also said that whenever there was too much uproar an Inspector would turn round and say to the man 'Dont do that.' But he also alleged that the overturning of the cases began immediately after another Inspector had exclaimed 'carry out your orders.' This may however, be coincidence. I think myself it was, since the damage appears to have been done spontaneously rather than on any preconceived plan. The Manager of the press was present and appears to have remonstrated, but the editor was not in the town at the time.

The official case, so far as I could gather relies largely upon the fact that Mr. Craven actually passed the premises while the search was proceeding and saw the Manager in the verandah, but no complaint was made. It is also urged that Military Police could not have been present, since the United Provinces men had not been on duty in the town since the evening of the 4th. Considerable reliance is placed upon the fact that the Charumihir was searched last August or September by the same officers who conducted it on the recent occasion and that no damage was then complained of.

These arguments are hardly very powerful ones. Let us take the first. The absence of direct complaint. It is one that is continually being urged by officials to discount the evidence given of police zulum in Mymensingh.

The explanation is really very simple. So far as the ill-educated people are concerned they are too timid to approach the Magistrate direct, and they allege they were turned away at the thanas. With respect to educated people they have discovered that while the District Magistrate is almost unapproachable save through the intermediary of insolent servants, they can give their statements easily and without friction to the correspondents of Bengali newspapers, and that this non-insulting method of making known their complaints is quite as efficacious as the more difficult and galling one.

A sentiment has grown up that a District Magistrate is hard of approach save to one who will comport himself with sufficient humility to the menials. Also that he is quite unnecessarily cold and suspicious. There is little wonder therefore that the newspaper steps in to do what the district official, through inability to recognise a legitimate grievance, have allowed to pass out of their hands.

As regards the argument that because a place is searched once properly it will always be searched properly . . . Well. Let us leave it there. Comment is altogether too obvious.

In the case of the Charumihir, as in most of the other instances, quite half the bitterness aroused would have been avoided if an unfortunate impression had not sprung up that the superior officials had taken upon themselves the position of counsel for the defence rather than judges impartially considering the allegations brought before them."

HINDUSTANI, 5th February, 1908.

State of affairs in Mymensingh.

65. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 5th February, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate regarding the state of affairs in Mymensingh.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 31st January, 1908.

Moradabad Municipality.

66. While complaining of the bad condition of the roads in Moradabad and of the increase of octroi duty on most articles, the Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 31st January also complains of the negligence of the sanitary officer in allowing the dirt carriages to be driven along public roads at all hours of the day, which puts the public to great inconvenience.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 31st January, 1908.

The post of Octroi Superintendent in Agra.

67. Referring to the resignation of the Octroi Superintendent of Agra, and to the various rumours that are afloat as to the appointment, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 31st January suggests that some capable, experienced and hard working man should be appointed to the post.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 3rd February, 1908.

The post of Octroi Superintendent in Agra.

68. While referring to the acceptance of the resignation of B. Kannumal, Octroi Superintendent, Agra, the Nasim-i-Agra, of the 3rd February, suggests the desirability of appointing two superintendents on the same pay, one to look after the office work, and the other for the traffic work and outposts.

BHARAT JIWAN, 3rd February, 1908.

Roads in Benares.

69. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 3rd February, complains of some of the roads in Benares being in a very bad state of repair, which causes serious inconvenience to the traffic, especially after rain, and asks the municipality to repair them early.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 4th February, 1908.

Rat destruction in Pilibhit.

70. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th February, referring to the rat killing campaign, suggests that the men should not be employed on this work so that the people may see them for fear of occasioning a panic.

CITIZEN, 6th February, 1908.

The octroi tax.

71. Referring to the octroi tax, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 6th February, remarks that he has lately noticed at the railway station and at the octroi office with what severity the imposition of the tax operates upon poor pilgrims.

He describes the tax as iniquitous, as it furnishes officers with a terrible engine for oppressing the poor, the rich generally escaping. It is, he remarks, the poor people who are subjected to delay, harassment, and inconvenience, which increase ten fold on such occasions as the Magh Mela. The tax transgresses all sound canons of taxation, as the return is by no means in proportion to the hardship it entails, and he recommends its abolition so far at least as pilgrims and the personal luggage of passengers are concerned.

In this connection he attacks the policy of political leaders in India, saying that they are led astray, by high sounding phrases of English political life, which have no meaning in connection with the political conditions of India, while they ignore the real needs of the people and suggests that they should draw attention to the hardship of this tax.

72. The editor of the Nasim-i-Agra, in the issue of the 7th February, expresses the suspicion that the list of voters for the election of the Municipal Commissioners in Agra has not been carefully revised and honestly drawn up; and asks that the Magistrate of Agra will give due consideration to this matter.

Municipal voters in Agra.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 7th February, 1908.

(e).—Education.

73. The Baranwál Sahayak (Moradabad), for December 1907 (received on the 5th February), regrets the absolute want of education among Indian women, and exhorts Indians to educate them, as it is the only sure way to their salvation.

Female education.

BARANWAL SAHAYAK, December, 1907.

74. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st February, notes with satisfaction the efforts by the Government to promote education during the last five years in these Provinces.

Education in the United Provinces.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st February, 1908.

75. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd February, publishes a letter appealing for funds for the upkeep of a home for Indian students in Tokio. The appeal is subscribed by forty-three stndents, only one of whom gives his residence as of these provinces.

Japan students.

ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

76. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd February, reproduces a letter addressed to the editor of the Panjabi from R. K. Khanna, an Indian in New York, advising Indian students not to come to America owing to the depression, and to the existing racial prejudice, which makes it difficult for them to live.

Indian students in America.

ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

77. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares) of the 3rd February complains of partiality having been shown by the Punjab syndicate in distributing the recent grant made by the Government to colleges in the Punjab, and asks why other colleges besides the Khalsa College have not been shown the same favour as the Missionary and Muhammadan colleges.

Government grants to colleges in the Punjab.

BHARAT JIWAN, 3rd February, 1908.

78. Al-Bashir (Etawah) of the 4th February, referring to the series of Urdu Reading Books that have been lately introduced into the schools of the United Provinces, remarks that the language in which these books have been written is neither Urdu nor Hindi. The Government only wished that the school books should be free from obscure Arabic, Persian and Sanskrit words, and not that the words of these languages which have found general currency should be eliminated.

He remarks that the inclusion of these books in the school curriculum is a deliberate attempt on the part of its compilers to tamper with the pure Urdu language spoken by Musalman boys, and also that the language in which these books have been written is neither chaste nor correct, and the style is puerile. The stories in the books are, he says, chiefly from Hindi scriptures, by which the reader gets an idea that the Hindus have a monopoly of bravery, nobleness and fellow-feeling.

The editor urges the necessity of revising these books at once.

Urdu School Books.

AL-BASHIR, 4th February, 1908.

79. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th February, comparing the former and present methods of education in India, remarks that the former produced a spirit of self-sacrifice while the latter developes only selfishness and greed.

Education.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 4th February, 1908.

80. Referring to the destruction of two maps by students in the Calcutta Presidency College and the consequent cancellation of the annual sports, and the rustication for six months of a student of the Muir Central College for having written an essay on the present unrest, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th February, remarks that whether these disciplinary measures will have a wholesome effect or the reverse is an open question. So long as gentler measures answer the purpose nothing is gained by driving young men too hard, and by making them confirmed malcontents. It is doubtful whether drastic measures will make young Indian men better or more amenable to discipline, while they will certainly make them more indignant and resentful.

Stendents and politics.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 6th February, 1908.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

MAHA VIDYALAYA SAMACHAR, 23rd December, 1907.

Causes of famine.

81. A correspondent in the Maha Vidyalaya Samáchár (Hardwar), of the 23rd December, while expressing his regret at the distress caused by the prevailing famine in the country, points out that the recrudescence of this terrible calamity is due to the want of useful education among the people, to the excess of litigation and to the consequent poverty of the masses.

He advises his countrymen to curtail litigation, and to spend the money, thus wasted on national institutions for imparting useful education to the masses, which will be remunerative.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st February, 1908.

Famine relief in Azamgarh.

82. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 1st February, complains that no arrangements for famine relief have been made in the Azamgarh district, and the reason is perhaps that the local gentry are not forthcoming to help the Government. The editor suggests the advisability of carrying on famine relief operations through the agency of Government servants.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st February, 1908.

Famine allowance for Government Servants drawing Rs. 30.

83. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st February, notes with satisfaction the order of the Bengal Government about the granting of famine allowances to Government servants getting not more than Rs. 30 a month, and hopes that this will be followed by the Government of these Provinces too.

MASHRIQ, 4th February, 1908.

Causes of famine.

84. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 4th February, points out that the chief causes of scarcity of grain and of famine in this country are the disregard and indifference of its people towards the improved scientific methods of agriculture, the exhaustion of the productive power of the soil and the enormons export of grain from the country, and remarks that a removal of these causes will surely be conducive to restore prosperity in the land.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 29th January, 1908.

Co-operative Credit Societies.

85. Commenting on the report on the work of Co-operative Credit Societies in the United Provinces, the editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 29th January, that it shows a most encouraging sign proving that the people are awakening to the importance of helping one another—of helping the agriculturist who is a chronic debtor to improve his position, and to live in ease and comfort.

He notices with interest the society in Unao, and the Benares Silk Weavers' association.

ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

Irrigation at Lakhimpur.

86. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), publishes in the issue of the 2nd February, a letter from Sita Rama, Vakil, High Court, in which the latter mentions a very important service to the cause of irrigation in Kheri which has been rendered by Pandit Mata Din, Brahmin Bhatt of Kheri.

Pandit Mata Din in making a channel from Chahmalpur to Shahpur in connection with the river Ul which flows through Kheri has, he says, performed not only an important service, but has bestowed incalculable benefit to Kheri cultivators. The writer closes his letter with a hope that the meritorious services of Pandit Mata Din will be properly noticed by the Government.

(g).—General.

ARYA MITRA, 1st February, 1908.

The Swadeshi movement.

87. A correspondent in the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st February, while deploring the backwardness of the United Provinces in regard to the Swadeshi movement, urges upon its inhabitants the desirability of their devoting all their energies in this direction at such an opportune time, when His Honour Sir John Hewett, the most ardent friend and advocate of the Swadeshi movement, is at the head of the administration.

ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR, December, 1907.

Government printing work and local presses.

88. The Zamindar-wa-Kashtkar (Bijnor), for December (received on the 5th February), complains of the United Provinces Government taking away the printing of all official forms etc. from the local presses and entrusting it to the Government Press where their printing is comparatively more expensive, as reflecting the disfavour of Government towards the local presses. The editor suggests the desirability of all such printing work being entrusted to the local presses as usual.

89. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 30th January, commends the tactful manner in which His Excellency the Governor of Bombay is fostering peaceful administration in his presidency by holding conferences with Indian journalists, which is said to have produced some effect even upon the most ardent advocates of boycott. The editor expresses a hope that this mild policy of the Government will have a very desirable effect upon those editors who for the sake of increasing the circulation of their papers often indulge in wild talk.

Sir George Clarke and the Bombay editors.

ANAND, 30th January, 1908.

90. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 4th February, condemns the proposals of taking declarations from newspaper editors, and for confiscating the presses in which seditious papers are printed, urging that these measures are likely to retard the progress of journalism in India.

Government and Journalism.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 4th February, 1908.

91. Referring to the expression of deep regret at the premature retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson by the Civil and Military Gazette and by the Pioneer, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 31st January, asks if these hard-hearted Anglo-Indian papers felt any grief when Sir Denzil Ibbetson hurled the thunderbolt of his injustice upon Lala Lajpat Rai. The editor expresses disapproval of their spirit, in exulting over Indian patriots coming to trouble, but while sympathising with His Honour for his physical sufferings, states that he is inclined to attribute his retirement to other causes. "Eminently virtuous or evil deeds bear fruit in this world itself within three years, months, fortnights or days."

Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson.

ABHYUDAYA, 31st January, 1908.

92. Referring to the retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson, the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st February, remarks that not only the Punjabis, but all the Indians will remember for ever His Honour's administration, for it was during his incumbency that the Rawalpindi and Lahore sedition cases, the deportation of Lala Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh and similar incidents took place.

Retirement of Sir Denzil Ibbetson.

ARYA MITRA, 1st February, 1908.

93. The Maha Vidyalaya Samachar (Hardwar), of the 8th December, regrets that the cocaine habit is on the increase in Delhi, Dehra Dun, and Aligarh, and desires the police and the excise officers to take special care to stop its import and use in these places.

Illicit sale of cocaine.

MAHA VIDYALAYA SAMACHAR, 8th December, 1907.

94. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 30th January, says that Mr. Tilak is reported to have recently thanked the Government, and to have pledged his support to its plague measures, which has caused a stir in the Extremist circles, who declare this report to be baseless. The editor further states that the Moderates who hold the Extremists to be hostile to the Government are exulting over this incident and read in it a defeat of Mr. Tilak, and remarks that this is not the real truth since, with all their failings, the Extremists are never opposed to the Government but only to its evils.

Mr. Tilak and the Government.

ANAND, 30th January, 1908.

95. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st February, referring to the complaints in the Registration Department, remarks that this can be easily removed if competent men of good family are appointed as Sub-Registrars.

Registration.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st February, 1908.

96. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) in the issue of the 2nd February refers to a serious accident which took place in the City Road on Tuesday morning, the 28th January, when a young boy walking along the City Road was struck by a bullet and had the bone of his leg shattered.

He remarks that though nothing has been found out yet, there ought to be no difficulty in finding out the owner of the gun, and that he should be punished since he has not had the courage of owning to the accident.

A shooting accident at Allahabad.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd February, 1908.

97. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th February, referring to the frequent outrages on Hindu women, remarks that the Hindus welcomed the British rule simply because it protected their lives and honour, but now it is becoming lax in performing its duties.

The editor is of opinion that the Government should pay special attention to this.

Outrages on Hindu women.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 4th February, 1908.

HIND, 6th February, 1908.

A dakaiti on the railway near Calcutta.

98. Referring to a dakaiti recently committed on a railway pay clerk at Dalhod involving a loss of Rs. 27,000 cash, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 6th February, remarks that it is a shameful thing in a country that has to pay so richly for military protection.

V.—Legislation.

ABHYUDAYA, 31st January, 1908.

Proposed amendments in the Press Act.

99. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 31st January, referring on the authority of the Statesman to the proposed amendments in the Press Act regarding the registration of the names of editors, the taking of sureties from them and the confiscation of any press publishing seditious matter, says that the first of these provisions although in no way harmful, is uncalled for, since in almost all the recent newspaper prosecutions except in the Bande Mataram case, for which there were special reasons, the editors have not shirked their responsibility, and since semi-educated printers are prepared to go to jail, educated editors will never hesitate to do so for their convictions. As to the last two provisions the editor urges that they ought to be opposed, and remarks that, had the Government employed the same means which it is adopting to suppress unrest in the country, to the removal of its causes, it would have been far more successful in its object : but as it is, its repressive policy is producing results quite the reverse of its expectations, and is further aggravating the unrest which it seeks to suppress, by such strong and rigorous measures.

HINDOSTHAN, 7th February, 1908.

Legislation against mendicancy.

100. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 7th February, suggests the desirability of legislation being undertaken to penalize begging by able-bodied men, as it encourages idleness in the people.

VI.—Railway.

ROHILKHAND, GAZETTE, 1st February, 1908.

Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

101. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st February, notes with regret the grievances of the Indian employés of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and hopes that they will be removed early.

ADVOCATE, 2nd February, 1908.

Grievances of the Indian guards on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

102. Referring to the grievances of the Indian guards of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 2nd February, remarks that when he drew the attention of the Railway Administration to the partiality of their treatment of the European subordinates as compared with their treatment of Indians, he did not for a moment suspect that the administration was capable of improving the prospects of its European employés at the cost of the poorly paid Indian staff, but that his fears have been more than confirmed by the perusal of circular No. 2 of 1908.

According to this he sees that Class C of Guards has been abolished, and in Class B there has been no improvement, these two classes being the only ones open to the native of the soil, so that the pay of Indians instead of being increased has been decreased.

He remarks that in increasing the scale of pay of the European and Eurasian guards and reducing that of Indian guards, no regard has been paid to the clear orders of Government that Indian employés should get two-thirds of the pay of the European employés of the same grade and that the injustice done to the Indian guard is so palpable that it is not necessary to dilate. Finally he expresses the opinion that the discontent on the part of the Indian guards can prove as injurious to the Railway Administration as the threatened discontent among European guards was likely to be, and he hopes that the Railway Board will see that there is no cause of discontent left in any section of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway employés, particularly any based on class consideration.

HINDUSTANI, 5th February, 1908.

Complaints of Indian guards of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

103. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 5th February, while referring to the sanction of the increase of pay and allowances of the European and Eurasian guards, reproduces the views regarding the complaints of the Indian guards on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway from the Advocate.

104. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 8th February, notes with commendation the services of Mr. P. Rainier to the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and hopes that he may be retained for sometime in charge of the line, and that if this is not done the title of C. I. E. may be conferred upon him, as on Mr. Pope, his predecessor.

Mr. Rainier.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 8th February, 1908.

105. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 31st January, complains of the great inconvenience felt by pardah-nashin women for want of a female waiting-room at the Moradabad railway station, and asks the railway authorities to supply the deficiency.

Female waiting-room at Moradabad station.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 31st January, 1908.

106. A correspondent in the Hind (Lucknow), of the 6th February, while expressing his regret at the outrageous conduct of Europeans towards Indian women travelling in railways, objects to reserving intermediate compartments for Indian females in the same carriage in which some compartments are reserved for Europeans or Eurasains and asks the Railway Board to keep Indian female compartments apart from those of the Europeans.

Female compartments in railways.

HIND, 6th February, 1908.

VII.—Post Office.

107. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 1st February, deprecates the introduction of the V.-P. P. system between England and India on the ground that the Customs staff would have to be increased and that the public would be inconvenienced.

The V.-P. P. system between England and India.

HINDOSTHAN, 1st February, 1908.

108. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 2nd February, deprecates the adoption of the V.-P. P. system between England and India.

The V.-P. P. system between England and India.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 2nd February, 1908.

109. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd February remarks that there must be something wanting in the present system of sorting in the Post Office at Allahabad, as letters meant for local delivery are always finding their way into the Railway Mail Service.

Defective sorting in the Allahabad Post Office.

CITIZEN, 2nd February, 1908.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

110. The Zamindar-wa-Kashtkar (Bijnor), for December (received on the 5th February), while expressing its regret at the misuse of wakf property, asks the Government not to fail to reform this abuse simply because it is a question of religion.

The editor suggests that the Government should make some provision in section 539 of Civil Procedure Code to deal with all complaints received against the misuse of such property.

Wakf.

ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR, December, 1907.

111. The editor of Al-Islam (Aligarh), in the issue of the 20th December (received on the 5th February), enters into a religious controversy with the editor of the Musáfir (Agra), and refutes the charges brought by him against Muhammadanism.

Al-Islam* versus the Musafir.

AL-ISLAM, 20th December, 1907.

112. A correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 1st February, proposes that the whole of the Jain community should refrain from dealing in foreign-made goods, and from exporting grain to England, so that the English merchants finding their interest at stake, may find it worth their while to bring pressure to bear upon the Indian Government, and thereby make it do justice to the Jains by giving up the intention to construct bungalows on their sacred Hill.

The Paras Nath Hill.

JAIN GAZETTE, 1st February, 1908.

113. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st February, complains that the persecution of the Arya Samajists was engineered by the Musalmans, who detest the Aryas as they attack their religion, and that they are helped by Anglo-Indian officers and newspapers.

Arya Samaj and the Musalmans.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st February, 1908.

114. Referring to the Magh Mela, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 2nd February, remarks that his suggestions for the provision of temporary sheds for the shelter of pilgrims, and the supervision of foodstuffs have not been acted upon, and that there is another matter which should engage the attention of the authorities as well as of the public.

The Magh Mela.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd February, 1908.

There should, he suggests, be an intelligence office opened on the mela grounds with a number of volunteers, who should be in a position to give all sorts of information to the public visiting the mela.

People have been seen wandering about not knowing the road to a particular panda or ghat. Young children are often separated from their mothers and go about disconsolately searching for them.

He remarks that on such occasions emigration agents, coolie recruiters and men of bad character take advantage of a large mela like this to decoy away people, specially young women, and ruin them. The establishment of an intelligence office where people can get correct information, and if necessary be helped to reach their destination would be of great assistance to poor ignorant pilgrims.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

HIND, 6th February, 1908.

Strike of telegraph peons in Calcutta.

115. Referring to the strike of the Telegraph peons in Calcutta, owing to the enforcement of new rules, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 6th February, remarks that it will be much better if before introducing any new system, the Government make proper enquiries to acquaint itself with the public opinion on that measure and thereby avoid such unpleasant occurrences.

ALLAHABAD: The 10th February, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 7 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 15th February, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign :
1.	The Anglo-Russian Convention and Amir's subsidy	159
2.	The Anglo-Russian Convention ...	159
3.	The Anglo-Russian Convention ...	159
4.	The Anglo-Russian Convention ...	159
5.	Macedonia	159
6.	Sufferings of Muhammadans in Maeedonia	159
7.	The Nationalist movement in Egypt ...	159
8.	The Chinese Railway in Manchuria ...	160
9.	The Hedjaz Railway	160
10.	State of affairs in Morocco	160
11.	The Lisbon tragedy	160
12.	The Lisbon tragedy	161
	(b)—Home :
13.	Revival of the Congress	161
14.	The Surat Congress	161
15.	The Surat Congress	161
16.	The future of the Congress	161
17.	The Surat Congress	161
18.	The King-Emperor's speech	161
19.	The King-Emperor's speech	162
20.	The United Provinces Second Provincial Conference	162
21.	The ensuing Provincial Conference ...	162
22.	The coming Provincial Conference ...	162
23.	The Provincial Conference ...	162
24.	The Provincial Conference	162
25.	United Provinces Legislative Council reform scheme	162
26.	The Proposed Reforms	162
27.	The Reform Scheme	163
28.	Decoration of Ajit Singh	163
29.	Decoration of Ajit Singh	163
30.	Indians in the Transvaal	163
31.	Indians in the Transvaal	163
32.	Indians in the Transvaal	163
33.	Indians in the Transvaal	163
34.	Indians in the Transvaal	163
35.	Indians in the Transvaal	164
36.	Indians in the Transvaal	164
37.	Indians in the Transvaal	164
38.	Indians in the Transvaal	164
39.	Indians in the Transvaal	164
40.	Indians in the Transvaal	164
41.	Indians in the Transvaal	164
42.	Lord Curzon in Parliament	164
43.	India in Parliament	165
44.	India in Parliament	165
45.	Regeneration of India	165
46.	Status of Indian Christians ...	165
47.	The Decentralization Commission ...	165
48.	India past and present	166
49.	The suffragettes and Indian Politics ...	166
50.	Muhammadans and politics	166
51.	Goal of patriotism	166
52.	What is our goal ?	166
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
53.	Afghanistan	166
54	Zakka Khel expedition	167
	III.—NATIVE STATES.
55.	Europeans in Native States	167
56.	Maharaja of Kapurthala's marriage ...	167
57.	Maharaja of Kapurthala's marriage ...	167
58.	Maharaja of Kapurthala's marriage ...	167
	IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
	(a) Judicial and Revenue :
59.	Conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain ...	167
60.	Conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain ...	167
61.	Conviction of the Bengal rape case ...	167

		Page.
62.	Conviction of the Hari Kishore ...	167
63.	Decision in a murder case	167
64.	The judge and jury in India	168
65.	The libel case of the Khichri Samachar ...	168
66.	Arrangement on the retirement of Babu Baij Nath Sahai, Sahab	168
67.	Famine and Government revenue ...	168
68.	Moharram holidays in the Allahabad High Court	168
69.	Suits against Government officers for recovery of damages	168
70	Batwara in the Saharanpur district ...	168
71.	Government revenue	168
	(b)—Police :
72.	Whitewashing the police	168
	(c)—Finance and Taxation :
	Nil.
	(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :
73.	The Moradabad Municipality	169
74.	The Moradabad Municipality	169
75.	The Benares Municipality	169
76.	The Benares Municipality	169
77.	Municipal tax in Lahore	169
78.	Octroi on food stuffs	169
79.	Concessions in the water tax in Allahabad	169
80.	Grant of requests for building by Municipal Boards	169
81.	Octroi tax on corn	169
	(e)—Education :
82.	The school leaving certificate ...	170
83.	The school leaving certificate ,,	170
84.	The Srinagar Anglo-Vernacular Middle School	170
85.	Indian and Japanese systems of education	170
86.	Sir Aga Khan's visit to Aligarh College	170
87.	Musalmans and Engineering... ...	170
88.	Secondary Education in the United Provinces	170
89.	Rustication of a M. A. class student ...	171
90.	Religious education in India ...	171
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :
91.	Famine	171
92.	His Honour and the famine	171
93.	Famine relief	171
94.	Private relief arrangements in Lahore ...	171
95.	Famine	171
96.	Lala Lajpat Rai's appeal for famine funds	171
97.	The King-Emperor and the people of India	171
98.	Irrigation	171
	(g)—General :
99.	The Allahabad shooting incident ...	172
100.	The Allahabad shooting incident ...	172
101.	How to improve the production of country sugar	172
102.	The sugar industry and canal water rates	172
103.	Native Military Officers	172
104.	3rd Queen's Own Gurkha Rifles ...	172
105.	Soldier Clerks	172
106.	Material progress of India	172
107.	Economic condition of India ...	173
108.	Union between Hindus and Muhammadans	173
109.	The Arms Act	173
110.	The Agra Alms-house	173
111.	Urdu and Hindi and common scripts ...	173
112.	Chastisement of Mr. Siri Lal, Judge ...	173
113.	Muhammadan holidays	174
114.	Medical appointments in India ...	174
115.	Disunion is the cause of India's troubles	174
116.	A new order of the Bengal Government...	174
117.	The Etawah incident	174
118.	Sub-Registrarship	175
119.	Quarrel between a magistrate and a police constable	175
120.	Government servants shareholders in Swadeshi companies	175
121.	Condition of the masses	175
	V.—LEGISLATION.
122.	Proposed amendment in the Press Act ...	175
123.	Proposed amendment in the Press Act ...	175
124.	Life Insurance legislation	175
	VI.—RAILWAY.
125.	Railway collisions	175
126.	The Rohilkhand Kumaun Railway ...	176
127.	Complaints against Rohilkhand Kumaun Railway	176
128.	Complaint against Railway officials ...	176
129.	Cawnpore level crossing	176
130.	Railway accidents	176
131.	Abolition of toll	176
132.	The Station Master of Tajpur ...	176
133.	Railway thefts	176
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
134.	Railway Mail Service	176
135.	Benares City Post Office	176
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
136.	The Magh Mela	176
137.	The Megh Mela	177
138.	The Musafir versus Al-Islam ...	177
139.	The ensuing Provincial Social Conference	177
140.	The Ardhodaya volunteers	177
141.	The Ardhodaya volunteers	177
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
142.	Life of Bhishma	177

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. Referring to the ratification of the Anglo-Russian Convention and to the strong position of Afghanistan, the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th February, remarks that there appears to be no reason why the annual subsidy should still be paid to enrich the treasury of the Amir, especially when India stands in sad need of help owing to plague and famine.

The Anglo-Russian Convention and Amir's subsidy.

UNION GAZETTE, 7th February, 1908.

2. Referring to the various treatises concluded between different European Powers since the Russo-Japan war, the editor of the Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), in the issue of the 8th February, alludes to the Anglo-Russian Convention, and remarks that, unless a convention be made between England and Turkey, the convention between Russia and England will not be of any good to Asiatic Powers.

The Sultan of Turkey may do his best to satisfy his Christian subjects, but he can never dissuade Europe from calling him a despotic and cruel ruler.

The Anglo-Russian Convention.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 8th February, 1908.

3. Referring to Lord Ripon's remarks on the Anglo-Russian Convention the Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi) of the 10th February writes:—

"The Amir has maintained a strict silence with reference to this Convention. But for how long? If matters concerning the frontier grow complicated in connection with this convention, we feel no hesitation in saying that the Russian Government has played a successful trick, for Russia has long been considering the means whereby to weaken the Amir's power in order to benefit herself.

In view of these circumstances we advise the Government to act with sufficient foresight, as the entire responsibility of the situation rests upon its shoulders. The British Government should adopt such a policy as may make for peace without displeasing the Amir."

The Anglo-Russian Convention.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 10th February, 1908.

4. Referring to the delay of the Amir in giving his assent to the terms of the Anglo-Russian Convention, the Al-Bashir (Etawah) of the 11th February, remarks that the British Government ought to have consulted the Amir before the terms of the convention were ratified.

Lord Curzon says that the ratification of the convention will be altogether a gain to Russia, and the editor therefore questions the good the British Government has accomplished in entering into this convention with Russia.

The Anglo-Russian Convention.

AL-BASHIR, 11th February, 1908.

5. Referring to the tension of feeling between Turkey and England regarding the administration of the former in Macedonia, the Sipahi (Cawnpore) for January, (received on the 14th February), expresses a hope that the British Government will not go to war with Turkey. The editor remarks that England should proceed most cautiously in the matter, and should not be hoodwinked by the tricks of other European Powers, for if it comes to fighting the Turks will fight to the bitter end, since they have often been hard pressed by European aggression.

Macedonia.

SIPAHI, January, 1908.

6. Referring to the oppressive treatment of the Muhammadans in Macedonia at the hands of Europeans, the Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi) of the 10th February prays the British Government to adopt a policy of conciliation.

Sufferings of Muhammadans in Macedonia.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 10th February, 1908.

7. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for January, contains an article entitled "Egypt as I saw it" by Mr. Parmeshwar Lal, M.A., Barrister-at-law, in which the writer sketches the rise of British influence in Egypt in the following words:—"It was the royal spendthrift Ismail Pasha who, in his infatuation for things occidental, was led to pledge the credit of his country in the hands of the usurers of Europe . . . . . Under this incapable ruler the usurers of Europe had everything as they wanted. A commission of liquidation was appointed that claimed the control of the entire revenue of Egypt. A national party had arisen in the country about this time. This party demanded the introduction of constitutional government. The demand for parliamentary institutions had at one time the support of England.

The Nationalist movement in Egypt.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, January, 1908.

But the parliamentary party and the representatives of the European money-lenders divided on the control of finance. . . . . .

The doom of the Nationalist party was sealed . . . . .

Under the more liberal foreign policy that came in France after the fall of Gambetta the French nation could not be induced to take part in the enslavement of Egypt, but the British people were represented in Egypt by Sir Charles Malet, who was entirely in the hands of Sir Auckland Colvin, the financial controller. Colvin had great influence at that time on "honest" John Morley . . . . . .

Inflammatory articles inspired by Colvin appeared in honest John's paper, and warped the more honest nature of the then prime minister of England . . . . . The land hunger of the Anglo-Indian is well known, and Morley with his theories was made a tool of by the astute set that arose out of the combination of Anglo-Indianism and the English Foreign office. Morley in his turn victimised Gladstone, and this led to the bombardment of Alexandria, and the crushing out of Nationalist aspirations under so noted a radical and a lover of freedom as the late Mr. Gladstone was supposed to be . . . . . .

The English became virtual masters of the country. But the French were always jealous of English power and exercised a surveillance over the government that kept the British from going too far astray. The conclusion of entente cordiale between England and France has changed all this. The English are to have a free hand in Egypt on condition of the French being given equal freedom to rob the other North African kingdoms, but another instance of the international law of Europe being merely the code of honour among thieves . . . . . Before that period the English had no free hand in the country. Since then they have it. Denshawi and indictment of the Arabian language have followed."

SIPAHI, January, 1908.

The Chinese Railway in Manchuria.

8. Referring to the misunderstanding between Japan and China in connection with the Chinese claim to construct a railway in Manchuria, the Sipahi (Cawnpore), for January, (received on the 14th February), says that some European Power must have incited China to make such a demand because the Europeans are very much afraid of the influence of Japan over China affecting their interests.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 8th February, 1908.

The Hedjaz Railway.

9. While reproducing from the Watan (Lahore), an article of the Times (London), entitled "From Damascus to Batook" in which the writer says that the Hedjaz Railway will endanger the English influence in Egypt, because Pan-Islamism has been established in opposition to England there, the Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th February, remarks that it is entirely a foolish fear, as the Sultan never intends to go to war against any power. He only means to strengthen his own position.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

State of affairs in Morocco.

10. Referring to the onslaught and crusades which he says are carried on against the Christians by the Muhammadans in Morocco, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th February, remarks that the times are changed and that it is useless now to attempt to spread Islam by means of the sword. It remains yet to be seen whether the Muhammadans of India, who prefer the Christian Government to their own, will now help and sympathise with Christians or with their own brethren, the Muhammadans of Morocco.

SWARAJYA, 8th February, 1908.

The Lisbon tragedy.

11. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 8th February, referring to the murder of the King and the Crown Prince of Portugal, says that this is the result of oppression and tyranny wrought by the King on his people. He may not have been personally a bad man, but he supported an oppressive Government and failed to give satisfaction to his people, hence his miserable end. This cannot fail to have a salutary effect on all rulers who allow themselves to be dominated by unprincipled flatterers who oppress the people. It is as bad for a king to entrust the government of his country to persons who are bent on ruining it for their personal ends as being tyrannous himself. The editor concludes by saying that all the kings who have hitherto failed to satisfy their subjects, should take a hint from this, and treat their subjects like their own children and try to inspire in them feelings of loyalty.

12. Referring to the assassination of the King and the Crown Prince of Portugal, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 11th February, says that it is entirely foolish of rulers to be so fascinated with the charms of monarchy, seeing that they are always liable to assassination and other such dangers, especially when they can prevent such mishaps by adopting a republican government.

The Lisbon tragedy.

MASHRIQ, 11th February, 1908.

(b).—Home.

13. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 4th February, declares that the Congress can be revived if the present difficulties can be overcome, and expresses the hope that the well wishers of the country will not be disheartened by any obstacles, and that they will not rest until they have again revived the Congress and made it a more practical institution than it has been hitherto.

Revival of the Congress.

MOHINI, 4th February, 1908.

14. Referring to the fiasco in the Surat Congress, the Maha Vidyalaya Samachar (Hardwar), of the 8th February, remarks that such painful incidents are mainly due to want of education in the country, and because there is no nationality in India, every community seeking after its own interests, and that unless the people are educated and form themselves into one nation it is entirely foolish to long for Swaraj and hope that the Government will grant them their rights.

The Surat Congress.

MAHA VIDYALAYA SAMACHAR, 8th February, 1908.

15. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th February, notes with regret that the controversy about the Surat Congress fiasco is still going on in the press and on the platform, which it apprehends, is not calculated to lead to beneficial results. The editor accordingly urges thei necessity of both the parties making up their differences and deciding on the future action, because unless the masses are won over to lend their support to the Congress, the progress of the country as a whole is impossible. He expresses the opinion that the leaders should carry on agitation and educate public opinion from village to village by means of the vernaculars of the country, and particularly Hindi which the masses understand ; that they should persuade wealthy men to buy up stores of food grain from cultivators and to sell it to poorer classes at cheaper rates in times of famine, that they should by all means in their power encourage the development of native arts and industries ; and lastly they should introduce healthy social reforms side by side with political ones.

The Surat Congress.

ARYA MITRA, 8th February, 1908.

16. In a contributed article in the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 13th February, entitled " The Future of the Congress," the writer urges the necessity of holding the adjourned session of the Congress at an early date, so that the Congress meeting to be held in December 1908 may be called correctly the twenty-fourth session of the Congress, and that the fiasco of the last year may be the sooner forgotten. He notes that the ideal of the Congress in the future should be that hitherto held, of self-government within the empire, and he expressed dissatisfaction with the proposed reforms and with the manner in which they are put forward.

The future of the Congress.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 13th February, 1908.

17. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 14th February, giving the Extremist's version of the fiasco in the Surat Congress, remarks that the selfishness of the Moderates has nipped in the bud the glorious career of the National Congress.

The Surat Congress.

OUDH AKHBAR, 14th February, 1908.

18. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 6th February, nctes with regret that the King-Emperor made no mention of the sufferings of the Indians in the Transvaal in his speech at the reopening of Parliament, and remarks that the Liberal government can best be compared with the effete rule of Muhammad Shah, in whose time all the provinces of India asserted their independence, while under the Liberal ministry the colonies are becoming its spoiled pets.

The King-Emperor's speech.

ANAND, 6th February, 1908.

SWARAJYA, 8th February, 1908.

The King-Emperor's speech.

19. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 8th February complains that the King-Emperor did not make in his speech to the Parliament any reference to the Nadir Shahi (oppressive) rule of his representatives in India, or to the deportation of innocent persons nor to the sufferings of the Indians in the Transvaal, and he remarks that a passing allusion to these incidents would have had a soothing effect on the people.

MOHINI, 4th February, 1908.

The United Provinces second Provincial conference.

20. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 4th February, says that the United Provinces first Provincial Conference was not a success, owing to the fact that the so-called leaders disregarded public opinion and carried matters high-handedly. The editor points out that this year the conference is to be held in Lucknow which is not so politically advanced as Allahabad, and it is accordingly to be feared that the so-called leaders will have the upper hand in its affairs this time too. He remarks that, if the Conference is to be made a success, harmony must prevail and public opinion must not be entirely set at nought.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

The ensuing Provincial Conference.

21. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, objects to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya presiding over the deliberations of the ensuing Provincial Conference to be held in Lucknow on the 29th February, and suggests that some rais of the United Provinces should be selected to preside.

ADVOCATE, 9th February, 1908.

The coming Provincial Conference.

22. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th February, refers to the Provincial Conference which is timed to take place at the end of February at Lucknow, and asks the public to take a real interest in its deliberations.

The editor notes that it proposes to deal with the Government reform scheme in the hope that, though too late for the Local Government, the Government of India will consider its suggestions. It is also expected to give advice to the Decentralization Commission. He notes that an important subject will be taken up in connection with what is known as the Amla class in Government service.

HINDUSTANI, 12th February, 1908.

The Provincial Conference.

23. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 12th February, reproduces the views of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th February about the coming Provincial Conference.

CITIZEN, 15th February, 1908.

The Provincial Conference.

24. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad) notes in the issue of the 15th February that the Provincial Conference have omitted to include a swadeshi resolution in their programme, remarking that this was what caused the wreck of the Congress at Surat.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 31st January, 1908.

United Provinces Legislative Council reform scheme.

25. The Almora Akhbar of the 31st January (received on the 14th February), expresses a hope that the claims for representation of the Kumaun division will not be lost sight of in the reform scheme for the United Provinces Legislative Council.

ADVOCATE, 6th February, 1908.

The Proposed Reforms.

26. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 6th February, reproduces several extracts from the views expressed on the reform scheme by the Hon'ble Rai Nihal Chand Bahadur, and Raja Rampal Singh of Kori-Sidhauli. Of these gentlemen he remarks that they enjoy the confidence both of the Government and the people, that both are respected for their ability, sincerity of purpose and broadmindedness, and that neither of them can be accused of ever being against the Government.

Dealing with the evidence of the former, the editor states that the Hon'ble Rai Sahib's observations on the desire of the Government to keep the professional classes from the Councils ought to carry weight with the Government of India, and convince it that even the Moghal Emperors or the earlier British rulers have not been guilty of showing such prejudice as is now being exhibited.

Both gentlemen have, he says, dealt with the question of class representation at length, and both agree with the views of the other leaders of the Hindu community that election on class basis is likely to prove very mischievous.

The editor concludes by expressing the hope that Government will listen to these notes of warning, and not sanction a scheme which cannot but encourage racial feeling, and which on one hand cannot fully satisfy Muhammadan claims, because the number of seats to be reserved for Muhammadan minority in the Councils has not been definitely fixed, and on the other hand will create a feeling of insecurity in the minds of the mass of the Hindu population, who have come to believe that the scheme aims at crushing their influence in the Councils of the empire.

27. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 12th February, reproduces the comments of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th February, on the reform scheme.

The Reform Scheme.

HINDUSTANI, 12th February, 1908.

28. Alluding to the decoration of Sardar Ajit Singh in the Surat National Conference the editor of the Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), in the issue of the 8th February remarks that it was not of the nature of a regal coronation, but simply an expression of the joy felt by the nation and of their respect for political offenders. He says that the officials need not be exercised about the event, which is nothing extraordinary.

Decoration of Ajit Singh.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 8th February, 1908.

29. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th February, refers to Sardar Ajit Singh's coronation at the Surat Congress and publishes without any comments the speech he delivered acknowledging of the honour done to him.

Decoration of Ajit Singh.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th February, 1908.

30. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for January (received on the 14th February), notes with gratification the compromise arrived at in the Transvaal as regards the treatment of Indians residing there, and says that it was induced by the determined and persevering spirit displayed by them and the unity with which both Hindus and Muhammadans worked there. The editor remarks that union is strength and suggests that the Indians in this country should take a lesson in unity from Transvaal Indians.

Indians in the Transvaal.

SIPAHI, January, 1908.

31. While deploring the sufferings of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Rástgo (Allahabad), of the 7th February, expresses its satisfaction at the compromise made by the Transvaal Government. Although this compromise is no success as yet, it may serve as a step towards future success, and it is hoped that the Transvaal Indians will take similar steps to achieve success in all other matters also.

Indians in the Transvaal.

RASTGO, 7th February, 1908.

He advises Indians at home to profit by the example set by their brethren in the Transvaal, and, seeing what wonderful success their combined efforts have obtained, they should give up their quarrels and personal differences and make one united effort to obtain the salvation of their country.

32. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 7th February, says that the compromise arrived at in the Transvaal as regards the Indian situation there is a triumph for the fortitude, determination and self-respect of the Indian residents. The editor notes that the Indians are ill-treated in the colonies, particularly because the colonists know that the former have lost all self-respect and are ill-treated in their own country. If the British Government had regarded the Indians as equal to its other subjects of the empire, the colonists would never have ventured to subject them to humiliating indignities, nor would Indians have put up with them quietly. He remarks that, in order to protect their honour in other countries, Indians ought to make themselves respected in their own country by increasing their power through unity, spread of education and industrial development.

Indians in the Transvaal.

ABHYUDAYA, 7th February, 1908.

33. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 8th February, expresses its satisfaction at the removal of the Asiatic disabilities in the Transvaal, and remarks that two important inferences can be drawn from this bitter controversy:—the growing consciousness of national unity and self-respect, and the willingness of the Imperial Government to recognise the rights of the people of India as citizens of the British Empire, and to give them those rights for which they have proved themselves fit.

Indians in the Transvaal.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 8th February, 1908.

34. While commending the manliness of the Transvaal Indians in bravely encountering all difficulties, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 8th February, congratulates them on having obtained a compromise from the Transvaal Government. Their passive resistance has not only obtained success for them, but has also preserved the honour of India.

Indians in the Transvaal.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

ADVOCATE, 9th February, 1908.

35. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th February, expresses cordial approval of Lord Curzon's suggestion recently in the debate in the House of Lords about the position of the Transvaal Indians.

Indians in the Transvaal.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 10th February, 1908.

36. Referring to the resolutions for boycotting all British goods passed at the meetings held in Bombay and Madras as a protest against the persecution of Indians in the Transvaal, the Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi) of the 10th February, deplores the utter indifference shown by the Imperial Government in this matter, and remarks that Indians can never prosper and make any progress until they unite and form one nationality.

Indians in the Transvaal.

HINDI HINDOSTHAN, 11th February, 1908.

37. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakánkar), of the 11th February, notes with satisfaction the settlement of the Indian question in the Transvaal, and remarks that it was the result of the firm determination and tolerant spirit shown by the British Indians residing there. The editor further remarks that the Transvaal Government, bearing in mind that Indians are by nature loyal and law-abiding and understand their rights as British subjects, ought always to treat Indians well and with justice.

Indians in the Transvaal.

HIND, 13th February, 1908.

38. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 13th February, devotes five columns to an article entitled "Indians in the Transvaal" in which the editor deplores the sufferings and miserable condition of his brethren at the hands of the Transvaalers, and asks the Government to consider the disgraceful treatment of Indians in the Transvaal as they depend entirely on its help.

Indians in the Transvaal.

SWARAJYA, 8th February, 1908.

39. The Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 8th February notes with satisfaction the success attained by the Transvaal Indians which it ascribes solely to passive resistance. The editor extols their patience and fortitude and hopes that the Indians will not fail to derive a useful lesson from this controversy, as they have seen that memorials, appeals, petitions and protests have all failed to have any effect on their apathetic Government. The partition of Bengal has been repeatedly pronounced a settled fact, notwithstanding the storm of criticism and indignation raised, which has not even yet subsided. Such grave incidents have, he says, compelled the people to adopt the most effective weapon in their armoury,—passive resistance, which is in no way unconstitutional. The editor in conclusion remarks that what has been done so successfully by a handful of men in a distant country can be done by the people of this country too and with great success.

Indians in the Transvaal.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th February, 1908.

40. Referring to the compromise effected in South Africa regarding the Indian question, the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th February has the following :—

"For the second time in about half a dozen years the Boers have been beaten, once in a physical struggle by the British. In that defeat the Boers retained all the honours of war as well as the admiration of the world. The second was a moral struggle and in this the Boers have been defeated by the much despised Asiatics. The honours this time rest with the winners."

The editor deduces a lesson from the successful issue that the Moderate system of constitutional agitation, which he says was that adopted by Mr. Gandhi in South Africa, has been vindicated.

Indians in the Transvaal.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 13th February, 1908.

41. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 13th February, expresses condemnation of the few malcontents in the Transvaal who, after the compromise has been effected, have objected to accept the conditions and describes them as the Extremists of the Transvaal Indian party.

Lord Curzon in Parliament.

ANAND, 6th February, 1908.

42. Referring to the entry of Lord Curzon into the House of Lords, the Anand (Lucknow), of the 6th February, remarks that His Lordship left such a legacy in India that Indians and Europeans alike find themselves very hard pressed, and that it now remains to be seen what he will do in the House of Lords.

43. The Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 8th February, referring to the debate on India in Parliament, remarks that this farce is gone through merely to hoodwink the people of India and that it leads to nothing. SWARAJYA, 8th February, 1908.

India in Parliament.

44. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 14th February, says that the King-Emperor made no mention of Indian reforms in his speech at the opening of the Parliament. The editor remarks that perhaps His Majesty may be under a misapprehension that Mr. Morley's scheme of Indian reforms is adequate and will satisfy the Indians, and that that wrong impression ought to be removed by the criticism of the reform proposals by the Indian press, and by the speech of Dr. Rutherford made at moving his amendment. He suggests that Mr. Morley ought to overcome his misunderstanding and appreciate that what he calls reforms are looked upon by Indian leaders rather as retrogression. He points out that, although Mr. Morley and Lord Minto may claim that they fully understand the situation in India, yet the measures they have been adopting show that they are ignorant, and that they have not such a thorough grasp of the situation as Dr. Rutherford has, since their only sources of information are the officials, while Dr. Rutherford has made a personal study of the position on the spot, interviewing Indian leaders and going from village to village to ascertain facts. He urges that Mr. Morley should concede the largest measure of self-government to the Indians, as proposed by Dr. Rutherford, who has plainly told him that he should introduce substantial reforms in India or in the alternative he should be prepared to face the overthrow of the empire. ABHYUDAYA, 14th February, 1908.

India in Parliament.

45. One Vishnu Dutt Sharma contributes a poem to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 14th February, of which the following is a translation :— ABHYUDAYA 14th February, 1908.

Regeneration of India.

Regenerate yourselves even now, let the past bury its dead ; honour your country from the inmost recess of your heart ; henceforth make use of swadeshi goods, regardless of the fact that you used foreign-made goods so far ; love your countrymen even now, forgetting your vanity in the past ; retain your wealth and grain in your homes now. No matter what you gave away to foreigners hitherto ; study the papers, make your children lead celibate lives and protect the poor and the helpless. Wake up, give up your slumber ; it is now dawn, the swadeshi wind is blowing and you are resting in idleness ; the foreigners assume their superiority over you who were once several degrees in advance of them, while ignorance has possessed your minds ; you are locked in a deep slumber never to be aroused ; the English claim all that India possesses to be theirs ; your sages and kings were so venerated, while you are in such a degraded condition ; take advice and raise yourselves ; think of your country and be enlightened. Otherwise all will be dark, and India will soon be irrevocably doomed ; when all your wealth will have been drained to foreign countries, you will be wringing your hands, although you are at present quite indifferent to it ; the foreign sugar is robbing the Indians both of religion and money ; there is no good in quarrelling among yourselves ; join hands and, despising flattery, ponder over the present miserable plight of Indians.

46. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), refers in the issue of the 6th February, to the views expressed by Mr. M. S. Das of Cuttack at the annual meeting of the Indian Christian Association held recently in Calcutta, and remarks that he agrees with Mr. Das that the large Indian Christian community in India should now declare their policy in regard to politics, since Government proposes to make separate provision in the Legislative Councils for Hindus and Muhammadans, and also that Indian Christians should take a prominent part in the movement that is in progress in the interest of female education in India amongst Hindus and Muhammadans. ADVOCATE, 6th February, 1908.

Status of Indian Christians.

47. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 6th February, contains a summary of the views expressed by Sir Gurudas Banerji, the Hon'ble Babu Bhupendra Nath Bose, Babu Moti Lal Ghose and Babu Baikunth Nath Sen before the Decentralization Commission, regarding ADVOCATE, 6th February, 1908.

The Decentralization Commission.

which the editor remarks that they advocated a number of constructive reforms and questions, whether they will be adopted.

UNION GAZETTE, 7th February, 1908.

India, past and present.

48. The Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 7th February, while describing the past greatness and prosperity of India during the Muhammadan rule, compares it with its present wretched and deplorable condition, when it has fallen a helpless prey to cholera, plague, small-pox, malarial diseases, earthquakes, scarcity, drought and famines.

He remarks that India has to labour under a countless number of laws, taxes the destruction of its arts and commerce and the increase of foreign trade in the country, and also to face still more formidable enemies in the shape of English education and the growing increase in the number of pleaders.

He notes that the country, which at one time stood first and foremost in the scale of civilisation in grandeur of buildings, richness of productions, and in abundance of wealth, is now the most degenerate of all civilised nations, and is left at the mercy of foreigners. It has, he says, no Alla-ud-din now to make lavish expenditure for public good.

"Although the English are now masters of more than half the countries on the globe, yet the corn that is left by English merchants is being sold at the rate of seven seers a rupee.

How can the rulers of so vast an empire have time to look to the starving subjects of India! It is only owing to some necessity or other reason that the English give Indians well paid and responsible offices carrying a salary of perhaps Rs. 400 or Rs. 500 a month, but they fail to maintain the responsibility of even these small charges."

The editor expresses doubt as to the foresight of the Government in entrusting the difficult charge of famine relief in the hands of inexperienced men, who are almost schoolboys, who can hardly realise the importance of their charge and of the responsibility that rests upon them.

SWARAJYA, 8th February, 1908.

The suffragettes and Indian politics.

49. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 8th February, referring to the severe sentences of imprisonment passed on suffragettes, remarks that it is foolish on the part of Indians to endeavour to obtain representative institutions from the English, when they treat their own kith and kin in this barbarous fashion.

AL-BASHIR, 11th February, 1908.

Muhammadans and politics.

50. A correspondent in Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 11th February, refutes the views of the Parkash (Lahore), an Arya Samaj organ, as false and entirely baseless, that it was the policy of Sir Saiyid not to openly join the National Congress, but to remain at heart a sincere adviser, sympathiser and supporter of the movement, and that the Muhammadans have now felt the necessity of protecting their political interests and have begun to form political societies of their own.

HIND, 13th February, 1908.

Goal of patriotism.

51. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 13th February, publishes an article from Lala Lajpat Rai, entitled "The goal of patriotism," a literal translation of which has already been given from the Zamana (Cawnpore), vide Selections No. 5, paragraph 28.

CITIZEN, 13th February, 1908.

What is our goal?

52. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 13th February has an article entitled "What is our goal?" in which the writer N. K. Ramasami Aiyar explains the problem of what he calls the unity of nature, and gives utterance to the conclusion that national autonomy is consistent with the highest teaching of religion, and urges its attainment by means of national education and material development.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

SIPAHI, January, 1908.

Afghanistan.

53. Referring to the rumour that the inhabitants of Kabul are concerting certain measures against the Amir, the Sipahi (Cawnpore) for January (received on the 14th February), says that it is but natural that the Afghans cannot keep quiet when their neighbours, the Persians, have secured parliamentary institutions. He notes that they too desire that their government should be based on the will of the people, a lesson that has been taught to the whole of Asia by Europe, and it is not certain what changes it may bring about throughout the continent of Asia.

54. Referring to the Zakka Khel expedition, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue for 13th February, expresses regret at the necessity for a military expedition considering the widespread famine.

Zakka Khel expedition.

ADVOCATE, 13th February, 1908.

III.—Native States.

55. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th February, referring to a recent pronouncement of Sir C. Dilke that the Europeans should not be appointed to high posts in Native States, as it would lead to the stagnation of native administrative talent, remarks that this shows that there are at least some just and honest men in England.

Europeans in Native States.

RAHBAR, 7th February, 1908.

56. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th February, condemns in very strong terms the marriage of the Maharaja of Kapurthala with a Spanish lady.

Maharaja of Kapurthala's marriage.

RAHBAR, 7th February, 1908.

57. The Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 8th February, condemns the marriage of the Maharaja of Kapurthala with a Spanish lady and remarks that Indian Princes spend their time in luxury and debauchery. They have no aptitude for business and are entirely ignorant of the sufferings of their subjects. A ruler is the servant of his subjects and should do everything in his power to ameliorate their condition. A Government founded on injustice can never live long. The Maharaja's first wife is a highly accomplished Indian lady, who has visited almost all parts of the civilised world, but now she has been discarded in favour of a more fortunate foreign rival.

Maharaja of Kapurthala's marriage.

SWARAJYA, 8th February, 1908.

58. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th February, strongly condemns the action of the Maharaja of Kapurthala as irreligious and unjust, in marrying a Spanish lady in the life-time of his former Rani.

Maharaja Kapurathala's marriage.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

59. While describing in brief the facts which led to the conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain and Abdul Ghafur, the heroes of Bengal, and the address of the Judge to the jury in this case, the Musafir (Agra), of the 8th February remarks :—

Conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

"If the conviction and torturing of a few Indians can add something to the grandeur and prestige of the Government, there is no occasion for the least comment on this conviction, as it will not only be regarded as disaffection but even as downright rebellion against the Government."

60. Referring to the conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 13th February, prays the Government to consider his old age and forego his prosecution in other cases brought against him.

Conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain.

HIND, 13th February, 1908.

61. The Musáfir (Agra) of the 8th February notes with regret the inadequate and nominal punishment awarded to Shaikh Moti Sutra(?) for outraging the chastity of a minor Hindu girl in Bengal, and remarks that those who are acquainted with the grave inhumanity of the offence can infer in what way justice is done even in case of the most outrageous and heinous crimes in Bengal.

Conviction of the Bengal rape case.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

62. Referring to the conviction of the Hari Kishore (Central Provinces) under section 124, Indian Penal Code, and to the unique construction put upon the words "sedition" and "swarajya" by the learned Judicial Commissioner, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 1st February, remarks that the wording of the Government order has no fixed interpretation, and may differ according to the personal notion of the court.

Conviction of the Hari Kishore.

HIND, 1st February, 1908.

63. Referring to the judgment of the Sessions Judge (Moradabad) awarding capital punishment to five accused in a single murder case, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th February, sarcastically remarks that it is a curious characteristic of a government, which claims to be the most civilised of all governments, to hang five men for one murder.

Decision in a murder case.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

64. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th February, quotes a number of precedents in which the judges have entirely disregarded the unanimous verdict of the jury even in cases of the most serious nature, and remarks that the sitting of the jury with a judge is nothing short of a farce and that it would be much better if the judges were left alone to do what they liked.

The judge and jury in India.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

65. Referring on the authority of the Citizen (Allahabad), to the refusal of pleaders to take up the case of the editor of the Khichri Samachar (Mirzapur), who has charged the Superintendent of Police, the Sub-Inspector and some other public servants with libel, the editor of the Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th February remarks that these facts show that nowadays conditions in every district in India approximate to those in a Russian town, where people cannot breathe a word against State officials.

The libel case of the Khichri Samachar.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

66. Referring to the rumour that on the retirement of Lala Baij Nath Sahai, the Small Cause Court Judge of Allahabad, the office will be filled in by Mr. Burkitt, the Awaza-i-khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, notes with regret that apparently this office also is going to be monopolised by Europeans to the great disadvantage of Indians.

Arrangement on the retirement of Babu Biaj Nath Sahai, Sahab.

ADVOCATE, 9th February, 1908.

67. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th February, draws attention to Raja Prithvipal Singh's letter to the Pioneer regarding the proposed demand for revenue to be made from landowners and expresses agreement with the writer.

Famine and Government revenue.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th February, 1908.

68. Referring to the deputation which recently waited on the Chief Justice about the extension of the Moharram holidays, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 9th February, expresses surprise that the authorities do not realise the injustice entailed in the curtailment of the holiday. He notes that in practice Muhammadan suitors, lawyers and Muhammadan employés are excused attendance during the ten days, while non-Muhammadans are only excused for four days, which he describes as an invidious distinction which should be avoided at all costs.

Moharram holiday in the Allahabad High Court.

HIND, 13th February, 1908.

69. Referring to the suits filed by Babu Brijindro Kishore against certain Government officers for the loss sustained by him in the late riots in Mymensingh, his request for transfer of his case to the High Court, and to the reply of the Local Government on the subject, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 13th February expresses regret at the disregard for law and the outrageous conduct of the officials in Eastern Bengal and at the indifference of Lord Minto.

Suits against Government officers for recovery of damages.

AL-ISLAM, 7th February, 1908.

70. A correspondent in Al Islam (Aligarh) of the 7th February, strongly objects to the existing system in which batwara (partition) is carried on in the Saharanpur district, and asks the Commissioner of Meerut and the Board of Revenue of the United Provinces to reform the system in vogue.

Batwara* in the Saharanpur district.

MASHRIQ, 11th February, 1908.

71. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 11th February, while pointing out that in some foreign countries such as Uganda and other parts of Africa, as well as in some Native States in India, the revenue to Government is paid not in cash but in kind, suggests that, considering the want of hard cash among the Indian peasantry it would be for the good of the people if the Government were to take produce instead of cash.

Government revenue.

(b).—Police.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

72. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th February, strongly condemns the conduct of Justice Robertson in criticising the judgment of Mr. Martineau in the Rawalpindi riot case and that of the Bengal Government in ordering the courts not to make any adverse comments on the conduct of the police in their judgments.

Whitewashing the police.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

The Moradabad Municipality.

73. While pointing out that the Moradabad Municipality is intending to take a Government loan to construct a drain round the town and to keep it up by enhancing octroi duty on all goods imported into the town, the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th February strongly objects to this project, as it will handicap local trade and cause distress to many people.

UNION GAZETTE, 7th February, 1908.

The Moradabad Municipality.

74. The Rohilkhand Gazette of the 8th February, complains that the Moradbad Municipality intends to borrow a large sum of money from the Government to construct a drain round the city and to repay it by levying a tax on articles of merchandise brought into the city. The editor expresses the opinion that this will be a great hardship to petty tradesmen, and that a house tax would be less oppressive and would chiefly affect well-to-do men.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th February, 1908.

The Benares Municipality.

75. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, condemns the action of the Secretary of the Benares Municipality, in realising jhuri (toll) from petty shopkeepers, even in ordinary fairs, noting that it cannot add much to the Municipal funds, while it causes annoyance to the people in general.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

The Benares Municipality.

76. The Awaza-i-Kha'q (Benares), of the 8th February, has a cartoon representing a stout European pushing a handcart containing the Benares Municipal cash-box. The following sentences appear on various parts of the car :—" Help the poor in time of famine," " Deficiency of funds," " the cart of sin cannot be moved by pushing." In front of the car is represented a wall over which is written " stopped by the wall of the sighs of the poor."

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

Municipal tax in Lahore.

77. Referring to the Municipal house tax in Lahore, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 6th February, that the Lahore public appears to be opposed to both direct and indirect forms of taxation, but that their position is unreasonable as Municipal administration has to be carried on, and money is the first thing necessary for the work.

ADVOCATE, 6th February, 1908.

He notes that opposition to an indirect form of taxation like octroi must be balanced by willingness to submit to a direct form.

Octroi tax on food stuffs.

78. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th February, requests the Government to exempt food stuffs from the octroi tax during famine time.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th February, 1908.

Concessions in the water-tax in Allahabad.

79. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, notes with satisfaction the action of the Allahabad Municipality in exempting all houses having an annual rental of Rs. 36 or less from the water-tax, during the famine.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

The editor regrets the indifference of the Benares Municipality to the requst to exempt from water-tax all houses which have an annual rental of Rs. 25 or less.

In conclusion he asks all municipalities to consider this matter and follow the example of the Allahabad Municipality.

Grant of requests for building by Municipal Boards.

80. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, strongly objects to the action of municipal boards in giving permission to more than one person to build houses on one plot of ground, which invariably entails litigation between different claimants.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

The editor says that several cases of this nature have occurred in Benares, and asks the Local Government to issue orders on the subject to ensure that municipal boards grant such permission to only one person in future.

Octroi tax on corn.

81. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 11th February, remarks that the octroi tax on corn is the indirect cause of the rise in its price, which is felt all the more oppressive in these days of famine and scareity, and suggests the desirability of Government exempting corn from such taxation and such other things as are indispensible for maintenance.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 11th February, 1908.

(e).—Education.

ZUL QARNAIN, 7th February, 1908.

The school leaving certificate.

82. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th February, referring to the proposal to abolish the Entrance Examination, remarks that this will be very disadvantageous to the Musalmans, as the headmasters of most of the schools are Hindus, who would grant certificates with great reluctance to Musalman students, who wish to join colleges.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

The school leaving certificate

83. While referring to the action of Mr. Orange, the Director-General of Education, in abolishing the Entrance Class examination and granting certificates to competent students on the recommendation of teachers and headmasters, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 8th February, remarks that it is a good idea, but expresses apprehension that it will encourage corruption and the taking of bribes.

GARHWALI, January, 1908.

The Srinagar Anglo-Vernacular Middle School.

84. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun), for January (received on the 12th February), suggests the desirability of the Anglo-Vernacular Middle School at Srinagar being raised to the grade of a high school, to satisfy the growing need of the student community there.

MOHINI, 4th February, 1908.

Indian and Japanese systems of education.

85. The Mohini (Kanauj) of the 4th February, compares the Indian and Japanese systems of education, and deplores that Indian universities do nothing beyond turning out graduates, who cannot boast of proficiency even in a single branch of study. As to religious and moral education, the editor points out that the Indian students have no instruction, and he complains particularly of Indian students being deprived of that sort of education which produces the best citizens of the State, and teaches them to love their country and give the best of their life to its service.

MASHRIQ, 11th February, 1908.

Sir Agha Khan's visit to the Aligarh College.

86. Referring to the intended visit of His Highness Sir Agha Khan to the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 11th February, expresses a hope that His Highness will take into consideration the grievances of the students, and also do something in the matter of the inadequacy of accommodation in the boarding house.

OUDH AKHBAR, 11th February, 1908.

Musalmans and Engineering.

87. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 11th February, publishes a letter from Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, D Sc., Ph. D., of Aligarh, who notes with regret that out of 1,100 Engineers that have been turned out by the engineering colleges of India, only ten are Musalmans. To remedy this defect he proposes that an engineering class should be opened at Aligarh where students can be prepared for Rurki, and where practical and theoretical instruction in engineering can be given to those who do not pass the Rurki tests. To carry out this proposal it would be necessary to establish a boarding house for students desirous of joining the institution, as under the existing university regulation non-collegiate students cannot be allowed to live in hostels. He appeals to the Musalmans to support this institution, noting that Mr. Archbold has consented to be the Honorary Secretary of the fund.

ADVOCATE, 13th February, 1908.

Secondary education in the United Provinces.

88. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th February, has a leading article on the subject of secondary education, in which he expresses commendation of the steps being taken by the Lieutenant-Governor to promote this particular branch of education. The writer notes the great increase in the number of pupils in the secondary stage as contrasted with the slight increase in the number of schools, and remarks that what is needed is more schools to take in the willing pupils and to attract the wavering and unwilling. He asks that the schools be made more attractive and that a better class of teachers be provided. He approves of the proposal to establish training colleges and to improve the class of teachers for the secondary stage, but expresses regret at the release of the schools from the control of district boards, while recognising that the step was called for owing to the failure of the district boards to exercise efficient control. In conclusion the writer remarks that the proposals though generous do not yet quite meet the needs of these Provinces.

89. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 13th February, criticises the conduct of Mr. Jennings, the Principal of the Muir Central College, Allahabad, in rusticating one Manzur Ali Khan, a student of the M.A. class, without sufficient reason for taking such a serious measure.

Rustication of a M. A. class student.

HIND, 13th February, 1908.

90. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 14th February, contains an article emphasising the need of religious education in the training of Indians as the chief means of India's progress.

Religious education in India.

ABHYUDAYA, 14th February, 1908.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

91. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th February, expresses regret at the scarcity of grain and remarks that, although the terrible effect of this scarcity may not be felt and realised by the well-paid officials, yet they must do something to relieve the poor from dying of starvation, so that they may not be held responsible for neglecting their duty towards their subjects at such a critical moment.

Famine.

UNION GAZETTE, 7th February, 1908.

92. The Sundar Shringár (Muttra), of the 7th February, has a eulogistic notice on the strenuous efforts of His Honour Sir John Hewett to mitigate the sufferings of the famine-stricken population, and also urges well-to-do persons to co-operate with him in any measures undertaken to relieve the distress of the people.

His Honour and the famine.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 7th February, 1908.

93. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th February, referring to the famine relief works started by the Government, remarks that although the construction of railways affords temporary relief to the country people, yet, as foreign capital is used in their construction, the wealth of the country is drained away by them, and that therefore the sinking of wells will be of greater advantage.

Famine relief.

RAHBAR, 7th February, 1908.

94. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, notes with satisfaction that some well-to-do residents of Lahore have arranged to sell flour to the respectable poor and widows at the concession rate of 10 seers a rupee, and exhorts the well-to-do persons of other towns also to follow the noble example set by their brethren of Lahore.

Private relief arrangements in Lahore.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

95. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 8th February, publishes a pathetic appeal from one Wali Haider of Cawnpore who urges well-to-do men to open a relief fund for people of good family who think it a disgrace to take to manual labour and are dying of hunger and want.

Famine.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 8th February, 1908.

96. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 9th February, publishes a long letter from Lala Lajpat Rai calling for subscriptions for a famine fund, in which the writer refers to the report regarding the condition of certain districts in the United Provinces made by a young graduate deputed for that purpose (? Sundar Lal).

Lala Lajpat Rai's appeal for famine funds.

CITIZEN, 9th February, 1908.

97. The Rahbar (Moradabad), ofthe 7th February, referring to the intense misery caused by famine in this country, complains that the King-Emperor, who has subscribed so liberally to the Mutiny veterans' fund, has not the compassion to start a fund for the relief of the famine-stricken people of this country.

The King-Emperor and the people of India.

RAHBAR, 7th February, 1908.

98. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th February, complains that there is much corruption in the Canal administration of this province, that the distribution of water from the canals is very irregular, that the rates are extorted irrespective of whether the cultivator has received sufficient water or not, and that the rates are being constantly enhanced. The editor requests the Government to appoint a special commission to investigate the matter.

Irrigation.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th February, 1908.

(g).—General.

RASTGO, 7th February, 1908.

The Allahabad shooting incident.

99. Referring to the mysterious shooting of a boy on the City Road in Allahabad, the Rástgo (Allahabad), of the 7th February, suspects it to be the action of some European, and hopes that local police will do its best to bring the offender to justice.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

The Allahabad shooting incident.

100. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, writes as follows:—"On the 28th January some angels of God (Europeans?) were engaged in shooting on the Canning Road, Allahabad, near the bungalow of Mr. Wallach. An Ahir boy was struck with a bullet which broke the bones of his arms. The poor boy was taken care of by Mrs. Wallach, and it is hoped that he may recover.

This kind of reckless shooting is on the increase, and life is becoming more and more unsafe every day. Will the Americans kindly invent some shot-proof cloth so that the Indians may cover themselves with it before leaving their houses?"

HINDUSTANI, 12th February, 1908.

How to improve the production of country sugar.

101. A correspondent in the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 12th February, while describing the alleged evils of foreign sugar, exhorts his countrymen to encourage the production of sugar in India.

He then eulogises Sir J. Hewett for his sympathy with the swadeshi movement and for the material help he has given to encourage arts, industries and other useful movements in these Prvoinces.

He attributes the main cause of the deficiency in sugarcane cultivation in these Provinces to the abnormal enhancement in canal water rates from Rs. 6 to Rs. 10 per acre in the Meerut, Muzaffarnagar, Saharanpur and Bulandshahr districts, which are the chief districts for isugar production.

He asks the United Provinces Government to encourage the sugar industry by reducing the irrigation tax to its former rate, by patronising the zamindars, by advancing money to cultivators, and by rewarding those who manufacture the best sort of sugar.

ADVOCATE, 13th February, 1908.

The sugar industry and canal water rates.

102. Referring to an address by Mr. Craddock, the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces at Raipur, about the sugar industry, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 13th February, compares his attitude to that of Sir John Hewett, and asks the latter why after his declaration he allowed the canal water rate for sugarcane to be raised, and the former for a declaration that this will not be done in the Central Provinces.

SIPAHI, January, 1908.

Native Military Officers.

103. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore) for January (received on the 14th February), suggests the desirability of a military school being opened to impart the same training to native officers of the Imperial Service Troops and of the regular British Army as is given to British officers, so that the former may act as efficiently as the latter in campaigns in which it is found necessary to place the British officers in a place of safety behind the rank and file.

SIPAHI. January, 1908.

3rd Queen's Own Gurkha Rifles.

104. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore) for January (received on the 14th February), although expressing its gratification at the honour conferred upon the 3rd Queen's Own Gurkha Rifles at being designated the 3rd Queen Alexandra's Own Gurkha Rifles, does not understand what good such unsubstantial honours can bring. It would indeed have been great honour, if its Sardars were promoted to Lieutenant's or Captain's rank.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th February, 1908.

Soldier clerks.

105. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th February, remarks that considering the responsible and hard work of the soldier clerks, their pay is comparatively very small, and suggests that after two years' qualified service they should be appointed as non-commissioned officers, and as jamadars after ten years good work in the service.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

Material progress of India.

106. While expressing his regret at the degenerate state of Indians, a correspondent in the Awaáz-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, remarks that it is due to want of education and to the absolute poverty of Indians.

He praises the patriotism and philanthropic spirit of some public men in Bombay in supporting some 80 students every year in foreign countries to learn art, industries and different useful sciences.

He expresses his regret at the indifference of the Punjab and United Provinces people in this respect, and in conclusion he advises his countrymen to try their best to spread scientific study in the country, to establish factories to manufacture the goods which are imported from foreign countries and which carry away more than one thousand million rupees from the country every year.

107. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th February, quotes the figures of England's trade returns in order to emphasise the wretched economic condition of India and asks for attention to the swadeshi movement.

ADVOCATE, 9th February, 1908.

Economic condition of India.

108. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 4th February, reproduces the speech delivered by Mr. Munchar Shah Sorabji in London on the form of government best suited to India, in the course of which he warned the Parsis to beware of those who endeavour to keep them isolated from the Hindus and their political agitation; and remarks that Muhammadans as well might take a lesson from the speech, and, understanding that their destiny is inextricably bound up with that of Hindus, join with them in the struggle for the rights and privileges of the Indian nation.

MOHINI, 4th February, 1908.

Union between Hindus and Muhammadans.

109. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th February, referring to the exemption of Postmasters, Forest Rangers and others of Bengal from the Arms Act, remarks that this concession gives a clue to the future policy of the Government, and asks if it does not show that the Government intends to strengthen still more the hands of its servants.

RAHBAR, 7th February, 1908.

The Arms Act.

110. The Agra Akhbar of the 7th February, referring to the unpopularity of the poor-house in Agra, remarks that the chief reasons why the poor dislike to receive the alms given there are the insufficient quantity of food given to them, that many respectable poor do not like to register their names as receivers of the charity, and that people fear that after the famine is over the men fed at the poor-house will be transported to some foreign colony.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th February, 1908.

The Agra Alms-house.

The editor draws the attention of the authorities to this, and remarks that it is useless to maintain a poor-house establishment and a well paid staff when it is not resorted to by the poor.

111. The Agra Akhbar of the 7th February, while expessing its satisfaction at the failure of Hindi as a common script for the whole of India, remarks that as Urdu can be more, easily written and conveniently read with fluency, and as it is also more commonly used than Hindi, it ought to remain as now the court language in India, and the supporters of Hindi also should favour the cause of Urdu, and should not try to replace a system which has worked so satisfactorily.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th February, 1908.

Urdu and Hindi as common scripts.

112. The Rástgo (Allahabad), of the 7th February, publishes an article entitled "The foolishness of a Judge, i.e. the chastisement of Mr. Sri Lal, District Judge, Ghazipur", of which the following is a literal translation:—

RASTGO, 7th February, 1908.

Chastisement of Mr. Siri Lal, Judge.

"Our readers will remember that Mr. Sri Lal, District Judge, Ghazipur, was applauded for presiding over the Swadeshi and National meeting held some time ago in honour of the late Babu Bhola Nath Rai, a distinguished member of the Ghazipur bar and a prominent Congress supporter, a report of the proceedings of which was published in the columns of this paper. It appears that the High Court or His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor warned the Judge to be more careful in future. We have nothing to do with this censure, because a master has every right to treat his slave in any way he likes. Even if he had been dismissed for his fault we could have done nothing save to congratulate him once more for his sacrifice as a martyr. As it is not an easy task in these days especially to do any service to the nation, it would have been very wise of him to consider the dangers of the situation before venturing to occupy the presidential chair of a public meeting held in the national cause, simply at the request of some shameless flatterers. It was after all a mistake on his part with which we have no concern.

What we mean to show to the public is the cowardice displayed by the Judge after the warning. Through his foolish inexperienced and flattering munsarim Jaddo Babu, he tried to dissuade his subordinates from subscribing to certain newspapers, and in this way attempted to encroach upon their natural rights to subscribe to any newspaper they liked. It is clear that the foolish, the inexperienced and the flatterers recognise no responsibility in such matters. But we have a right to enquire and do enquire of the Judge if he can show any provision in the Civil, Criminal or any other code to justify his unlawful conduct. We will be most grateful to him if he can show that his conduct is justified by any existing law. Otherwise he must be careful in future not to do such silly actions.

The Judge must also bear in mind that, if the High Court or His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor can censure him once for presiding over the deliberations of a public meeting, we can, we do and we will, chastise him if necessary a thousand times and in a thousand ways for his absurd and unlawful conduct."

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th February, 1908.

Muhammadan holidays.

113. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th February, compares the Hindu and Muhammadan holidays sanctioned by the Government and complains that great injustice has been done to the Muhammadans. They get only one day's leave for their most important holidays, the I'd-ul-Fitr, the Id-uz-zuha, and the Shabrat, although it is impossible for them to work on the days succeeding them. In the Moharram which is a time of mourning with them, they are allowed three days which should be extended to at least ten.

HINDOSTHAN, 8th February, 1908.

Medical appointments in India.

114. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 8th February, complains that Government appoints men from the Indian Medical Service to all the special medical appointments in India instead of seeking for other equally efficient men whose service would be available to it at a cheaper rate.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th Febuary, 1908.

Disunion is the cause of India's troubles.

115. While regretting the moral, intellectual and spiritual degeneration of Indians, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th February, remarks that it is mainly due to the ignorance of Indians.

The editor eulogises Government for spreading education in the country and exhorts his countrymen to give up all sectarian differences and like all other civilised people, work in union and harmony for the good of their nation and country.

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

A new order of the Bengal Government.

116. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th February, strongly condemns the recent order of the Bengal Government making it compulsory on the mukhias, zamindars and other village headmen to report to the nearest magistrate or police officer all news bearing on politics or the swadeshi movement in addition to those mentioned in section 48, Criminal Procedure Code. The editor remarks that the issue of such orders suggests Russian administration because such things were never known before with the British Government."

MUSAFIR, 8th February, 1908.

The Etawah incident.

117. Referring to the silence of the Government over the Etawah incident, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th February remarks as follows :—

"It seems as if God has tongue-tied or put a seal of silence on the lips of the United Provinces Government. Notwithstanding the serious attempt to deport some respectable Hindus of Etawah and send a good number of them into jail, and the cries of the Hindu journalists to bring the real culprits to justice it is very strange that the Government has entirely slept over the matter.

It has not spoken a word in this connection. On the other hand it has transferred the Hindu Kotwal and replaced Pandit Shiyam Behari Misra, the Deputy Superintendent of Police, by a Muhammadan. The place is now entirely managed by Muhammadan police officers. Al-Bashir of Etawah, the councillor or the prime minister of the Government, comes out every week twisting its moustaches, and fearlessly making its comments.

It is Sir John Hewett's government and we never expected that Fullerism would reign supreme in these Provinces also. But alas, the circumstances force such a belief upon us, which is strengthened all the more by the pythagorean silence of the Government over the matter."

118. While pointing out the importance of the office of Sub-Registrarship, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 11th February, remarks that they are very low-paid and that their pay should never be less than Rs. 100 a month.

Sub-Registrarship.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 11th February, 1908.

As to the qualifications of a Sub-Registrar, the editor says that he must be neither too young nor too old and that he should possess sufficient knowledge and ability to understand the importance of his responsible work.

119. Referring to the quarrel between a Bengali Deputy Magistrate and a police constable, and to the views of the Bengalee on the matter, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 13th February, differs from the opinion of the former and approves of the action of the authorities in reprimanding the aggressive Deputy Magistrate, without any consideration of his position.

Quarrel between a magistrate and a police constable.

HIND, 13th February, 1908.

120. Referring on the authority of the Citizen (Allahabad), to the withdrawal of shares taken by Government servants in a swadeshi cloth company in consequence of His Honour's asking the companies to submit a list of all shareholders, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 13th February, expresses a doubt as to the truth of the statement and asks the local Government to throw some light on the subject.

Government servants shareholders in swadeshi companies.

HIND, 13th February, 1908.

121. Comparing the environments of the Congress with those of the Magh Mela or any other fair, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 14th February is compelled to confess that it is very long before the Indians will be competent to attain swaraj, for the mass of the people are still enveloped in deep darkness, entirely ignorant of political matters beyond the fact that the Government's only duty is to realize taxes while their's is to pay them. To improve the condition of the masses, the editor suggests that schools should be opened in every village at which Sadhus, many of whom are literate men and who live on the charity of the people, should be made to impart knowledge to villagers in return for their daily subsistence, and that paid teachers should also be engaged for the same purpose.

Condition of the masses.

ABHYUDAYA, 14th February, 1908.

V.—Legislation.

122. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 7th February, objects to the proposed amendment in the Press Act whereby editors will be required to make a declaration in the court and furnish securities, on the ground that it will unduly restrict the liberty of the Press and prevent it from making honest and impartial criticism of Government measures.

Proposed amendment in the Press Act.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 7th February, 1908.

123. Referring to the proposed amendment in the Press Act whereby editors will be made to register their names and furnish cash security, the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th February, warns its contemporaries not to be frightened by such restrictions, and hopes that they will not be deterred in this way from the performance of their duties. The editor asks whether the journalists are criminals that they should be required to furnish personal recognizance and securities.

Proposed amendment in the Press Act.

ARYA MITRA, 8th February, 1908.

124. Discussing the subject of Life Insurance Legislation, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) expresses regret in the issue of the 13th February that there are no provisions in India similar to those in England to safeguard the public, and remarks that failure to protect the public, and particularly the poor by legislation may have a baneful effect.

Life Insurance Legislation.

ADVOCATE, 13th February, 1908.

VI.—Railway.

125. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th February, referring to collisions and other mishaps on railway lines, remarks that those persons who are responsible for the great loss of life caused by these accidents, are generally Europeans and so are not punished for such criminal negligence of duty. Reform in this direction is urgently needed and it is to be seen whether the proposals that have been made for preventing the occurrence of such accidents are carried into effect.

Railway collisions.

RAHBAR, 7th February, 1908.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th February, 1908.

The Rohilkhand Kumaun Railway.

126. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th February, complains that the Rohilkhand Kumaun Railway authorities have not as yet fenced their line, although frequent accidents occur. Only a few days ago a ballast engine collided with a bullock cart which was crossing the railway line.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 9th February, 1908.

Complaints against the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

127. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 9th February, contains a letter drawing attention to the alleged defective medical attendance which Railway officials get on the Rohilkhand Kumaun Railway.

CITIZEN, 9th February, 1908.

Complaint against Railway officials.

128. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 9th February, has an article complaining of the arrangements made by the railway officials for the convenience of the pilgrims on the occasion of the Ardhodayayog and of the behaviour of the District Traffic Superintendent.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 9th February, 1908.

Cawnpore-level crossing.

129. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 9th February, contains a letter complaining of the alleged unnecessary detention at the level-crossing in Cawnpore.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 11th February, 1908.

Railway accidents.

130. Referring to various accidents which have of late taken place on railways, the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 11th February, asks the railway authorities to find out the real cause of such accidents.

The editor expresses the opinion that in order to prevent the occurrence of such accidents it is necessary to secure the services of competent well-paid hands, specially taking care that they are not addicted to intoxicants of any sort.

AL-BASHIR, 11th February, 1908.

Abolition of toll,

131. Alluding to His Honour's speech at the opening of the Jumna Bridge at Agra and to the abolition of toll on certain railway bridges, Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 11th February, expresses the desirability of abolishing the toll on all other railway bridges also.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th February, 1908.

The Station Master of Tajpore.

132. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th February, remarks that various complaints have been received against the Station Master of Tajpore that he causes annoyance in different ways to people who carry on the business of importing goods from Tajpore to Kashipur, and asks the authorities to look into the conduct of the Station Master.

HIND, 13th February, 1908.

Railway thefts.

133. Referring to a case of theft on the railway, recently committed between Phagwara and Baran stations, in which the culprit entered the female compartment, obtained ornaments from a passenger by threatening to injure her with a knife, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 13th February notes with regret that such incidents have of late become very common, and if prompt measures are not taken to ensure the safety of passengers it is feared that they will lose even what little faith they have in the department.

VII.—Post Office.

POSTAL MAGAZINE, January, 1908.

Railway Mail Service,

134. The Postal Magazine (Agra), for January (received on the 10th February), publishes anonymous letters from various employés of the Railway Mail Service who complain that their pay is very small ; they get no rest ; that their health is impaired by overwork ; that they do not get any travelling allowances and that no arrangements are made for their comfort in the rest houses that have been provided for them.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

Benares city post office.

135. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, remarks that it is rumoured that after some time the delivery of letters will not be made at the Benares city post office, but at the Cantonment post office.

As this change is sure to increase difficulties and cause delay in the distribution and delivery of letters, the Postmaster General is requested to give due consideration to the matter.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

ABHYUDAYA, 7th February, 1908.

The Magh Mela.

136. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 7th February, referring to the last Magh Mela, says that all passed off well except that the huts which were built for accommodating pilgrims, did not protect them from the inclemency of the weather, for which the Pragwals were not to blame since they had to pay such exorbitant charges for small plots of ground that they had very little money left to erect comfortable huts for the pilgrims.

SWARAJYA, 8th February, 1908.

137. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 8th February, referring to the large concourse of pilgrims at the Magh Mela in spite of the severity of famine, believes that all this is due to blind fanaticism and remarks "would that there had been some one wise enough to make this fanaticism flow into useful channels, so that these people could be saved from ravages of famine and plague and the destitution and poverty caused thereby."

The Magh Mela.

The editor further notes with satisfaction that several young men have been seen preaching swadeshi, swaraj and boycott in the Mela.

MUSAFR, 8th February, 1908.

138. The editor of the Musáfir (Agra), in the issue of the 8th February, enters into a controversy with the editor of Al-Bashir (Etawah), and refutes his arguments quoting references from history to show that Muhammadan rule in India was despotic and spread by means of the sword.

The Musafir versus Al-Bashir.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th February, 1908.

139. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th February, objects to Raja Ram Pal Singh presiding over the deliberations of the ensuing Provincial Social Conference.

The ensuing Provincial Social Conference.

The editor remarks that Raja Ram Pal Singh is an England-returned man and his words will have no influence on the elderly persons who belong to the orthodox Hindu class of the old school.

ADVOCATE, 9th February, 1908.

140. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th February, has a leading article, drawing attention to the excellent work done by the Bengali volunteers on the occasion of the recent Arthodaya fair in Calcutta, and to the commendations extended to their achievements by the press and by the officials as well.

The Arthodaya volunteers.

HINDUSTANI, 12th February, 1908.

141. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 12th February, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th February, on the conduct of the volunteers on the occasion of the Ardhodaya Yoga at Calcutta.

The Ardhodaya Volunteers.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

ABHYUDAYA, 14th February, 1908.

142. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 14th February, gives an account of the life of Bhishma (one of the chief characters in the Mahabharat,) and remarks that merely to kill anybody, or to refrain from doing so, does not constitute sin or virtue respectively. "To destroy the enemy for the protection of religion and country is the eternal dharma. To refrain from bloodshed at such a time is the greatest sin. Duty alone is the one supreme thing. Life and death are matters of constant occurrence. Man has constantly to pass from one body to another. Accordingly to forsake religion (duty ?) for love of body is sheer folly and stupidity. Life of the sage Bhishma is an example of how one should abide by one's duty, and it teaches Indians how they should engage themselves in their country's progress, leaving aside cowardice and love of body and fearlessly attend to the performance of their duty."

Life of Bhishma.

ALLAHABAD:
The 17th February, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 8 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 22nd February, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign:
1.	The Lisbon tragedy	181
2.	The Lisbon tragedy	181
3.	The Lisbon tragedy	181
4.	The Lisbon tragedy	181
5.	The Lisbon tragedy	181
6.	The Anglo-Russian Convention ...	181
7.	The Macedonian question	181
8.	The Macedonian question	181
9.	England and Turkey	181
10.	Asiatics in foreign countries ...	182
	(b)—Home:
11.	The Congress split	182
12.	The Congress	182
13.	The Congress	182
14.	The Surat Congress	182
15.	Indians in the Transvaal	182
16.	Lord Curzon on the Indian question in the Transvaal	182
17.	Indians in the Transvaal	182
18.	Indians in the Transvaal	183
19.	The Indian discontent	183
20.	The Indian discontent	183
21.	Sedition and the Englishman ...	183
22.	The Decentralisation Commission ...	183
23.	The Decentralisation Commission ...	184
24.	The Decentralisation Commission ...	184
25.	The United Provinces Second Provincial Conference	184
26.	The Provincial Conference	184
27.	The Pubna Conference	185
28.	The First Provincial Conference ...	185
29.	The Liberal Ministry	185
30.	India and Ireland	185
31.	The Government and the Press ...	186
32.	Appointment of Lala Harkishen Lal as a Member of the Legislative Council ...	186
33.	Dr. Rutherford on Lala Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh	186
34.	Self-government in India	186
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
35.	The Zakka Khel expedition	187
36.	The Zakka Khel expedition	187
37.	The Zakka Khel expedition	187
38.	The Zakka Khel expedition	187
	III.—NATIVE STATES.
39.	The marriage of the Maharaja of Kapurthala	187
	IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
	(a)—Judicial and Revenue:
40.	Mukhtar	187
41.	Conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain ...	188
42.	Conviction of the Hari Kishore ...	188
43.	Conviction of Asa Ram under section 211, Indian Penal Code	188
44.	An alleged rape case	188
45.	Europeans and Indians	188

		Page.
46.	Comments of the police in judgments ...	188
(b)—Police :
47.	Preservation of peace	188
48.	Suit for recovery of damages against Mr. Clarke	188
49.	Police and public	189
50.	The Sarai Akil tragedy	189
51.	The unofficial Commission on the Mymensingh disturbances	189
(c)—Finance and Taxation :
	Nil.
(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :
52.	Resignation of Municipal Commissioners at Amraoti	189
53.	The Agra Municipality	189
54.	The Agra Municipality	189
55.	Taxes in Benares Municipality ...	189
56.	Municipal elections	189
(e)—Education :
57.	Education	190
58.	Education in the United Provinces ...	190
59.	Appointment of the trustees of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College ...	190
60.	Industrial education	190
61.	Secondary education in the United Provinces	190
62.	Vernacular Schools	190
63.	Students at Pubna Conference ...	190
64.	The Agra Mufid-i-Am School	190
(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :
65.	Famine in Bundelkhand	190
66.	Famine in the United Provinces ...	191
67.	Misappropriation in famine relief ...	191
68.	Famine and its causes	191
69.	The sugar industry	191
70.	The sugar industry	191
71.	Taqavi and agriculture	191
72.	Irrigation	191
(g)—General :
73.	Industrial situation and how to improve it	191
74.	Embezzlement case against Mr. Walker Luker	191
75.	Alleged death from starvation in Hathras	192
76.	Forfeiture of zamindari rights ...	192
77.	The beggars question in council ...	192
78.	The Etawah incident	192
79.	Extravagant expenses of Indians ...	192
80.	Proposed partition of the Lahore and Mymensingh districts	192
81.	Partition of Patna Division	192
82.	Plague	192
83.	The Swadeshi movement	192
84.	Indian coolies in British colonies ...	193
85.	The British Government and the educated Indians	193
86.	Hindus and Muhammadans	194
87.	Sir L. Hare and the Maharaja of Manipur	194
88	The Factory Commission	194
	V.—LEGISLATION.
89.	Amendment in the Press Act ...	194
	VI.—RAILWAY.
90.	Railway collisions	194
91.	A railway complaint	194
92.	Outrages in railways	195
93.	East Indian Railway complaint ...	195
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
94.	The new forms for value payable parcels	195
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
95.	Moharram riots	195
96.	Moharram riots	195
97.	The Moharram riots in Bombay ...	195
98.	The Arya Samaj and politics ...	196
99.	The Arya Samaj and politics ...	196
100.	The Parasnath Hill	196
101.	The Parasnath Hill	196
102.	A Jain grievance in Gorakhpur ...	196
103.	Pan-Islamism	196
104.	Social intercourse between Indians and Anglo-Indians	197
105.	The Magh Mela arrangement ...	197
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
106.	Illumination of Shah Najaf, Lucknow ...	197
107.	H. L. Varma's letter	197

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th February, referring to the murder of the King and the Crown Prince of Portugal, remarks that regicides are frequent in civilized Europe, while the people of the East have seldom committed such deeds.

The Lisbon tragedy.

RAHBAR, 14th February, 1908.

2. Referring to the assassination of the King and the Crown Prince of Portugal, the Rastgo (Allahabad), of the 14th February, remarks that this incident should teach a lesson to those who have inordinate love for monarchy and usurp the natural rights of the people.

The Lisbon tragedy.

RASTGO, 14th February, 1908.

3. Referring to the assassination of the King and the Crown Prince of Portugal, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 15th February, says that it was the result of despotism and monarchy, and remarks that other rulers adopting a similar policy should take a lesson from this tragic end of a brother king.

The Lisbon tragedy.

SWARAJYA, 15th February, 1908.

4. Referring to the Lisbon tragedy and to the subsequent release of political prisoners and to the change of policy by the new king of Portugal, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 15th February, urges the Government of India to take a lesson from this incident, give up its repressive policy, and try to secure the confidence of the people.

The Lisbon tragedy.

SWARAJYA, 15th February, 1908.

5. Referring to the assassination of the King and the Crown Prince of Portugal, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th February, remarks that the difference between people of the East and of the West is that the former attribute divine right to their kings, whereas the latter never hesitate to kill any king who stands in the way of progress.

The Lisbon tragedy.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 15th February, 1908.

6. Referring to the Anglo-Russian Convention, the Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th February, remarks that the silence of the Amir over the terms of the convention does not auger well for the peace of the Frontier.

Anglo-Russian Convention.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 16th February, 1908.

7. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 16th February, expresses satisfaction that Great Britain has abandoned her proposals regarding the policing of Macedonia, and the hope that she will not in future adopt proposals calculated to wound the susceptibilities of Muhammadans.

The Macedonian question.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 16th February, 1908.

8. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 18th February, referring to the Macedonian question, remarks that the Musalmans of India resent English interference in Turkey, only because they think that it is done in the interests of the Christian subjects of Turkey and not because any political issues are at stake or in the interests of its subjects resident in Turkey. If England wants to enter upon a humanitarian crusade, it is its duty to take into consideration the sufferings of the Musalman subjects of Russia, France, Portugal and Spain.

The Macedonian question.

AL-BASHIR, 18th February, 1908.

The editor remarks that it has been alleged by some Congress papers that, as the Musalmans of India are pro-Turkish in their sympathies, they are disloyal to the British Government andwould be glad to place India under Turkey, but that this assertion is false and due to spite, as the Musalmans know full well the value and blessings of British rule, though they would like the British Government to go back to the pro-Turkish policy of Lord Beaconsfield and give up the anti-Turkish one of Mr. Gladstone.

9. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 19th February, referring to the comments made by the Pioneer in its issue of the 15th February, on the cultivation of friendly relations between England and Turkey, remarks that the Musalman citizens of the British Empire will be highly gratified if the Imperial Government adopts a friendly policy towards Turkey, urging that England has as its subjects the largest number of Musalmans in the world.

England and Turkey.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE, GAZETTE 19th February, 1908.

An open rupture with Turkey would not affect their loyalty, but would nevertheless be calculated to wound their feelings.

HIND, 20th February, 1908.

Asiatics in foreign countries.

10. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 20th February, referring to the laws passed by Australia, Canada and Transvaal, interdicting the influx of Asiatics into those colonies, remarks that one does not know how far off the time is, when Asiatics will prevent the people of other countries from entering Asia, and that now it is impossible not to retaliate with stones if bricks are thrown at them.

(b).—Home.

OUDH AKHBAR, 15th February, 1908.

The Congress split.

11. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 15th February, notes with regret the frequent squabbles and mutual recriminations between the two parties in the Congress, remarking that the principles on which they differ have now been entirely lost sight of, and that the controversy has resolved itself into a personal matter.

The editor expresses the hope that the differences will be amicably settled as soon as possible.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 16th February, 1908.

The Congress.

12. A correspondent of the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 16th February, referring to the claim made by the Congress to be representative of all the communities of India, remarks that if it does represent any one, it represents the English-speaking Hindus, as the Muhammadans keep themselves aloof from all agitation against the Government. For a country to have representative institutions, he maintains that all its inhabitants should have one religion and should be in the same scale of civilization, and in conclusion he cautions the Musalmans against the Congress and asks them to uphold the Government.

OUDH AKHBAR, 18th February, 1908.

The Congress.

13. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 18th February, referring to the renewed activity of Congressmen and to their intention to hold a Convention during the Easter holidays, remarks that this shows that the Congress is not dead as has been affirmed by its opponents, but that it is taking deeper root, as the holding of provincial and district conferences shows that the ideals and aspirations of the Congress are being espoused by a larger proportion of the public.

ABHYUDAYA, 21st February, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

14. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st February, contains an article refuting the charges made by the Hindi Kesari (Nagpur) against the Moderate leaders in connection with the breaking up of the Surat Congress, and remarks that its contemporary's statements are inspired more by its partiality for Mr. Tilak than by love of truth.

MOHINI, 11th February, 1908.

Indains in the Transvaal.

15. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 11th February, referring to the ill-treatment of the Indians in the Transvaal, remarks that the relaxation of the rigours of the Registration Act should not be considered sufficient reason for Indians relaxing their efforts, but that they should keep up a vigorous agitation both in India and in the Transvaal, enforced by boycott of colonial goods, and repeatedly appeal to both the Government of India and to the Imperial Government until the Registration Act itself is repealed.

ANAND, 13th February, 1908.

Lord Curzon on the Indian question in the Transvaal.

16. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 13th February, expresses satisfaction at Lord Curzon's espousing the cause of the British Indians in the Transvaal and advocating equal rights to Indians with other subjects of the empire, but fears lest the people, smarting under his acts in India, may not declare this display of sympathy towards Indians to be inspired only by a desire on his Lordship's part to humiliate his opponents.

RAHBAR, 14th February, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

17. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 14th February, referring to the settlement of the Transvaal Indian trouble, remarks that it is only a compromise, and expresses regret that the Indians had not the patience to wait and suffer till the system of registration was done away with altogether, and the hope that they will not willingly register, or else the sole purpose of their long resistance will be frustrated. He concludes by saying that they should never be content with compromises, as if they do, they will never reach their goal.

Indians in the Transvaal.

18. While commending the conduct and manly resolve of the Pathans and the Chinese in not yielding to the ignominy of registering their names in the Transvaal, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 20th February, condemns what he describes as the cowardice shown in this matter by Mr. Gandhi and the Hindus.

HIND, 20th February, 1908.

The Indian discontent.

19. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 18th February, notes with regret the growing prominence that is being given by the Government to distinctions of race, the systematic disregard of the claims of educated Indians to be given positions of responsibility and trust in the State, and the condemnation by the Government of the swadeshi movement, and expresses the opinion that if it persists in its present policy of repression and of want of sympathy with popular aspirations, the situation will become more grave in a short time.

OUDH AKHBAR, 18th February, 1908.

The Indian discontent.

20. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 21st February, makes the following proposals for allaying the present discontent in India :—

(1) To govern in the interests of the people and in accordance with their wishes.
(2) To interdict the export of grain, and to do away with the policy of free trade, which has proved extremely injurious to India.
(3) To administer in criminal cases between Europeans and Indians, even-handed justice, and that juries for these cases should consist of equal numbers of Europeans and Indians.
(4) To have entire confidence in the people of India and to give them posts in the Army as commissioned officers and to allow them to enlist as volunteers.
(5) To be very lenient in the recovery of land revenue and to introduce permanent settlement.
(6) To repeal or modify the Arms Act.
(7) To separate the Judicial from the Executive.

The editor is of opinion that if these reforms are effected, the discontent will die out, and that the National Congress will become an unnecessary institution.

OUDH AKHBAR, 21st February, 1908.

Sedition and the Englishman.

21. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st February, referring to the suggestions of the Englishman regarding the proposed amendments to the Press Act, while admitting that some papers transgress proper bounds, the editor notes that if Mr. Phelp's American letters, which have repeatedly emphasised the fact that Indians should not go beyond constitutional limits, be considered as seditious, it is impossible that Indian leaders should be able to save themselves from the charge of sedition ; and that, if the Englishman's advice be accepted, it is possible to stop the publication of violent writings, but he expresses apprehension lest violent actions should take the place of violent writings, since the policy which has been in vogue for some time past in the country has estranged the feelings of the people. The editor suggests that, now that many acts have been done in accordance with the advice of Anglo-Indian papers like the Englishman, and that the Government has experience as to how detrimental they are to the interests of both the rulers and the ruled, the advice of men like Dr. Rutherford and Sir Henry Cotton should be taken so as to see what effect it has on the interests of the ruling race and of the governed. He expresses the assurance that if this be done, violent speeches and writings will altogether cease, and that if not, public opinion should stop them, without Government being obliged to take any step in the matter.

ABHYUDAYA, 21st February, 1908.

The Decentralisation Commission.

22. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 16th February, contains a letter from the Rev. E. Greaves saying that his evidence before the Decentralisation Commission was misreported, and that he said that his remarks did not apply to officers of several years past at Benares.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 16th February, 1908.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 19th February, 1908.

The Decentralisation Commission.

23. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 19th February, reproduces an extract from Mr. Moti Chand's evidence before the Decentralisation Commission in praise of Mr. Radice's manners and treatment of native gentlemen.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 19th February, 1908.

The Decentralisation Commission.

24. In an article on the Decentralisation Commission, the Indian Daily Telegraph, (Lucknow) of the 19th February, comments on the uniformity of opinion of the witnesses before the Commission regarding the abolition of the Board of Revenue and the want of sympathy between officials and people. The editor surmises that the weight of evidence adduced on the first subject will probably influence the Commission to consider the advisability of recommending the abolition of the Board ; as regards the second subject the editor is unable to believe that officials of these provinces as a class are not sympathetic. Government has always exercised a kindly sympathy in the interest of the people, but it may be that a few officials do not act up to the spirit of Government policy, and he suggests that to obviate this promotion be to some extent made dependent on tact and courtesy.

The editor further remarks on the recommendations made before the Commission regarding the appointment of non-officials as chairmen of municipalities, and points out that the lack of suitable persons for such appointments is attributable to the backward state of education in these provinces.

MOHINI, 11th February, 1908.

The United Provinces Second Provincial Conference.

25. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 11th February, notes with regret that these provinces are the most backward part of India, and attributes it to the policy of the so-called local leaders, inasmuch as they are wanting in moral courage, self-sacrifice and action and disregard public opinion, taking their own opinion to be its embodiment. The editor remarks that as the Provincial Conference professes to improve the condition of these provinces, it should adopt such measures as are useful and practical, that it should conduct its proceedings in Hindi, the vernacular of the province and that it should further take up the question of national education, and adopt Swadeshi and boycott resolutions so as to encourage industrial development, which coupled with self-reliance is the root of all progress.

RAHBAR, 14th February, 1908.

The Provincial Conference.

26. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th February, deprecates the election of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya as President of the Provincial Conference to be held at Lucknow, and ascribes it to the paucity of capable men in these Provinces.

The editor makes the following comments on the subjects that will be discussed in the Conference :—

(1) Reform of Legislative Councils. The expansion of these Councils will not be of any advantage to the people unless the number of the official and non-official members are equalized, but this the Government will never do.

(2) Decentralisation : The people want the separation of the judicial from the executive, and they do not care whether the authority of Government officials is reduced or extended. Government has for the last 22 years ignored the agitation for the separation of the judicial from the executive, and there is no hope that it will do so now.

(3) Famine. The people have been clamouring for the interdiction of the export of grain, but the Government has paid no attention to it. The people themselves should try to stop the export of grain, and, although there would be many difficulties in their way in the end they would succeed. In this connection the editor refers to the remission of land revenue during famines, remarking that the Government seldom does this, and that it spends its surpluses on railway projects which are a source of gain to it.

(4) Education. He expresses doubt that the British Government would spend anything for the betterment of another race, and especially on their education, so that they be able to demand their rights, and remarks that the people should establish their own schools and colleges.

(5) Government service. He condemns the craving for Government service, and expresses the opinion that it will never entrust responsible work to Indians, as it knows its own weakness and exhorts young people to take to arts and industries.

(6) Begar. He thinks that it is impossible for the Government to abolish begar, as its petty officials will always tyrannise over the weak. It can be only done away with by the diffusion of education, so that people may become aware of their own rights. He concludes by saying that Associations should be established in every district for the education of public opinion. Until every one in the country knows what his rights are, the holding of Congresses and conferences would be of no avail. He believes that it would be very wise if all of these questions are thoroughly discussed, in their different aspects.

The Pubna Conference.

27. Referring to the remarks of the Statesman on the recent Conference at Pubna, the Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 15th February, remarks that this shows that Indians are every day losing all fear of the British Government. SWARAJYA, 15th February, 1908.

"Farsighted officials! If you care to keep the brightest jewel of the Indian Empire any longer in the British Crown, then for God's sake do away with all your repressive and shortsighted policy and try to reconcile Indians and win their confidence by treating them in a just and sympathetic way. Do not oppress them too much and keep in mind the weighty words of Sádi, the great Persian poet, and moralist :—

"Do you not see, that even a cat when hard pressed becomes desperate and summons up courage to scratch out the eyes of a lion,"

The First Provincial Conference.

28. In commenting on the first Provincial Conference held at Allahabad, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 20th February, describes the gathering as a "legal fiction," as it consisted of lawyers or their admirers, or reflected only their views. The editor expresses himself as unable to understand why the Conference is styled Provincial as it is confined to a small section of the community. The circular convening a meeting for the election of delegates for the next Conference invites only those who sympathise with the views of the Conference to attend, which notice, the editor characterises as 'an impudent proclamation,' and prophesies failure for the Lucknow Conference, if its organisers are influenced by similarly narrow-minded principles. CITIZEN, 20th February, 1908.

The Liberal Ministry.

29. Referring to the defeat of Liberal candidates in certain recent elections, the Anand (Lucknow) of the 13th February, says that it shows that the Liberals have begun to lose their hold upon the public mind. The editor notes that the Liberal party since its accession to power has done not a single act to entitle it to a longer existence. He remarks that as for the Indians it makes no difference whether Liberal or Conservatives are in power, since it is the former who are now having the Indians oppressed at the hands of the same Boers, with whom the Conservatives professed they went to war for the protection of the British Indians in the Transvaal. ANAND, 13th February, 1908.

India and Ireland.

30. While pointing out that the manly courage and brave resistance of the Irish have often compelled the British Government to desist from its despotic and repressive policy, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 15th February, remarks :— SWARAJYA, 15th February, 1908.

"Indians! if you want to dissuade your officials from their present harsh and unsympathetic policy, you should show them that their present attitude towards you is not only foolish but also injurious to England. Instead of weakening Indians your policy is every day making them more and more strong. But if you, Indians, timidly submit yourself to their harshness, and cringingly brush the dust of their shoes, then be sure that this ill-treatment towards you will be continued for ever.

It is better, therefore, that you come forward like men and show that you are a living nation of the world and cannot silently submit to such scornful treatment and disregard of your honour."

SWARAJYA, 15th February, 1908.

The Government and the Press.

31. Referring to the statement of the editor, manager and printer of the Sandhya in connection with the second case of sedition against him, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 15th February, remarks :—"The undaunted spirit of editors as evinced by them in their statements before the court, has entirely humiliated the respect and authority of the British courts. But it is strange that the Government is still sleeping and blindly keeping to its repressive and harsh policy. It must know that the times are past when it could do what it liked.

The well-wishers and the lovers of India, as was said by B. Manuranjan Guha, should act with courage and manliness. They should never fear jail or deportation, gallows or bullet. If the Government cares to protect the dignity and honour of its courts, it should abstain from filling the jails with editors, and from penalising the spirit of patriotism. Otherwise there may come forward some still more obstinate and undaunted editor, who may even refuse to recognise the English courts and the British law, which take patriotism and service of the nation to be an offence, as a competent authority to chastise him, and may say plainly that the judges are tyrants and the law an instrument of torture and oppression. The wise and far-sighted can well surmise the consequences which will follow when it comes to such open flouting in the face of authority.

Consequently instead of gagging independent editors, by resort to oppression and by restricting their freedom of speech and writing, it will be much better if they are won over with co-operation and sympathy, without affording them an opportunity to bring into action their resources for lowering the respect of the Government in the eyes of the public, (by depicting it) as despotic and cruel.

When Government will perform its duty with honesty of purpose and justice, the editors will become fearless of extraneous dangers and devote themselves to reform and to the improvement of the internal requirements of the community. Unless Government abstains from regarding independent editors as its enemies, it is impossible that it can in any way dissuade them from criticising its measures.

It is better and wiser therefore that Government should give up its repressive policy and act with justice and sympathy."

SWARAJYA, 15th February, 1908.

Appointment of Lala Harkishan Lal as a member of the Legislative Council.

32. Referring to the appointment of Lala Harkishan Lal, barrister-at-law, as a member of the Punjab Legislative Council, in recognition of his services as the leader of the Punjab Moderates, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 15th February, remarks that it cannot be a true honour, which is obtained at the expense of the interests of one's country and in exchange for the humiliation of its people.

ABHYUDAYA, 21st February, 1908.

Dr. Rutherford on Lala Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh.

33. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 21st February, reproduces the opinion of Dr. Rutherford on Lala Lajpat Rai and Ajit Singh as expressed by him to a representative of the Manchester Guardian when asked whether he considered them seditionists, and remarks that Indians are at one with Dr. Rutherford in his estimate of the character of those two Indians.

ABHYUDAYA, 21st February, 1908.

Self-government in India.

34. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st February, contains an article under the heading "What is our ultimate goal." The editor holds that the demand of absolute swaraj (autonomy) for India, and the wild talk in some quarters of severing all connection with England stand very seriously in the way of useful work in the country. He maintains that the ultimate goal of Indians is that they should have control over the finances and the administration of the country, so that its wealth may be devoted to its own good, and thereby obviate its material and economic prostration, and this aim can also be realized if India is granted self-government on the lines of colonial government. Accordingly, he adds, to demand such swaraj as implies the rejection of possible connection with England, is to make the attainment of their object an impossibility, and to wantonly plant thorns in their way. He remarks that all should co-operate in gaining those points on which all agree, leaving the disputed points to be attempted by those who dare do it, and that it is sheer folly to quarrel among themselves and thus obstruct their progress, because they cannot agree on all points. He urges that the securing of self-government on colonial lines is in itself no easy task, and that all should bend their energies to render it easy, clearing off the difficulties and obstructions in the way. Without quarrelling about the height which the national fabric should reach, all should see that its foundations are laid deep and strong, which is only possible by the spread of education, the encouragement of unity, the practice of virtue, and the cultivation of self-respect.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

35. In an article entitled a "Curious Buffer", the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th February, points out that His Majesty the Amir, though under many obligations to the British nation, is ready to shelter the women and children of the frontier tribes, now that a punitive expedition is contemplated. INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th February, 1908.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

36. In discussing the order prohibiting officers and men from giving any information to Press correspondents in connection with the punitive expedition, the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th February, is of opinion that the reason is obvious, as such expeditions are not carried on like European wars and as the international laws of warfare are not closely observed. INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th February, 1908.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

37. In an article on the Zakka Khel expedition, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) in the issue of the 20th February, remarks that the British public are rather premature in congratulating themselves on the result of the expedition before a blow has been struck. This self-satisfaction, he notes, compares very unfavourably with the admirable self-restraint of the Japanese. Frontier tribesmen take a good deal of punishing, especially when sustained in their defiant attitude by the indirect friendliness of His Majesty the Amir, so that for the present at least there is very little cause fcr jubilation on the part of the English. INDIAN PEOPLE, 20th February, 1908.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

38. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 20th February, complains that the Zakka-Khel expedition has been undertaken at a very inopportune time, when the country is in the throes of a terrible famine, and that Mr. Morley is ever ready to sanction such unproductive schemes, and turns a deaf ear to those measures which are calculated to benefit the people of India on the plea of want of funds. HIND, 20th February, 1908.

The Zakka-Khel expedition.

III.—Native States.

39. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th February, condemns the conduct of the Maharaja of Kapurthala in marrying a Spanish lady in preference to one of his own country. ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th February, 1908.

The marriage of the Maharja of Kapurthala.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

40. A mukhtar writing to the Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 14th February, referring to a recent decision of the High Court about the necessity of the mukhtars obtaining permission from a court, before conducting a criminal case before it, complains that this has greatly lowered the status of mukhtars and placed them at the mercy of magistrates, and that it has been a blow to their independence. He maintains that in the former enactments the mukhtar was in the same category with other legal practitioners, and that it was only after 1879 that it became necessary for an accused person to obtain the Court's permission before engaging a mukhtar to conduct his case. He also maintains that the mukhtars pass the same examination as pleaders and vakils, and that their papers are judged by the same standard. He admits that the pleaders and vakils have to spend a lot of money on their professional training, but they have other privileges also which the mukhtars do not possess : e.g. they can be appointed Munsifs, Subordinate Judges and Deputy Collectors. He is thankful that Mr. Justice Banerji has remarked that permission should not be generally withheld, but the Magistrate may do whatever he likes and may misuse his power. He says that this is being already done in the Meerut and Muzaffarnagar districts. ZUL QARNAIN, 14th February, 1908.

Mukhtars.

He concludes by saying that this decision will not only reduce the income of the mukhtars, but will be very hard on those persons who are not rich enough to engage pleaders and vakils.

RASTGO, 14th February, 1908.

Conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain.

41. Referring to the conviction of Maulvi Liakat Husain, the Rástgo (Allahabad), of the 14th February, characterises it as national martyrdom, and asks other Muhammadans to follow the noble example set by their venerable and brave co-religionist.

MUSAFIR, 15th February, 1908.

Conviction of the Hari Kishore.

42. Referring to the conviction of the editor of the Hari Kishore (Central Provinces) under sections 124A and 153A, Indian Penal Code, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th February, remarks that it is not the seditious articles which have created so much panic and dissatisfaction in the country, but that it is the prosecution of editors and the ill-treatment accorded to them by the Government. The editor expresses the opinion that it will be for the good of the Government if it abstained from persecuting editors in this way.

HIND, 20th February, 1908.

Conviction of Asa Ram under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code.

43. While maintaining the innocence of one Asa Ram of Umballa, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 20th February, expresses its deep regret at his conviction under section 211, Indian Penal Code, for bringing a false charge of bribery against the police.

The editor is of opinion that if such favour be shown by Courts to the police it will become impossible for any one to complain against it, and asks Local Governments to take special notice of all such cases.

HIND, 20th February, 1908.

An alleged rape case.

44. While alluding to a serious case of rape, committed upon a young girl of 13 by a policeman in Jhalakati, to the discharge of the accused, and to the conviction of the unfortunate girl under sections 182 and 211, Indian Penal Code, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 20th February, strongly denounces the conduct of the court in punishing the poor aggrieved girl.

HIND, 20th February, 1908.

Europeans and Indians.

45. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 20th February, referring to the fine of Rs. 10 imposed on a settlement officer for causing the death of a coolie named Kamr-ud-din, remarks that this punishment was not commensurate with the gravity of the crime, and that it is the duty of the Government to see that in such cases justice is impartially adminstered.

ABHYUDAYA, 21st February, 1908.

Comments on the police in judgments.

46. Referring to Mr. Justice Robertson's opinion expressed in his judgment on the Rawalpindi riot case appeal, that magistrates should not pass strictures on the police, and that police officers themselves will take proper notice of the conduct of their subordinates, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st February, remarks that how far this wish of Mr. Robertson is realized is exemplified by the complaint of Mr. Barnes, the District Magistrate of Lahore, who has complained that a constable named Nur Muhammad was in no way departmentally punished, nor even suspended, although he fractured the skull of a person.

(b).—Police.

RAHBAR, 14th February, 1908.

Preservation of peace.

47. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th February, referring to a recent dacoity in Peshawar, remarks that although the British Government always claims that it is the only Government in India which has succeeded in preserving peace in the country, it is unable to protect the life and property of its people. The editor thinks that the police force should be made more effective, so that it might protect the lives and roperty of the people on such occasions.

RABHAR, 14th February, 1903.

Suits for recovery of damages against Mr. Clarke.

48. Referring to the rumoured transfer to Shillong of Mr. Clarke, the Magistrate of Mymensingh, and to the suits brought against him and some other Government officers by some fifty-five persons to recover their damages, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th February, remarks that the transfer of the magistrate shows that the Government also was not satisfied with his conduct in connection with the recent Mymensingh disturbances. The editor further remarks that the transfer of Mr. Clarke will not in the least compensate for the enormous loss sustained by the people through his misconduct, and that if Government contents itself merely with transferring him people will condemn it as an act of racial favouritism.

Police and public.

49. Referring to the indifference shown by the Magistrate of Umballa to the petition of one Asa Ram who complained of the police extorting a bribe from him and to his prosecution under section 182, Indian Penal Code, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th February, regrets the unlimited power given to the police under the British Government. MUSAFIR, 15th February, 1908.

The editor further remarks that as God sits idle on the seventh sky, leaving the world to be managed by His angels as they liked, so Lord Minto sitting in Simla has left the country entirely at the mercy of the cruel police.

The Sarai Akil tragedy.

50. In referring to the Sarai Akil tragedy, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad) in the issue of the 20th February, expresses the gratitude of the Indian public to His Honour Sir John Hewett for the promptness with which he directed a full enquiry into the matter, and for the punishment of Sub-Inspector Karamat Husain, in spite of the unwillingness of the District Magistrate to hold him as the responsible party. CITIZEN, 20th February, 1908.

The unofficial commission on the Mymensingh disturbance.

51. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st February, referring to the unofficial commission's report on the Mymensingh disturbance, remarks that whatever the local officials might say, the general public will put implicit confidence in this report. ABHYUDAYA, 21st February, 1908.

The editor says that it is needless to point out what feelings its perusal will arouse towards the administration of the Government in the public mind, and that those will not be allayed until those persons whose culpable neglect of duty led to the incident are duly and adequately punished.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

Resignation of Municipal Commissioners at Amraoti.

52. Referring to the resignation tendered by some 17 Municipal Commissioners of Amraoti in consequence of the unjustifiable reatment accorded to Mr. Khaparde, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th February, advises the Government not to be too strict and harsh towards educated Indians as they have now realised the feelings of self-respect. RABHAR, 14th February, 1908.

The Agra Municipality.

53. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th February, accuses the Agra Municipality of partiality in its treatment of the public. The editor complains that the municipality has not realized the water tax due to it on a house, in mohalla Gokulpura, owned by Lala Lakshmi Narayan, a retired Sub-Inspector, though it is occupied by tenants, while it is very anxious to realize the tax from the proprietor of this newspaper. ARYA MITRA. 16th February 1908.

The Agra Municipality.

54. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 19th February, while complaining of the mismanagement of the Agra Municipality, remarks that there is a rumour that some portions of the municipal building are to be reconstructed and decorated with ornamental works at considerable expenditure. NASIM-I-AGRA, 19th February, 1908.

The editor objects to this as a useless waste of money, as the present building is durable, decent and serviceable. He suggests that the money to be spent in decoration would be better spent in helping the poor who stand sorely in need of money.

Taxes in Benares Municipality.

55. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 18th February, referring to the remission of the water-tax in Allahabad on houses having yearly rental value of Rs. 43, remarks that some such concession should be made for the people of Benares also. SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 18th February, 1908.

Municipal elections.

56. A correspondent of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 19th February, condemns the practice of canvassing during Municipal elections, and advises candidates to deliver lectures and distribute pamphlets on municipal requirements and to declare what they would do for their city if they were elected. HINDUSTANI, 19th February, 1908.

(e).—Education.

OUDH AKHBAR, 15th February, 1908.

Education.

57. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 15th February, publishes a letter from a correspondent who is of opinion that education should be free and compulsory as in Japan and Europe, otherwise India will never make any progress. He also advocates female education and notes with satisfaction the work that is being done in the Aligarh Normal School.

ADVOCATE, 16th February, 1908.

Education in the United Provinces.

58. In an article on "Education in the United Provinces" the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 16th February, is glad to note that the recommendations of the Committee for the improvement of secondary education regarding an increase in the inspecting staff and the appointment of specialists in various subjects has met with the approval of Government. The editor however regrets that more attention is not given to instructing pupils through the medium of their own language.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th February, 1907.

Appointment of the Trustees of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College.

59. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly,) of the 16th February, expresses regret at the appointment of other persons as trustees of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, in preference to the Honourable Justices Sharf-ud-din and Khwaja Ghulam-ul Suqlain, who, in view of their services to the community, had prior claims to appointment as trustees.

MASHRIQ, 18th February, 1908.

Industrial education.

60. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 18th February, notes with satisfaction the efforts made by Sir J. Hewett, to introduce industrial education into these Provinces and the opening of technical classes in the Roorkee College. The editor suggests the advisability of opening one industrial school at least in every division, which might be supported by District Boards, which no longer have to support High Schools, as the Government intends to take them over.

HINDUSTANI, 19th February, 1908.

Secondary education in the United Provinces.

61. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 19th February, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th February, on Secondary Education in the United Provinces.

HINDUSTANI, 19th February, 1908.

Vernacular schools.

62. A correspondent of the Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 19th February, advocates the opening of industrial classes for instruction in wood work, tailoring, agriculture, &c., in connection with vernacular schools, so that students may find some sort of employment when they have finished their education in these schools, for at present they have very little chance of entering Government service, as they do not know English.

HIND, 20th February, 1908.

Students at the Pubna Conference.

63. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 20th February, referring to the debarring of students from attending the Pubna Conference and the foundation of a National School as its outcome, remarks that repressive measures generally prove beneficial as in this case, and as long as Indians do not suffer, they will not be able to serve their country. The editor complains that in some countries love of one's native land is instilled into the minds of boys at school, while in India they cannot even hear the speeches of their leaders.

AGRA AKHBAR, 21st February, 1908.

The Agra Mufid-i-Am School.

64. Referring to the rumoured abolition of the Mufid-i-Am school at Agra, the Agra Akhbar of the 21st February, asks the local authorities and the Government to allow the institution to continue and to make it more useful as it has done much good to the Agra public.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th February, 1908.

Famine in Bundelkhand.

65. Referring to the miserable condition of both the zamindars and the agriculturists from the distress caused by famine in Bundelkhand, the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th February, asks the Government to do something to help them in their difficulties.

66. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th February, reproduces from the Punjabee (Lahore) the text of the report on the distress from famine in the United Provinces which was prepared by a young graduate deputed by Lala Lajpat Rai to these Provinces to inquire into the condition of the people.

Famine in the United Provinces.

ARYA MITRA, 16th February, 1908.

67. The Árya Mitra (Agra) of the 16th February has heard the rumour that out of each rupee given to widows and indigent persons in Muttra only 14 annas reached the latter, two annas per rupee being misappropriated by those who distribute the money. The editor does not vouch for the authenticity of the report, but hopes that it may not be true.

Misappropriation in famine relief.

ARYA MITRA, 16th February, 1908.

68. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st February, says that in a country like India the causes of the recurring famines are the excess of population, the export of food grains and the carelessness of the cultivator due to his poverty.

Famine and its causes.

ABHYUDAYA, 21st February, 1908.

The editor expresses the opinion that the excess of population does not affect India so much, for its surplus population is carried away every year by the recurrence of plague, and that the starvation of the poor is due to the enormous export of food stuffs. If the wealthy classes would take measures to buy up all grain in the country to be retained in it for the benefit of its own people, much of the appalling severity of famine and plague alike could be mitigated, for the most virulent ravages of the latter are made among those people whose constitutions have been undermined by insufficient nourishment and who do not consequently possess the necessary power to resist it, and thus fall easy victims to it. As to the other cause—the carelessness of the cultivator—the editor remarks that it is connected with his poverty, due to the ever-increasing rent and the recurring famines. Thus the primary cause of the famine is the export of food grains and unless it is stopped famines with all their accompanying features will continue as ever.

69. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 18th February, publishes a letter from a correspondent who, while referring to the attempts that are being made by the public to improve the sugar industry, requests Government to reduce the canal water rates for sugar cultivation and to encourage the cultivators by offering prizes for its manufacture.

Sugar industry.

AL-BASHIR, 18th February, 1908.

70. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 19th February, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th February, on the sugar industry in the Central Provinces and United Provinces.

The sugar industry.

HINDUSTANI, 19th February, 1908.

71. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 16th February, while pointing out that there are agricultural banks in other countries to save the agriculturists from distress in time of need and scarcity, notes with regret the absence of such institutions in India. The taqavi advanced to the cultivators by Government is totally insufficent and does more harm than good to the recipients.

In conclusion, the editor asks Government to do something for the agricultural classes in this country.

Taqavi* and the agriculturists.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th February, 1908.

72. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 19th February, notes with satisfaction the reduction in canal water rates for sugar cultivation in these Provinces, and remarks that it will be a boon to the people of the Meerut Division.

Irrigation.

HINDUSTANI, 19th February, 1908.

(g).—General.

73. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for February, reproduces the paper read at the Second South Indian Industrial Conference held in June 1907, at Vizagapatam on "Our Industrial Situation," by Mr. Y Narayenamurti Pantalu, B.A., of Waltair.

Industrial situation and how to improve it.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

74. Referring to the case of embezzlement against one Mr. Walker Luker, an officer in the famine relief work in Gonda, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th February, remarks that it was a great mistake to entrust such responsible work to a member of the race whose god is the Almighty dollar, and to expect that it will be performed honestly.

Embezzlement case against Mr. Walker Luker.

RAHBAR, 14th February, 1908

RAHBAR, 14th February, 1908.

Alleged death from starvation in Hathras.

75. Referring on the authority of the Bharat Mitra to a death from starvation of a Brahman in Hathras, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th February, remarks that such deplorable incidents are due to the indifference of officials, which are likely to recur so long as the people do not care to remove the cause.

RAHBAR, 14th February, 1908.

Forfeiture of zamindari rights.

76. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad), in the issue of the 14th February, condemns the order of Major Fox, the Deputy Commissioner of Jhelum, depriving some zamindars of the village of Udharwal(?) and their descendants from zamindari rights for screening offenders who set fire to the Sikh temple in the village.

RAHBAR, 14th February, 1908.

The beggars question in Council.

77. Referring to the replies to the questions asked in the Legislative Council of Bengal by the Hon'ble Babu Radha Charan, in connection with Indian beggars, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th February, remarks that the individual efforts of one man never achieve any success, and until Indians join together and ask the Government in a body to listen to their grievances, it will be foolish to think that they will ever be heard.

MUSAFIR, 15th February, 1908.

The Etawah incident.

78. Referring to the commencement of the hearing of the Etawah conspiracy case, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 15th February, notes with regret that at present the responsible police officers at Etawah are all Muhammadans, and asks His Honor Sir J. Hewett to have a proportionate strength of Hindu and Muhammadan police officers in the place.

In conclusion, he points out that mere prosecution or conviction of Khalil will not do in this case, unless the persons who used Khalil as a tool in their hands are brought to justice, as they are the real culprits of that diabolical conspiracy.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 15th February, 1908.

Extravagant expenses of Indians.

79. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th February, publishes a letter from H. L. Varma Foryad, in which the writer strongly condemns the expensive follies displayed by Indians in connection with funeral and marriage ceremonies, and exhorts them to take a lesson from Europeans and employ their money in some useful industry which will be both paying and beneficial to the country.

MUSAFIR, 15th February, 1908.

Proposed partition of the Lahore and Mymensingh districts.

80. Alluding to the rumoured partition of the Lahore and Mymensingh districts, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th February, remarks that Government ought to take a lesson from the partition of Bengal lest it be involved into some more serious difficulties.

RIYAZ-UL AKHBAR, 16th February, 1908.

Partition of Patna Division.

81. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 16th February, referring to the proposed partition of the Patna Division, remarks--"From the circumstances it may appear that the partition of the Patna division will remove the suspicions created by the partition of Bengal, but this will not be true in the case of the Bengalis themselves, for their love for their country and their nation knows no bounds. That feeling (patriotism) has not as yet developed among other (people), and the Behari's desire for partition is in direct opposition to the idea of the Bengalis, and will not abate their (the Bengalis'?) zeal."

HINDUSTHAN, 16th February, 1908.

Plague.

82. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 16th February, urges educated people to co-operate with the Government in its preventive measures against plague and to explain these measures to their uneducated and ignorant countrymen so as to persuade them to benefit from the facilities placed by Government at their disposal. The editor suggests that, as in Bombay, notices containing simple instructions to combat plague should be distributed throughout the country.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th February, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

83. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th February, in an article on the swadeshi movement points out that it is at present running into danger through its promoters, in their desire for personal gain, forgetting the object of the movement. The original idea of establishing emporiums at places where indigenous articles are produced is now being lost sight of and disinterestedness is being replaced by personal ambition.

Indian Coolies in British Colonies.

84. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 18th February, writes as follows under the heading 'Indian coolies':— MASHRIQ, 18th February, 1908.

"It is generally taught in schools that in the British empire slavery does not exist. But the present condition of Indian labourers in English islands (possessions ?) will shock the soul of Wilberforce, the opponent of slavery. Every year nearly a thousand Indian labourers emigrate to the Fiji Islands, where there are at present 13,000 coolies. It is true that they are not taken there in those miserable (?) old-fashioned ships, but we should look to the treatment. Their price, i.e all expenses relating to them, is estimated at Rs. 225, and after taking this sum they are handed over to the owner of the plantation, and are made to work hard; although at present the slaves of the old style (sic.) who are in Kimberley and who are called Kaffers get Rs. 45 a week and work in great comfort and happiness (?)"

The British Government and educated Indians.

85. The Aligarh Institute Gazette publishes a series of articles by Shamsul Ulama Khan Bahadur Muhammad Zakaullah in its issues of 5th, 12th and 19th February on the attitude of educated Indians towards the British Government. ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 5th, 12th and 19th February, 1908.

The writer maintains that the majority of the people are content with their lot and care only for good harvests and the goodwill of the local officers. They are thankful for peace and prosperity under the British rule. But the present generation which has seen nothing of the stirring times preceding the British rule, cannot appreciate the blessings of Pax Britannica. The times have changed, but the English have had no opportunity of keeping in touch with Indians. The reason of this lack of intercourse he ascribes to the fact that the higher classes do not know English and so cannot associate with the English on the same intellectual level, although they may give them dinners and luxurious entertainments. Those who know English belong to the middle class and hence have no access to English officials. For expression of Indian opinion officials have to depend on their servants or upon Indians who come to them to beg favours, and who do not represent things in their proper light.

Indians of real culture are of a shy and retiring disposition and do not take the trouble to cultivate the goodwill of Europeans. This is not due to pride but to an exaggerated sense of self-respect. They cannot be seen on railway platforms receiving or bidding adieu to high officers. Their work is unobtrusive and unostentatious and seldom comes to the notice of European officers, although it is appreciated by the people at large. On the other hand there is the ever-growing class of English-knowing men, the product of Indian colleges, who have been fed on English literature and history from their youth, who claim to be the representatives of the people and in their name ask for popular institutions. It professes to be loyal to the Government and to be the champion of the people, but it is neither. In reality its sole aim is self-aggrandisement. This class is strongest in Bengal. It is strange that the province that was the most peaceful portion of the Moghal Empire, should give so much trouble to the British Government. This boldness and self-reliance seem to be a result of English education. The craftiness of the Bengalis is proverbial. In 1857 the Mutiny originated at Barrackpur, but North India had to bear the brunt. Last year too the discontent began in Bengal, but the Panjabis had to suffer for it, while the Bengalis who had set the ball rolling, watched it from a safe distance. They do not ask anything from the Government now, they seek to defy it by inaugurating the Swaraj. The same is the case with Bombay and Madras. The people of Nothern India still remember the Mutiny and its consequences and will not commit an indiscreet action. When English education was first introduced into India those who studied in English schools and were given appointments, generally became denationalised and lived aloof from their people. They affected English manners and scoffed at their ancestral religion. But now their ambition knows no bounds and they are extremely envious of the powers of the Anglo-Indian bureaucracy and want to drive it out of India. To attain this end, they are courting popular favour and have succeeded in converting a large number of Hindus to their creed, but the Musalmans have studiously kept aloof from the machinations of these agitators. In Eastern Bengal the agitators resorted to compulsion and the Musalmans were obliged to retaliate by main force. The writer, however, says that all educated Indians belong to this class. There are many of them who detest agitators and their methods of work and devote themselves to social regeneration, the promotion of female education, the providing of medical aid to the poor, the development of commerce, agriculture and industries. This class is perfectly loyal to the Government.

He also says that social intercourse between Europeans and Indians is not possible, as it leads to the degeneration of the former.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 20th February, 1908.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

86. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 20th February, contrasts the friendly relations, brotherly love and sympathy that existed between Hindus and Muhammadans in the past with the present animosity and disunion between the two communities, and notes with regret that this is the result of the existing system of education in the country.

HIND, 20th February, 1908.

Sir L. Hare and the Maharaja of Manipur.

87. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 20th February, referring to the advice given by Sir L. Hare to the Maharaja of Manipur on the occasion of his installation, to be just to his people, remarks that if he had himself put into practice the principles which he preaches, there would have been no discontent in the country or agitation against the Government.

HIND, 20th February, 1908.

The Factory Commission.

88. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 20th February, referring to the Factory Commission, remarks that enquiries are not being made in the interests of the labourers employed in Indian mills, but simply to find a plausible excuse for restricting the hours of labour in these mills, so that they may not be able to compete on equal terms with the Lancashire mills.

V.—Legislation.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th February, 1908.

Amendments in the Press Act.

89. Referring to the proposed amendments in the Press Act, the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th February, notes with regret that the Native Press is in a difficult position. If it sets forth the grievances of the people in mild and respectful language it is disregarded, but if it criticises the measures of Government, it is taken to task for being seditious and disaffected.

In conclusion, the editor remarks that the gagging of the Press in general for the fault of a few indiscreet editors is not at all a commendable measure. He asks the Government to fully consider all their measures before embodying them in the Statute Book as unpopular measures served but to widen the gulf between rulers and ruled, especially when Government owing to its restrictions on the Press, is unaware of the unpopularity of such measures.

VI.—Railway.

SARASWATI, February, 1908.

Railway collisions.

90. With reference to the frequent railway occurrences of late, the Saraswati (Allahabad), for February, is of opinion that they are due to the inadequacy of the subordinate railway staff, their poor education and small salaries, and remarks that unless these causes are removed, one cannot expect any decrease in the number of railway accidents, especially when railways are now rapidly multiplying every year, making it indispensible that capable men should be employed in railway administration in sufficient numbers.

In another place, the editor complains of numerous and foolish errors in the Travellers' Guide in Hindi (Tirthatan pradipika) compiled by the Railway Board, and regrets that no notice has been taken of his letter to the Board on the subject.

KHICHRI SAMACHAR, 15th February, 1908.

A railway complaint.

91. The Khichrí Samáchár (Mirzapur) of the 15th February complains of the frequent abstraction of goods from parcels and sacks on railways by railway employés, and cites two instances of such abstraction at the Mirzapur railway station.

The editor asks Government and the Railway Board to take early steps to remedy this evil in the interests of trade.

92. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 17th February, complains of the frequency of indecent assaults on Indian female passengers on railways and expresses its surprise that the Railway Board has not so far taken any steps to put a stop to such a serious evil.

Outrages on railway.

BHARAT JIWAN, 17th February, 1908.

93. In the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 20th February, a correspondent gives an account of the very inconsiderate manner in which his family was treated by railway officials when journeying from Allahabad to Howrah on 8th February. As the train was starting from Allahabad, a Luggage Inspector came up to the carriage in which the party was travelling, and objected to the amount of luggage in the carriage. He took all their tickets from the various members of the party and then had all the luggage removed to be weighed, in spite of the protestations of the travellers that their luggage did not exceed the free allowance that they were entitled to. The train then started and the party went off without luggage or tickets. The Citizen's correspondent who was seeing his family off, immediately appealed to the station authorities, and although it was found that the luggage objected to was not in excess of the free allowance, no apology was made nor was any redress forthcoming. Further, the party in the train were compelled to take new tickets and to pay the usual penalty. In commenting on the matter, the editor hopes that the railway authorities will compensate the aggrieved party, and take suitable notice of the indifference of the station staff concerned to the comfort of passengers.

East Indian Railway complaints.

CITIZEN, 20th February, 1908.

VII.—Post Office.

94. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 15th February, remarks that instead of affording any facility or simplifying work, the introduction of the new form for value payable parcels has made the work more complex and difficult.

The coupon given to the sender has no entry of the sum for which the parcel is valued. It is sometimes very difficult to read the clumsy writing of the post office clerks.

In most cases some entries regarding the address are entirely left out or inaccurately filled in.

The editor suggests the desirability of the forms being filled in by the sender himself.

The new form for value payable parcels.

SWARAJYA, 15th February, 1908.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

95. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 19th February, referring to the riots between Shias and Sunnis at various places during the Moharram, regrets that there are no responsible leaders in the two communities in whom all can have confidence.

Moharram riots.

HINDUSTANI, 19th February, 1908.

96. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 19th February, referring to the fracas between the Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow during the Moharram, remarks that according to some reports this was due to the chanting of the Tabarrah by the Shias, which hurts the feelings of the Sunnis. He thinks that all this is due to fanaticism and ignorance, and exhorts educated Sunnis to restrain their co-religionists from exhibiting tazias so that such incidents may not occur.

Muharram riots.

OUDH AKHBAR, 19th February, 1908.

97. In referring to the recent Muharram riots in Bombay, the Indian People (Allahabad) of 20th February, expresses regret that the police neglected to take the precaution of inviting the leaders of both sides beforehand to assist them in preserving the peace, in which case if trouble was anticipated, the military could have been held in readiness. This would have obviated the necessity of firing on the crowd. When the police did find it necessary to fire, they should have had some regard for the lives of harmless spectators. The article on the subject concludes as follows :—" Instead of praising the Bombay police we should blame them for not having appreciated the gravity of the situation until they found themselves unable to cope with it, with the result that they killed a number of innocent persons in the name of the law."

The Moharram riots in Bombay.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 20th February, 1908.

RASTGO, 14th February, 1908.

98. The Rástgo (Allahabad), of the 14th February, while refuting the views of those opponents of the Arya Samaj who call it a political body, remarks :—"The Arya Samaj is a purely religious body and will continue to be so for ever, if it is not compelled to make itself a national or a military Samaj as the Sikh community was. The Sikhs compelled by circumstances, at once became a formidable military body under their Guru Govind Singh and what they did, is and will ever be known to the world.

Arya Samaj and politics.

We will thank the Government if, owing to the suspicions entertained against the Arya Samaj, it feels the necessity of developing itself into a military or national body. The existence of such a body is urgently required for the progress and salvation of the nation and country. We own, that every Indian, without any distinction of caste or religion, has and ought to have, the same connection with Indian politics as he has with India itself."

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th February, 1908.

99. Referring to an article in the Zamana (Cawnpore), entitled "The Arya Samaj and Politics," the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th February, remarks that although the Arya Samaj professes to be a purely religious body yet the programme of its working shows that in reality the Samaj is a well organised political body, as shown by its taking a more conspicuous part in matters relating to the material prosperity of the people than in those of purely spiritual development.

The Arya Samaj and Politics.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th February, 1908.

100. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 16th February, says that the agitation of the Jain community in connection with the Parasnath Hill has produced some effect upon the authorities and they have again taken up the question for reconsideration.

The Parasnath Hill.

The editor notes with regret that although His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal held an interview with the representatives of the Jains on the 1st February last, he has not yet given a final answer on the matter. He does not know how to account for such a line of conduct, unless it is to test the strength of the Jains, and he urges them accordingly to keep up their agitation, to use swadeshi goods and boycott foreign articles, so as to show the authorities that they are by no means too weak to protect their sacred hill from desecration.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th February, 1908.

101. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 16th February, after describing at length the sacredness of the Parasnath Hill, and how it will be violated if bungalows are erected there, proposes that the Jain spiritual leaders, gurus and ascetics should proceed to where bungalows are to be constructed and plainly and fearlessly tell the authorities to take their lives before desecrating their holy hill, for they love the latter more than the former.

The Parasnath Hill.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th February, 1908.

102. A correspondent writing to the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 16th February, notes with regret that the Government has proposed to acquire a plot of land in the village of Kiskandapur in the district of Gorakhpur which includes a Jain temple and the land belonging to it, and in connection with which a notice has been issued inviting objections from persons affected thereby. He remarks that very soon after the question of the Parasnath Hill was raised, the Jain community has been given a fresh cause of grievance.

A Jain grievance in Gorakhpur.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

103. The Modern Review, for February 1908, contains an article on Pan-Islamism by Shaikh Mushir Husain Kidwai, in which the writer points out that Muhammad himself, by establishing various festivals in which representatives of different countries took part, was the real founder of Pan-Islamism. Subsequent leaders however took advantage of the spirit of Islamism for personal aggrandisement and for the attainment of the objects of their ambition, with the result that for a time the bond of union in Islam between the different Moslem communities was lost sight of. At present the old spirit of unity is being revived. He remarks that the political aspect of Pan-Islamism is doubtful, but that, from the standpoint of the universal religion, the prospect is most encouraging. The religion of Muhammad is, he notes, free from the vices that degrade the Christian religion, and is triumphantly successful where the latter fails inasmuch it accepts all converts irrespective of colour or race. He describes fanaticism as the outcome of a Musalman's devotion to his faith, and notes that Christian people are also fanatical, but that their fanaticism is much inferior to that of Muslims. He quotes the desecration of the Mahdi's tomb in the Soudan and the cruel punishment of those concerned in the Denshawai incident as reflecting discredit on the Christain religion. He remarks that England has a valuable asset in her Muslim soldiers, but that she neglects to utilise and encourage their fighting spirit, and refuses to advance deserving Muslims to positions of preferment. In conclusion he adverts to the increasing activity of England in the direction of Aden and Koweit which he says is regarded by all Muhammadans with alarm, and warns England that the latter will not tolerate an alien Protectorate over their holy places. The article concludes with an account of the spread of Islam in Christian countries during the last few years.

Pan Islamism.

Social intercourse between Indians and Anglo-Indians.

104. Commenting on the dinner given to Mr. Gupta at the Calcutta Club before his departure for England, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) in the issue of 20th February, regrets that clubs in India are so exclusive that Indian gentlemen are generally speaking not eligible for membership, but are sometimes "smuggled in to stake a few thousand rupees on games of chance."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 20th February, 1908.

The Magh Mela arrangements.

105. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 20th February, commenting on the arrangements for this year's Magh Mela at Allahabad, pays a high tribute to Mr. McNair, District Magistrate and to Mr. Moore, Joint Magistrate, and acknowledges the indebtedness of all who attended the fair to the excellent arrangements made by the officials.

CITIZEN, 20th February, 1908.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

Illuminations at Shah Najaf, Lucknow.

106. A correspondent writes a letter to the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 19th February, under the heading "Disgrace of the Indian by Indians," and complains that some days ago when His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor visited Lucknow there were illuminations on the Shah Najaf grounds. Several Indian gentlemen were invited by Muhammad Jawad, Secretary of the Husainabad Endowment, to witness the illuminations from 7 to 11 P.M., but when they went there they were told that natives could not go in, as the Lieutenant-Governor was coming, although ordinary Europeons, Eurasians and Native Christians were going in freely. The correspondent himself was there till 9-30 P.M., and he saw respectable Indian gentlemen walking outside the place. He holds Muhammad Jawad responsible for deliberately insulting his respectable countrymen, and says that the Lieutenant-Governor would not have been displeased if Indian gentlemen were allowed to go in while he was there.

He concludes by saying that as long as Indians do not respect each other they would not be respected by others.

HINDUSTANI, 19th February, 1908.

H. L. Varma's letter.

107. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 21st February, contains a letter from H. L. Varma, who is at present in Italy, which contains the following passages :—

ABHYUDAYA, 21st February, 1908.

"The wife of a French friend of mine, a highly accomplished woman who takes part in politics, expressed surprise that, though I had told her that all people in India were now making united efforts for the attainment of Swaraj, the accounts of the Surat Congress in the French Press disclosed that they were quarrelling and wrangling among themselves. I could give her no answer to this.

She asked me what the population of India was, and on my telling her that it was three hundred millions, she took a piece of paper in her hand and blew it away with her breath, and asked me if I understood the meaning of her action. I told her that I fully comprehended her. She then again began to explain to me that India stood in great need of one religion and one nationality, that education could soon bring Indians good fortune, and that without education in spite of their thousand and one efforts they could never attain success."

"While I was pacing up and down the deck of the vessel, I was all of a sudden saluted by an Englishman, and he came towards me to shake hands, but I withheld my hand."

"On my asking him, who he was and whether he knew me, he told me that he lived in London; that though he was not acquainted with me, he knew me to be an Indian, and that he had lived in India for a considerable time, and accordingly saluted me, but did not understand why I would not shake hands with him."

"To my second question as to whither he was now proceeding and what he was doing in India, he said that he was going to Tasmania with his wife and child, and that he had been a soldier in the Indian Army and had been also employed for some time in the Railway."

"On my enquiring of him what his name was and whether he had saluted any Indians while in India, he told me that his name was Sporne, that the atmosphere of India had been such from the very beginning that people like him were forbidden to salute any Indian, and that though they were very desirous of cultivating the acquaintance of natives yet they had to treat them with harshness in accordance with the orders of their officers."

"To my question as to what was his opinion about India, he replied that he considered India a very suitable country as far as he was concerned, there he lived like a lord, while in England he was no one and that was why he was going to Australia. He said that the Indians were cowardly, that they are afraid of Englishmen, though he did not know why; and that if they showed some courage Englishmen would treat them considerately."

"To my enquiry as to what he thought of the Indians, he said that they were mild in disposition, but ignorant, poor, and dirty."

"I enquired why his wife had not gone to India and was told in reply that the Bengalis in India in these days wanted to drive out (lit. beat) the English, so she was afraid lest the mutiny of 1857 should be repeated and therefore and she dissuaded her husband from returning to India."

ALLAHABAD: } C. E. W. SANDS,
The 24th February, 1908. } Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 9 OF 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 29th February, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign:
1.	The Lisbon tragedy	201
2.	The Lisbon tragedy	201
3.	The Anglo-Russian Convention ...	201
4.	The Anglo-Russian Convention ...	201
5.	England and Turkey	201
6.	England and Turkey	201
7.	Partition of the world	201
8.	Death of the editor of Al-lowa ...	202
9.	Mustapha Kamil Pasha	202
10.	Japan and England	202
	(b)—Home:
11.	The United Provinces Provincial Conference	202
12.	The next Provincial Conference ...	202
13.	Provincial Conference	202
14.	The ensuing Provincial Conference ...	202
15.	The ensuing Provincial Conference ...	203
16.	The ensuing Provincial Conference ...	203
17.	The ensuing Provincial Conference ...	203
18.	The Bombay Provincial Conference ...	203
19.	Election of delegates in Allahabad for the Provincial Conference ...	204
20.	The United Provinces Provincial Conference	204
21.	Lessons from the Surat Congress ...	204
22.	The Congress split	205
23.	The Surat Congress	205
24.	Decentralisation and administrative Councils in Madras Presidency ...	205
25.	The proposed reforms	205
26.	Council Reforms	205
27.	Protest meeting against the oppressions on the Transvaal Indians	205
28.	Indians in the Transvaal	205
29.	Indians in the Transvaal	206
30.	Natal Government and the Zulus ...	206
31.	Indians in Ceylon	206
32.	The Indian Sepoy	206
33.	Military expenditure	206
34.	Indian Navy	206
35.	British free trade in India ...	207
36.	Backarganj, the only proclaimed district in India	207
37.	"Asia Contra Mundum"	207
38.	Nation Building	207
39.	Lala Lajpat Rai at Agra	208
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
40.	The Zakka-Khel Expedition	208
41.	The Zakka-Khel Expedition	208
42.	The Zakka-Khel Expedition	208
43.	The Amir and the Frontier tribes ...	208
44.	Punitive expeditions	208
	III.—NATIVE STATES.
45.	Hindus in the Rampur State ...	208

Page.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Judicial and Revenue :

46. Partition of the Calcutta High Court ... 208
47. Racial prejudice in courts 209
48. Whipping 209
49. The Kanungos 209
50. National and religious cases 209
51. National and religious cases 209
52. Conviction of the editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam 209

(b)—Police :

53. The Sarai Akil tragedy 210
54. The Sarai Akil tragedy 210
55. The Sarai Akil tragedy 210
56. Mymensingh disturbances ... 210
57. Mymensingh disturbances ... 210
58. The Police 210
59. Whitewashing the Police 210
60. The Police 210
61. The Karachi Police 211

(c)—Finance and Taxation :

62. Tax on pilgrims 211

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :

63. The Moradabad Municipality 211
64. The Agra Municipality 211
65. The Agra Municipality 211
66. "Martial law in Agra Municipality" ... 211

(e)—Education :

67. An Indian's lecture in America ... 212
68. Rustication of an M. A. class student ... 212
69. Education in the United Provinces ... 212
70. "Tom Brown's School Days"... ... 212
71. His Excellency Sir George Clarke on Education 212

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :

72. The Sugar Industry 213
73. The State and Agriculture 213
74. The Famine 213
75. Tenants and famine 213
76. The Famine 213

(g)—General :

77. Mr. Keir Hardie in an Indian village ... 214
78. The British Government and the Swadeshi movement 214
79. Government Service 214
80. The Etawah conspiracy case 214
81. Tactics of coolie recruiters 214
82. Sir D. Ibbetson... 215
83. Sir D. Ibbetson 215
84. Labour in tea gardens 215
85. The Government and the Press ... 215
86. Racial prejudice of the Government ... 215
87. Shooting of a native by a Eurasian ... 215
88. Boy employés of the Madras Hospital ... 215
89. Independence of Legal practitioners ... 215
90. Conviction of a Unani Surgeon ... 215

V.—LEGISLATION.

91. The Code of Civil Procedure Bill ... 216
92. Sale of intoxicants to young men ... 216

VI.—RAILWAY.

93. Railway construction and standing crop... 216
94. Insufficiency of accommodation on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway ... 216

VII.—POST OFFICE.

95. The new value payable parcel form ... 216
96. The value payable parcel form ... 216
97. The new value payable parcel form ... 216
98. The new value payable parcel form ... 217
99. The vaulue payable parcel form ... 217
100. The value payable parcel form ... 217

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

101. The Muharram disturbances at Lucknow 217
102. The Muharram disturbances at Lucknow 217
103. The Muharram disturbances at Lucknow 217
104. Relation between Anglo-Indians and Indians 217
105. The greatest need of India 218
106. A suggestion for national asylums ... 218
107. Jain statues in Mahoba 218
108. Widow marriage 218
109. The ensuing Social Conference ... 218
110. Awakening of Indian womanhood ... 219
111. Deputation of the notables to His Excellency 219
112. Cow-killing case in Allahabad ... 219

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

113. Bunelas in the Partabgarh district ... 219

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for February, referring to the Lisbon tragedy, says that it was the result of the autocratic rule of the late king of Portugal, in utter disregard of the wishes of his subjects for a popular government. SIPAHI, February, 1908.

The Lisbon tragedy.

The editor remarks that educated Indians too are clamouring for Swaraj, but they have not so far imitated the civilized Europeans in their dark deeds, which is the reason why Government, just and kind as it is, has been from time to time increasing the number of Indians in its Councils as they advance in education and ability. He expresses the opinion that when Hindus and Muhammadans have, by the spread of education, learnt to work side by side like brethren in the cause of their country, Government will of its own accord grant India complete Swaraj. He urges that Indians should therefore direct all their energies exclusively to the spreading of education in the country and then progress is bound to follow as its result.

2. Referring to the Lisbon tragedy, the Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, commends the action of the murderers and remarks that men who do not hesitate to endanger their own lives for the good of their country are really great, blessed and worthy of praise. SWARAJYA, 22nd February, 1908.

The Lisbon tragedy.

3. Referring to the Anglo-Russian Convention, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 23rd February, remarks that the usual increase in military expenditure that characterises all friendly relations between the British Government in India and Russia, will undoubtedly be incidental on this Convention also. Delimitation commissions and friendly conventions may be all very well, but they do not tend to lighten the burden of taxation for military purposes. ADVOCATE, 23rd February, 1908.

The Anglo-Russian Convention.

4. Referring to the silence of the Amir in connection with the Anglo-Russian Convention, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, remarks that, although the Amir does not seem personally to disapprove of the terms of the treaty, yet it is impossible for him to act independently of the opinion of Harem and of the advice of Sardar Nasrulla Khan. RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

The Anglo-Russian Convention.

The Amir has asked the British Government to depute some officials to Kabul to explain to him clearly the terms laid down in the Convention ; but the editor thinks that considering the circumstances it is not advisable for the British Government to comply with this request of the Amir.

5. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th February, advises England to make an alliance with Turkey, as it would be advantageous both politically and commercially. If England does not adopt this sensible course and is swayed by the narrow policy of religious bigotry, Turkey may make alliances with other countries to the great detriment of British trade and influence in that country. SHAHNA-I-HIND, 24th February, 1908.

England and Turkey.

6. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 25th February, referring to an article in the Pioneer in which it advocates friendly relations between Turkey and England, remarks that if England maintains friendly relations with Turkey, it will not only gain commercial advantages, but its hold over India will become stronger, as in that case the Musalmans would be ever able to support it whenever it is in danger. AL BASHIR, 25th February, 1908.

England and Turkey.

7. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for February, contains a cartoon representing partition of the world between European Powers. Russia and England are represented as dividing Persia; Italy and Austria are represented as seizing Albania and Macedonia respectively; SIPAHI, February, 1908.

Partition of the world.

and France is represented as encroaching upon Morocco, while Germany is looking up into the sky.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 23rd February, 1908.

Death of the editor of Al-lowa.

8. Expressing its regret at the sudden death of Mustafa Kamil Pasha, the editor of Al-lowa, the Kanauj Punch of the 23rd February remarks that his death has been an irrepairable loss to the Muhammadan world in general and to the people of Egypt in particular.

The editor exhorts the followers of the deceased to immortalize his illustrious name by following the line of action marked out by him for the regeneration of his country.

HINDUSTANI, 26th February, 1908.

Mustapha Kamil Pasha.

9. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 26th February, notes with regret the death of Mustapha Kamil Pasha, the Egyptian leader, and remarks that it is a matter of wonder that Al-Bashir, which condemns the Nationalists' movement in India, should have so much sympathy for Mustapha Kamil Pasha and his political principles.

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

Japan and England.

10. Referring to the consternation caused among all the European Powers in general, and among the English in particular, by the growing power of Japan and its attitude towards India, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th February, alludes to the fear expressed by the Indian Daily News that Japan can easily conquer India by stopping the passage of the Suez Canal.

The editor remarks that if his contemporary feels so very anxious for the white people, he should advise them to rule over India with mildness, so that they may not have anything to fear from the growing strength of neighbouring Powers.

(b).—Home.

MOHINI, 18th February, 1908.

The United Provinces Provincial Conference.

11. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 18th February, referring to the draft resolutions of the United Provinces Provincial Conference, remarks that all of them breathe the spirit of mendicancy and reflect the incapacity of the provincial leaders for action, and urges that unless they pass resolutions, like those of the Pubna Conference, which can easily be by their own exertions carried into effect, and respect public opinion which is in favour of such resolutions alone, the Conference cannot be a success, nor can it be said to be a representative body voicing the wishes of all classes of people.

ADVOCATE, 20th February, 1908.

The next Provincial Conference.

12. In an article on "The next Provincial Conference," the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 20th February, urges Indians in general to recognise the great possibilities of the gathering. Government, he points out, has invited public opinion regarding the Reform Scheme, and what better opportunity can there be of voicing the feelings of the Indian people regarding Reform and Decentralisation than at the approaching Conference in Lucknow. He further reminds the promoters of the Congress movement that the resolutions they pass will enable their Indian friends in Parliament to speak with authority on their behalf. Accordingly, delegates should only be appointed after mature deliberation, and only the best men of the Provinces should be selected—men who will not fear to express their feelings freely and fully. The editor notices with regret that a spirit of political lethargy is rife in these Provinces, but expresses the hope that both Hindus and Mubammadans will emulate the political zeal and activity of Bengal, and make the approaching Conference a means of awakening interest in matters concerning the future of India.

HINDUSTANI, 26th February, 1908.

Provincial Conference.

13. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 26th February, reproduces the comments of the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 20th February, on the next Provincial Conference.

SWARAJYA, 22nd February, 1908.

The ensuing Provincial Conference.

14. The Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, notes with satisfaction the proceedings of the Pubna Conference, and recommends that the same procedure be followed at the ensuing Conference in the United Provinces.

The editor further remarks that the President of this Conference should be a man who may be recognised by both the parties, and that swadeshi, boycott, swaraj and national education should be included in the resolutions of the Conference.

15. Referring to the draft Resolutions of the Provincial Conference, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of 23rd February, notes that the resolutions were prepared with great labour and include all questions of national importance. He considers, however, that in one respect they are of a most disappointing character and need to be considerably modified before the Indian Reform party can accept them. Those who framed them, he thinks, doubted the sincerity of Government in inviting criticism on the proposed Government Reform Scheme. Members of the Provincial Conference should clearly express their opinions regarding these proposals and suggest desirable modifications so that Government can fully ascertain the attitude of the public towards the proposed measures. Resolutions should therefore, the editor suggests, be framed by the Provincial Conference with this end in view. In other respects, he considers the draft resolutions admirable.

The ensuing Provincial Conference.

ADVOCATE, 23rd February, 1908.

16. Referring to the approaching Lucknow Conference, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad) in the issue of 27th February, takes a gloomy view of the situation. The promoters of the Conference are, he thinks, too anxious to flood the assembly with delegates whose views correspond with their own. He regrets that the President and Secretaries of the recent Allahabad Conference were all self-elected, and that a number of delegates appointed at a monster meeting representing all sections of the community were refused admittance. This, he thinks, argues badly for the approaching Conference, unless its promoters are willing to follow the example set them by Bengal and be more broad-minded and patriotic in their views and actions.

The ensuing Provincial Conference.

CITIZEN, 27th February, 1908.

17. In a leading article on the approaching Conference, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of 27th February, hopes that the gathering will not end in talk. Delegates, he thinks, should draw up a programme of work and dispense with the determination to put their resolutions into practice. The occasion, he believes, calls for earnest thought and mature deliberation, and it is the duty of those who understand the political questions of the day to explain them to their less fortunate brethren. He approves of the arrangements for holding at least three conferences, which, by the variety of the views they will express and the work they will accomplish, will appeal to all classes. Referring to the political question, the editor does not subscribe to the view that a subject nation has no politics. Such a nation, he thinks, stands in far greater need of political agitation than a self-governing people, and when repressive measures are enforced in the case of such a nation, they must be endured with calm stoicism. Accordingly he urges that the defects of the present system of Government must be pointed out, that proposed Government reforms must be criticised, that education must be demanded as the birthright of all, and that the masses must be enlightened as to their privileges and responsibilities. It is not enough, he points out, to advocate the boycotting of foreign made articles, for the productions of the country cannot meet the demand. The problem that the Conference has to face is a difficult one, but the President will solve it in an eminently practical manner to the satisfaction of all.

The ensuing Provincial Conference.

ADVOCATE, 27th February, 1908.

18. Referring to the ensuing Bombay Provincial Conference at Dhulia, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February advises the people of Bombay to take a lesson from the Bengal Provincial Conference and to carry out their work in harmony without any invidious display of party spirit.

The Bombay Provincial Conference.

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

They should not waste their time and energy in quarrelling over the election of the president, as it is of no importance to what party he may belong. They must give their entire attention to pass useful resolutions, so that they may not depend on the help of others, and may do everything by their own unassisted exertions.

The editor notes with regret that no such mutual regard, toleration and future goodwill can be expected in these provinces.

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

Election of delegates in Allahabad for the Provincial Conference.

19. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, strongly condemns the conduct of Dr. Satish Chandra, President of the meeting, recently held in Allahabad, to elect delegates for the ensuing Provincial Conference at Lucknow, in not allowing Mr. Shanti Narayan Sharma, a Nationalist, to address the meeting.

The editor expresses the opinion that men of Dr. Satish Chandra's attitude will lose the sympathy of both the Government and of the people,—of the Government because they join the Conference, and of the people because they disregard their opinion.

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

The United Provinces Provincial Conference.

20. While expressing regret at the want of interest and sympathy with the ensuing Provincial Conference in the United Provinces people, and at the invidious and objectionable conduct of the Moderates, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February holds the Moderates entirely responsible for the existing dissension between themselves and the Nationalists.

The editor advises the Moderates that either they should give up taking part in the Conference in future or that they should see their way to yield to the opinion of the Nationalists.

ZAMANA, February, 1908.

Lessons from the Surat Congress.

21. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for February, contains an article by Munshi Ganga Prasada Varma, editor of the Advocate and the Hindustani (Lucknow), entitled 'Lessons from the last Congress,' in which he holds a brief for the Moderate wing of the Congress and sketches the line of policy which will be in future pursued by that party. The unseemly squabbles, which disfigured the Surat Congress are, he writes, rather shocking to calm and dignified orientals, but, as they are the outcome of English education and English ways of thought, they are not regarded in the same light by the majority of Englishmen, although a few prejudiced English papers like the Times have dubbed the Congress, a 'political bear-garden.' The writer does not think it necessary to tell his readers anything about the origin of these dissensions and is glad that at last the two parties have come to an issue, so that in future they will refrain from mutual recriminations, and will either work in harmony or will adopt different policies and will carry on their political propaganda on different lines without coming into conflict with the other. It is extremely necessary at this stage of the political development of the country that the two parties should serve the country without offending each other, as their ultimate goal is the same, though they may differ in minor principles.

The Moderate party has two objects in view by holding the Congress, firstly the representation of the grievances of the people to the Government, and secondly the exchange of ideas among the leaders of Indian thought. These objects have been well served by the Congress during the last twenty-two years; but now the Congress has adopted a definite creed,—the attainment of self-government on colonial lines, and all its energies will now be diverted in that direction. The Congress specially insists on this because, as long as the country is not governed by its own people, its administrative machinery cannot be improved. Great Britain has granted self-government to its Dutch and French subjects and the people of India expect the same. It is not however intended that India should cease to have any connection with England. If there are any such people who want complete autonomy, the Congress disavows them and they are free to follow their fancies.

The writer expresses the opinion that the holding of the Congress once a year will not be of much practical value unless its work is supplemented by Provincial and District Conferences and by a strong standing committee. This committee should take upon itself dissemination of political literature, the education of public opinion, and to contradict the misstatements deliberately made by English and Anglo-Indian papers to delude the British public. It should make earnest efforts to awaken the political consciousness of the people of India by the diffusion of general education.

He concludes by refuting the statement that Congressmen do not take any active part in the social and industrial regeneration of the country and by exhorting the members of both the parties to work in harmony and union.

The Congress split.

22. The Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad), of the 24th February, referring to the Congress split, remarks that neither Mr. Tilak nor the Extremist party can be blamed, as it is due to the repressive policy of the Government and to the exasperation caused by it.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 24th February, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

23. Referring to the fiasco in the Surat Congress, the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st February, remarks that as both the parties aim at the regeneration of their country, it is hoped that they will bear themselves in such a manner as to be a source of blessing to their country and a strength to the British Government.

TAFRIH, 21st February, 1908.

Decentralisation and administrative Councils in Madras Presidency.

24. Mr. K. Perraju, B.L., contributes an article to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), of February, on Decentralisation and Administrative Councils in the Madras Presidency. Devolution of powers will, he considers, lead to District autocracies unless the people are represented in the administration. Government, he fears, is too much influenced by the considerations of revenue, and revenue officers in their desire to show a clear balance sheet perform their duties with great harshness. The fault of the system is, he believes, the fact that the prospects of revenue officers depend largely on the amount they collect. Another point that requires closer attention from Government is assessment in resettlements. Cultivation expenses are at present fixed unduly low, and remission of revenue is not granted when land is allowed to lie fallow with a view to recovering its lost fertility. The writer then points out that the Collector of a big district is the head of all the departments in the District and has far too much in hand to be able to devote to each the attention that it requires. He suggests accordingly that a Collector should be assisted by an administrative council, the members of which would be elected by popular vote. Such a council might hold office for three years and be empowered to settle petty disputes relating to revenue, irrigation, sanitary measures, etc.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, February, 1908.

The proposed reforms.

25. Referring to the proposed enlargement of the Legislative Council the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 26th February expresses its approval of the measure, and considers that the claim of the great landowners of India to have a voice in the administration of the country can no longer be disregarded.

HINDOSTHAN, 26th February, 1908.

Council Reforms.

26. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 27th February, referring to the question of Council Reform writes as follows:—

OUDH AKHBAR, 27th February, 1908.

"The Moderates have still some faith in the Government, but the Extremists have lost all hope of getting any concessions from the Government. They think that the Congress may propose any reforms it likes and may pass resolutions making the most reasonable demands, but the people know that the Government will not make any change in the principles of the Reform Scheme and they have ample experience of it. So they express their opinions every now and then, sometimes guardedly and sometimes frankly, so that the Government may reform the administration, and a glance at the present condition of the country shows that such reforms are extremely necessary."

Protest meetings against the oppressions on the Transvaal Indians.

27. While reproducing the remarks of the Bharat Mitra regarding the conduct of the Moderates in a meeting lately convened in Lucknow, to express regret at the distress of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 22nd February remarks:—"See how the Moderates comply with the rules of public meetings. Alas! how can these Nadirs (Moderates), who grudge their brethren even their natural and legitimate privileges, demand their own rights from the English Nadirs? Let us patiently wait till the public throws off the yoke of these swadeshi tyrants (Moderates)."

SWARAJYA, 22nd February, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

28. Referring to the silence and indifference of the British Government in connection with the oppression and disgraceful treatment of the Indians in the Transvaal, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, remarks, that similar ill-treatment was accorded to the Japanese in Columbia, two of whom were captured and put up for trial for disobeying the law, but the Judge refused to punish them, as it would go quite against the terms of the treaty concluded between Japan and the British Government.

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

The editor regrets the disregard shown by the British Government towards the Transvaal Indians, and remarks that it is a characteristic of European Powers to oppress and tyrannise over the weak, and to fall timidly cringing before the strong.

In conclusion he remarks :—" Brother Indians ! make yourselves fit and strong so that foreigners may feel your strength and be sure that it will put a stop to all your misfortunes."

OUDH AKHBAR, 29th February, 1908.

Indians in the Transvaal.

29. While referring in brief to the sympathy of certain members of the Parliament towards the Indians in the Transvaal, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 29th February, strongly condemns the conduct of the Transvaal Government in ill-treating the Indians.

It is true, the editor remarks, that the feeling of nationality is the most prominent feature of all European countries, but it seems very strange that the Registration Act was sanctioned by the Imperial Government, when the Indians have an equal right to reside in the Transvaal with His Majesty's other subjects.

The investment of the Boers with self-government has created a similar aspiration in the mind of Indians, and this is why the feeling of nationality is gaining every day a stronger hold on their mind.

Self-government granted to other colonies has induced Indians to aspire after similar objects, and consequently the feeling of nationality has remarkably developed and manifested itself in Bengal, which presidency has the greatest population of educated Indians.

MUSAFIR, 23rd February, 1908.

Natal Government and the Zulus.

30. While describing the gradual absorption of Africa by Europeans, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 23rd February, strongly condemns the conduct of the authorities in Natal in prosecuting Dinizulu for sedition, and remarks that when the authorities have already resolved to deport him, it is simply ridiculous to perform the farce of a regular trial in court. This oppressive conduct of the Natal Government is an indelible blot on British justice. Although this conduct may be held justifiable from a political point of view, yet a truly righteous and independent person will indignantly denounce the measure as pure and simple despotism.

HIND, 27th February, 1908.

Indians in Ceylon.

31. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 27th February, strongly condemns the action of the Governor of Ceylon in driving out Indians from that island, and remarks that, if he is so anxious for the interests of the Cinghalese, he should, to be consistent, drive out English traders also from the island. The editor asks His Excellency Lord Minto to protect the interest of Indians in Ceylon.

MODERN REVIEW, January, 1908.

The Indian Sepoy.

32. The Modern Review (Allahabad), in the editorial notes for the month of January, has a short article entitled 'Is the Indian sepoy an ill-used person'? in which the editor points out that Government have acted up to the policy of keeping the mercenary native army in a tight and determined grasp, and that native troops are employed on work that should be done by coolies and labourers, and that it is degrading to them.

SIPAHI, February, 1908.

Military expenditure.

33. The Sipahi (Cawnpore), for February, reproduces a cartoon from the Hindi Punch representing an Indian taxpayer sinking under the burden of military expenditure before Lord Kitchener, and remarks that whatever may be the views of caricaturists, from a military point of view, the arrangements inaugurated by His Excellency deserve all praise, and will soon produce very beneficial results, a foretaste of which may be experienced in the despatch and comparatively small expenditure with which the arrogance of the Zakka Khels is being duly punished and they are brought to their senses.

SIPAHI, February, 1908.

Indian Navy.

34. The Sipahi (Cawnpore), for February, suggests the desirability of Government preparing an Indian Navy, on the lines of the Indian Army in order to strengthen its naval position in the East against emergencies.

35. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for January, has an article entitled "Forcing British free trade on India" in which the editor makes extensive quotations from the record of the Select Committees of both Houses of Parliament in 1813, which purported to show that English goods were to be forced on India, while Indian manufactures were not to be allowed to be imported into England without paying duties and taxes.

British free trade in India.

MODERN REVIEW, January, 1908.

The editor notes that, had reciprocal free trade been adopted, English industries would have been crushed immediately by fair competition. He notes in conclusion that all this goes to give the lie to the contention that the English occupation of India is for philanthropic or altruistic reasons.

36. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for February, contains an article entitled "Backarganj the only proclaimed district in India" written by Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta, M.A., B.L., in which the writer condemns the decision of the Viceroy that the district of Backarganj should be a proclaimed area for the purpose of the 'legislative monstrosity'—the Seditious Meetings Act. The writer notes that no serious riots ever occurred at Barisal, that there was no strong feeling between the Muhammadans and Hindus, and, regarding the speech of Sir Harvey Adamson, 'that the poor logic of the official sponsor of this legislative freak is obvious even to a child.' The writer attributes the action of Government to the fact that this district is the home of swadeshi and that it is in order to crush the swadeshi movement that Backarganj has been victimised. He notes that in villages where the swadeshi spirit was very strong, and where school boys showed the slightest disrespect to officials punitive police were quartered. He remarks that in spite of the severity of the Fullerian régime the people of Backarganj displayed great self-restraint. He notes that since Mr. John Morley was pleased to call the Indian patriots enemies they have been treated as such by the bureaucracy. References are made to the numerous cases of swadeshi picketing by means of which numbers of young men were sent to jail. He expresses his opinion that it is impossible by repressive measures to stifle the growing feeling of nationality, and he quotes Lord Bacon to show that it is the cause of unrest which should be removed by Government, who should not, 'permit the wound to bleed inward and generate malign ulcers.' In conclusion he notes that the people of Backarganj owing to a succession of bad seasons and to the settlement operation, have been reduced to a terrible state, and that the cup of their misery is now full, as what little enjoyment was left to them is being destroyed by this policy of destruction and repression.

Backarganj, the only proclaimed district in India.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

37. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 26th February, has an an article discussing the article by 'Victor' in the Fortnightly Review for February, entitled 'Asia Contra Mundum'. With reference to the prognostication at the conclusion of the article of a colossal crusade of Eastern nations against the West, the editor remarks that endeavour should be made to prevent such a catastrophe by according Eastern people proper treatment, by granting their rights, and by refraining from exploiting the country commercially.

"Asia Contra Mundum."

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 26th February, 1908.

38. In an article entitled "Nation Building", the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 23rd February alludes to the generous response made by the Pubna Provincial Conference to Babu Surendra Nath Banerji's appeal for funds to help those on whom punitive police were quartered in Eastern Bengal. People jostled one another, he remarks, in their desire to put down their contributions on the President's table, and even a number of Bengali ladies seated behind pardahs or chicks were so moved by the eloquent appeal, that they showered their bracelets and jewellery at the President's feet as a substantial token of their sympathy with the oppressed. The desire of those present at the Conference to make the punishment of a section of the people the punishment of the whole community is, the editor argues, an indisputable sign of the awakening of a national sentiment and of national responsibility. Once the heart of the womanhood of the country is moved, he suggests that the corner-stone of nation building has been put in. Another significant fact he considers is the new born spirit of discipline and sacrifice in the young men of the country, as recently manifested by the Calcutta volunteers, who

Nation Building.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 23rd February, 1908.

by cheerfully bearing persecution and trials, have kindled a spirit of self-sacrifice and patriotism that is to be the foundation of the national edifice of the future.

ARYA MITRA, 24th February, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai at Agra.

39. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th February, notes the enthusiastic reception of Lala Lajpat Rai at Agra and reproduces the two addresses presented to him by the Bengali community of the place and the members of the Arya Mitrá Sabha respectively.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

MUSAFIR, 23rd February, 1908.

The Zakka Khel Expedition.

40. Referring to the depredations of the Zakka Khels in the British territory, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd February, remarks:—"Happily the Zakka Khels are the disciples of the Khair-ul-Makreen. Had they unfortunately been Hindus their conduct would have brought all possible misfortunes upon the poor Hindus of India."

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 24th February, 1908.

The Zakka-Khel Expedition.

41. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th February, referring to the adverse criticism in Parliament on the Zakka Khel expedition, remarks that people who are not on the spot cannot judge the gravity of their crimes, and hopes that it will teach the tribesmen a good lesson. The editor conjectures that it may possibly impress the Amir, who is considering the terms of the Anglo-Russian Convention, with the power and prestige of the British Government.

HIDUSTANI, 26th February, 1908.

The Zakka Khel Expedition.

42. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 26th February, referring to the Zakka Khel expedition, remarks that it would take a long time before the tribesmen will submit even if the Afridis do not join them and the Amir remain silent.

MASHRIQ, 25th February, 1908.

The Amir and the Frontier tribes.

43. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 25th February, repudiates the statement that the Amir does not take any steps to control the unruly frontier tribes, although he is paid a subsidy of 18 lakhs of rupees every year and remarks that he is only responsible for the defence of the Russian frontier.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 27th February, 1908.

Punitive expeditions.

44. Referring to the late Lord Lytton's remarks on punitive expeditions, the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 27th February says:—"It is the same now as it was in the days of Lord Lytton. A departure was attempted in the Tirah expedition, when the troops were ordered to stand fast until the submission of the Afridis was complete. But winter came as a powerful ally of the hillmen, and had the British troops stayed on they would have met the same fate as that which overtook the great army that Napoleon took to Russia. There is no such thing as permanent occupation of the Afridi country, for it cannot be done as long as a single man or lad is alive to fire a shot at the Firinghi. Permanent submission is also out of the question, because the Government has generally to purchase peace and not to impose it. In times of peace the Zakka Khels, like all other Afridi and other tribes, receive subsidies which are only stopped when fighting breaks out and are again renewed after the so-called submission."

III.—Native States.

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

Hindus in the Rampur State.

45. While praising the unprejudiced attitude and religious toleration of His Highness, the Nawab of Malar Kotla as expressed by his contributing a sum of Rs. 2,000 besides the plot of ground selected for the construction of a Sikh temple, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, notes with regret the disregard and want of sympathy shown by the Nawab of Rampur towards his Hindu subjects, who form a major portion of the population, as there is not even one Hindu temple in Rampur.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

ANAND, 20th February, 1908.

Partition of the Calcutta High Court.

46. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 20th February, says that scarcely have the Bengalis recovered from the partition of Bengal than it is proposed to add fuel to the fire of unrest by spreading reports regarding the partition of the Calcutta High Court, and remarks that it shows that it is not thought desirable to cut short this strife even after the matter has reached such a pitch, and that foresight and wisdom seem to depart soon from the administration of the country.

Racial prejudice in courts.

47. Referring to the severe sentence of two year's rigorous imprisonment passed on a native railway guard of the Burma Railway for attempting to outrage a European female passenger, the Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, notes with regret the partiality and racial prejudice of courts in awarding comparatively light or nominal punishments in similar cases of a more serious nature to European offenders.

SWARAJYA, 22nd February, 1908.

Whipping.

48. Referring to the introduction of a fresh law in England penalising tobacco smoking by children under 16 years of age and to the appointment of special magistrates to try such juvenile offenders, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 23rd February, deplores the cruel and inhuman punishment of flogging and imprisonment awarded to Bengali boys for petty offences, and remarks :—"This cruel treatment of the Bengali boys has led us to believe that the English are naturally void of all love towards children, but the English law clearly points out that we are mistaken in thinking so, and that the English have love for children, but only for their own little ones and not for those of others."

MUSAFIR, 23rd February, 1908.

The Kanungos.

49. A kanungo supervisor writing to the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd February on "the present scarcity and the condition of kanungos," states that kanungos as a class are grateful to Government for increasing the number of appointments as Naib Tahsildar given to them, at the same time the writer points out that more ought to be done for kanungos : they get only Rs. 30 per month and are not given a horse allowance, nor do they get any grain concession on account of famine. The writer accordingly suggests that kanungos' pay be raised to Rs. 50 per mensem, that they should get a horse allowance, that they should come under the Civil Service Regulations regarding mileage allowance and that more of their number should be appointed Naib Tahsildars.

ADVOCATE, 23rd February, 1908.

National and religious cases.

50. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 25th February, remarks that considering that all cases of religious disputes between Shias and Sunnis are invariably committed for trial, before a Hindu or a European Magistrate, and not to a Sunni or a Shia, and that particular mosques have at times been fixed by the Government for the Shias and the Sunnis separately, it is very strange that all political offences are invariably tried by a European magistrate who belongs to the nation against which such offences are said to be committed.

The editor says that, considering that political offences and national movements are decidedly against the interests of Europeans, it is not fair that such cases should be tried by European magistrates, and he suggests that all such offences should be tried by an Indian magistrate of an independent turn of mind.

OUDH AKHBAR, 25th February, 1908.

National and religious cases.

51. In continuation of its article on the subject in the last issue, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 26th February, refers to the case for recovery of damages brought by Babu Hari Chandra Kishore of Mymensingh against some Government officials, and to the letter of the Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government addressed to him in this connection.

The editor says that when such difficulties arise in civil cases it can easily be imagined what insurmountable difficulties will crop up in criminal cases.

It will be, he suggests, in the interest of justice and of the parties concerned if the cases which have a national or political nature be tried by such courts as are above all suspicion of being inflenced by the feeling of nationality, politics or religion.

OUDH AKHBAR, 26th February, 1908.

Conviction of the editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam.

52. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 27th February, while expressing its regret at the conviction of the editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), for libel, complains that the punishment awarded to him was unduly severe.

HIND, 27th February, 1908.

(b).—Police.

SWARAJYA, 22nd February, 1908.

The Sarai Akil tragedy.

53. Referring to the dismissal of Sub-Inspector Karamat Husain of Sarai Akil in connection with the case in which a whole family committed suicide owing to his disgraceful conduct, the Swarájya (Allahabad) of the 22nd February, regrets the inadequacy of the punishment awarded to him for such an offence, which from a moral point of view was nothing short of murder.

The editor further remarks that considering the gravity of the offence the punishment awarded appears to be merely nominal, and that it is this disregard of public grievances and partiality towards the police which has widened the gulf between the rulers and the ruled.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 23rd February, 1908.

The Sarai Akil tragedy.

54. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 23rd February, commenting on the dismissal of Sub-Inspector Karamat Husain, in connection with the recent suicide of a family at Sarai Akil, in the district of Allahabad, remarks that this punishment was altogether inadequate. He recognises, however, that though this Sub-Inspector was morally responsible for the death of an entire family, yet no evidence could be produced to establish the precise nature of the indignities he inflicted on the various members of the family. According to the editor, drastic measures are needed with a view to police reform, as subordinate police officers in these provinces appear unscrupulous and oppressive to a degree.

HIND, 27th February, 1908.

The Sarai Akil tragedy.

55. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 27th February, referring to the dismissal of police Sub-Inspector Karamat Husain in connection with his disgraceful and inhuman conduct in the well-known Sarai Akil tragedy, eulogises Sir J. Hewett for his sympathy with the people and for the prompt action taken against the police.

The editor expresses a hope that a similar lesson will be taught to the police in the Manda murder case.

CITIZEN, 23rd February, 1908.

Mymensingh disturbances.

56. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 23rd February, publishes in full the report on the Mymensingh disturbances by the non-official Commission.

ADVOCATE, 23rd February, 1908.

Mymensingh disturbances.

57. Referring to the conclusions of the Commission which enquired into the Mymensingh disturbances, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd February, has the following:—

"These are the results of an enquiry over which several days have been spent by two distinguished persons. We ask, can there be a greater condemnation of the administration in New Bengal than what is revealed in the above paragraph? The police which committed atrocities on helpless people did so under the very eyes of their superior officers. What wonder if after such treatment, the people are seething in great discontent, and if the trouble instead of subsiding is on the increase in East Bengal."

RAHBAR, 21st February, 1908.

The Police.

58. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st February, referring to the protest made by the citizens of Karachi against the inefficiency of the local police, remarks that this is all due to the incompetence and negligence of the highly paid European officers. The only step that the Government is expected to take will be to increase the pay of these officers, and that it will do nothing to improve the prospects of the Indian officers and constables on whom the work really devolves.

SWARAJYA, 22nd February, 1908.

Whitewashing the Police.

59. While reproducing the words of a magistrate, who complains of a Police Inspector for making adverse criticism on his judgment, the Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 22nd February, remarks that this daring insolence of the police is a natural consequence of the whitewashing of its character by the Punjab Chief Court, and of Government ordering magistrates not to pass strictures on the conduct of the police in their judgments.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 20th February, 1908.

The Police.

60. The Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad), of the 20th February, complains that the authority, influence and status of the police are daily increasing. Their pay has been increased, they are given chairs in courts, and in Bengal Judges have been instructed not to make any disparaging comments on the conduct of the police in their judgments. The editor thinks that this is mainly due to the oppression of the people, and expresses the hope that this state of things will not continue long.

The Karachi Police.

61. Referring to the reply of the Government to the President of the meeting held to censure the grave negligence and conduct of the Karachi police, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, remarks :—" When the Government does not care even for its most grave and solemn promises, can the people of Karachi hope under these circumstances that the Government of India will take any serious notice of the conduct of the police as has been promised ?

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

It is folly to think that the weak voice of the people will ever be heard. Indians must in future learn the lesson of self-help and depend in everything upon their own unassisted power, like the people of Bengal who are benefiting themselves by acting upon this principle.

Cannot some four or five persons volunteer to keep the watch and ward of every mohalla by turn ? If they can, then it is altogether foolish to pray for help from the Government, which will only saddle poor people with the expenses of keeping additional police.

As it is certain that we shall have to do everything ourselves, it will be much better that we train ourselves to the task, so that we may not be puzzled when the time comes. "

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Tax on pilgrims.

62. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st February, referring to the enhancement of the tax on Hindu pilgrims visiting Puri, remarks that nothing else could be expected from a ' nation of shopkeepers ' and exhorts the Hindus to agitate against it.

RAHBAR, 21st February, 1908.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

The Moradabad Municipality.

63. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st February, complains that the Moradabad Municipality has doubled the tax on cloth, and it is feared that even paper will not remain exempt from taxation. The editor also complains that municipal officials generally ill-treat passengers and search the goods even of those of them who go from the Got station on the metre gauge line to the Moradabad station.

RAHBAR, 21st February, 1908.

The Agra Municipality.

64. Referring to the rickety and unserviceable condition of the Rawatpara Road in Agra, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 23rd February, asks the district authorities to look into the matter.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 23rd February, 1908.

The editor further asks the authorities to look into the general complaint prevalent in Agra that water tax is sometimes realised by means of attaching the property of persons who have already paid the tax, and remarks that it is evidently owing to a mistake in the accounts which should be carefully corrected.

The Agra Municipality.

65. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th February, writes :—" It is rumoured that the Secretary Engineer of the Agra Municipality has ordered a reward of Rs. 2 for every refund ravanna on which full action has not been taken.

NASIM-I AGRA, 27th February, 1908.

There is also a rumour that the possessors of such ravannas as are of a less value than the reward are selling them to municipal moharrirs and girdawars. It is a matter of regret if this rumour is true, and the authorities ought to look into it at once."

"Martial Law in Agra Municipality."

66. The Agra Akhbar of the 28th February, publishes an article entitled " Martial Law in the Agra Municipality" and complains that the Municipal authorities have become overstrict in the recovery of water rates and when people cannot pay it, distress warrants are issued which are served by illiterate constables who are not accompanied by the water-rate Superintendent or by any moharrir. People are made to pay rates for houses which they have sold, and overcharges too, are frequent, and these cannot be recovered without going to law courts.

AGRA AKHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

(e).—Education.

MOHINI, 18th February, 1908.

An Indian's lecture in America.

67. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 18th February, reproduces from Kal (Poona), an Indian's lecture in America on the need of National education in India and the necessity of Indian students going to America for the development of healthy feelings of liberty.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 20th February, 1908.

Rustication of an M. A. Class student.

68. Referring to the rustication of Mr. Munzar Ali, an M.A. class student of the Muir Central College, Allahabad, for stating in the course of an essay on an economic subject that the British Government in India had exercised a very baneful effect on the country, the Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 20th February, remarks that it is a vain effort to suppress the real feeling of the people by such repressive measures as truth cannot be concealed for long. It must come out eventually.

ADVOCATE, 23rd February, 1908.

Education in the United Provinces.

69. In an article entitled "Education in the United Provinces," the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 23rd February, expresses his approval of the circular letter issued by Mr. de la Fosse to all Inspectors of schools regarding School Leaving Certificate Examinations and the establishment of model high schools at district headquarters. Some modifications, he thinks in the present system of education are necessary, as the curriculum of Indian Universities is not at all suitable for those who elect a commercial career, or prefer to join such institutions as the Roorkee Engineering College or the Agra Medical School. Accordingly an effort ought to be made to open up as many careers as possible to the young men of India by giving them facilities for studying a variety of subjects. Special courses, however, the editor points out, should only be undertaken during the last few years of school life, as a complete knowledge of any particular subject can only be when a good foundation of general knowledge has been laid.

MASHRIQ, 25th February, 1908.

"Tom Brown's School Days."

70. A correspondent of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 25th February, referring to the introduction of "Tom Brown's School Days" as an English Text book in the Entrance class, remarks that it is neither a classic nor is it calculated to improve the moral training of the students.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH. 25th February, 1908.

His Excellency Sir George Clarke on Education.

71. The editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), in the issue of the 25th February, in a leading article on Sir George Clarke's speech at the recent Convocation of the Bombay University, congratulates the Presidency on the possession of a Chancellor for its University who has such a thorough grasp of the educational problem in India. His views are wise and sympathetic, and should argue well for the future of education in the Bombay Presidency. The editor notes with pleasure that Sir George Clarke recognises the hollowness of Macaulay's system of education, and deplores the contempt that that eminent historian had for Indian literature. The artificial conversion of the intellect of an ancient people, in accordance with foreign ideas, without due regard for inherent genius, is, the editor points out, more likely to injure than to elevate. The system of education in India must accordingly be founded on the needs of the Indian people and must aim at developing the best of their inherited qualities. The note struck by Sir George Clarke in referring to the beauties of the sacred Vedas, will, the editor feels sure, find a responsive echo in the hearts of the people, and convince all classes alike that he is free from the religious bias of the West, that will not admit that religion in its purest form was practised in India when the people of the West were still in their crude and primitive condition. Commenting on Sir George Clarke's reference to the lack of initiative on the part of Indians to deal with the practical requirements of the times, the editor remarks that the Governor of Bombay touched upon the weak spot in the Indian character, the inherited leaning towards metaphysical speculation that characterises the Indian mind, requires, he considers, the corrective of science which education at present fails to supply. The ancient institutions of the East, he remarks, are only valuable at present in so far as they are modified by the influence of the West. In conclusion, the editor hopes that European administrators in India will emulate Sir George Clarke in his desire to establish a system of education on Western lines that will recognise the glorious traditions of the East, the grandeur of the Vedic civilisation and the religion of the immortal Rishis. Such a system of education will stir the patriotism that now lies dormant, quicken it into activity, and build up an India that will take her rightful place among the nations of the world.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

The Sugar Industry.

72. Referring to an article in the Pioneer on Sugar Industry, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 20th February remarks :—" We are glad to learn that Sir J. Hewett took early steps to move the Supreme Government to agree to the reduction of the water rate. Those who know the facts of the case could never make the mistake of thinking that we meant to fasten the authorship of the increase in water rate upon Sir J. Hewett. We wanted information and it has been given. We congratulate the Government on being so prompt in publishing the welcome news."

ADVOCATE, 20th February, 1908.

The State and Agriculture.

73. In an article entitled " The State and Agriculture," the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 20th February, refers to the paper on " Indian Agriculture " read by Mr. H. S. Lawrence before the Indian Section of the Society of Arts on January 16th. He congratulates the Bombay Presidency on the strides made by the Department of Agriculture during the last few years, and suggests that other provinces should imitate its example of requiring all members of the Civil Service to study the elementary problems of Indian Agriculture. Government, he points out, is the biggest landlord in a country where the land has practically been nationalized. Agrarian development accordingly has a very strong claim on State assistance. The principle of issuing leaflets containing hints for cultivators is, he argues, practically useless, owing to the ignorance of peasants as a class. Even if they do comprehend the truth conveyed in these pamphlets they are too poor to risk the smallest loss in trying experiments. All improvements, he points out, must be regulated by the capacity of the small cultivator, and he suggests that trained agriculturists should be appointed to induce cultivators to set apart a portion of their land for experimental crops. The agriculturists should supervise these crops from the sowing to the reaping, and so convince ryots that they might give up their old agricultural traditions. To render this scheme popular, the editor proposes that in the first instance Government should meet the cost of these trial crops.

ADVOCATE, 20th February, 1908.

The famine.

74. A correspondent of Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 25th February, referring to the noble efforts made by the Christian missionaries to succour famine-stricken people, remarks that it is disgraceful for men who call themselves religious leaders to be idle when people are perishing of hunger.

AL-BASHIR, 25th February, 1908.

Tenants and famine.

75. Commenting on the eviction of tenants by landlords in times of scarcity, the Indian People (Allahabad) of 27th February, suggests that the courts should refuse applications for ejectment in famine-stricken areas. The misery of tenants evicted in time of famine is indescribable, and the editor hopes that the case of all such people will meet with the special consideration of all district officials.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 27th February, 1908.

The famine.

76. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th February, strongly differs from the opinion of the Commissioners of Divisions of the United Provinces, that there are on the average only five hundred persons in every district who stand in need of help and relief from famine, and remarks,—

" Can this selfishness command any sympathy from the people ? No, never.

No doubt the former rulers of the country were very hard in exacting revenue from the people, but at the same time they were very magnanimous and unsparing in lavishing money on the people in times of need and scarcity. But alas ! our present rulers subject us to every hardship in extorting the Government revenue but never think of helping us which is very disgraceful for a Government. It can hardly be expected that a powerful nation will ever be moved by such feelings."

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

(g).—General.

MODERN REVIEW, January, 1908.

Mr. Keir Hardie in an Indian village.

77. The Modern Review (Allahabad) for January, contains an article describing the visit of Mr. K. Hardie to the village of Chaubepur in Benares, written by an eye-witness, in which the writer drew particular attention to the impressions which were conveyed to Mr. K. Hardie as to the poverty of the people, being such that most people could not pay small fees for the education of their children and that frequently the teachers paid fees from their own pockets in order not to lose the pupils. The writer notes that Mr. K. Hardie was informed that newspapers were very little read, because the people could not afford to pay even a subscription of Rs. 2 a year. The attention of Mr. K. Hardie was drawn to the absence of ornaments among the Indian women, and he was told that most of the poor villagers could not afford to keep ornaments. It is said also that Mr. Chaudhri informed Mr. Hardie that flour was too dear and that villagers merely ate bran and husk.

With regard to the recurrence of famines, Mr. K. Hardie is reported to have asked a particular tenant whether in the previous year he had not had a good crop, to which the reply of the tenant is noted in Hindi only.

Its translation is 'at times the field does not yield any produce, but every year I have to pay the rent as a fine.'

With reference to remission of rent, Mr. K. Hardie is reported to have received another answer similarly recorded in Hindi—'Government does not remit the revenue, how is it then possible that zamindars would do so.'

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st February, 1908.

The British Government and the Swadeshi movement.

78. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st February, repudiates the insinuation made by the Congress agitators that the British Government is opposed to the swadeshi movement, and remarks that it is the English who have initiated many industries in India and have done their best to develop its material resources. One proof of the country's prosperity is that the income of the Government is increasing although the taxes are being reduced, and the people can withstand the severity of famines for a longer time. The editor adduces additional arguments in favour of his theory from the administrative report of Bengal.

He concludes by saying that those persons who use Paris-made spectacles and Austrian felt caps have no right to preach the swadeshi cult, and they can serve their country better if they could persuade some rich men to invest their money in industries instead of hoarding it.

RAHBAR, 21st February, 1908.

Government Service.

79. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st February, publishes a letter from a correspondent who strongly condemns the mania for Government service prevailing in India, and urges the necessity of establishing national schools where children may be taught to aspire to an independent professional life by which they may serve their country instead of passing the stiff university examinations and entering Government service.

CITIZEN, 23rd February, 1908.

The Etawah conspiracy case.

80. Referring to the Etawah conspiracy case, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 23rd February, presumes that the holding of a judicial enquiry is to show that the case has no political aspect. Government, he notes, considers that the district officials were the dupes of Khalil-ullah, and punished them accordingly. The failure of the police to effect the arrest of Khalil-ullah, gives ground, he thinks, for the suspicion that the case was not one of mere forgery, but a deep laid plot to promote the welfare of one class at the expense of another. He points out that several witnesses who were summoned were not examined and that several important witnesses were not summoned at all. In conclusion he regrets that a loyal subject like Mr. Zorawar Singh should be subjected to the petty annoyances of police surveillance.

CITIZEN, 23rd February, 1908.

Tactics of coolie recruiters.

81. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 23rd February gives an account of the kidnapping of a girl in Benares a short time ago by some coolie agents. It appears that the girl missed her way to the Benares railway station and accepted the help of some persons who offered to guide her there. These persons however took her to a place where she was registered as a coolie emigrant, and it was not till her brother saw her being sent off at the railway station that the matter was discovered. Her kidnappers, however, produced a document setting forth that the girl had been registerd from the Hukulganj coolie depôt, and as her escort refused to let her go information was given to the police. The Citizen expresses confidence that Mr. Radice will sift the matter to the bottom.

Sir D. Ibbetson.

82. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 25th February, notes with regret the death of Sir D. Ibbetson, and remarks that had it not been for his presence of mind and administrative talent, the discontent in Punjab would not have subsided so easily.

AL-BASHIR, 25th February, 1908.

Sir D. Ibbetson.

83. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 26th February, expresses its regret at the death of Sir D. Ibbetson, and remarks that the Musalmans should feel specially sorry for this, as he was very much interested in their progress and advancement.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 26th February, 1908.

Labour in tea gardens.

84. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 26th February, notes with satisfaction the attempts which are being made by the Government to give greater freedom to the labourers in tea gardens and to make their life more congenial.

HINDUSTANI, 26th February, 1908.

The Government and the Press.

85. Commenting upon the sentences of heavy fines and long terms of imprisonment passed on some journalists, the Rahbar, (Moradabad), of the 28th February, remarks that in the face of these facts it will not be presumptuous to say that the policy of the Government is to gradually encroach upon the freedom of the press by involving the journalists in pecuniary difficulties.

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

Racial prejudice of the Government.

86. Referring to the repressive conduct of the officials in finding fault with the Panjabis in general for the reckless action of one imprudent man who threw mud and dust on some European, and to the similar treatment accorded by the officials in Eastern Bengal when a boy who pelted a dog was charged with intentionally throwing stones at a European, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, comments on the racial prejudice of the British Government, in not taking similar measures against white men who assaulted Mr. Keir Hardie in South Africa.

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

The editor exhorts his countrymen to take a lesson from this conduct of the Government and to act accordingly.

Shooting of a native by a Eurasian.

87. Referring to the shooting of an Ahir boy by Mr. Wallington, a guard on the East Indian Railway, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, remarks :—"Wallington is innocent in this matter. How could he help shooting when it was so destined for the unfortunate boy !

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

The event must be an accidental one and as such the Government also will not hold Wallington responsible for the act."

Boy employees of the Madras Hospital.

88. Referring to the strike of the boy employés of the General Hospital in Madras and to their success in obtaining redress to their grievances, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, says that unity is always attended with success.

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

If the boys had not made a resolute and united opposition their grievances would never have come to an end. Some recent events in India have made even boys to apprehend the dangers and recognise the value of union and co-operation.

Independence of Legal practitioners.

89. Referring to the notice given to B. Nobin Chandra, vakil, by the District Judge of Backarganj, under the Legal Practitioners' Act as to the confiscation of his diploma for refusing to take up the case of a man who was against the swadeshi movement, and to the decision of the Calcutta High Court, holding legal practitioners entirely independent and free to accept or reject any case as they liked, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th February, remarks :—"Will not the sleepy and slothful legal practitioners of our Province exert themselves even now when they have got a precedent that their diplomas cannot be taken away and that they are left quite free and independent to act as they like."

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

Conviction of a Unani Surgeon.

90. Referring to the conviction of Sorab Ali, a Jarrah (a native Surgeon) who used to make surgical operations on the eye according to the Unani system, for accidently injuring the eye of a patient in Mirzapur, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February remarks :—

RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

'A doctor of the most ordinary and limited ability may even kill a patient without the least responsibility, but a Hakim of long experience, established reputation and recognised competency is immediately called upon to answer even for an accident.

Alas! it is simply a distinction between the English, Unani and Ayurvedic systems of treatment.'

V.—Legislation.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, February, 1908.

The Code of Civil Procedure Bill.

91. A retired Subordinate Judge contributes an article on the Code of Civil Procedure to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for February, in which he refers to the various efforts made at different times to amend the present Code, and criticises the proposals made by the Select Committee appointed last year to suggest measures for its improvement. The main point of his criticism is that if the proposals made by this Committee become law, the Code will be too much split up into schedules. The Special Committee he considers, 'have proposed what may be called a decentralisation scheme by allocating the provisions bearing on a particular subject to different places.' The result, he thinks, will be that Judges and legal practitioners will be in a state of uncertainty as to whether a particular section contains all the provisions bearing on the subject or not.

ANAND, 20th February, 1908.

Sale of intoxicants to young men.

92. Referring to the bill under contemplation to penalize the sale of cigarettes and liquor to young men in England, the Anand (Lucknow), of the 20th February, asks if any steps will be taken to correct the evil tendencies in this direction of Indian youths also.

VI.—Railway.

HINDUSTANI, 26th February, 1908.

Railway construction and standing crop.

93. A correspondent in the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 26th February, complains that the construction of a branch of the Bengal and North-Western Railway which was surveyed some three years ago from Barwhal to Sitapur is about to be commenced and the standing crops in the cultivated area through which it will pass will be cut down. This he thinks will be a great loss to the cultivators, and suggests that its construction be put off at least for a month and a half.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th February, 1908.

Insufficiency of accommodation on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

94. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th February, complains of the inconvenience of the Intermediate Class passengers on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway owing to the insufficiency of accommodation in the Intermerate class which is always overcrowded, and asks the authorities concerned to remove this inconvenience early.

VII.—Post Office.

RAHBAR, 21st February, 1908.

The new Value payable parcel form.

95. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st February, referring to the introduction of the new form for inland value payable parcel, remarks that it will be a source of inconvenience to the public and will increase the work of the postal officials, who are already overworked.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 24th February, 1908.

The new Value payable parcel form.

96. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 24th February, remarks that there is a general complaint against the new value payable form, and suggests its being replaced by the old one, as it is in no way an improvement upon the old one.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th February, 1908.

The new Value payable parcel form.

97. The Jain Gazette (Deobund), of the 24th February, referring to the new value payable parcel form, complains that, although it has been introduced to save trouble and inconvenience to the public, yet in practice it is a source of serious inconvenience to the people, owing to the carelessness of postal clerks in filling in the entires in the form. They sometimes altogether omit to fill in certain entries, at others they enter them so illegibly that it is quite impossible to decipher them. The editor cites two instances in his own experience in which the value payable parcel forms Nos. 252 and 161 from Rawalpindi neither contained the name of the sender nor that of the addressee in the intimation coupon, and requests the Director General of Post offices to take steps to remove the grievance complained of.

98. An-Najm (Lucknow), in its combined issue of the 17th and 24th February, says that the introduction of the new form for value payable parcels has increased instead of facilitating work, and advises the Postal authorities to replace it by the old one as soon as possible.

The new value payable parcel form.

AN-NAJM, 17th and 24th February, 1908.

99 The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 25th February, complains that instead of making the work easy and simple, the introduction of the new form for value payable parcel, has made it more difficult and complicated and increased the liability of mistakes.

The editor suggests the desirability of the old form being used as usual.

The new value payable parcel form.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 25th February, 1908.

100. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 25th February, referring to the changes introduced in the value payable parcel system, complains that the form which is filled by the sender is retained in the Post office and another form is given to him filled by the Postal officials in English. Many people cannot read English and the handwriting is generally illegible.

The new value payable parcel form.

AL-BASHIR, 25th February, 1908.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

101. Referring to the quarrel between the Shias and the Sunnis of Lucknow at the last Moharram festival and to the assaulting of the police by the mob in the presence of the District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police, the Musáfir (Agra) of the 23rd February, remarks that the conduct of the mob was a serious disregard of the authority of the Government. But is it the fault of the Muhammadans? No. Strictly speaking the Government itself is to be blamed in this matter, for its patronage of the Muhammadans has encouraged the latter to spurn insolently against authority.

The Moharram disturbances at Lucknow.

MUSAFIR, 23rd February, 1908.

102. The Rohilkhand Gazette of the 24th February, notes with regret the Moharram riots at Lucknow, and hopes that a rapprochement will be brought about between the Shias and Sunnis by the leaders of both the parties, as internecine feuds will prove fatal and disastrous in the end.

The Moharram disturbances at Lucknow.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th February, 1908.

103. While expressing its regret at the Moharram disturbances between the Shias and the Sunnis of Lucknow, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 27th February, remarks that leaders and men of influence of both sects should now intervene and use their influence to stop further quarrels between the parties.

The Moharram disturbances at Lucknow.

HIND, 27th February, 1908.

The editor also requests the officials to take sufficient precautions to prevent similar disturbances as the Tazia of Bakshu is to be led in procession very soon.

104. The Hindostan Review (Allahabad), for February contains an article on the 'Relations between Anglo-Indians and Indians,' contributed by the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Mian Shah Din, ex-Judge of Punjab Chief Court in which the writer points out that true intercourse between Europeans and Indians is impossible unless both classes recognise the extent to which this intercourse must be limited by the racial idiosyncrasies of each. If such an initial recognition were to guide the demand that each community can make on the other for social concessions, half the difficulty of the situation would be solved. The social ethics of the East are far different from those of the West, and the writer thinks it too much to expect that the Indian will discard such of his institutions as jar upon the European or that the latter will be so far influenced by his habitat as to renounce his racial peculiarities and social conventions. A compromise must therefore be effected. The East must raise itself to a higher plane of existence, and the West must come down from its high pedestal of political superiority. To establish this desirable state of affairs, the writer opines that each class must be prepared to learn much about the other that it thinks it already knows, and to unlearn much that it has learned from ill-informed or prejudiced sources. The first step towards this is a complete knowledge on the part of each class of the other's language and literature. In this respect, he remarks, Indians have met their European masters half way, but the latter have not realized this, and consequently have failed to do their part. The result is that the percentage of Englishmen in India who really know the language of the country is very small. Apart from establishing better relations between both communities, a more perfect knowledge of Hindustani on the part of English officials would, he points out, be of inestimable value to them in the discharge of their duties, as it is only from the language and literature of the people that a clear insight can be gained into their feelings and aspirations. The next point towards establishing the desired end is, according to the writer, the admission of their Indian friends by Europeans to the social privileges of their family circles. Englishmen should put aside a little of their national reserve, and admit Indian gentlemen to their clubs and invite them to their social gatherings. If this is impracticable at present, the writer suggests that mixed Anglo-Indian clubs might be started where the leading men of both communities could meet on terms of equality. The writer recognizes the barrier that the pardah system is to social relations between Englishmen and Indians, and suggests that the former should be magnanimous enough to overlook the want of reciprocity on the part of the latter in not presenting them to their women.

Relation between Anglo-Indians and Indians.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, February, 1908.

In conclusion he urges his fellow countrymen to cast aside their prejudices and false sentiments and to strive for the moral and intellectual attainments essential to enlightened progress on modern lines.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, February, 1908.

The greatest need of India.

105. In an article entitled 'The greatest need of India; a plea for social efficiency', Mr. R. L. Narasimhan, in the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for February, gives a brief summary of the causes that keep Indians a subject race at the present day. The writer begins by claiming that Hindus as a class are the equals, intellectually and physically, of any other race. His claim is based on the glorious traditions of the Rajputs, Jats and Sikhs, and on the power of the Hindu religion which no other creed has been able to supplant. He then points out that the present unenviable position of Indians is attributable to the lack of individual responsibility. Greed and selfishness he thinks reign supreme and the interests of the community are lost sight of in the desire for personal advancement. He concludes by urging his readers to be more patriotic in their aims and to subordinate their individual interests to those of the community at large.

MUSAFIR, 23rd February, 1908.

A suggestion for national asylums.

106. A correspondent in the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd February, condemns the efforts of the so-called national leaders, as presumptuous and entirely useless. He urges that the aim of a true patriotic leader should be to do some real and material good to the country, and suggests the establishment at all headquarters of districts of an asylum for widows and orphans and a Gaoshala to be maintained by voluntary contributions, and asks every Hindu to contribute one pice a rupee of his income towards the maintenance of these charitable and useful institutions.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th February, 1908.

Jain statues in Mahoba.

107. A correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 24th February, states that a number of Jain statues have been found in Mahoba while a well was being excavated, and are kept in the custody of the Tahsildar. He hears that the local officals suspect that these statues contain money and do not accordingly show them to Jains, and remarks that it will constitute a very serious act of outrage if they are broken for the sake of the supposed money therein.

HINDOSTHAN, 25th February, 1908.

Widow marriage.

108. The editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) in the issue of the 25th February, congratulates Mr. Justice Asutosh Mukerjee on having risen above the superstitious traditions of Hinduism regarding widow marriage in celebrating the marriage of his widowed daughter. Pundits, he thinks disobey the law of God in leading a celibate life, and expose themselves to needless temptations. Thousands of Indian women, he remarks, are widows, and many of them by their actions disgrace their race and religion, whereas if they were allowed to remarry they would lead honourable and useful lives.

ADVOCATE, 27th February, 1908.

The ensuing Social Conference.

109. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 27th February, gives the following as the headings of the Draft Resolutions of the second United Provinces Social Conference :—

1. The education of women.
2. The raising of the marriageable age.

3. The discouragement of enforced widowhood.
4. The gradual abolition of the pardah system.
5. The fusion of castes.
6. The readmission of converts.
7. Foreign travel.
8. Religious Endowments.
9. Social purity.

Awakening of Indian womanhood.

110. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 27th February, notes with approval the rapid progress of female education in India at present, and congratulates the Parsis on being the first to recognize the necessity of educating their women folk. HINDOSTHAN, 27th February, 1908.

Deputation of the notables to His Excellency.

111. While pointing out that a deputation of certain prominent Indian chiefs and princes is going to wait upon His Excellency the Viceroy on behalf of the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th February, remarks that it is a rumour that the deputation means to approach His Excellency for the protection of temples and the preservation of the old relics of religion. RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

The editor then says :—" Even if this be the object in view of the deputation, there appears to be no harm, as a Government which has to spend 40 lakhs a year to maintain the missionary institutions to convert the people to Christianity will not have the least objection in agreeing to the prayer of the deputation."

Cow-killing case in Allahabad.

112. Referring to the quarrel between the Hindus and Muhammadans of Allahabad for killing a cow in the presence of some Hindus on the last Bakrid festival, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th February, expresses deep regret at the dissension between the parties and advises them to have more sympathy and practise toleration. RAHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

The editor also suggests the desirability of the leaders of both parties framing some rules to put a stop to such unpleasant events between the parties in future.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

Banelas* in the Partabgarh district.

113. Referring, on the authority of a subscriber, to the loss of life and standing crops from the Banelas (wild boars) in the Partabgarh district, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 27th February, suggests the desirability of the Government protecting the Partabgarh people from these ferocious animals. HIND, 27th February, 1908.

ALLAHABAD :
The 2nd March, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 10 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 7th March, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign:
1.	Death of Mustapha Kamil Pasha ...	223
2.	Mustapha Kamil Pasha	223
3.	A chat with a Russian about Russia ...	223
4.	Japan and India	223
5.	England and Turkey	223
6.	Anglo-Russian Convention	223
7.	Affairs in Portugal	223
	(b)—Home:
8.	The Second Provincial Conference ...	224
9.	The Second United Provinces Conference	224
10.	The United Provinces Conference ...	225
11.	Criticism of the Reform Proposals ...	225
12.	The proposed Reform	225
13.	Lala Lajpat Rai at Muttra	225
14.	Lala Lajpat Rai's rumoured visit to England	225
15.	The Surat Congress	225
16.	Our shipping and ship-building ...	226
17.	Free influx of Englishmen into India ...	226
18.	What can England teach us	227
19.	Punishment for sedition	227
20.	Murder of a coolie in Sunderbunds ...	227
21.	The Indian political outlook ...	231
22.	India in Parliament	231
23.	Mr. Morley's departure from the spirit of Liberalism	231

		Page.
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
24.	The Zakka Khel Expedition	231
25.	The Zakka Khel Expedition and the Native Princes	232
26.	The Zakka Khel Expedition	232
27.	The Zakka Khel Expedition	232
	III.—NATIVE STATES.
	Nil.
	IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
	(a)—Judicial and Revenue:
28.	Conviction of a Unani physician ...	232
29.	Conviction of a Unani physician ...	232
30.	Separation of the Judicial and Executive	232
31.	Separation of the Judicial and Executive	233
32.	Murder of a coolie in the Sunderbunds ...	233
33.	Conviction of Mr. Sunder	233
34.	Conviction of a European murderer ...	233
35.	Conviction of Kondrosky	233
36.	Conviction of the editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam	233
	(b)—Police:
37.	Criticism of the police	234
38.	Conviction of two police constables ...	234
39.	Mysore State Police	234
40.	The Bengal Police	234
41.	Conduct of the Bengal Police ...	234
42.	The Zakka-Kel's depredations ...	234
	(c)—Finance and Taxation:
	Nil.
	(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:
43.	Octroi duties on foodstuffs	235

		Page.
44.	The Bareilly Municipality	235
45.	Musalmans in the Muttra Municipality ...	235
46.	The Agra Municipality	235
47.	Rat-destruction at Benares	235
48.	The Allahabad Municipality	235
	(e)—Education :
49.	Rustication of student volunteers of the Pubna conference	235
50.	Rustication of an M. A. Class student of the Muir Central College, Allahabad ...	236
51.	Industrial education	236
52.	Musalmans and Industrial education ...	236
53.	Muhammadan education in the United Provinces	236
54.	The proposed All-India University ...	236
55.	Sir S. Clarke on education	236
56.	Night School	237
57.	The Allahabad University B. A. course ...	237
58.	Higher education among Indian ladies ...	237
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :
59.	The famine and its last remedy ...	237
60.	Famine Relief Works	239
61.	Effect of famine in India	239
62.	Transport of fodder at reduced rates ...	240
	(g)—General :
63.	Mr. Keir Hardie's opinion on Indian affairs	240
64.	The Second Industrial Conference ...	240
65.	Munshi Zorawar Singh of Etawah ...	240
66.	Cry of the distressed Indians ...	240
67.	A swadeshi poem	240
68.	The value of sanitation	240
	V.—LEGISLATION.
	Nil.
	VI.—RAILWAY.
69.	A railway accident	241
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
70.	The new Value payable parcel form ...	241
71.	The new Value payable parcel form ...	241
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
72.	Muhammadans and Christians ...	241
73.	The Parasnath Hill	241
74.	The Second Social Conference ...	241
75.	Muharram in Kasganj (Etah) ...	242
76.	Bengali Volunteers	242
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
	Nil.

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st March, deplores the want of national feeling and sympathy among the Muhammadans of India as shown by the fact that they did not hold any meeting to express their sorrow at the irreparable loss caused by the death of Mustapha Kamil Pasha, the editor of the Al-lowa.

Death of Mustapha Kamil Pasha.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st March, 1908.

Considering the brilliant services that he rendered to his country, it is the dutythe editor thinks of every true Muhammadan to pray for the peace of his illustrious soul.

2. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 3rd March, referring to the expressions of regret at the death of Mustapha Kamil Pasha in Musalman newspapers of India, remarks that they should look with the same veneration upon the Hindu leaders who are working for the advancement of India.

Mustapha Kamil Pasha.

OUDH AKHBAR, 3rd March, 1908.

3. The Modern Review (Allahabad) for February, has an article entitled "A chat with a Russian about Russia," the author of which is merely described as a correspondent from London.

A chat with a Russian about Russia.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

The Russian is the revolutionist Prince Kropotkin described as living at present at Highgate.

He is recorded as having explained the growth of the national spirit of freedom and political intelligence of the peasant in Russia to his interviewer. Noteworthy remarks attributed to Kropotkin are "Freedom is never given! It is always taken." Our first lesson to the peasant was "Whose land is this? It is yours" . . . They see the land as their own and the authorities as by right their servants . . . In no case can freedom be long delayed."

4. Discussing Count Okuma's speech about India as an opening for Japanese trade, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad), remarks in his editorial notes for February, that should English policy ever drive any Asiatic nation into a despairful acceptance of the Japanese, it would be a bad day for that people, as Japanese methods are to be seen in the history of Korea.

Japan and India.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

5. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 28th February, referring to the strained relations between England and Turkey, remarks that if England goes to war with Turkey, it would wound the susceptibilities of its Moslem subjects in India besides giving offence to the Moslems in Egypt and Soudan.

England and Turkey.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

6. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 3rd March, referring to the Anglo-Russian Convention remarks that it is strange that the treaty has been ratified without consulting Persia and Afghanistan, as these countries are vitally concerned in the matter. Afghanistan's insular policy is well-known, and it is very probable that the newly formed Persian Parliament may not consider the matter favourably. The treaty is mainly commercial, but it is doubtful whether the objects aimed at by Russia and England can be attained, as there is a strong feeling against foreign manufactures both in Persia and Afghanistan.

Anglo-Russian Convention.

OUDH AKHBAR, 3rd March, 1908.

7. Referring to the release by King Manual of Portugal of some Naval officers, who were imprisoned by his father for creating disturbances in 1906, and to the subsequent feelings of gratefulness and sincerity with which the King has been regarded by the people for his kindness to these prisoners, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 5th March, remarks :—"Such sympathetic conduct is surely commendable and tends to strengthen the feeling of cordiality and sympathy between rulers and ruled."

Affairs in Portugal.

HIND, 5th March, 1908.

The editor strongly denounces the attitude of the police in this country who are always seeking some means or other to involve the people in trouble and get indignant even when criticism on police work is made.

(b).—Home.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 3rd March, 1908.

The Second Provincial Conference.

8. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 3rd March, says that in his Presidential address at the Second United Provinces Conference at Lucknow, the Honourable Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya spoke for over two hours and discussed all the important questions of the day. Referring to plague and famine, he claimed that prices in normal years were now as high as those of famine years in former days. He regretted the poverty of the people after 150 years of British rule. There was no country, he stated, as poor as India, and none where official salaries ranged so high. These two facts he thought were sadly in contrast. The administration, he urged, was too costly and economy could only be effected by the employment of Indians on a larger scale in the higher appointments of the Army and Civil Service.

He pointed out that the causes of discontent lay deeper than in the aspirations of educated Indians. They were due, he thought, to the growing poverty of the people, to the disregard of the claims of Indians to higher appointments, and to the disregard of Indian public opinion in the administration of affairs. Imperial and Provincial Advisory Councils, he stated, were not required by the educated classes. The crying necessity of the hour he thought, was the expansion of the Viceroy's Council and the Provincial Legislative Councils and the power to divide a Council meeting on important matters of expenditure.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 4th March, 1908.

The Second United Provinces Conference.

9. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 4th March, says that at the final meeting of the Second United Provinces Conference on 3rd March, Pandit Bishen Narain Dar spoke very eloquently on the Reform proposals. He said that no sane Indian could accept the proposals as they stood. With regard to the Advisory Councils he thought that Native Chiefs should not be allowed to interfere in the administration of British India, any more than Indians had the right to interfere in the affairs of the Native States. He declared that the proposals for the enlargement of the Councils were in the highest degree harmful, and that the standing official majority was a farce. He was of the opinion that the Viceroy's veto would remain unimpaired, even if half the Council were composed of Indians. If racial and class representation were adopted, it would result in sowing the seeds of discord between Hindus and Muhammadans. "Let not Muhammadans," he said, "be deceived by the swing of the pendulum in their favour : the Government clock is so constructed that the pendulum will easily swing back." What was wanted, he said in conclusion, was self-government on Colonial lines, and perhaps the time was nearer than many people supposed when the idea would be realized. One thing, at any rate, was tolerably certain, and that was that the days of the present unsympathetic system of Government were numbered.

The resolution on Famine was entrusted to Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, who eulogised Sir John Hewett for the prompt steps he took during the present distress. He deplored the frequency of famines under British rule and said that the only solution lay in the provision of a permanent settlement for these provinces. He suggested that when suspensions of revenue were made, the fact should be announced to the landlords without delay. The neglect of this precaution had led, he thought, to great loss, and he hoped that in future the announcement would be made within the time laid down by the Famine Code.

Babu Iswar Saran, of Allahabad, delivered a forcible speech on the Education resolution. He urged that the privilege of electing Fellows of the Allahabad University should be conferred on graduates, as had been done in the case of other Universities. He referred to the educational advantages enjoyed by European countries, and deplored the fact that India had not got free primary education, much less compulsory education.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sunder Lal spoke at the end of the Conference on the resolution on the Administration of Justice. He referred to the poor prospects of Munsifs and Subordinate Judges, and said that if some thing were not speedily done to attract the best men, the time would come when the disparity between attainments of the Bench and Bar would be so great that it would be detrimental to the country. He was glad to notice that the experiment of the separation of judicial and executive functions was to be tried in Eastern Bengal, but he did not see why these provinces, which had been the most peaceful and the most loyal part of the whole Indian Empire, should not receive the benefit of a similar experiment. He also urged the appointment of an Indian Judge to the Judicial Commissioner's court at Lucknow.

The United Provinces Conference.

10. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 5th March, congratulates the chief speakers at the recent Conference on their able exposition of all the questions that came up for discussion. He considers the Conference an unqualified success and a happy omen of greater things to come.

ADVOCATE, 5th March, 1908.

Criticism of the Reform Proposals.

11. Referring to the resolutions passed at the recent Lucknow conference and to the views expressed by the members of the Bombay Presidency Association regarding the Government Reform Proposals, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) in the issue of the 1st March remarks:—"That a body of essentially moderate and loyal citizens such as the members of the Bombay Presidency Association should have felt themselves to be under the obligation to criticise the Government proposals with such uncompromising severity, makes assurance doubly sure that these proceed altogether on the wrong lines and must be modified almost beyond recognition before they can even deserve the appellation of Reform Proposals. And if Mr. Morley and Lord Minto are honest and earnest in their avowed intention to give the people of India wider opportunities of expressing their views on administrative matters, and 'to give them a larger share in the actual work of administration' as we have a right to think, then it is to be sincerely hoped that they will allow no false conceptions of prestige to prevent them from reconsidering the whole of their proposals with a view to rid them of most of their obnoxious features and introduce improvements on sound lines so as to suit the requirements of the country and satisfy the reasonable aspirations of the most moderate, loyal and thoughtful of His Majesty's Indian subjects. Otherwise, we indeed tremble to think of the change that may be witnessed in the not distant future in the relations between the Government and the people of India."

ADVOCATE, 1st March, 1908.

The proposed Reform.

12. In approving of the suggestion made by Government regarding the franchise upon which the election of members to Municipalities and District Boards is based, the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) in the issue of the 2nd March, remarks:—"These bodies elect members to Provincial Legislative Councils, and thus have an indirect influence in regulating the election of members to the Imperial Council also. Considering this, the amount of payable rates entitling a man to a vote as elector as well as personal eligibility to membership is too low, and the Government are perfectly justified in requiring an enhancement of these rates."

HINDOSTHAN, 2nd March, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai at Muttra.

13. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 28th February, notes the reception of Lala Lajpat Rai, at Muttra, on the 23rd idem and reproduces the appeal which he made for subscription in aid of famine relief.

SUNDER SHRINGAR, 28th February, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai's rumoured visit to England.

14. Referring to the rumour that Lala Lajpat Rai will accompany Mr. Gokhale who has been invited to England by Messrs. Hume and Wedderburn, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 5th March, remarks that as Mr. Morley is still obstinate in his determination and will not listen to any argument, Lala Lajpat Rai's visit to England can do no good to India save in giving the British public an opportunity to remove their false notions about Lala Lajpat Rai, whom they believe to be the recognised leader of the seditionists in India, according to the views of the Government of Sir D. Ibbetson.

HIND, 5th March, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

15. The editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad), in the editorial notes for February, discussing the recent Congress, remarks that the fracas at Surat is not a matter for particular shame or apology, that such scrimmages occur in other well-ordered councils and the expressions of regret for such incidents are either effeminate or insincere. He deprecates the use of the terms Moderate and Extremist? and remarks that violence and vilifications are no more inherent in Extremism than timidity, flunkeyism and want of faith in the nation in the principles of the Moderates.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1903.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

Our shipping and ship-building.

16. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for February, has an article entitled 'Our Shipping and Ship-building' by Rao Bahadur G. V. Joshi, B. A., in which the writer characterises it as a most perplexing inconsistency that India is almost exclusively dependent on foreign aid in the matter of transport by sea.

The author gives an account of the decadence of the old shipping industry of India, and of its replacement by foreign enterprise. He expresses the opinion that had there been a Navigation act in India as there was in England from 1657 to 1849, Indian ship-building would have been promoted and encouraged.

Statistics are given of the value of the trade, the tonnage of the various ports, and the constitution of the several Port Trusts, showing the effect the extended Railway communications in India have had on the sea-borne trade, and comparing the numbers of Indian and Foreign-owned vessels.

The writer shows that Indians have not in their own hands a tenth share of the maritime trade of India, that the railway transport in India is a foreign monopoly, that the tonnage of Indian shipping for oceanic trade is a negligible quantity, while that for inter-portal trade is about one-tenth only of the total shipping employed on the coast.

He notes that the number of ships built for Indians is inconsiderable, and that India's vast seaboard extending over 4,000 miles with a thousand harbours, once important and prosperous ports, is now, under the rule of a nation, the greatest sea power in the world, a littoral sahara (sic).

He expresses the hope that Indians may yet direct their attention to maritime trade.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

Free influx of Englishmen into India.

17. The Modern Review (Allahabad) for February, has an article entitled "The free influx of Englishmen into India" in which the editor gives extracts from the statements of several witnesses before the Select Committees of both Houses when the question of removing the restrictions which originally existed to the admission of Englishmen into India, was first discussed.

Mr. Warren Hastings, Mr. William Cowper, Sir John Malcolm, Lord Teignmouth, Major General Alexander Kyd, and many others are noted as having condemned in strong terms the removal of any restrictions.

The editor remarks that in face of these testimonies it was decided to suffer no restriction to the influx of Englishmen because the presence of the latter would lead to a greater consumption of European goods and induce natives to imitate European manners and so create a need for European goods.

The country was not, he says, made a colony so as to avoid encouraging Indian industries and making India a prosperous country instead of as actually happened, crushing Indian trade and enterprise. Discussing the possibility of the free admission of Europeans into India resulting in oppression and danger to Indian lives, the writer remarks:—"As the law stood in those days the Christian white sojourners often considered it good fun to take the life of a heathen black or brown, native of this country. If they were in the interior of the country, by the committal of such a crime, they would at the expense of the State, be sent to the Presidency to take their trial before the Supreme Court. This gave them an opportunity to see the Presidency and thus relieve the monotonous life which they led in the mofussil, often several hundreds of miles distant from the Presidency town. The author of Fifteen Years in India mentions an anecdote which is worth transcribing here, for it adorns a tale and points a moral:—

"One great defect in the judicial establishments in India, however, is, that the supreme criminal courts have such a vast extent of jurisdiction over Europeans and the perpetrators of crimes have to be brought from such a distance for trial, before punishment can be inflicted, that the salutary effect of it in prevention is in a great measure lost. A short anecdote will illustrate this: His Majesty's 17th regiment of foot was for a long time stationed on the northern frontier, upwards of one thousand miles from Calcutta, and many of the soldiers began to despair of ever more seeing the Presidency; from this feeling, seven of them entered into a conspiracy to murder a black man, under the impression that only one of them would be hanged for the crime, and that in the meantime they would all have a pleasant trip to Calcutta. Accordingly a musket was loaded, and lots were drawn, and they proceeded together a little way from the Cantonment in search of their victim. They found a man ploughing his field, and he received a bullet through his heart, from the hand that had been armed for his protection. Five of the seven were executed in Calcutta for the murder, and it is probable, that if a criminal court, having jurisdiction over Europeans, had been near the spot where it was committed, six lives would have been saved to the community, and an enormity prevented which must necessarily have produced disgust and horror among the native population of the place."—(Fifteen Years in India, pp. 99 and 100).

What can England teach us ?

18. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for February, has an article entitled 'What can England teach us?' by Indo-Anglian. The chief lessons are noted as selfishness, which is essential to national prosperity and which is described as pre-eminently English, patriotism, in which Indians are noted as lamentably deficient, hero-worship and industrial enterprise.

MODERN REVIEW, February, 1908.

Punishment for sedition.

19. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 28th February, referring to the national honours that have been heaped upon those persons who have been convicted of sedition, remarks :— "There are numerous examples of this. We cannot understand what sort of front the country is presenting to the Government. We do not want that the Government should not respect our free opinions and demands for liberty (?) It should certainly give us everything. But it should also ponder over the result. How void of effect have become the punishments it has inflicted for such crimes. When the punishment awarded is not considered a punishment then the offence too cannot be a crime."

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 28th February, 1908.

Murder of a coolie in the Sunderbunds.

20. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 28th February, contains an article entitled "Begunáh Khún" or "murder of an innocent person."

UNION GAZETTE, 28th February, 1908.

The following is a literal translation of the article :—

"Our contemporary, the Aftab (Delhi) remarks, that people say that Government should not be opposed or withstood.

We too know, that Government possesses power : that a king is always powerful, otherwise he could not continue to be a king ; that the more a tyrannous king he is the more tempted will he be to increase his power to practise oppression.

We too know, that Government can put us in jail, not only for a month or two, but also for 15 or 20 years ; also that there are hardships, ignominy, and solitude in jail.

We too know, that the cruel and oppressive law of Government can deport us for the rest of our life, that deportation means separation from friends and associates, from kith and kin as well as from home, and also that it means a living grave.

We too know, that it is the greatest sin to expose ourselves to danger, and that it is nothing short of committing suicide.

We too feel oppressed with troubles and distressed with calamities. But how can we help it ; we cannot restrain ourselves when the water rises above our heads.

When the spear of oppression pierces right into the heart, jail and deportation appear to be very comfortable and pleasant resorts.

When the blow falls heavily upon the heart a gallows seems to be more welcome and attractive than life.

After all there must be some limit to troubles.

The English if they like, may give us only one meagre meal a day and we will not grumble in the least.

The English, if they like, may make us wander about stark naked and we will be quite contented ; we will not open our lips to complain against them ; we will console ourselves with the idea that we were naked at that time also, when the Almighty God sent us into this world.

We will leave our houses and buildings for the English, if they ask for them; we will make our dwellings in forests and dreary places and gladly bear the scorching sun by day and the cold by night if we cannot provide ourselves even with so much as straw huts, and we will never utter a word of complaint.

We will forsake for the English, if they like, our country, our city, our town, our home and all we have and go away into foreign countries. The English may make their home in India and we will go away to some other country without a word, to be flogged and whipped there. We will bear all these hardships very gladly.

But when we see that a European has kicked an Indian to death and that he has been punished with only a nominal fine of say Rs. 15 or Rs. 20 it makes our blood boil and sinks the boat of our wisdom and patience in the ocean of furious wrath and frenzy.

Our hands and feet become seized with a fit of shaking; our whole body begins to quake with rage. Our eyes grow dark and being lost in frenzy we forget the world and the heavens. We feel an irresistible impulse to give full vent to our wailings and to pour out the woeful feelings pent up in our suffering heart. Gallows, jail, handcuffs and leg-irons appear to us as if they were so many toys and playthings. Our heart impels us to plunge ourselves into an ocean of fire and to tear everything into pieces even if a ferocious lion were to withstand us. We only argue in our mind that an Indian has been murdered, that we too cannot live for ever; that perhaps our own spleens may become enlarged to-morrow and we may be sent to our death by a kick; that it will be better therefore, if we pay our sad tribute of tears to the unhappy dead and thus soothe and comfort our aching heart by weeping over his wretched grave, and that we should despise and hate the murderer and silently wait for an opportunity for revenge.

We are required to abide by the law. But we ask if there is law for the English also, or if their law is that they are left free to plunder the country and kick its inhabitants to death with impunity?

We will now explain the English law in force in India.

The ancient laws required strict protection of life. None could murder any person with impunity and if anybody did so he was sure to be hanged.

There was only one exception to this law :—that in the case of kings and that too only if they happened to kill any one in a state of great excitement. But now it is an age of civilisation and hence we find that in Europe even kings are not allowed to hang any innocent person. There is an incident in English history that even King Edward had once to remain in jail as a punishment for some offence. We see that in Europe all men are considered alike. If one kills another, the murderer would surely be hanged.

This law is not in any way peculiar to Europe alone. It is the same in all civilised countries :—in America and Japan, and in China, Persia, Turkey and other countries also.

Well, it is the law of the civilised world. There are some mischievous tribes on the borders of our country which are utterly savage. Their savageness is such that if one kills another, they never deprive the murderer of his life but take some ransom instead, which usually is never less than four or five hundred rupees. Except in this uncivilised community, in all other places on the face of the earth the law is a life for a life. No religion in the world allows compensation in the shape of money to be sufficient for murder. Every religion holds that all men are alike, no matter whether they be emperors or beggars, rich or poor. It is what we find in the whole world.

But when we look at our own wretched country we find that there can scarcely be a more unfortunate or accursed spot on the face of the earth.

If we were to describe its misfortunes, it will bring not only human beings but also animals to tears. It will make trees catch fire and hills to throw out sparks. It will darken the moon, create dark spots on the bright sun and dry up oceans.

But alas! for those who suffer from these brutalities, immovable and silent like an idol! Even slaves would be in a better condition than these unfortunate Indians, as they also have some moments of respite and rest and are not at all times haunted by the fear of kicks and lashes, like a man who is to be hanged and cannot banish the fearful idea of the gallows from his mind.

We have said above that in all civilised countries, blood is atoned for by blood and that there are only some savage tribes on the borders of this country which take money as compensation for murder, but they too accept a very handsome amount.

But what is the punishment for murder in India?

Gallows! if an Indian unfortunately kills a European.

But what, if a European kills an Indian?

I need not answer that as the readers can well imagine for themselves.

Mr. Sunder, the Settlement Officer of Sundarbands (Bengal) got angry with a coolie.

Surely the coolie looked on him as his God, and consequently how could he possibly expect to live under the displeasure of his God! He threw himself as a suppliant at the Sahib's feet from behind and touched his feet imploring for mercy.

But alas! for all his supplication, humility and bowing, the Sahib only gave him a few kicks and the poor soul expired in a few moments.

Well! Remember! You, the oppressor of the helpless, that there is an Omnipotent Being. A Power, that has created thee and the poor!

Well! O Black-hearted despot! forget not that although thou art a king to-day, thou also hast a King, Who rules over oceans, hills, air and heavens!

Well! O proud and insolent man! forget not that thy own cannons, guns, and thy instruments of destruction, will all of a sudden, one day overtake thee! Thou wilt not remember why the blow shattered thy brain into pieces! Thou wilt be ashamed then, in thy heart, but shall have no mercy; thy punishment will be full and complete!

Thou wilt cry, then, for mercy, but all in vain! Thou will not be heard!

True, thou puttest to the sword an innocent wretch to-day and thinkest not, that a venomous serpent will bite thy only beloved darling to-morrow! Thou wilt cry and lament but to no purpose! To-day thou strikest a miserable person with a stick, but to-morrow thy house will be stricken with lightning, which will consume to ashes, in a twinkling of the eye, those near and dear to thee, thy innocent child, whom thou lovest the most, as thy greatest comfort, pleasure and treasure in life; thy innocent wife whom thou wilt not leave for a moment; thy riches; thy property and all that thou holdest dearest! Then thou wilt strike thy head in agony, beat thy face in remorse, tear thy clothes, shroud thyself in mourning, throw dust on thy head! But alas! It will be all in vain! Dost thou know that it is the result of the dismayed looks of the helpless whom thou beat but yesterday with thy stick! It is the effect of the sigh of the wretched person, whom only the other day, thou scorned, despised and whipped in the market!

It is the woeful fruit of the innocent blood thou spilt only yesterday, without remorse!

It is the scourge and punishment sent by God, the Almighty, Who created both thee and thy unfortunate victim!

In short, the Sahib was put on trial before a court but simply to enlist the sympathy of the people. Surely the Sahib must have possessed a rare brain, for he argued that (when the deceased touched his feet) it struck him that the deceased would dash him down by seizing his feet!

A rare wisdom indeed! that serves one's own end! How on earth could such a notion enter the Sahib's brain! He was a European and had his servants, attendants and a number of retainers besides, about him, to protect him if necessary. Was it then an easy thing for the deceased, a miserable coolie, even so much as to point with his finger at the Sahib.

The poor soul implored for mercy and forgiveness but the Sahib gave him a present of death.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

Perhaps we need not say that the Civil Surgeon deposed that the deceased had an enlarged spleen !

For whenever an Indian falls a victim to the kicks of a European, he is invariably found to be suffering from this same fatal disease, an enlargement of the spleen !

What punishment did the court award to the Sahib!

Gallows ? No.

Imprisonment ? No.

Fine of a few thousand rupees ? No.

Of some hundred rupees then ? Oh ! no--rupees ten only ?

Only some six months ago, when Mr. Hyde killed a sweeper the price of his life was estimated at Rs. 50 by R. Humphreys, Esq., I.C.S.

Since then during a short interval of some four or five months, the market price of an Indian's life has fallen so rapidy that a sick coolie's life in Bengal only fetches Rs. 10.

They say that at the time of Mahmud's invasion of India, Indians were sold at Rs. 2 per head in the markets of Herat and Ghazni.

Surely so ; but Herat and Ghazni are not outside India. Besides, the masters of these slaves used to treat them with sympathy and kindness and never killed them.

It will be recorded in history, that during the British rule in India an Indian's life could be had for Rs. 10 in the markets of his own mother country.

The doctor deposed that the deceased coolie had an enlarged spleen. It may be so. Who knows. But it is a curious thing that every Indian who falls a victim to the kicks of some European is invariably said to suffer from the same complaint. The man who fell a victim to Mr. Hyde had also an enlarged spleen.

But it appears all the more strange, that all such persons, as die from the kick of a European, seem to be very strong and healthy, though it is usually found that natives suffering from enlarged spleens can scarcely move. Perhaps these unfortunate victims had some sort of English spleen ! But then we do not know of the case of a single European having an enlarged spleen, who died by falling down ?

We know too well, what this spleen was ! It was the wretchedness and misfortune of India ; the death warrant of Indians ; the fire of our ill-luck ; the sure sign of our annihilation ?

When should we pray or call for help ? Whom should we tell that we are helpless, or that we need help.

Whom should we ask to save us from our misfortunes.

Who will drag us aside from the grave ?

The Government say that Indians are rebels and seditionists. But does it see, in what way it backs up the English ?

Surely we are not men, if even now the fire of envy and ill-will, will not kindle in our mind.

We are no better than stone if we silently see our brother kicked to death by a foreigner? Had we not been glad if instead of cowardly enduring the kicks of the Sahib, he had taught him such a lesson as to render him unfit to kick any more.

It is certain that he should have been imprisoned or transported for life for this conduct. But it was all the same for him as even his silence could not help him to live longer.

What Indians do urgently require at this time is to use their power.

Well, are we to console and comfort our broken hearts as the most shameless persons also do sometimes by finding out means to divert ourselves in one way or other ?

There was a time when the English, who now rule over us, were sold at Rs. 2 each in Italy.

They are our rulers to-day.
But who knows what we may become to-morrow.
Whom would we rule over?
Whom would we take vengeance on?
Whose country would we overrun and invade beyond the seven seas?
Whom would we ask to restore the wealth they have robbed us of?
God is Almighty. He will not let a tyrant take rest.

The tyrant suffers the consequences of his misdeeds while he is alive in this world; and when he is dead and put in the grave the scorpions will sting him, the dragons and cobras will breathe their poisonous hisses in his ears and nostrils, the grave will press on him from all sides; bricks and stones will hold him tight as if in a press. Angels armed with firy maces will always stand by his pillow. The record of his misdeeds will be read over to him.

Mace after mace will fall on him. He will sigh but will not be able to move. Neither will he die so as to put an end to his miseries, tortures and agonies for ever.

Alas! that only for the life of a day or two in this world a tyrant earns for himself everlasting pain and anxieties.

In fact the tyrant does not oppress the helpless, but his conduct helps him to lay by for himself an inexhaustible store of sorrows and afflictions.

The Indian political outlook.

21. In a leading article on "the Indian Political Outlook," the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 1st March, states that personal feelings were responsible for wrecking the Congress. Nothing can be accomplished, he thinks, till the leaders of all parties unite in a common cause of reform. Their goal, he urges, must be self-government within the empire. They may be fighting against a bureaucracy but he points out this bureaucracy is controlled by a democracy. India, accordingly, must bide her time. Dissension must be replaced by harmony, and political leaders must lay aside personal feelings and strive together in the interests of their country. The approaching Conference at Lucknow will, he hopes, give shape to the ideas now floating in the air and put a workable scheme of organisation before the people.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 1st March, 1908.

India in Parliament.

22. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 2nd March, expresses its disappointment at the cynical and evasive replies given by Mr. Morley to the speeches of Dr. Rutherford and Sir H. Cotton. The editor, however, notes with satisfaction Mr. Morley's suggestion of appointing an Indian in the Executive Council of the Viceroy.

In conclusion he expresses a hope that some changes will be made as soon as the suggestions of the Government of India are received.

OUDH AKHBAR, 2nd March, 1908.

Mr. Morley's departure from the spirit of Liberalism.

23. The editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), in the issue of the 6th March, devotes a column to discussing Mr. Morley's departure from the spirit of Liberalism. Progress, he points out, is the watchword of Liberalism, and yet Mr. Morley, the High Priest of the Liberals, by accepting the gospel of "settled facts" as far as India is concerned, has, he thinks, become a convert to the faith of the orthodox Tory. Redress of old wrongs and the securing of just rights are, he states, the recognized principles of Liberalism. "Mr. Morley," he remarks, "admitted the Partition of Bengal to be a wrong morally and a blunder politically, and yet he refused to redress the wrong and decided to perpetuate the blunder, because he said, it was a settled fact and it was unsafe to reopen the question on grounds of expediency." Again, the editor argues, in substituting selection for election in the proposed reforms, and in clearly defining the line of demarcation between the various sections of the Indian communities by recognising racial division as the basis of representation in Advisory and Legislative Councils, Mr. Morley has fallen far short of the spirit of Liberalism. In conclusion he urges his readers not to put their trust in Liberals, but to learn the lessons of self-help, self-reliance and union.

HINDOSTHAN, 6th March, 1908.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

The Zakka Khel Expedition.

24. The Mohini (Kanauj) of the 25th February, referring to the Zakka Khel expedition, says that though its immediate cause may be the various recent incursions of the Zakka Khels into British territory, their refusal some two years ago to let a railway line pass through their country seems to be its real cause, and that the fact that no expedition was undertaken against them at that time can be accounted for on the ground that the Amir of Kabul had not then visited India and was not consequently so much under the influence of the Government of India as after the visit.

MOHINI, 25th February, 1908.

The editor remarks that this expedition is the first tangible result of the Anglo-Russian Convention, which will attain its consummation when English influence will be thoroughly established in Afghanistan after the forcible subjugation of the frontier tribes, and that it will be no wonder if Afghanistan should find itself entrapped in this Convention and should discover, as some statesmen apprehend, claims for itself in the railway lines that may be laid there in accordance with the terms of the Convention.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 28th February, 1908.

The Zakka Khel Expedition and the Native Princes.

25. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 28th February, remarks that the refusal of their Excellencies the Viceroy and Lord Kitchener to send the Imperial Service Troops of the Native States to the Zakka Khel expedition, has greatly grieved the Indian Chiefs and Princes, some of whom were willing and ready to join the expedition in person.

The editor expresses the hope that the Government will not disappoint its faithful chiefs in this way and will afford them an opportunity to give signal proof of their valour and loyalty to the British Crown.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 1st March, 1908.

The Zakka Khel Expedition.

26. Referring to the recent raid on the Peshawar railway station, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 1st March, thinks that the British overlooked the possibility of the tables being overturned. Care, he points out, should have been taken to prevent a repetition of the outrages that led to the expedition in the absence of the British force. If the Zakka Khels were responsible for raiding the railway station, he argues that they are far from being demoralised, whereas if the raiders were men of other tribes, the conflagration he believes is spreading.

HINDOSTHAN, 3rd March, 1908.

The Zakka Khel Expedition.

27. Referring to the statement made by Mr. Morley in the House of Commons to the effect that the permanent occupation of the Zakka Khel country was not contemplated, the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), in the issue of March 3rd, trusts that vigorous action will be taken to check for ever the refractory conduct of a handful of marauders who are a serious menace to all border enterprise.

III.—Native States.

Nil.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

UNION GAZETTE, 28th February, 1908.

Conviction of a Unani physician.

28. Referring to the conviction of Surajbali, a physician of Mirzapur for accidently injuring the eyes of a patient, and to his subsequent discharge on appeal by the Sessions Judge, the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 28th February, remarks :—

"Had the order of the magistrate been upheld by the Sessions Court, it would have created a rare precedent to hang any Doctor, Ved or physician for the death of a patient under his treatment, and would have in a short time despatched all the men of this profession to Khudaganj (the house of God)."

MUSAFIR, 29th February, 1908.

Conviction of a Unani physician.

29. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 29th February, strongly condemns the conduct of the Magistrate of Mirzapur in convicting a native physician for accidently injuring the eye of a patient, especially when doctors sometimes accidently cause much more serious injuries and harm to their patients and are never accused of negligence.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 1st March, 1908.

Separation of Judicial and Executive.

30. Commenting on the proposed separation of the Judicial and Executive functions in Eastern Bengal, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 1st March, is of opinion that neither Mr. Morley nor the Government of India can be congratulated on the result of the lengthy correspondence on the subject. The experiment, he thinks, is dangerous as it will probably prove a failure owing to the hostile attitude of the authorities to the measure. The idea, however, he considers a sound one, and trusts that Mr. Morley will not be contented with half-hearted measures but in the interest of the Indian public will aim at a complete separation of the Judicial and Executive functions in every district in India.

Separation of the Judicial and the Executive.

31. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 3rd March, referring to the Government's proposal to separate the Judicial and the Executive in certain selected areas, in Bengal with a view to give a trial to this administrative measure, remarks that the present unrest in India is for the most part due to the combination of the Executive and the Judicial, and that the proposed reform, if introduced, is likely to considerably restore peace and tranquillity in the country.

BHARATBASI, 3rd March, 1908.

Murder of a coolie in the Sunderbunds.

32. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), in its combined issue of the 21st and 28th February, referring to the murder of a coolie by Mr. Sunder, Settlement Officer in the Sunderbunds, remarks that it is strange that the higher officials always profess that in the eyes of the law, Europens and Indians are equal, but subordinates seldom do justice to Indians, and that the discontent in the country will never die out until such abuses in the administration of justice are removed.

UNION GAZETTE, 21st and 28th February, 1908.

Conviction of Mr. Sunder.

33. Referring to the inadequate punishment of a fine of Rs. 10 awarded to Mr. Sunder, the Settlement Officer of Sunderbunds, for kicking to death a native named Qamar-uddin, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 29th February, remarks :—"On the one hand mere boys of ten or twelve years of age are whipped or sent to jail to undergo the most severe hardships simply for uttering the words Bande-Mataram although the pronouncing of Bande-Mataram by these innocent boys is absolutely harmless. On the other hand if some unfortunate native is killed by the kicks of a European, the doctor comes forward with his ready-made theories of the enlargement of the spleen or of a case of pneumonia or something of this sort and the sahib gets off scot-free with a nominal punishment. Is this the justice of which the Government is so proud ?

SWARAJYA, 29th February, 1908.

Is this the justice with which the Anglo-Indian officers hope to command the respect of Indians and win their hearts, make them loyal and submissive ?

In our opinion it is such things that sometimes goad Indians to shake off the English yoke. It is now time to win over Indians with sympathy, mildness and justice and not to surcharge their minds with seditious notions for it forecasts dire and evil consequences to everyone."

Conviction of a European murderer.

34. Referring to the inadequate punishment awarded to the European Settlement Officer of Sunderbunds for kicking to death a native, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 29th February, remarks :—"Does not this incident confirm the belief of Indians that they cannot get sufficient redress for their grievances in British courts of justice, against a European ? This event puts a disgraceful blot on British justice. But who can dare say so ? or advise the Government for he will at once be condemned and sent to jail as a seditionist and rebel."

MUSAFIR, 29th February, 1908.

Conviction of Kondrosky.

35. Alluding to the nominal punishment of three months' imprisonment awarded to Kondrosky, a notorious Russian railway robber, the Swarajya, (Allahabad), of the 29th February, asks if a similar light punishment would have been awarded in case Kondrosky instead of being a Russian had unfortunately been a black native of India. No. From the facts the reply is in the negative.

SWARAJYA, 29th February, 1908.

Conviction of the editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam.

36. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st March, while expressing regret at the conviction of the editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) for libel, remarks that the punishment awarded was unduly harsh and severe in comparison with the gravity of the offence.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st March, 1908.

(b).—Police.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 1st March, 1908.

Criticism of the police.

37. Alluding to the statement made by Sir Andrew Fraser when opening the Police Training College at Ranchi recently explaining his action as regards judicial strictures on the police, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 1st March, points out that the Lieutenant-Governor's original intention was not to make the executive authorities courts of appeal on Judges in such matters. He represents Sir Andrew Fraser as saying that the conduct of police officers who have been made the subject of judicial censure, is always enquired into by executive officers who never report the result of their enquiry to the censuring Judge with the result that the latter is unable to say if his censure has been noticed or not. The editor then concludes by saying, "if the executive and judicial authorities had the same standard of morality and the same sense of duty, they could work together easily enough. But the police is corrupt, incompetent, unscrupulous and habitually abuses its powers, while Judges are conscientious and honourable. It is easy enough to see why Judges do not approve of the way of the police, while the executive is interested in supporting the police, however inefficient or corrupt."

HIND, 5th March, 1908.

Conviction of two police constables.

38. Referring to the conviction of two constables of the Banglore police for theft and for keeping stolen property in their possession, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 5th March, remarks:—"This is the police to whom the safety of our life and property has been entrusted."

HIND, 5th March, 1908.

Mysore State Police.

39. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 5th March, notes with satisfaction the efficient system of the working of the police in Mysore State, as a considerable decrease in serious crime is noticeable during recent years.

The editor expresses the desirability of the British Government making arrangements for the watch and ward of the people like the Mysore State, by relegating this duty to the villagers themselves as the existing system of police organisation has led to an abnormal increase in serious crimes.

HIND, 5th March, 1908.

The Bengal Police.

40. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 5th March, strongly condemns the conduct of the Bengal police in sending up Rasik Behari Lal Jhah, for trial without having sufficient grounds for doing so. He was an advocate of swadeshism, and though convicted in the lower court, was acquitted on appeal.

The editor remarks that the Bengal police have nothing to do save to devise means to harass and torture the advocates of swadeshi.

In conclusion he says that the occurrence of such events shows that before a man takes any interest in the swadeshi movement he must put out of his mind all regard for self-respect as it will be impossible for him to protect himself from the arrogance of the police.

HIND, 5th March, 1908.

Conduct of the Bengal Police.

41. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 5th March, strongly condemns the conduct of the Bengal police as shown by the statement of Gulkhan, an accused in the murder case of Mr. Crabbe, who stated that he was promised the sum of Rs. 2,500 by the police to admit his guilt and give evidence against other accomplices and that he would make no confession unless he was paid the sum promised by Darogha Sharafat Ali.

The editor further remarks that this is the Police Force regarding which the Bengal Government has ordered the courts to pass no strictures in their judgments!

HIND, 5th March, 1908.

The Zakka Khel's depredations.

42. Referring to the serious depredations and attacks of the Zakka Khels in Peshawar, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 5th March suggests that the Government should entrust the management of the place to Rai Ganga Ram, Inspector of Police, Lahore, as he is an able and most efficient officer, well fitted for this difficult task and could probably do something to arrest the dacoits.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

43. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 14th February, requests the Government to remit the octroi duties on foodstuffs such as wheat, gram, dal &c., as it would considerably relieve the poor of their burden of taxation.

UNION GAZETTE, 14th February, 1908.

Octroi duties on foodstuffs.

44. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st March, complains that the Chopulla road, in the city which has a great amount of traffic, is full of dust which causes great annoyance to the public. The editor appeals to the municipal officers to remove the nuisance.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st March, 1908.

The Bareilly Municipality.

45. A correspondent of the Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 3rd March, complains that no Musalman has as yet been elected a member of the Muttra Municipality, and if the Government do not nominate Musalmans to be members of the Municipal Board of Muttra, they will never find a place on it although they form about one-sixth of the population of the city.

AL-BASHIR, 3rd March, 1908.

Musalmans in the Muttra Municipality.

46. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 3rd March, complains that the members of the Agra municipality take very little interest in municipal affairs and as a result the municipal officials have their own way in everything and oppress the people. Besides this the editor says that "he who has the reins of the municipality in his hands" (the Secretary ?) lives at a distance from the municipal offices and so has no effective control over his subordinates.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 3rd March, 1908.

The Agra Municipality.

47. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 3rd March, complains that in spite of the fact that doctors are not as yet unanimous regarding the rat theory except in so far as they agree that rats only give a signal of the outbreak of plague, the Benares Municipality has been distributing poison among the people and causing them to destroy rats against their will and religious scruples. The editor regrets Hindus who are so scrupulous regarding the destruction of life should be made to commit such a sin in the very home of Hinduism. He cannot believe that such action could have been sanctioned by the Government and prays that early steps may be taken to remove this grievance of the Hindu population of Benares.

BHARATBASI, 3rd March, 1908.

Rat-destruction at Benares.

48. Referring to the house tax imposed in the Allahabad Municipality some years ago, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th March, thinks that the Municipal authorities ought to be called on to explain how their increased income is being spent, as there is no tangible result of the imposition of the tax. Allahabad, he regrets to say, is the most backward of the large cities of India. It is badly lighted and very dusty and no effort has been made to introduce electric light or tramways though less important Provincial towns have advanced with the times and are in the full enjoyment of all modern improvements. The Allahabad Municipal Commissioners he thinks take but little interest in their work. The unwonted exertion of canvassing from door to door exhausts all their energies and they accordingly spend their year of office in relaxation. He concludes by hoping that they will bestir themselves and make the city worthy of the name of the capital of the Provinces.

CITIZEN, 5th March, 1908.

The Allahabad Municipality.

(e).—Education.

49. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 29th February, strongly condemns the conduct of the Magistrate of Pubna in rusticating all the students who worked as volunteers on the occasion of the last Pubna Conference.

MUSAFIR, 29th February, 1908.

Rustication of student volunteers of the Pubna Conference.

The editor further remarks that it is vain and foolish on the part of the officials to attempt to wean the students from politics by such harsh measures, as t is now beyond all human power to do so.

In conclusion he humorously suggests that if the Government is so anxious to keep students away from politics it should recruit its police from the world of spirits and depute a ghostly policeman with every student to watch him at every moment and place. It is not difficult to get such a police if the Government take the trouble to ask Mrs. Annie Besant, the mistress of the world of spirits.

SWARAJYA, 29th February, 1908.

Rustication of an M.A. Class student of the Muir Central College, Allahabad.

50. Alluding to the rustication of a Muhammadan student of the Muir Central College, Allahabad, for six months both from the Law as well as from the Arts Class, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 29th February, remarks :—"Is this justice! Let every one answer this for himself. What was the harm if a young student wrote an essay on the poverty of India! Does it threaten the Principal or the Government with some harm? It is foolish to punish a student so heavily for a trifling matter. It is dangerous both for the rulers and the ruled.

If through discontent and ill-treatment the hearts of Indians are turned into jungles full of thorns and thistles, instead of being planted with the seeds of kindness and sympathy, disaffection is sure to spread. It is foolish to confine fire in a basket for it is sure to produce evil consequences. The officials should therefore treat the people with kindness, as it will tend to establish peace and order, otherwise evil is sure to result.

God knows what stuppr Indians are in when seeing these hardships every-day of their students they do not think of starting their own colleges! Had there been national colleges in the country, students should never have been disappointed in this way."

MASHRIQ, 3rd March 1908.

Industrial education.

51. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 3rd March, referring to the measures that are being adopted to introduce industrial training in schools, remarks that steps should be taken to improve the handicrafts which have become localized in different centres in the Provinces, and classes should be formed for the instruction of beginners in these arts, and suitable text books in these subjects should be published.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 4th March, 1908.

Musalmans and industrial education.

52. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 4th March, notes with regret the apathy shown by Musalmans with regard commerce and industry, and remarks that it seems that just as they were outstripped by the Hindus in the acquisition of Western learning they will remain backward in industrial enterprise also. The Hindus are organising and initiating new industies, establishing banks and sending students to foreign countries, for technical education while the Musalmans are seeking posts under the Government. The editor after referring to the past commercial enterprise of the Musalmans, exhorts them not to remain behind the Hindus.

TAFRIH, 28th February 1908.

Muhammadan education in the United Provinces.

53. Alluding to His Honour's remarks on the education of Muhammadans in the review on the Educational Report of the United Provinces, the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 28th February remarks :—

"Are His Honour and the Director of Public Instruction perfectly conscious of the fact that the abolition of private institutions will be a death-blow to the religious education of the Muhammadans?"

MUSAFIR, 29th February 1908.

The proposed All-India University.

54. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 29th February, strongly disapproves of the idea of Mrs. Annie Besant of establishing an All-India University, and remarks that the only difference between the existing Government and the proposed University will be that the latter will give religious education in the Koran, the Bible and the Vedas, which will be still more injurious to the country (?)

ADVOCATE, 1st March, 1908.

Sir S. Clarke on education.

55. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) in the issue of 1st March, referring to Sir George Sydenham Clarke's speech as Chancellor of the recent Convocation of the Bombay University, remarks that Sir George Sydenham Clarke's idea of allowing each province to develop its educational scheme on its own lines is opposed to Lord Curzon's views on the subject. Lord Curzon's reactionary policy however, he points out, had an effect on the people the very reverse of what he expected. The editor then suggests that as the teaching profession does not attract the flower of the country at present, the pay and prospects of teachers should be improved.

56. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 3rd March, advocates the establishment of night schools for the benefit of working men and women where they can profitably spend their evenings instead of lounging and loitering in the bazars and wasting their time otherwise. NASIM-I-AGRA, 3rd March, 1908.

Night school.

57. Referring to the Allahabad University B. A. course, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th March, objects to the rule compelling candidates for the B.A. degree to take a classical language or mathematics as their second compulsory subject. Many a student, he thinks, with no inclination for classics or mathematics might otherwise secure a degree. He also comments on the increasing difficulty of the papers set in classics. With regard to the M. A. Examination he thinks that kindred subjects are too much split up. He gives Political Economy and History as an instance. Both these subjects, he thinks, ought to be studied together, but a candidate, he says can take up only one of them. INDIAN PEOPLE 5th March, 1908.

The Allahabad University B. A. course.

58. The editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), in the issue of 6th, March, notes with pleasure that higher education is progressing among the lady students of India and refers with pride to the conferring of the B.A. degree on a lady student at the forthcoming Convocation of the Madras University. HINDOSTHAN, 6th March, 1908.

Higher education among Indian ladies.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

59. The Swarájya (Allahabad) of the 29th February, contains an article entitled "The famine and its last remedy." The following is a literal translation of the article :— SWARAJYA, 29th February, 1908.

The famine in and its last remedy.

"A perusal of the translation of the speech of the Venerable Dadabhoy Naoroji, in the last two issues of the Swarajya must have shown to its readers that the main cause of famine in India is not the failure of the rains or anything of the sort, but it is the poverty and indigence of its people. If the continuance or failure of the rains be taken to be the cause of famine or scarcity in a country, then there must be ever-present famines in England, France, Germany and in the whole of Europe; and the inhabitants of these countries should always be in need of food. First, because the soil of these countries is very hard and rocky and consequently cannot be as rich and productive as the fertile plains of India, America or Australia. Secondly, a large portion of the population of European countries interests itself in the pursuits of arts and industries and has little or no taste for husbandry. Thirdly, the crops in these countries are invariably more or less damaged by hail, frost or snow. But with all these disadvantages and shortcomings we never find any of these countries suffering from scarcity or famine, and on the other hand we find the inhabitants always enjoying their mutton chops, brandy and whisky.

Besides, it also cannot be maintained that India is poor in its productions when we see that enormous quantities of grain are being exported even in these years of terrible famine and drought to pamper Europeans.

These facts show that the failure of the rains is not the cause of famine in India, but something else, which according to Mr. Dadabhoy Naoroji is the indigence and poverty of its people, and for which the only remedy he prescribed was to arouse the feelings of shame and justice in the English. That is to say, he meant that the main cause of famine in India is the shamelessness, dishonesty and injustice of the English. Some eight years ago Mr. Dadabhoy Naoroji during the course of a speech which he delivered in England, appealed to the sense of shame and honour of the British nation by reminding them of the promises made to Indians by royal as well as parliamentary proclamations and laws, in which the justice-loving English take so much pride and repeat them from time to time simply to deceive Indians.

He also made them perfectly understand that if they fulfilled their solemn promises to Indians and treated them with justice and sympathy it would not conduce to the happiness of the starving Indians only or save them from starvation, plague and various other calamities to which they are subject; but would also go a great way to improve the prosperity of England, efface the disgraceful blot of oppression and injustice from the fair forehead of the English and endear their name to Indians with feelings of justice and sympathy.

Since that time Mr. Gokhale and Lala Lajpat Rai also visited England and pleaded for their countrymen before the British public and gave them good, useful and valuable advice regarding India, but with no better results. Mountains may move from their places, but not the English from their determination."

They paid no heed to what these heroes of India told them. The same tyranny and oppression that was raging before, is present to this day and its natural consequence is also apparent, that India is in a still worse state of poverty and distress than it was before.

England by her injustice and crueltyis gradually sucking out the lifeblood of India as formerly but (does so) more rapidly than ever.

Starving India has to enrich the British treasury with the same twenty millions a year as it did before and with something more in addition. The only ostensible difference in the condition of India is that the rates which formerly used to be looked upon as famine prices, are, owing to their continuance, now regarded as the established rates of plenty in the country. In short the more Indians relied on the feelings of justice, honesty and humanity of the English, the worse and worse they became. Corn has now come to be sold at the rate of five or six seers a rupee and has created distress not only amongst the poor but also amongst the well-to-do classes of the country. Is it still binding upon us to believe the words of the English or the Anglo-Indians as if they were revelations of the Scripture ?

Should we not even now try to get ourselves extricated from the clutches of famines and plague, instead of silently listening to sweet and plausible promises ? Is it still necessary for us to waste the money of our country in sending deputations to England, and moreover fill the English purse by spending enormous sums on a sea voyage to England ?

Let us once more appeal to their mercy and pray them to give us for God's sake only as much as will suffice to feed and clothe us.

No! No. We have had sufficient begging and praying ! At least there must be some limit to our shamelessness and want of self-respect, which both have now sunk down to the lowest degree and hence have a tendency to rise again.

We are now again reminded of the greatness of our respectable forefathers. We are now again filled with the feelings of respect to our mother Bharat.

We will not on any account now suffer our mother Bharat to go and beg at the door of England and pray for justice and mercy.

We will now again try to raise our mother Bharat from the state of a slave girl to be the mistress of the world, so that the whole world will bow down in profound respect to her as before.

There is only one way to achieve this object, namely that Hindus and Muhammadans should both unite together to revive their old trade which has been so cruelly and selfishly destroyed by tyrants and aggressors. We should water and revive the withered plant of our arts and industries with the nectar of swadeshism, and if necessary, with our blood also.

In order to protect this sprouting plant from the tyranny and oppression of the foreigners we should fence it round with the thistles of boycotting.

Until the sapling of our hopes is nourished and enriched with fruits and spreads all over the world as before, we should try to protect it from the encroachments of enemies and tyrants even at the expense of our lives.

We shall have to face all sorts of difficulties and to undergo various hardships in our attempt. They (?) will deceive us, suggest wrong and injurious methods to nourish this delicate plant. We should be very careful in nursing it.

We should never trust them for a moment, even if they appear before us in the guise of angels. They are the people who have cut and laid low the glorious tree of Bharat's arts and industries by striking at its very root with the axe of tyranny, oppression and injustice.

We should never be afraid of them even if they muster on their side all the devilish powers of mischief and evil that are present in the world.

It will be then and then alone that the tree of our hopes will bear fruit, we will be delivered out of the clutches of plague and famine and our mother Bharat will be set free from the slavery of foreigners.

It can be hoped then and then alone that mother Bharat will again become mistress of the world which will resound with the sound of her drums.

Come brothers! Let us be ready to protect mother Bharat and, scorning the power of our opponents (English?) and their cowardly sycophants, (Moderates?) let us be prepared to protect mother Bharat. What shall we say of jails and deportation. We should not be afraid to undergo even the most severe tortures and troubles in protecting this fruitful plant of Swadeshism. God will help us; and we will surely be able to hold our own upon the face of the world.

It is the last opportunity? If we neglect even now, to protect ourselves, then be sure the time will not be very far distant when our name will be entirely forgotten in the world like that of the aboriginal inhabitants (lit. masters) of America, Australia, Africa and other English colonies; and none will be able to pride himself on being a descendant of Rama or Krishna, Gautam or Kanád, Kapil or Patanjali, Babar or Humayun, Akbar or Aurangzeb.

If you are anxious that you may not be annihilated altogether from the face of the earth (lit. page of existence), then take heart, create in yourself (a sense of) self-respect and honor; be righteous and good and form your character, so that you may realise in yourself the courage of sacrificing in the service of your home, your heart and soul, your life, property and all; so that you may have the (strength) courage to give (your) life, for your country like moth (upon a lamp), so that you may be prepared to offer your heads for your principles and be sure then, that, if any individual power, or even if all the devilish and human powers of the world assail you jointly they will never be able to hold your holy country in bondage; and the proudest and the grandest and the most powerful country of the world will bow down its head in respect before you.

What cannot a man do.
If he has but courage?
What knot is there that cannot be untied.
Should one ever abandon courage?
For God and the world award
Respect to one, proportionate to one's heart.
Though the Pole may leave its place,
Though wind may shake Himalaya's base
Oceans be soaked and dried with glow-worm's heat!
And the sun go down before
Its rise to meridian,
Yet the brave should never, never lose
Their courage or heart,
Or show signs of anxiety visible on their foreheads.

60. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st March, notes with satisfaction the opening of famine relief works in various parts of the Province and cautions the Government against the appointment of untrustworthy persons as officers in charge of these works. The editor thinks that these officials, when not under efficient supervision, misuse their authority and generally ill-treat the people on the works. He advises the higher officers to visit the works as frequently as possible and hear the complaints of the people, otherwise these works will be of little practical utility, and self-respecting men will prefer starvation to such disgrace.

Famine Relief Works.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ. 1st March, 1908.

61. Referring to the pathetic facts of a case of theft of three seers of rice committed by Babu Beni Madho Bose, a clerk in the firm of Ralli Brothers in Calcutta, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 5th March, remarks:—"This is the sad condition of the distress caused by famine, of the people of a country which exports enormous quantity of grain to supply the wants of foreign countries."

"If the Government is anxious to protect its people from starvation, it should, considering the unusually high prices at which corn is being sold at present, either increase the salareis of its servants, or stop the export of grain from India to foreign countries; otherwise it is certain that sooner or later, its people will become entirely extinct from the face of the earth."

Effect of famine in India.

HIND, 5th March, 1908.

HINDOSTHAN, 2nd March, 1908.

62. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of 2nd March, expresses the indebtedness of the whole agricultural population of India to Government for arranging for the transport of fodder by rail at reduced rates.

Transport of fodder at reduced rates.

(g).—General.

TAFRIH, 28th February, 1908.

63. Referring to the opinion of the Hon'ble Henry Leigon, (?) on Mr. Keir Hardie's views on Indian affairs, the editor of the Tafrih (Lucknow), in the issue of the 28th February remarks :—" Mr. Keir Hardie had only placed before the British public the grievances and deplorable condition of Indians which had greatly impressed him, but Mr. Leigon has gone a step further and clearly put before the public the mystery of the policy of the Government of India which may be looked upon as a graver offence.

Mr. Keir Hardie's opinion on Indian affairs.

What Mr. Leigon meant to say is briefly this, " That whatever the responsible Anglo-Indian officials did or are still doing in India, is in express compliance with the instructions of the Government itself. "

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 3rd March, 1908.

64. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 3rd March, says that at the second day's session of the Conference at Lucknow, Mr. A. C. Chatterji, I.C.S., spoke at length on the industrial outlook. He urged his hearers to follow the lead given them by Bengal and Madras in establishing factories and encouraging home industries, and hoped that the United Provinces would soon cease to be one of the most backward Provinces in India as regards industrial development.

The Second Industrial Conference.

BHARATBASI, 3rd March, 1908.

65. The editor of the Bharatbasi (Allahabad), in the issue of the 3rd March, says that he does not know why Government detectives are shadowing Munshi Zorawar Singh of Etawah, although it was fully established that he had no hand in the so-called Etawah conspiracy. The editor remarks that officials uselessly cause unrest among the people by such petty irritating acts.

Munshi Zorawar Singh of Etawah.

BHARATBASI, 3rd March, 1908.

66. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 3rd March, contains a poem entitled " the Cry of distressed Indians " in which the writer bewails the present degraded condition of the Indians and prays God to help them out of their misery.

Cry of the distressed Indians.

" The foreigners (Bideshi) have usurped the land and laugh at the Indians, clapping their lands. . . . . O, Indians, wake and give up your idleness. The present is a very opportune moment for work, which should not be allowed to pass away without advantage being taken of it . . . You should give up using foreign articles. That will soon break the chains off your necks. The wise Japanese have already awakened, why are you still sleeping . . . . . The foreigners have robbed the natives of all they had, and the latter are now lying helpless in their homes, O, Ram, help them—such is the cry of the distressed Indians who are all but ruined."

BHARATBASI, 3rd March, 1908.

67. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 3rd March, contains a poem entitled " Hori." The writer laments that the Holi festival can be enjoyed when all has gone beyond the seas in the form of either taxes or subscriptions, and the little that was left in India is also finding its way thither. He calls upon Indians to wake up even now, for their deliverance will be of no use when they will have lost all. He thinks that Indians have lost all manliness, or else why are there none capable of relieving the motherland of her sufferings. He suggests that all Indians should work in unison for the salvation of India at all costs.

A swadeshi poem.

ADVOCATE, 5th March, 1908.

68. Writing on the " Value of Sanitation," the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 5th March, notes with regret that up to date no institutions exist in India for training students in sanitary science. He is glad to learn, however, that a proposal has been made to start such an institution in the Bombay Presidency and that the proposal is receiving the support of the Governor.

The value of sanitation.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

69. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), in its combined issue of the 21st and 28th February, referring to the derailment of a mail-train at Barmanpur (?) in Bengal, remarks that the loss of life was very great and many corpses were taken to Diamond Harbour and thrown into the sea and the railway authorities declared that only a few lives were lost. In this they were helped by the Police also. Besides this, no help was offered to the injured and instead of this they were dragged away by ropes, fastened to their necks.

A railway accident.

UNION GAZETTE, 21st & 28th February, 1908.

The editor thinks that this is the practice generally resorted to by the Police and the railway authorities, and even when the whole of a train is derailed the loss of life is shown as very small.

VII.—Post Office.

70. The Veda Prakash (Meerut), for February (received on the 2nd March), complains that the new form for value payable parcel introduced from 1st February, has increased the already heavy work of postal employés and has also been a source of serious inconvenience to the public, and suggests a reversion to the old system with this difference that the new procedure should continue in force with regard to labels pasted on articles so as to ensure convenience to the mail service, which seems to have been the object in view in introducing the new form.

The new Value payable parcel form.

VEDA PRAKASH, February, 1908.

71. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st March, complains of the difficulties created by the introduction of the new value payable parcel form, and asks the postal authorities to replace it soon by the old one which was more simple and useful.

The new Value payable parcel form.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st March, 1908.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

72. Referring to the attempt of some Muhammadan rioters in the late Muharram disturbances in Bombay to burn alive a Christian who happened to meet them at the time, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 29th February, points out the professed friendliness and loyalty of the Muhammadans towards Christians and asks them for God's sake not to befool and deceive the Government by their insincere professions of loyalty as it is their religious duty to be faithful to Christians, for to act otherwise would be a blasphemy against the command of the Muhammadan God and an outrage to the real feelings of Muhammadans.

Muhammadans and Christians.

MUSAFIR, 29th February, 1908.

73. A correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 1st March, referring to the Parasnath Hill question, alludes to the success of the Transvaal Indians through passive resistance, and suggests that the Jain community should adopt similar means for the protection of their sacred hill.

The Parasnath Hill.

JAIN GAZETTE, 1st March, 1908.

74. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 3rd March, has the following :—

The Second Social Conference.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 3rd March, 1908.

"Raja Rampal Singh, C. I. E., of Kori, Sidhauli, presided on Sunday afternoon over the second session of the Social Conference. He deplored the backwardness of the United Provinces in matters of social reform. He referred to the moral degradation to which Indian women were subjected during the Holi festival, and urged the Conference to memoralize the Local Government to put a stop to these evil practices. Hindu society was, he said, an unwieldy structure, and it was impossible to expect that the caste system could be done away with all at once. Reform should come from above and the work might be hastened by inviting the leading members of the sectional sabhas to meet together annually and devise measures for future action."

AL-BASHIR, 3rd March, 1908.

Muharram in Kasganj (Etah).

75. A correspondent of Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 3rd March, complains that the Musalmans of Kasganj (Etah) were not allowed to exhibit their tazias this year. The Hindus of the place put in an application to have the height of tazias limited, so that they should not touch their sacred pipal trees. This was done to prevent the Musalmans from performing their religious ceremonies. The local authorities decided that the tazias should not be more than ten feet high, but the tazias had been already constructed, so the Musalmans informed the local authorities that they could not make any changes in the dimensions of the tazias as it was against their religious principles, but their representation was not listened to. In the meantime the Hindus complained to the authorities that the Musalmans wanted to kick up a row during the Muharram and the authorities took into custody on the 8th Muharram 28 Musalmans who used to exhibit tazias and chalanned them and refused to accept bail. They have not been as yet released and consequently they were not able to exhibit their tazias on the 10th of Muharram or perform any religious ceremonies. Some of them wanted to send telegrams to the higher authorities, but the clerks turned them out. Chaudhri Kishan Singh, Deputy Collector, was the officer who was deputed to keep order during the Muharram. It was his duty to offer every facility to the people performing their religious cremonies and not to stop them altogether.

The correspondent hopes that the higher authorities will take notice of the matter and that the poor people will be released.

OUDH AKHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

Bengali Volunteers.

76. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 7th March, notes with satisfaction the highly commendable work done by the Bengali Volunteers during the Ardhodayayoga festival, and repudiates the allegations brought against them by Anglo-Indian papers of being disloyal to the Government.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

Nil.

ALLAHABAD:
The 9th March, 1908.

S. T. HOLLINS,
Assistant Superintendent of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 11 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 14th March, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign:
1.	The Lisbon tragedy	245
2.	The Lisbon tragedy	245
3.	Russia and India	245
4.	The Amir and the Anglo-Russian Convention	245
5.	The Anglo-Russian Convention ...	245
6.	Indians in the Colonies	245
7.	England and Turkey	246
8.	State of affairs at Morocco	246
	(b)—Home:
9.	The Provincial Conference at Lucknow ...	246
10.	The Provincial Conference at Lucknow...	246
11.	The editor of the Swarajya at the Provincial Conference	246
12.	The Provincial Conference at Lucknow...	246
13.	The Provincial Conference at Lucknow...	247
14.	The Provincial Conference at Lucknow ...	247
15.	The Provincial Conference at Lucknow...	247
16.	The Indian situation	247
17.	The causes of unrest in India ...	248
18.	India's poverty and expenses of touring...	248
19.	The poverty of India	248
20.	The Decentralisation Commission ...	248
21.	The Decentralisation Commission ...	248
22.	The Decentralisation Commission ...	249
23.	The present national outlook ...	249
24.	Lala Lajpat Rai's speech on National Education in Lucknow	249
25.	Want of sympathy on the part of Indian officials	250
26.	Indians and Europeans	250
27.	Muhammadans and Government ...	250
28.	India's want	250
29.	The Rohilkhand Gazette versus the Amrit Bazar Patrika	250
30.	Hindus and Musalmans	251
31.	Indian patriotism	251
32.	India and Parliament	251
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
33.	The Zakka Khel Expedition	252
34.	The Zakka Khel Expedition	252
35.	Afridis in Peshawar	252
36.	Hindus in the Frontier Province ...	252
	III.—NATIVE STATES.
	Nil.
	IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
	(a) Judicial and Revenue:
37.	Separation of the Judicial and Executive functions	253
38.	Separation of the Judicial and Executive functions	253
39.	Separation of the Judicial and Executive functions	253
40.	Separation of the Judicial and Executive functions	253
41.	Trespassing in the Calcutta mint ...	253
42.	Courts of Eastern Bengal	253

		Page.
43.	Muzaffarnagar Civil Courts	254
44.	Political offenders	254
45.	The cow-killing case at Allahabad ...	254
46.	The cow-killing case at Allahabad ...	254
	(b)—Police :
47.	Police oppression in India	254
48.	Police oppressions	255
49.	Jubbulpur police	255
50.	Direct appointments as Deputy Superintendents of Police	255
51.	Change of police stations in the Allahabad district	255
	(c)—Finance and Taxation :
	Nil.
	(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :
52.	The Agra municipality	255
53.	Octroi tax in the Agra municipality ...	255
54.	The Cawnpore municipality	256
	(e)—Education :
55.	The Bengal National College... ...	256
56.	Political education of the masses ...	256
57.	Higher education...	256
58.	The object of education	256
59.	The Principal of the Muir Central College and the students	256
60.	Industrial Education	256
61.	School tournament	256
62.	Educational reforms	257
63.	Rustication of Mazhar Ali from the Muir Central College	257
64.	Cramming system in schools... ...	257
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :
65.	Unao town Bank	257
66.	Grievances of agriculturists in the United Provinces	257
	(g)—General :
67.	The success of the swadeshi movement in Bengal	258
68.	Government and the swadeshi movement	258
69.	A swadeshi poem	258
70.	Swadeshi sugar	258
71.	The swadeshi movement	258
72.	Government and the swadeshi movement	258
73.	The Etawah conspiracy	259
74.	The Etawah conspiracy	259
75.	Prosecution of printers of newspapers ...	259
76.	Prosecution of journalists	259
77.	The present policy of the Eastern Bengal Government	259
78.	Departure of Mr. Clarke from Mymensingh	259
79.	The conviction of a clerk of Ralli Brothers firm for theft	260
80.	Sports men and shooting accidents ...	260
81.	The Allahabad shooting case... ...	260
82.	Mr. Nevinson's departure from India ...	260
83.	National volunteers	260
84.	Government and the Ahl-i-Hadis ...	260
85.	Indian industries	260
86.	Promotions of clerks	261
87.	The Bewar Krishna Mills	261
88.	Honorary degrees and titles ...	261
	V.—LEGISLATION.
89.	Civil Procedure Code Amendment Bill ...	261
	VI.—RAILWAY.
90.	Concession for European Railway employés on Indian and English railways	261
91.	Inconvenience to pilgrims at Muttra ...	261
92.	Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway ...	261
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
93.	Agra post office	262
94.	The new value-payable parcel form ...	262
95.	The new value-payable parcel form ...	262
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
96.	Islamic Mission to Japan	262
97.	The Parasnath Hill	262
98.	Spread of Arya Samaj religion ...	262
99.	The Lucknow Social Conference ...	262
100.	Musalmans and usury	263
101.	Shias and Sunnis in Lucknow ...	263
102.	Sanatan Bharat Dharma Mahaparishad ...	263
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
103.	A swadeshi invocation by Vishnu Dutt ...	263

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 5th March, referring to the Lisbon tragedy and the recent attempt on the life of the Shah of Persia, remarks that sedition seems to be spreading rapidly throughout the world and that it is due to the disregard of public opinion by those who hold the reins of government in different countries. ANAND, 5th March, 1908.

The Lisbon tragedy.

2. Alluding to the assassination of the King of Portugal and to the attempts made on the lives of the President of the Argentine Republic and of the King of Persia, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, remarks :—"In these days if the Kings have resolved to do as they like, it is also clear, that the people also have determined to resist their actions to the best of their power." RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

The Lisbon tragedy.

3. Commenting on repression and coersion in Russia, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th March, remarks that in a country where the government does not like to be restricted of its rights in the least, its people, exasperated by bureaucratic oppression, are sure to create disturbances and endeavour to subvert the constitution. Under such circumstances the people put up with all kinds of punishment. History has thousands of instances in which the subversion of government has been brought about by bureaucratic oppression. It is strange that nevertheless some Governments endeavour to rule by repressing its subjects. ABHYUDAYA, 6th March, 1908.

Russia and India.

The editor condemns the repressive policy of the Russian government which has cost thousands of valuable lives on both sides, and remarks that the Government of India should take a lesson from the disturbances in Russia, and should so carry on the Indian administration in accordance with the wishes of the people as to avert such evil times here as have overtaken Russia. Signs of discontent are visible on all sides in India, and it is not due to animosity against any particular race, nor is it traceable to feelings of disloyalty. It solely has its origin in that policy of Government which has led it to disregard Indian public opinion and be partial to the feringhis. He remarks that it is never statesmanlike to foster discontent, and that to rule in accordance with the wishes of the Indians and not to accord differential treatment to them and to Europeans are the sovereign means of restoring peace in the country and of making the government popular.

4. The Kanauj Punch of the 8th March, referring to the protracted silence of the Amir regarding the Anglo-Russian Convention, suggests the advisability of deputing Sir H. MacMahon or some other diplomatist to explain to him the terms of the treaty, and remove misapprehensions and doubts, if any. KANAUJ PUNCH, 8th March, 1908.

The Amir and the Anglo-Russian Convention.

5. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 10th March, referring to the Anglo-Russian Convention, remarks that, as England has made many sacrifices in order to secure peace on the North-West Frontier of India, it would be prudent now to revise Lord Kitchener's new distribution of forces and to reduce the military expenditure, as the danger of a Russian invasion has been greatly minimised. MASHRIQ, 10th March, 1908.

The Anglo-Russian Convention.

6. The following is an extract from the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 10th March :—We deeply regret to learn from a telegram that fifteen Indians have been arrested by local officials at Vancouver though they had been passed by the Dominion authorities. It alike saddens and exasperates one's heart to hear of such incidents. The poor hard-working and law-abiding Indian is denied the rights of British citizenship within the bounds of the British Empire itself! What a sad spectacle to be seen in the 20th century of Christian civilisation in the dominions of one of the most enlightened Christian Governments! What an outrage upon the rights of the sons of India! Well, it is needless to say what an effect this unjust, cruel and inhuman treatment of their fellow-countrymen is producing upon the minds of Indians! HINDOSTHAN, 10th March, 1908.

Indians in the colonies.

AL-BASHIR, 10th March, 1908.

7. Al-Bashir (Etáwáh), of the 10th March, condemns the attempts that are being made by some Congress papers to incite the Musalmans against the British by publishing accounts of the recent misunderstanding between England and Turkey, and the pressure that was brought to bear upon Turkey by the European Powers in the interests of the Christian subjects of Turkey. The editor quotes an article from the Hindustan (Lahore), on the subject, and remarks that the best thing for the Government to do under such circumstances, is to avoid anything calculated to wound the feelings of its Musalman subjects.

England and Turkey.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th March, 1908.

8. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 12th March, while describing the present difficulties and pitiable condition of Morocco, remarks that, although the degradation of Morocco does not materially affect England, yet, being an old rival, England cannot help exulting at its misfortunes.

State of affairs at Morocco.

The editor then expresses regret at the misfortune and ill-luck of Muhammadans in general and at the mutual dissension of the shias and the sunnis in particular, and points out that disunion is the root of all misfortune.

(b).—Home.

ANAND, 5th March, 1908.

9. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 5th March, referring to the United Provinces Provincial Conference held at Lucknow, says that it was neither more nor less than an assembly for speech-making, and that it showed that the United Provinces leaders still believed in the efficacy of mere words addressed to the authorities.

The Provincial Conference at Lucknow.

Commenting on the Presidential address, the editor considers the diagnosis of the present unrest in India, as made by the President that it was mainly due to repressive policy of Government, to be incorrect, and expresses the opinion that it is fundamentally the outcome of universal poverty in the country. He sees no reason why the President should have urged the appointment of a Commission to inquire into the present unrest, on the ground that the public has lost all confidence in commissions since they serve practically no purpose.

He also remarks that the presence of some leading Muhammadans in the Conference shows that the educated Muhammadans in Lucknow are beginning to apprehend no danger in taking part in political agitations.

ABHYUDAYA, 6th March, 1908.

10. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th March, says that some four days previous to the holding of the Provincial Conference, Mr. Kelkar, editor of the Mahratta, came to Allahabad, and with the aid of some local gentlemen endeavoured to obstruct the work of the Conference during its session. He also went to Lucknow, but he could not succeed in his attempt and the Conference passed off quietly without any disturbance.

The Provincial Conference at Lucknow.

SAWARAJYA, 7th March, 1908.

11. The editor of the Swarajya (Allahabad), in the issue of the 7th March, complains that while he was speaking on the necessity of union between the two parties, at the Lucknow Conference he inadvertently uttered the name of Bipin Chandra Pal, when a barrister at once jumped on to the platform and said that the speech was out of order, with the result that he (the editor) was forced to resume his seat.

The editor of the Swarajya at the Provincial Conference.

SWARAJYA, 7th March, 1908.

12. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 7th March, pronounces the Lucknow Provincial Conference to be a failure, and makes the following comments on its constitution and proceedings, etc. :—

The Provincial Conference at Lucknow.

(1) The Conference did not represent the whole of the Province and not even the whole or the major portion of the educated community. Special care was taken to exclude the Nationalists from its deliberations. Meetings were not held throughout the Province to select delegates for the Conference. Regular protests were made at Aligarh and at Allahabad against this unconstitutional procedure.

(2) The promoters of the Conference did not declare beforehand that the delegates will not have to subscribe to any fixed creed.

(3) Another matter which attracts attention was that all the measures on which the Nationalists lay special stress were carefully left out, which shows that it was a conference of Moderates only.

(4) The choice of the President was not very happy. Pandit Madan Mohan Malavya is certainly a capable man, but, he observes, even a child in this province knows what feelings of love and affection he entertains for the Nationalists. A non-party man ought to have been selected just as in the Pubna Conference.

The editor concludes by saying that the Conference was a failure and consisted merely of 100 or 125 Moderate delegates. The only Nationalist delegate was Mr. Hasrat Mohini of Aligarh.

13. While pointing out that the last Provincial Conference at Lucknow was a tame affair, a correspondent of the Rahbar (Moradabad), in the issue of the 7th March, strongly condemns the conduct of the President and of the so-called leaders of the nation, in stopping Babu Shanti Narayan, the editor of the Swarajya (Allahabad), in the middle of his speech.

RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

The Provincial Conference at Lucknow.

He remarks that the so-called reformers do not care so much for the good of the country, as for their personal interests in obtaining official favour, titles and distinctions.

14. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 7th March, after characterising the Lucknow Conference as a tame affair, and ridiculing the spirit and tone of the resolutions, remarks that the meeting could not be described as a forward movement.

TAFRIH, 7th March, 1908.

The Provincial Conference at Lucknow.

The editor expresses regret that the Conference did not give sufficient attention to swadeshism and that it entirely neglected boycott, and the opinion that the Congress cannot be successful without the extremist element in its leaders.

15. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th March, referring to the Provincial Conference at Lucknow, says that it was convened merely to show off the oratorical powers of the educated Indians, and that its promoters clearly pointed out that they would not care for public opinion but would do what they liked. The editor remarks that, such being the attitude of the leaders towards the people, Government cannot be blamed if it disregards public opinion.

ARYA MITRA, 8th March 1908.

The Provincial Conference at Lucknow.

16. Referring to the speeches delivered on the occasion of the dinner given to Dr. Rutherford in honour of his return to England by Sir W. Wedderburn and others, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th March, remarks that Indians would be very much benefited, if some of their leaders were to go to England and carry on their agitation there at this opportune moment, when Dr. Rutherford, Mr. Nevinson, and others after having made a personal study of Indian affairs on the spot, are attracting the attention of Labourite leaders to India, and make them adopt measures to rouse British public interest in Indian administration.

ABHYUDAYA, 6th March, 1908.

The Indian situation.

The editor suggests that Government would have more facilities for the administration of the country and would be less likely to be misled by the selfish Anglo-Indian papers and officials, if some Home officials, like Mr. Keir Hardie and Dr. Rutherford, were to come to India and personally study the state of affairs in the country. Considering that Mr. Morley refused to pay a visit to India when that question was once mooted in Parliament, the editor says it is vain to expect that others will take any steps in this connection. He remarks that it is extremely dangerous not to care to be acquainted with the real state of affairs in India, as ignorance of the grievances of the people involves estrangement of feelings between them and their rulers. He urges that there is yet time for Mr. Morley to introduce measures to produce contentment among the Indians and to put an end to the ever increasing disturbances which are created only to give trouble to the people, and that mere obstinacy, without providing for their contentment, will never succeed in restoring peace and tranquillity in the country.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th March, 1908.

17. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th March, while pointing out that the English government in India is entirely based on justice and utility, and that the country was not conquered with the sword, expresses astonishment that some English and Anglo-Indian officials hold that the decay of the social life in India is the cause of the present unrest among its people.

The causes of unrest in India.

The editor thinks that the main cause of the existing agitation and unrest in India is, not the decay of its social vitality, but the improper treatment they receive at the hand of the Anglo-Indians, the injustice, prejudice, and the invidious distinctions which the latter make between the blacks and whites.

The chief cause of unrest in India is the imprudent action of such officials as Sir Antony MacDonnell, who always patronised Hindus at the expense of Muhammadans, who are always patient, submissive and sincerely loyal to the Government.

He then criticises Mr. Keir Hardie's views on the state of affairs in India as one-sided, and not based on thorough enquiries from all classes, ranks and communities, and in conclusion he expresses a hope that the members of the Decentralisation Commission will not fall into a similar blunder, but that they will make thorough enquiries regarding the relative position of the Hindu and Muhammadan communities in this country.

RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

18. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, remarks that, notwithstanding the recognised fact that India is the poorest of all the countries on the face of the earth, it had to pay in 1906, (and will always have to pay), besides two lakhs and fifty thousand for salaries, a big sum of ten lakhs for touring charges and other expenses, to the highest official in the country, the Viceroy.

India's poverty and expenses of touring.

This latter item was, he notes, only seven lakhs in 1904, but it rose to eleven lakhs and fifty thousand in 1906.

The editor further remarks :—

"It is not all, (the country) has to lavish money also for other expenses of the Viceroy ; and not for the Viceroy alone, because the door of the treasury is open to meet the various lawful and unlawful expenditure of all high functionaries.

Under these circumstances can it ever be wondered that India is always suffering from famines ? Can any other country in the world, however rich its resources may be, show a better regard for or hospitality towards its rulers ? But this too is certain that, by the time India grows rich, there will not also remain this state of affairs (lit. cause, i.e. hospitality) of which it is so proud(!)."

NASIM-I-AGRA, 11th March, 1908.

19. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 11th March, points out that the main cause of India's poverty is that the rich people and the princes do not employ their money for useful purposes, either burying it underground or else depositing it in Government securities.

The poverty of India.

The editor advises his countrymen instead of hoarding their money or converting it into ornaments, to invest it in establishing factories, which will afford a means of honest living to many of their poor countrymen.

BHARAT JIWAN, 9th March, 1908.

20. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 9th March, contains the following :—

The Decentralisation Commission.

"Raja Rampal Singh of Kalakankar, editor of the Hindosthan in his evidence before the Decentralisation Commission stated that high placed Government officials in this country generally order respectable Indians to come to them after having alighted from their carriages outside their bungalows, i.e. they are not allowed to drive up to the portico of the bungalow. The Raja has stated the absolute truth."

ADVOCATE, 12th March, 1908.

21. Commenting on Mr. Gokhale's evidence before the Decentralisation Committee, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of 12th March remarks that, before any decentralisation scheme can be brought into play, three primary conditions must be satisfied, these are, firstly the appointment of a Governor direct from England for each province, a fresh and unprejudiced mind being essential to deal satisfactorily with the problems of Indian administration; secondly the discussion of provincial budgets in the legislative assemblies, and thirdly the holding of a meeting of the Legislative Council whenever a certain number of the members, not less than one-third, call for it.

The Decentralisation Commission.

The Decentralisation Commission.

22. Referring to the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malavya's evidence before the Decentralisation Committee, the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) in the issue of 12th March, advocates that supreme power should be given to the Viceroy or full powers to Local Governments. The half and half administrative system at present in vogue is, he thinks, most objectionable. He urges that a Viceroy or Royal Prince be appointed to administer the affairs of India with complete independence of Whitehall.

HINDOSTHAN, 12th March, 1908.

The present national outlook.

23. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 3rd March, remarks that the national outlook in India had become very gloomy after the Surat Congress fiasco, and it was apprehended that the differences caused among the leaders by that event would not be settled except with the greatest difficulty, and that this was sure to stand in the way of the country's progress. But the quiet termination, the editor notes, of the Pubna Conference and of the United Provinces Conference have dispelled these fears, and the harmonious manner in which proceedings were conducted in them show that the leaders are rising above party feelings, and realising the importance of working in unison for the national cause, which are signs that betoken well for the future progress of the country.

MOHINI, 3rd March, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai's speech on National Education in Lucknow.

24. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 12th March, gives the following brief notes on the speech on National education delivered by Lala Lajpat Rai at Lucknow without making any comments :—

HIND, 12th March, 1908.

(1) Religion and politics. Contrary to the general opinion, Lala Lajpat Rai is very much averse to sacrificing religion on behalf of politics.

Religion teaches high and sublime principles of conduct and morality, it protects people from falling into the snares of the missionaries of Christianity and other religions, and that, if India could have Swaraj at the expense of its religion he would be the first man to refuse it.

(2) Dissension between Hindus and Muhammadans.

He said that the chief cause of all quarrel, disagreement and dissensions between the two communities was the present system of education in vogue in our schools and colleges, and that the text books in history were such that they help to encourage discord between the communities.

(3) Insolence in students.

After describing how in ancient times Indian pupils used to respect their teachers as much as their parents, he said that the disrespect shown by students to their teachers is the direct result of the existing system of education in the country.

He remarked that it was strange that students are dissatisfied with their teachers, teachers with their pupils, and the people with the system of education now in vogue in the country.

(4) The objects of education.

He remarked that the ideal of education in India is very low at present, that Indians only aspire to obtain service which is but another form of slavery, and that they need such education as teaches and befits them for the service of their family, nation and country—an education that will promote arts and industries in India.

(5) Obligations on Indians.

He said that according to the Hindu religion every Hindu is born to perform, some actions which are obligatory on him, and which, if not performed will bring on him disgrace in this world and make him sinful in the eyes of God.

These obligations are to his ancestors, the nation, the community and to the country at large.

He said that what India required most is the realisation of these duties and obligations by its people, and that if they are perfectly recognised, India will be able to raise itself to the highest pinnacle of glory and to accomplish her destiny.

SWARAJYA, 7th March, 1908.

Want of sympathy on the part of Indian officials.

25. A correspondent of the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 7th March, relates the story of the wolf and the pet dog from Æsop's Fables and says that it is exactly applicable to present-day Indian politics. A man in the Government service may get a good salary, may live in ease and comfort and may be respected and feared by others, but he has the badge of slavery round his neck. Will it not be better, he says, for young Indians to devote their attention to trades and industries, instead of wasting their health in close study in the hope of getting a post under the Government. Education cannot have any tangible and substantial result, when its sole aim is Government service. The writer notes with regret that even when Indians are fortunate enough to get into Government service, they do not work in the best interests of the people, but that in order to please their superiors they are harsh and uncharitable to the people they govern.

It is, he says, a notorious fact that the people of this country suffer more from the petty tyranny of the Indian officials than from the unsympathetic rule of the English. It is this oppression and poverty which make the people discontented. He asks Government to try to root out bribery and corruption of which its lower officials are generally guilty, where there would be no discontent in the country. The system of village punchayets should be revived and the swadeshi movement encouraged.

RAHBAR, 7th March, 1901.

Indians and Europeans.

26. Referring to the death of Lieutenant Watson from the injuries he received in an encounter with his saises, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, remarks :—"Our brave white men must know that it is not the time now that Indians will silently submit to their blows, and that they should therefore take care not to treat them so rudely."

RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

Muhammadans and Government.

27. Alluding to the threats levelled at the Government by the Observer (Lahore) on the appointment of two Hindus and only one Muhammadan as members in the Legislative Council of the Panjab, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, points out that these remarks of the Observer show that the Muhammadans are not sincerely loyal to the Government, that it was to serve their own interests that they did not take any active part in the late disturbances in the country and that they will not hesitate to rise against the Government if they see that the interests of their community suffer or are neglected by the Government in the least.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th March, 1908.

India's wants.

28. While expressing regret at the disregard and negligence of Indians in the matter of the swadeshi and boycott movements, the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th March, remarks that at first the English were very much afraid that these movements would prove a fatal blow to English trade in India, but that now they are reassured that Indians are too poor to carry on these movements successfully.

The editor thinks that if all the repressive measures taken by the Government, the prosecution of the Press, the deportation of Lala Lajpat Rai, the insolent speeches of Ajit Singh, have not yet awakened Indians to a sense of their duty, and to the apprehension of the danger they are running, it is entirely hopeless that they will ever effect any useful reforms.

He agrees with Mrs. Annie Besant that the main cause of India's misfortune and indigence is the want of higher education in arts and industry among its people, and in conclusion he exhorts his countrymen that, until higher education in India is more complete and sufficient to provide Indians with their necessities all their efforts in politics will be useless and premature.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th March, 1908.

The Rohilkhand Gazette versus the Amrit Bazar Patrika.

29. The Rohilkhand Gazette Bareilly of the 8th March strongly criticises certain portions of an article of the Amrit-Bazar Patrika as briefly noted below :—

(1) Only a few days ago, the editor of the Amrit Bazar Patrika called himself a patron and wellwisher of the whole country, but now he has openly shown that he is partial to his co-religionists and that he is prejudiced in his constant attacks on other communities.

We need not describe the insolent language in which he speaks about Englishmen in general, nor need we say to what extent his imprudent conduct has encouraged Bengal journalists to imbibe his spirit.

We simply mean to show that his conduct has wrought a complete revolution in the world of journalism, which makes the English public laugh in their sleeves at the fantastic views of Indian journalists.

He is entirely blinded with prejudice and raves against Englishmen and Muhammadans.

(2) Regarding his remarks on the present policy of British rule in India, the editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette says that although he is not entirely in favour of the repressive measures lately taken by the Government or the Seditious Meetings Act, yet it would be attributed to an undue influence of the spirit of nationalism if we ignore the various blessings of the British Government and criticise these actions which are regarded political necessities. His remarks against the Muhammadans are the pure and simple outcome of his prejudiced opinion and he knows that the Government is at present against the Hindus. But his mean remarks cannot efface the brilliant services that the Muhammadans have rendered the Government.

Referring to the remarks of the Amrit Bazar Patrika that the passing of the repression laws lowers the prestige of the Government in the eyes of the people and to its remarks regarding Lord Curzon, the Rohilkhand Gazette says that it is all the more strange that the Patrika has now come to sing indirectly the praises of Lord Curzon whom, when he was a Viceroy in India, he never hesitated to condemn in the strongest language possible. It is a true saying that the value of a thing is known only when it is lost.

Regarding the Patrika's views on the Government of Lord Minto, the Rohilkhand Gazette says that although harsh laws are always injurious yet the present harshness of the Government has been directly engendered and necessitated by the outrageous conduct of the people who ought to be ashamed of their actions.

30. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 10th March, publishes a letter from a correspondent discussing the causes of the misunderstandings and the growing tension of feeling between the Hindus and Musalmans, and attributes them to the Arya Samaj and to the selfishness of the Hindus. He says that two things are necessary for union between two nationalities—language and religion. In Northern India at least they had one common language, though Pandit Madan Mohan Malavya and Lala Munshi Ram have tried their best to ruin Urdu. As to religion the Arya has, ever since that religion came into existence, attacked the religious principles of the Musalmans very bitterly and has always reviled their leaders. In the partition of Bengal too, the Hindu Bengalis were opposed to the partition, only because it afforded some relief to the Musalmans of that province. The treatment that is being meted out to the Musalmans in that province is hardly just and is sure to give offence to Musalmans in other provinces also.

Hindus and Musalmans.

AL-BASHIR, 10th March, 1908.

The writer expresses a hope that in the distant future Hindus and Musalmans may forget their mutual animosity and may live peacefully together, but fears that there is no hope of an understanding between Musalmans and Arya Samajists, as hatred to Islam is deep-rooted in the latter and as they have taken every opportunity to wound the feelings of the Musalmans.

31. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 11th March, referring to the growing feeling of patriotism in India, remarks that the Indian patriots do not want to overthrow British rule in India, but simply want their countrymen to be prosperous and happy, and to have a certain share in the government of the country. A policy of conciliation on the part of Government would be highly politic at present and would win over to its side the educated class.

Indian patriotism.

OUDH AKHBAR, 11th March, 1908.

32. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 13th March, referring to the noble efforts of Sir Henry Cotton, Dr. Rutherford and Mr. Nevinson in England, for the better administration of India, says that formerly there were no members of Parliament on whom Indians could count for assistance in the acquisition of their rights and privileges. The greatness of the English is the outcome of their patriotism and feelings of nationality, but in India the editor notes it is quite the reverse, for the simple reason that Indians have no similar regard for their mother country. The reason for this is not far to seek. In India education is defective and fear and flattery are obstacles in the way of demanding political and national rights. He therefore advises Indians to educate themselves properly and learn how to make a united demand for their rights and so strengthen the hands of that party in England that has taken upon itself the task and responsibility of supporting and furthering the cause of India.

India and Parliament.

OUDH AKHBAR, 13th March, 1908.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

HINDOSTHAN, 7th March, 1908.

The Zakka-Khel Expedition.

33. The editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), in the editorial notes of the 7th March, referring to the end of the Zakka Khel expedition says "that the King-Emperor has graciously telegraphed his congratulations to General Willcocks, but whether we have also heard the end of Zakka-Khel troubles remains to be seen."

"On the whole the Zakkas have had the best of the game all through, and the hasty withdrawal of troops, moreover, from the Bazar Valley may be represented by mischievous Mullas as a sign of cowardice."

The editor deplores the weakness of the action taken by the Government in dealing with the turbulent spirits in the Bazar Valley, for the snake there has only been scorched and not killed.

The Government will have none but themselves to blame if depredations become unusually frequent before many months are past. The reason of this is not understood, but the British authorities have always been the dupes of Afghan tricks.

In conclusion he says :—"May we ask in the name of Indian tax-payer why Afridi Maliks continue to be paid extravagant stipends if they cannot keep in check the lawless spirits of their brethren? Why is Indian money spent like water if Indian blood as well has ultimately to flow like water to secure the peace of the frontier? The dumb voiceless famine-stricken millions of India are made to pay huge sums of money on constantly recurring expeditions, the Indian exchequer is groaning under a crushing burden of military expenditure, and yet these expeditions return without finishing their task with anything like thoroughness or effectiveness. The Indian tax-payer has a right to ask why the Zakkas have not been properly punished."

ZUL-QARNAIN, 7th March, 1908.

The Zakka-Khel Expedition.

34. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th March, referring to the return of the Zakka-Khel expedition, remarks that it is doubtful if the frontier tribes will keep the peace for a long time, and fears that their depredations will begin afresh very soon.

HINDOSTHAN, 12th March, 1908.

Afridis in Peshawar.

35. Referring to the recent Afridi disturbance near Peshawar, the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 12th March, remarks that Government should deal suitably with the offenders. The offence, the editor thinks, was a dacoity and should be treated as such. Afridis, he urges, should be forbidden to cross the border, and subsidies given to any of the Afridis concerned should be stopped.

ADVOCATE, 12th March, 1908.

Hindus in the Frontier Province.

36. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 12th March, gives an extract from the Punjabee to the effect that the greatest insecurity prevails on the frontiers; the editor hopes that the police will awake to a proper sense of their duties, and suggests that all loyal frontier dwellers should be armed.

III.—Native States.

Nil.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

37. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th March, expresses its surprise that Government should still be in doubt whether the separation of judicial and executive functions will be a measure that will alike make for good government and justice, and remarks that had this been not the case, the measure would not have been proposed to be introduced only tentatively and that too in certain districts of Assam and Bengal. The editor points out that it is a remarkable fact that Government takes years in considering and discussing a popular reform, while it takes no time in introducing a reform it has set its heart upon, and adduces in support of his contention that the partition of Bengal, being a government measure, was carried out very speedily, though it was in utter disregard of public opinion, whereas the measure for the separation of judicial and executive functions, which is calculated to produce all good and no evil, and for which the people have been constantly urging, is proposed after lapse of years, to be introduced as an experimental measure. He remarks that in view of the fact that the majority of Government officials are opposed to this measure, one naturally entertains doubt about the success of the experiment, which depends upon the favourable report or otherwise of these very officials. He agrees with his Anglo-Indian contemporary, the Empire, as to the desirability of the public carefully watching the experiment, and at once opposing any attempts that may be made through self-interest to render the experiment a failure.

Separation of the Judicial and Executive functions.

ABHYUDAYA, 6th March, 1908.

38. Referring to the proposed separation of the judicial and executive functions, the Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 7th March, expresses doubt as to whether the functions are really to be separated, and remarks that if there was any Province that really stood in need of this separation, it was that of Eastern Bengal and Assam, where the imprudent conduct of certain officials has past all bounds and required immediate correction.

Separation of the Judicial and Executive functions.

TAFRIH, 7th March, 1908.

39. Referring to the proposed separation of the judicial and executive functions in Eastern Bengal and Assam, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, remarks that Government does not appear to be satisfied as yet that the separation of these functions will be useful.

Separation of the Judicial and Executive functions.

RAHBAR, 7th March, 1903.

The editor then remarks:—"Has it ever been or can it be injurious to the people? But the fact is that the Government always seeks its own good and if the separation of these fuuctions in any way exercises any check on the actions of its self-willed officers, then be sure it will never be inaugurated and enforced?

"If we are really anxious to have a separation of these functions, we can do it very easily by boycotting the courts. But will this movement be welcomed by the members of the Bar in this country!

"Brothers! You should never hope for progress, until you learn to sacrifice your private and personal interests for the good of the public."

40. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) of the 8th March, while reproducing the views of the Pioneer, on the Commission for the separation of the executive and judicial functions remarks that the press in India was very impatient for this, and, though late yet after all the Birtish Government did not neglect to look into the matter.

Separation of the Judicial and Executive functions.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 8th March, 1908.

41. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 7th March, referring to the sentence of whipping passed on a Musalman boy for entering the Calcutta Mint without permission, remarks that there ought to have been a notice on the gate of the Mint, refusing admission to outsiders, and that had the boy been a European he would not have been punished thus.

Trespassing in the Calcutta Mint.

SWARAJYA, 7th March, 1908.

42. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 8th March, notes with approval the satisfactory change that the courts in Eastern Bengal have undergone in their attitude towards swadeshi workers. Magistrates, he states, used to disbelieve the evidence of the people, and accept police reports as gospel truth. But this state of affairs, he notes, is changing. In support of his contention he refers to two cases, instigated against some youthful swadeshi promoters at Madaripur and Barisal.

Courts of Eastern Bengal.

ADVOCATE, 8th March, 1908.

In both these cases he states the accused were discharged though the evidence at first sight seemed overwhelming. This he trusts is the beginning of the end of the officially promoted campaign against swadeshism.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 8th March, 1908.

Muzaffarnagar Civil Courts.

43. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 8th March, states that it has been practically decided to appoint a Subordinate Judge at Muzaffarnagar, but that it has not yet been settled whether the additional District and Sessions Judge for Muzaffarnagar is to remain at Meerut or at Saharanpur. The general opinion of the residents of the Muzaffarnagar district, he thinks, favours Saharanpur. He argues that the Sessions Judge of Saharanpur is at present overworked, and that it would be very unfair not to give him the benefit of the Muzaffarnagar additional Sessions Judge's help, when it might be conveniently and economically done.

OUDH AKHBAR, 12th March, 1908.

Political offenders.

44. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th March, referring to the honours that have been heaped on political offenders such as Lala Lajpat Rai and Babu Bipin Chandar Pal, remarks that imprisonment is regarded now more as an honour than as a disgrace.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th March, 1908.

The cow-killing case at Allahabad.

45. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) in the issue of the 12th March expresses his approval of the judgment delivered by the Joint Magistrate, Allahabad, in the recent cow-killing case that came before him. He notes that the sacrifice of cattle in the house in question was a new departure and was bound to offend devout Hindus as the house is situated near one of their sacred shrines. He thinks that permission for the sacrifice should never have been granted, and trusts that the authorities will see that for the future Muhammadans will not be allowed to perform sacrifices at places that are sacred to Hindus. In conclusion he remarks that the action of the police in the matter was highly suspicious, and trusts that suitable notice will be taken of their conduct.

CITIZEN, 12th March, 1908.

The cow-killing case at Allahabad.

46. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 12th March, expresses its astonishment at the statement made by Inspector Anwar Ali before Mr. Moore in connection with the recent Bakrid disturbances. According to the Citizen, the Inspector stated that sacrifices had regularly been made for the last eighteen years in the house at present occupied by Chottu and Maula, where, on the occasion of a sacrifice this year, a riot took place. In support of his statement, the editor of the Citizen says that the Inspector produced some police papers of 1895 showing that a man, Dain, a relation of Chottu's, performed a sacrifice in his house that year. But, he remarks, the Inspector could not prove that Chottu's house was the one occupied by Dain. The Joint Magistrate accordingly, he says, was forced to disregard the Inspector's evidence. The editor in conclusion remarks that the whole thing reflects very badly on the police who by a little foresight might easily have prevented any disturbance.

(b).—Police.

RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

Police oppression in India.

47. Referring to various cases of serious dacoity in the Punjab in which the police entirely failed to get a clue and to the various troubles in which Babu Ras Bihari of village Murhu (Madhepura-Bhagalpur) has been involved by the police, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March points out with deep regret that the chief cause of Babu Ras Bihari's troubles is his straightforwardness, unyielding nature and the displeasure of the officials, which he incurred by refusing to give two bighas of land for the site of a library.

The editor further remarks:—"It is all the more to be regretted that we neither possess nor care to possess the power of protecting ourselves by our own efforts. If we can but muster up courage to protect ourselves against those who are unarmed, as we easily can do, it will require but a short time to find out means to withstand those also who are armed.

Our countrymen should now be assured that the field will be theirs."

48. Referring to the troubles in which Diwan Chand of Rawalpindi has been involved by the police, for having complained against Sub-Inspector Karamat Ali, for abusing him while enquiring into a case of theft committed in his house, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th March, refers to similar cases of police oppression and high-handedness, recently committed in Allahabad, Rawalpindi and Umbala. The editor remarks that it is very unfortunate that the police force, which ought to be a means of protection for the people, has become a source of inexplicable troubles and high-handedness.

Police oppression.

MUSAFIR, 8th March, 1908.

49. The Citizen's (Allahabad), correspondent at Jubbulpur writes in the issue of the 8th March, that an extraordinary case has just come to light in which the Jubbulpur police have been guilty of attempting to extort money in a most flagrant manner. Two men, it appears were sent up for trial charged with cheating, but the complainant in the case stated in court that no offence had been committed. The case, he said, was got up by the police as these two individuals had not paid them various sums of money that they had demanded. According to the Citizen cerrespondent the accused were discharged and sanction has been obtained for the prosecution of the police officers concerned.

The Jubbulpur police.

CITIZEN, 8th March, 1908.

50. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th March, remarks :—"It is to be regretted that the Government has cancelled the rules for enrolling graduates direct as Deputy Superintendents of Police.

The Government is requested to kindly revive the old rules."

Direct appointments as Deputy Superintendents of Police.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 12th March, 1908.

51. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 12th of March, regrets the transfer of the police station from Dhumanganj to Puramufti in the Allahabad district. The circle, he thinks, is now too large, some villages being ten or twelve miles from the thana. The result, he states, is that when a crime occurs in a distant village, the Thanadar does not turn up for two or three days. He mentions a case that occurred in Korada in which a man was wounded in a riot but could not be removed to have his wounds dressed till the third day as the Thanadar was unable to come and interview him earlier. Another disastrous result of the transfer of the police station is, he thinks, the distance some village chaukidars have to go to make their weekly report at the thana. They are, he states, some times four days away from their villages, and in their absence there is no one to guard the village community.

Change of police stations in the Allahabad district.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th March, 1908.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

52. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 7th March, comparing the procedure of the Allahabad and the Agra Municipalities, remarks that "the Agra Municipality by means of distress warrants is recovering water tax arrears that have not been collected for years through the carelessness of municipal officials. Sometimes taxes already paid are recovered a second time (?). The Chairman seems to be silent, so the higher authorities should very soon turn their attention to this."

The Agra Municipality.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 7th March, 1908.

53. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 11th March, writes that on the 3rd March a meeting of the leading merchants and some respectable citizens of Agra was held to protest against the octroi tax which was proving extremely injurious to the trade of the city and also against the severity with which this tax was realised. Resolutions were passed for sending a telegram to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor and for the formation of a "Trades Association" to carry on an agitation against the tax.

Octroi tax in the Agra Municipality.

HINDUSTANI, 11th March, 1908.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th March, 1908.

The Cawnpore Municipality.

54. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th March, publishes an exhortation to the people of Cawnpore to take special care to select only able and competent men to be members of their municipality and not to let friendship or relationship influence them in their votes.

The editor notes with satisfaction that a meeting was held in Cawnpore to protest against certain corrupt practices in municipal affairs, of which the Lieutenant-Governor and the Commissioner of the division have been informed.

(e).—Education.

EXPRESS, 5th March, 1908.

The Bengal National College.

55. The Express (Lucknow), of the 5th March, referring to the progress made by the Bengal National College, remarks that it fails to understand why that College is called "National" and why the instruction imparted in it is said to be on "National" lines, as the same education is imparted in Government technical schools also. Finally the editor asks why instruction is imparted at the College in English and not in Bengali.

ABHYUDAYA, 6th March, 1908.

Political education of the masses.

56. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th March, contains a letter to the editor in which the writer suggests the establishment of libraries and reading rooms in every village and town and the appointment of itinerant teachers for enlightening the people as to their past history and their present position so as to enable them to realise their degradation from the status of an independent nation to their present state of bondage, and to devise ways and means to ameliorate the condition of their mother land.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 7th March, 1908.

Higher education.

57. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 7th March discussing the question of higher education, remarks that highly educated men are expected to take the lead in all questions affecting the wellbeing of the community and to guide their fellows out of difficulties and complications. This idea has been realised in European countries, but in India hopes have so far been disappointed.

The Surat Congress proves conclusively that the leading men of India are not educated in the proper sense of the word, and require some further training before they can take a leading part in their country's politics.

MUSAFIR, 8th March, 1908.

The object of education.

58. While pointing out the difficulties and servitude undergone in service, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th March, notes with regret that Indians unfortunately are so much attracted by the charms of Government service that they educate their children with the sole object of enabling them to obtain an appointment or to qualify themselves for the Bar which has already become overcrowded.

The editor advises his countrymen that it will be much more beneficial to themselves and to their country if instead of wasting away their knowledge and youthful energies in seeking after service, they use them in improving the agricultural state or the arts and industries of the country, which will be both remunerative and a means of honest and independent living.

CITIZEN, 8th March, 1908.

The Principal of the Muir Central College and the students.

59. Referring to the rustication of Manzar Ali Sokhta from the Muir Central College and the permission granted by Mr. Jennings to students of the college to attend Lala Lajpat Rai's non-political lectures only, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad) in the issue of the 8th March appeals to the Lieutenant Governor to remove the prejudices that are a disgrace to the Educational department.

OUDH AKHBAR, 10th March, 1908.

Industrial education.

60. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 10th March, notes with satisfaction the opening of an Industrial School in Bara Banki, and hopes that such schools will be established in other districts of the Provinces also.

AL-BASHIR, 10th March, 1908.

School tournaments.

61. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 10th March, complains that no proper arrangements are made for the boarding and lodging of students attending the Inter-School Tournaments. No charpoys are provided and the boys have to sleep on straw bedding. It would, the editor believes, give universal satisfaction if something were done to remove these evils. Another source of complaint is that the headmaster who is the Superintendent of the Tournament, is generally partial to his boys, so that it would be advisable, he thinks, to form a committee of headmasters with the Inspector of the circle as Chairman. This would lead to the exchange of ideas between teachers, and they could talk over educational matters and give useful advise to the students assembled at the tournament.

Educational reforms.

62. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 10th March, notes with satisfaction the changes that are about to be made in the curriculum of the schools and in the pay and prospects of the teachers. MASHRIQ, 10th March, 1908.

Rustication of Manzar Ali from the Muir Central College.

63. Referring to the rustication of Manzar Ali, an M. A. Class student, for six months, by Mr. Jennings, Principal of the Muir Central College, Allahabad, the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 10th March, notes with regret that 'the department that was expected to show the highway to truth and independence, is now itself putting obstacles in the way.' SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 10th March, 1908.

Independence is the vital spark of a civilised Government, and the lesson of independence has been taught by the English Government. But it is to be regretted that now its officials are trying by all lawful and unlawful means to suppress the spirit of freedom and independence.

Cramming system in schools.

64. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th, March expresses his approval of Mr. J. C. Goodley's condemnation of the cramming system in vogue in schools at the present day. He differs from him, however, in attributing the evil to the division of subjects among different teachers, and thinks that obsolete methods of teaching are much more responsible for the pernicious system. ADVOCATE, 12th March, 1908.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

The Unao Town Bank.

65. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th March, while describing in detail the methods and principles on which the Unao Town Bank has been started, notes with gratification the success and popularity of the movement, and expresses the hope that similar banks will also be started in other places, which will be very useful to the agricultural classes. ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th March, 1908.

Grievances of agriculturists in the United Provinces.

66. A correspondent in the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 11th March, puts forward the following grievances of the agricultural classes of these Provinces:— HINDUSTANI, 11th March, 1908.

(1) The Tenancy Act has been a source of great mischief. It has given birth to hundreds of cases, ruining both the zamindars and tenants by constant litigation.

(2) Inexperienced civilians are appointed as settlement officers, and inspect a hundred villages in a day. They assess rents so quickly that they leave much misunderstanding behind them.

(3) Famine relief works are not of permanent value. Instead of repairing old roads or constructing new ones, it would be wiser to spend the money on sinking wells or laying out canals.

(4) The zamindars are in a very pitiable condition. During the famine they cannot recover rents from their tenants, and the Government does not help them in any way.

(5) With reference to the working of the District and Municipal Boards, the Collector is almost invariably the Chairman of these boards, and no one can go against his will. Before the members have any opportunity to discuss the question at issue the Collector gives his own opinion and the members are obliged to say, "Yes, huzur" through fear, otherwise the Collector will be displeased with him. The result is that the members do not tell the truth. If a man is very bold, and expresses himself freely he is sure to be scolded by the Chairman. Officers have made it a principle to look down upon Indians. If the officers are good, the people will be good.

The writer concludes by saying that unless there is sympathy between the rulers and the ruled, Government work cannot be carried on harmoniously.

(g).—General.

RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

The success of the swadeshi movement in Bengal.

67. Referring to the regret expressed by the Capital on the success of the swadeshi movement in Bengal and on the blow it dealt English trade, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, expresses its gratification at the promising success achieved by the movement in Bengal.

The editor deplores the entire disregard and negligence shown in this matter by the people of the United Provinces and remarks:—

"Do not those persons who catch the skirts of their rising brethren and pull them down, deserve capital punishment?

If they do, then the people of the United Provinces in general, and the leaders in particular, must be prepared for death.

Is it not disgraceful for the leaders of our Province to sit side by side with those of Bengal?

Brothers! it is time now to gain respect in the eyes of our countrymen, for deception cannot be practised for any length of time!"

SWARAJYA, 7th March, 1908.

Government and the swadeshi movement.

68. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 7th March, referring to the statement made by the Deputy Commissioner of Hissar to the students of the Government school, to the effect that the Government encouraged the swadeshi movement and that it would grant local-self government to Indians whenever they qualified themselves for it, remarks that had there been many more English officers of this type, there would have been no ill-feeling between the rulers and the ruled.

SUNDER SHRINGAR, 7th March, 1908.

A swadeshi poem.

69. One Radha Krishna Bhargava contributes a poem to the Sunder Shringar (Muttra), of the 7th March, in which he deplores the speedy impoverishment of India at the hand of its own people who, through their love for foreign-made articles, have reduced her to a state of utter subjection to foreign countries. He regrets that Indians, resting in a deep slumber have let foreigners encompass their ruin and plant their own flag here, and calls upon his countrymen to awake and ameliorate their condition while there is yet time to do so.

OUDH AKHBAR, 11th March, 1908.

Swadeshi sugar.

70. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 11th March, referring to the question of the larger consumption of swadeshi sugar in India, remarks, that it was at one time thought that as the foreign sugar is composed of some ingredients the use of which is forbidden by the Hindu religion, the people would cease to use it, if they were informed of this. But religion has lost its hold on the people, and swadeshi sugar cannot be largely used, unless it is made and sold cheaper.

HIND, 12th March, 1908.

The Swadeshi movement.

71. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 12th March, writes that the origin of the ideas of swadeshism has been the cause of the manufacture of matches, candles, cloth, pens, pencils and various other articles of use.

The editor then sarcastically points out that a European wine merchant of Calcutta has prepared swadeshi whisky, while the American Cigarette Company of Karachi has manufactured swadeshi cigarettes; and Mr. Bose's Circus, in Calcutta has hired an Indian Comic actor, (Uhand) as a clown.

In conclusion he remarks:—

"Do not these facts show that the word swadeshi has been applied to such things simply to serve one's own purpose and that the swadeshi movement has been looked upon as a means of money-making. Alas, Doms (menial classes) also have a desire to profit by this movement.

HIND, 12th March, 1908.

Government and the swadeshi movement.

72. Referring to the Under Secretary's letter to the editors of the Citizen (Allahabad), and the Hind (Lucknow), in refutation of the news published by them that the Government had asked the Registrar for a list of the names of all such Government servants as have bought shares in the Swadeshi Cloth Mill, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 12th March, writes:—"We thank the Under Secretary for informing us that the news which has created pain and misunderstanding is false. Had it not been so merchants who deal in swadeshi articles, would have been much perturbed at the idea that Government regards them with suspicion on account of their commercial transactions.

The Etawah conspiracy.

73. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 10th March, commenting on the continual references that are being made by the Amrit Bazar Patrika and other Hindu papers to the Etawah incident, remarks that it is highly mischievous on their part to revive an old controversy and to revile innocent persons like Amanatullah Khan, Kotwal of Etawah. AL-BASHIR, 10th March, 1908.

The Etawah conspiracy.

74. Referring to the petition recently filed by some of the victims of the Etawah conspiracy case, the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th March, attributes to Mr. Stracey, District Magisrate, Etawah, a statement to the effect that official intrigue was responsible for the whole incident. This being so, the editor claims that Government should bring the official culprits to book. The magistrate, he states, informed the petitioners that they were wrong in assuming that there were other persons behind Khalil. If this is the case, the editor considers that Government should publish their confidential file on the subject, as the Criminal Investigation Department failed to give particulars of the officials concerned. CITIZEN, 12th March, 1908.

Prosecution of printers of newspapers.

75. The Express (Lucknow), of the 5th March, expresses its sympathy with the poor printers who are punished for printing seditious articles, as they are too ignorant to understand their contents. EXPRESS, 5th March, 1908.

The editor thinks that the punishment should properly fall on the editor or the writer of the article and not on the poor ignorant printer.

Prosecution of journalists.

76. The Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 7th March, referring to the sentences of imprisonment passed on Calcutta journalists, remarks that in some countries even regicides are pardoned whilst in India journalists are punished for speaking the truth and encouraging the swadeshi movement. Such oppression does not strengthen the foundations of an empire, but weakens it. It can be made strong if the people are ruled justly and equitably. SWARAJYA, 7th March, 1908.

The present policy of the Eastern Bengal Government.

77. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th March, remarks that since the Partition of Bengal, the idea which has mostly occupied the attention of the Government of the new province, is not the well being and prosperity of the people, but the suppression of the swadeshi movement and the punishment of the opponents of the partition. Unfortunately it is the poor students who have mostly suffered from this policy of Government and thousands of them have already been sent to jail. The editor suggests that if Gove nment is really anxious to carry out its intentions completely, it should at once abolish all schools and colleges and then natives would be obliged to buy English articles and cease sympathising with the swadeshi movement and the Partition. RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

In conclusion he points out to Government that its present policy has been greatly strengthening and stimulating the National University movement and that all its repressive measures in this direction have proved an unexpected blessing to the cause of National education.

Departure of Mr. Clarke from Mymensingh.

78. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th March, ridicules the quiet and private departure of Mr. Clarke from Mymensingh at night escorted by a strong armed police guard to the railway station where arrangements had al eady been made to protect him. RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

The editor characterises this mysterious departure as the grossest cowardice ever displayed in a country which has now been utterly deprived of its arms by the Government, and has been turned into a home of effeminate and cowardly people.

In conclusion he observes (apparently addressing Government): "Oh Sir!" Thy poison eats away the heart! It is thou that makest jackals of a lion's cubs. Is it not all through thee that a magistrate, an English lion, a powerful official who could cause wailings and lamentations in every house, sneaked away in cowardly silence."

RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

The conviction of a clerk of Ralli Brothers firm for theft.

79. Alluding to the conviction of Babu Beni Madho Bose, a clerk in the employment of Ralli Brothers at Calcutta, for stealing three seers of rice when hard pressed with hunger, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th March, sarcastically asks Indians if they still feel a desire or have any inclination for service.

The editor deplores the miserable condition and sufferings of the clerk and remarks that if this unfortunate man had been in the employment of an Indian firm he would never have brought himself to such a plight.

In conclusion he writes:—"We are the darlings of our foreign rulers only so long as we try to rob or cut the throats of our own brethren to afford them our gold and silver! We should accordingly never expect to get from them even in the time of utmost need anything more than what will just suffice to help us to live from hand to mouth (lit. counted morsels of bread and measured quantities of broth)."

SWARAJYA, 7th March, 1908.

Sportsmen and shooting accidents.

80. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 7th March, referring to the wounding of an ahir boy by a Eurasian sportman named Wallington at Chunar, remarks that Government should make a special law to deal with such outrages.

MUSAFIR, 8th March, 1908.

The Allahabad shooting case.

81. Referring to the shooting of an ahir boy that recently happened in Allahabad, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th March, remarks that if no provision is made to protect the lives of Indians from such serious accidents at the hands of Europeans, even during Sir J. Hewett's period of office, then there can be no remedy for such accidents.

ADVOCATE, 8th March, 1908.

Mr. Nevinson's departure from India.

82. Referring to the departure of Mr. Henry W. Nevinson from India, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 8th March, remarks:—

Before Mr. Nevinson came out to India, he could not believe that Englishmen, who talk so much of fair play at home, could be so blinded by race prejudice when they act as judges, magistrates or jurymen in India.

The vulgarities of behaviour on the part of the ruling race are, according to him, a standing menace to the good name of Pax Britannica. To Indians his advice is to resist vulgarity and refuse to bow to arrogance; every time to strike insolence full in the face, manfully disregarding the cost. When that is done, something at least is gained for both races.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 8th March, 1908.

National volunteers.

83. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 8th March, urges the young men of India to emulate the young Bengalis who formed themselves into bands to assist pilgrims at the Ardhodaya and Sivaratri fairs. This, he considers, one of the surest methods of acquiring that organisation, discipline, devotion and self-sacrifice so essential to the welfare of the country. The young men of India, he argues, will find their true vocation in the service of others and from self-sacrifice they will be found ready when duty calls them to a sterner and severer trial.

MUSAFIR, 8th March, 1908.

Government and the Ahl-i-Hadis.

84. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th March, remarks, that it is a curious irony of fate, that sections 124 and 153 of the Indian Penal Code that were framed to suppress the Wahábis, who not only murdered Lord Mayo, the Viceroy, and a European judge of the Calcutta High Court, but also openly raised the standard of rebellion against the British government, are now used to suppress Hindu leaders and Volunteers, whilst the Wahábis are considered to be loyal.

BHARAT JIWAN, 9th March, 1908.

Indian industries.

85. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 9th March, in relating how a village carpenter of Jessore has manufactured a bicycle and a flying machine with the greatest ease, remarks that it is no use recounting what skilful handicrafts men India once possessed and what industries flourished in the country as all the world has heard of them. But the same India has now come to the most wretched plight. Almost all industries have become extinct though that is not due to the paucity of handicraftsmen. The times are not favourable for the development of art and industry. It seems that God especially endowed Indians with intelligence, learning and skill, but such is the revolution of the wheel of time that in spite of all their natural endowments Indians have steadily gone backward and have allowed all their industries to become extinct.

86. A correspondent of the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 10th March suggests the advisability of preparing a gradation list of copyists, clerks and other subordinate officials in revenue courts, so that no room may be left for partiality or favouritism in making promotions or filling vacancies.

MASHRIQ, 10th March, 1908.

Promotion of clerks.

87. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 12th March, notes with gratification that the Krishna Mills established at Beawar in Rajputana are doing splendid work producing all sorts of Swadeshi piece-goods. The editor, pointing out that the material prosperity of India is possible only by the development of indigenous industries urges that the moneyed classes of India, instead of burying their money underground, should establish similar mills in large numbers all over India as a means of reviving indigenous industries and of providing employment for Indian labourers and so retaining their money in the country.

HINDOSTHAN, 12th March, 1908.

The Beawar Krishna Mills.

88. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 12th March, contains the following :—

HINDOSTHAN, 12th March, 1908.

Honorary degrees and titles.

The practice of conferring honorary degrees and offices is much in vogue under British rule. Just as there are Honorary Magistrates, Honorary Munsifs and Honorary Members, in the same way Honorary Generals, etc. are appointed in the army. Our King-Emperor himself has been the recipient of honorary ranks in several foreign armies. This being the case it looks odd that Indian provinces should be singularly lacking in men on whom honorary degrees or titles have been conferred. Lately the Maharajas of Dholpur, and Krishnagarh, the Nawab of Joara and the Raja of Rutlam were Gazetted Honorary Captains of the British Army in the London Gazette. The paper sarcastically congratulates the aforesaid Indian Chiefs.

V.—Legislation.

89. Referring to the report of the Select Committee on the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Bill, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) of 12th March, trusts that the amendment proposed by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose regarding Government control over religious and charitable endowments will be embodied in the revised code. This question, he states, is one that has roused the greatest interest in the country and legislation, he thinks, is called for on the subject. He urges the representatives of all influential bodies, Hindus and Muhammadans, to wire to the Legislative Council their assent to this proposed amendment before the matter comes up for discusssion.

ADVOCATE. 12th March, 1908.

Civil Procedure Code Amendment Bill.

VI.—Railway.

90. Referring to the proposal made for granting mutual concesssions to the Railway employees in England and to Europeans in Railway employment in India, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th March, regrets the invidious distinction made between the Indian and European Railway servants in India and remarks :—

RAHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

Concession for European railway employees on Indian and English railways.

" Had the railway companies in India belonged to Indians there might have been some remedy for this, and the English would have been compelled to agree to any arrangements made.

But alas! we have thrown ourselves on the mercy of others and therefore will have to suffer all that may befall!"

91. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 7th March, complains that pilgrims to Muttra are seriously inconvenienced in making a round of the holy city owing to the railway gate at Potrakund remaining closed to public traffic from 11 A. M. to 4 P. M., and suggests that a gateman should be appointed there, who should see that the gate is kept open at all hours of the day except when any train is passing.

SUNDER SHRINGAR 7th March, 1908.

Inconvenience to pilgrims at Muttra.

92. A correspondent calling himself "Traveller" in the Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 14th March 1908, complains regarding the train service and other arrangements of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 14th March, 1908.

Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

VII.—Post Office.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

Agra post-office.

93. The Agra Akhbar of the 7th March, complains that postmen in Agra are transferred from one locality to another very frequently, and that this causes delay in the delivery of letters. The editor also says that branch post offices should be accommodated in decent houses and should not look like bazaar shops.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 11th March, 1908.

The new value payable parcel form.

94. While pointing out that the new value payable parcel form has created much more work in the department and has caused useless worry to the public, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 11th March, asks the Postmaster-General to replace it by the old form or else to make necessary changes in the new one, so that there may remain no cause for the public to complain against the system.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th March, 1908.

The new value payable parcel form.

95. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th March, points out the general complaint against the new value payable parcel form and the complexity and difficulty created by it, and asks the postal authorities to look into the matter and remove the nuisance as soon as possible.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th March, 1908.

Islamic Mission to Japan.

96. The Agra Akhbar of the 7th March, publishes a letter from a correspondent who advises the Musalmans to form an association and collect funds to send Musalman Maulvis to preach Islam in Japan.

JAIN GAZETTE, 8th March, 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

97. The Jain Gazette (Deobund) of the 8th March, reports that a meeting was held in Akkalkot estate on the 23rd January, to protest against the construction of bungalows for Europeans on the Parasnath Hill.

Resolutions proposing obstruction to the work on the hill and boycott of foreign-made goods were passed.

A correspondent contributing a poem on the subject to the same journal regrets that notwithstanding the emphatic protest of the entire Jain community, the authorities seem to be bent on oppressing the Jains by keeping to their determination to construct bungalows on the sacred hill, and warns them (authorities) of the evil consequences that may follow as a result of their disregard of the religious susceptibilities of the Jains. He exhorts his co-religionists that it is still not too late to protect their sacred hill even at the cost of their lives.

Another correspondent writing to the journal says, that the authorities should be ashamed of their proposal to erect bungalows on the sacred hill, considering that they do so for the comfort and convenience of a few of their own countrymen in utter disregard of the religious susceptibilities of a whole Indian community. He remarks that the Jains should no longer put any confidence in the rulers but depend upon their own exertions and that they, like the Bengalis, should give their heart and soul in encouraging the swadeshi movement and the boycott of foreign goods, as a means of raising up their mother land.

MUSAFIR, 8th March, 1908.

Spread of the Arya Samaj religion.

98. While giving a pathetic description of the murder of Lekh Ram, by a Muhammadan, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th March, describes the great talents, undaunted spirit, and various other virtues of the dead, who sacrificed his life in the cause of the Arya Samaj.

The editor exhorts his co-religionists to take a lesson from his example and prophesies a time when the Arya banner will float over the church at Jerusalem and the minarets of the Kaba.

ARYA MITRA, 8th March, 1908.

The Lucknow Social Conference.

99. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th March, referring to the appeal made to Government by Raja Rampal Singh, C.I.E., as President of the Social Conference held at Lucknow for the elimination of the evil customs prevailing in Indian society, remarks that Government intervention can be of no avail in removing them and that social reforms should be undertaken by Indians themselves.

100. A correspondent of Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 10th March, discussing the question of taking interest on money among the Musalmans, is of opinion that they should have no objection in exacting interest from non-Moslems. He holds Maulvis responsible for the present poverty, and says that if the taking of interest is not allowed then the giving of interest too should be forbidden.

Musalmans and usury.

AL-BASHIR, 10th March, 1908.

101. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 11th March, referring to the misunderstanding between the Shias and Sunnis during the last Moharram in Lucknow, suggests the advisability of forming a representative Committee consisting not only of Shias and Sunnis alone, but of some Hindus and non-official Europeans also, to regulate the traffic during the coming Chehlum, so that Shias and Sunnis may be prevented from going the same route and offensive verses may not be recited.

Shias and Sunnis in Lucknow.

HINDUSTANI, 11th March, 1908.

102. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 12th March, has a notice from one Shankar Daji Shastri Pade of Girgaun, Bombay, inviting the representatives of the 10 sections of orthodox Brahmans to the Sanatan Bharat Dharma Mahaparishad to be held in Panwari on the 18th April. Lodging and boarding charges of the delegates would be defrayed by the Panwari Shridhot Papaishawar Avogya Temple.

Sanatan Bharat Dharma Mahaparishad.

HINDOSTHAN, 12th March, 1908.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

103. One Vishnu Datt of Benares contributes the following to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 6th March :—

A swadeshi invocation by Vishnu Datt.

ABHYUDAYA, 6th March, 1908.

"Lord of the Universe, do not slay this poor India by inflicting on her slow tortures. O revered Krishna! where art thou, was it to show this callousness that thou preachedst to simple-hearted Indian devotees that they should leave aside all religions and come to thee as their refuge, or is there any truth in these words of thine "whenever righteousness declines in India, I manifest myself (on earth) to uproot wickedness (Adharma)", if so, then manifest thyself and once again standing before this sobbing Indian utter the same consoling words: "I shall deliver you from all calamities, don't worry," and make true the words that thou manifestest thyself) " for the protection of the good and the destruction of the wicked."

O thou mother, dispeller of all miseries and destroyer of enemies, it appears that thou saidst in anger these words :—

"Then I shall descend and destroy the enemy"—Hadst thou uttered them in a sober and thoughtful mood thou shouldst not have remained unmanifested at a time when thou sawest Indian agriculturists, mere skeletons as they are, rendered weak in every way through the distress caused by the failure of the monsoon on the one hand and of you on the other and through foreigners clinging to the body of India like leeches. O Durgha, the prayer : "sometimes a child may turn out to be an unworthy offspring, but a mother can never forget her child" is becoming meaningless, have pity and make it once more effectual. . . . . .

Lord of the Universe, alas the descendants of those ancestors whom thou causedst to protect cows and by means of whose offerings of ghi and milk thou causedst not only the earth, but also the heavens to be consecrated, to-day consume sugar mixed with bovine blood and foreign saffron prepared out of bovine flesh, and thou art looking on quite unconcernedly. . . . . .

O Judge, although the Indians in accordance with thy Justice, have become so as to deserve to be punished for ever with the shoes of foreigner, yet O Merciful (One), it is unbearable that thy own chosen people as we are called should be in distress. Is it your wish now that those who keep up the traditions of rishis should become extinct on the face of the earth. Was it for this that all of them (rishsis) scorning wordly pleasures, resorted to mountain caves to repeat thy name till their death with the result that although thou seest their descendants writhing in pain yet thou doest nothing to relieve their distress)! Ocean of Mercy, this stigma does not befit thee, therefore O! all-powerful (One) show us thy Mercy once again. . . . . .

O Lord of the Universe, since India, the crown of thy worldwide empire began to decline (in power) and grow weaker, thy rules as laid down in the Vedas have become obsolete on earth and anarchy has spread (throughout the world), but it is not known why thou although thou seest thy royal power (lit. existence) uprooted, art keeping in concealment (do not put forth) thy heroic devotees such as Nal, Yudhistir, Bhishma, Arjun, Drona, etc., Lord! thou saidst that thou art to be found everywhere by the people. At present the Indian people, putting faith in these words of thine are enduring excruciating pains, and thou cruelly art looking on at the miseries of these helpless people.

Lord of all, thy powers have become manifested and all have become aware that thou knowest both how to love and how to punish. Thou art capable of everything why then art thou giving thy people trouble. Have mercy on us and soon free us from our bondage.

ALLAHABAD:
The 16th March, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 12 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 21st March, 1908.

CONTENTS.

Page.

I.—POLITICS.

(a)—Foreign:

1. Indian Musalmans and Egypt ... 267
2. Turkey and the European Powers ... 267
3. Turkey and the European Powers ... 267

(b)—Home:

4. The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation 267
5. The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal Deputation 267
6. The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation 267
7. The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation 268
8. Tinnevelly riot 268
9. Tinnevelly riot 268
10. Tinnevelly riot 268
11. The Decentralisation Commission ... 268
12. The Decentralisation Commission ... 268
13. Regeneration of India 269
14. Regeneration of India 269
15. Regeneration of India 269
16. Extremists and Moderates 269
17. The Surat Congress 269
18. The Holi festival 270
19. The holi festival 271
20. The Holi festival 271
21. Disunion 271
22. The Sovereign and his subjects ... 271
23. The degeneration of Hindus ... 273
24. "We are slaves" 273
25. Indian views regarding independence ... 273
26. Lala Lajpat Rai at Allahabad ... 274
27. A poem 274
28. Indians and British Government ... 274
29. The Provincial Conference 274
30. Sir Andrew Fraser and Bande Matram ... 274

Page.

31. Destruction of Indian industries ... 275
32. Indians in British Columbia 275
33. Military expenditure 275
34. Unrest in Bengal 275

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

35. The Amir and the Anglo-Russian Convention 275
36. The Zakka Khel expedition 275

III.—NATIVE STATES.

Nil.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue:

37. Conviction of a Unani physician ... 276
38. Jurisdiction of the Courts of Native Magistrate 276
39. Phaphund Munsifi ? 276
40. Serious allegations against a Magistrate 276
41. Cow-killing in Allahabad 276
42. Political prisoners in Lahore ... 276

(b)—Police:

43. Police 276
44. Police 277
45. The Criminal Investigation Department 277

(c)—Finance and Taxation:

Nil.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:

46. The Allahabad municipality 277
47. The Allahabad municipality 277
48. The Allahabad municipality and its chairman 278
49. Public meeting at Agra 278

(e)—Education:

50. Intended abolition of the Agra Collegiate school 278

		Page.
51.	Intended abolition of the Agra collegiate school	278
52.	Intended abolition of the Agra collegiate School	278
53.	Encouragement of the Hindi language ...	278
54.	The Calcutta University	278
55.	The Muir Central College	278
56.	Municipal Schools in Benares ...	279
57.	Education in Bengal	279
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land:
58.	Famine and the storage of grain ...	279
59.	Famine and the Holi	279
60.	Famine and Indian extravagance ...	279
61.	Famine and the zamindars	279
	(g)—General:
62.	Agitation against foreign sugar ...	280
63.	The swadeshi movement	280
64.	The swadeshi movement	280
65.	A swadeshi meeting at Lucknow ...	280
66.	The swadeshi movement	280
67.	Holi and the swadeshi movement ...	280
68.	Swadeshi lectures in Allahabad ...	281
69.	The swadeshi movement	281
70.	The Swadeshi movement	281
71.	The swadeshi movement in Hissar ...	281
72.	The Etawah conspiracy	281
73.	The Etawah conspiracy	281
74.	Musalmans and usury	282
75.	The release of B. C. Pal	282
76.	The Weaving Conference	282
77.	Mr. Alfred Nundy and the Tribune ...	282
78.	Assault on a subordinate by a post master	282

V.—LEGISLATION.

Nil.

		Page.
	VI.—RAILWAY.
79.	Railway accidents	282
80.	Railway accidents	282
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
81.	Telegraphic grievances	282
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
82.	The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal in Eastern Bengal	282
83.	Meeting of the Managing Committee of the Mahamandal	283
84.	The Muharram	283
85.	Muharram riots at Lucknow ...	283
86.	Muharram riots at Lucknow	284
87.	Use of foreign sugar and adulterated ghi on the Parasnath Hill	284
88.	The Parasnath Hill	284
89.	The Parasnath Hill	284
90.	A satire on Arya Samajists	285
91.	Arya Samaj Gurukul at Farrukhabad ...	285
92.	Pandita Gaitri Devi in Allahabad ...	285
93.	The ancient religion of India... ...	285
94.	Pronouncing the tabarra	285
95.	Sister Nivedita's lectures on Vedant in England	285
96.	The Mahavidyalaya Hardwar ...	285
97.	Criticism of the inspiration of the Koran	286
98.	Famine relief and the Holi	286
99.	Social reforms	286
100.	Cow-killing	286

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Nil.

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 12th March, referring to the remarks made by Hindu papers on the sympathetic attitude of the Indian Musalmans towards their co-religionists in Egypt, writes that the Egyptians are perfectly justified in demanding Home Rule, as they have the solemn promise of England, while the Congress agitators of India have no such guarantee.

Indian Musalmans and Egypt.

AL BASHIR, 12th March, 1908.

2. A correspondent in the Sahifa (Bijnor) of the 12th March, criticises the efforts made by all Christian Powers of Europe including England to protect the Armenians from the so-called oppressions of the Porte. He expresses surprise that the English Government is so anxious to protect the Armenians against the fancied high-handedness of the Porte when it does not in the least care for the real and the most cruel atrocities practised upon the Muhammadans by the Russian government. He asks if the worshippers of the Cross and the Trinity ever suggested protecting Muhammadans from the oppressions of the Russian government upon its Muhammadan subjects by appointing a Muhammadan governor, when they have raised such an outcry against the tyranny of the Porte over the Armenians, and have asked for the appointment of a Christian governor and of Christian police for them in Turkey.

Turkey and the European Powers.

SAHIFA, 12th March, 1908.

The construction of the Hedjas Railway, and various other reforms and improvements made by the Porte are displeasing to the European Powers, but they should know that the Sultan is not the same now as he was in 1872, as he has now grown wiser and perfectly recognises his friends from his foes and from those who deceive him. The writer remarks that he is indifferent to the wishes of the European powers and would not flinch before even a united attack.

3. The Kanauj Punch of the 15th March, referring to the Macedonian question remarks that Turkey is itself trying to restore peace in Macedonia and that the European Powers by their interference will only hamper the work.

Turkey and the European Powers.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 15th March, 1908.

The editor notes with regret that Great Britain, though she has such a large number of Musalman subjects, has adopted an unfriendly policy towards Turkey.

(b).—Home.

4. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 12th March, referring to the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation which recently waited upon His Excellency the Viceroy under the lead of the Maharaja of Darbhanga, and in which the latter declared that orthodox Hindus were devotedly loyal to Government, remarks that it would have been much better if it had also been pointed out that some of them were flatterers of the first order.

The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation.

ANAND, 12th March, 1908.

5. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th March, referring to the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation, which recently waited upon the Viceroy, and to the wish expressed by His Excellency, in the course of his reply to its address, that religious bodies should take steps to inculcate loyal feelings in the minds of Indian youths, remarks that no attempts at creating sentiments of loyalty among the people can be successful unless the latter are made happy, contented and prosperous, and unless their voice is heard in the administration of the country, and that feelings of loyalty cannot otherwise be created in the people.

The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th March, 1908

6. Referring to the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th March, expresses the hope that the Mahamandal will translate its professions of loyalty into action, and remarks that as the power of Government lies in the hands of the people, it is the duty of loyalists to devote their time to making the people good, powerful and prosperous, and that the Mahamandal too should give proofs of its loyalty by performing such acts.

The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th March, 1908.

OUDH AKHBAR, 20th March, 1908.

7. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 20th March, referring to the address presented by the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal to the Viceroy, writes as follows :—

The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal deputation.

"We congratulate the Maharaja of Darbhanga and other representatives on the address they have presented to the Viceroy. They presented this loyal address on behalf of the orthodox section of the Hindu community, but there was nothing in it to which the non-orthodox section could take any exception. Although the latter class does not stick to the religion of its fore-fathers, but it does not deny that religious education, if judiciously imparted, would raise the moral tone of the Hindus and especially of the students. We are glad to learn that the Mahamandal has established many branches, which are doing useful work.

"Undoubtedly it has before it unlimited possibilities, and, if it can weld together all the different sects and castes of Hindus so that they may become one compactnation, it would do a service to its country which would remain unparallelled in its annals. It is gratifying to notice that the Viceroy has expressed his entire sympathy with the movement."

HINDOSTHAN, 18th March, 1908.

8. Commenting on the recent Tinnevelly disturbances the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of 18th March, notes that a growing spirit of defiance of authority is manifesting itself among the masses, and prophesies that, unless strong repressive measures are resorted to, the peace of the country will be seriously endangered.

Tinnevelly riot.

CITIZEN, 11th March, 1908.

9. Referring to the Tinnevelly riots, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 11th March, argues that the disturbance was owing to official interference, and, in support of his contention, instances the orderly conduct of the crowd that assembled in Calcutta on the 10th instant to welcome Babu Bipin Chandra Pal on his release from jail, and attributes the absence of disturbance on that occasion to the absence of the police. He considers the magistrate's action in ordering the police to fire on the crowd at Tinnevelly a deplorable indiscretion.

Tinnevelly riot.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 20th March, 1908.

10. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of 20th March, writes :—"In regard to the recent disastrous rioting at Tinnevelly and Tuticorin, the Allahabad paper thinks it would be interesting to know why this isolated corner of country, in the extreme south of the moderate and rational Madras Presidency, has become a nursery for what it terms 'the rank political growths of Poona and Bengal.' The answer is, surely, perfectly plain. Because there is unrest in the country, unrest in the north and south, the east and west, or, let us term it, discontent. Discontent with the existing state of things, as voiced by scores of Indian witnesses before the Decentralisation Commission, discontent evident wherever one goes, if one mixes with and questions the people—unofficially. And the only thing to be done is to endeavour to remove that discontent by reform. Repression will but add to it."

HINDOSTHAN, 19th March, 1908.

11. Commenting on the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malavya's evidence before the Decentralisation Committee, the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of 19th March, characterises the suggestion that the Central Provinces and Berar should be placed under a Governor in Council, as absurd. He agrees, however, with the proposal that the salaries of high officials should be reduced or that the salaries of Indian officials should be raised to the same level as those of Europeans occupying similar positions.

The Decentralisation Commission.

HINDOSTHAN, 17th March, 1908.

12. Commenting on the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malavya's evidence before the Decentralization Committee, the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of 17th March, agrees that the people should be more strongly represented in Legislative Councils, but thinks that any extra numbers appointed should represent the agricultural rather than the professional classes. Members too, he argues, should have the power to propose amendments to the budget and to divide the council upon such amendments. He fails to see why one-fourth of the nominated members should be

The Decentralisation Commission.

Government servants and suggests that half the members should be returned by the people. He points out in conclusion that whatever be the nature of the council Government has always the right to veto any measure carried.

13. The Nagri Pracharak (Lucknow) for March contains a few pieces of poetry in which Indians are exhorted to lay aside their idleness and depend on self-reliance for the salvation of their country, since extraneous help can avail them nothing. They are called upon to be self-reliant, to be strong, to wake up from their slothful slumber, to give up begging (for their rights and privileges) and devote themselves to solid practical work. "They aspire for Swaraj, but, alas, they look up to others for its attainment, without foregoing their personal comforts." The writer expresses his surprise that India should be robbed by foreigners, even in the presence of its three hundred million inhabitants, and remarks that it is still not too late for the latter to have recourse to self-reliance, and that, if they have any real sympathy with their mother-land, they should not indulge merely in verbal warfare, but should do some brave deed. He concludes with the remark that the country is on the way to speedy destruction, while the people have become destitute and helpless in every way, and all arts and industries have decayed. "The natives are merely to produce what others are to enjoy. Other nations are enjoying themselves to the utmost, while we, down-trodden as we are, are the butts for their ridicule. We should therefore expect nothing from others, and do what we can on our own initiative for outsiders will give no help even in small matters."

Regeneration of India.

NAGRI PRACHARAK, March, 1908.

14. Vishnu Dutt Dwivedi contributes a poem to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th March, in which he deplores the present condition of India. The Indians, having given their wealth and prowess to the English, have been importing foreign-made goods and exporting food-grains to foreign countries and are now in consequence suffering from famine and dying of starvation. Cows are wailing in India that butchers are slaughtering them, that their flesh is being consumed by wicked men and that their blood is mixed with sugar. He exhorts his countrymen not to use foreign articles, but to manufacture swadeshi goods for their consumption. He advises both Moderate and Extremist leaders not to quarrel among themselves, but to revive the Congress, and form political associations in every village and town for the attainment of Swaraj, and concludes with a prayer that Ram and Krishna may once more manifest themselves on earth and drive out the enemies.

Regeneration of India.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th March, 1908.

15. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 17th March, contains a poem in which the writer deplores the growing poverty of India, which he ascribes to Indians giving up arts and industries, to their abandoning their ancient traditions, customs and usages as also to their mutual dissensions. He calls upon the Indian youth to give up aping foreign manners and to hold to their own ancient and moral obligations, if they want to make India once more prosperous and happy.

Regeneration of India.

MOHINI, 17th March, 1908.

16. A correspondent in the Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for January (received on the 14th March), says that Extremists and Moderates are each useful to the cause of the country in their own way, but urges that political agitation is not so important from the point of view of the masses, as is attention to the economical condition of the country; and that, work and wages being the two chief necessities of man, Indians while submitting quietly to British rule should patronise their own arts and industries, if they are at all desirous of making themselves a great nation.

Extremists and Moderates.

HINDI PRADIP, January, 1908.

17. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 17th March, contains a poem on the Surat Congress, in which the writer ridicules educated Indians for their inability to work together in the cause of the country.

The Surat Congress.

MOHINI, 17th March, 1908.

He accuses the Moderates of doing nothing beyond flattering officials, and petitioning Government for the concession of the rights and privileges of Indians, without doing any practical work whatsoever for the good of the country on their own initiative. He further remarks that they entertain feelings of hatred against honest and self-sacrificing patriots and utterly disregard public opinion for their personal aggrandisement. In conclusion he calls upon his countrymen to show their love for their mother tongue, to encourage the swadeshi movement and to give up their dissensions for the sake of the welfare of their motherland.

BHARATBASI, 17th March, 1908.

The Holi festival.

18. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad) of the 17th March writes as follows :—It being the Holi festival, when it is our duty to allay our heart-burnings for the year by indulgence in abuse, we shall pass any remarks on any and every individual, and he should not take offence at them. It was through abuse that Lord Curzon was insulted, that the Bengalis were awakened, that the Arya Samaj was propagated and that Lala Lajpat Rai has been so much honoured. . . . . .

Your Majesty, the King-Emperor, Edward VII, Lord of earth and ocean, may you and your Queen long enjoy prosperity: this is our benediction to you, although we may be starving even on this festival of Holi. Though you live beyond the seven seas we invoke you on this Holi day. Surely we have now nothing left with us wherewith to honour such a worthy emperor as you are. Still we possess the valuable attribute of love to gladden your heart. We shall be pleasing you in a moment by sprinkling upon you showers of love, but our Emperor and Empress, what will you give us in return for these showers of love? We are starving and we will not let you off without taking something from you on this day of Holi, or else we shall abuse you, for this is the Holi day.

Mr. Morley, Secretary of State for India, whatever others may say, we are at one with you. You may call us what you may choose and you may play whatever tricks you wish with us, still we take you in the same light. You are this day a British minister, you are the maker or destroyer of our destiny, and you live with His Majesty. We are here so far from you beyond the seven seas. You can request His Majesty to do anything (for us): we are starving on this day of our festival. Though starving, yet we honour you. We are not disloyal. We are oppressed by hunger. It is for this reason that not to speak of you, we sometimes speak harshly of even our emperor in vexation; you should take pity; you stand below our Emperor; you stand above all other officials: you have great powers; you may or may not grant us any concessions, but you have the power to do so. To-day you have a good opportunity: whether you will occupy or not this unjust position to-morrow no one can tell. It is for this reason that we ask you to avail yourself of this opportunity and to grant Indians what you can . . . . .

Our Viceroy Lord Minto, our relations with you last only for five years, during these five years you may either give us trouble or pleasure. This period will be passing away in no time and thereafter will remain only the good or evil you do: you must be aware that when the time comes we shall take it. Yes, we shall take it. If you be unwilling to grant us anything God will grant us that. By God's grace His Majesty and the Secretary of State will be pleased to grant us (our rights), but you will not be here to grant the same to us. After the expiry of your term of five years, you will be leaving India or rather you will be recalled hence. Surely all things are not in your power, but this day you are in power at the Royal Court. You can easily have done anything you like by writing to His Majesty and to the Secretary of State. We talk all this for your own good. What you will do during these five years will be a monument to your memory for time to come. Bear in mind that the dye we are sprinkling upon you this day is a fast one, and that it cannot be washed away at any cost. This is the Holi day. You are our Viceroy, why shall we be abusing you, we therefore leave you after sprinkling colored water alone upon you.

Come, come, our own Lieutenant-Governor, Sir John Hewett. There is none more friendly to us than you. We shall embrace you on this day of Holi festival. During the present famine you have stood nobly by us. You do not possess unlimited power, yet you have made very excellent arrangements after a good deal of correspondence. We are expressing our heartfelt gratitude to you for what you have got done for Indians. Surely there is no good arrangement even in your time for the reformation of students. It is inconsistent with religious and moral principles to turn students into seditionists by blasting their entire future life for mere trifles. Hewett! if such shortcomings had not found a place in your administration you would not have been looked upon to-day as an English lot but a Hindu lot, a Muhammadan lot, nay, an Indian lot. Surely there is much room in our hearts to revere your Honour. Your administration cannot be condemned for one or two defects. What shall we repeatedly say to you for the arrangements you have made for saving starving Indians from falling a prey to famine? Famine prevails here this day, what our condition will be later on we need not point out to you as you yourself see it all . . . . . We do not conceal anything from you. We tell you every thing that is in our mind and we show you everything unreservedly. In our starvation we abuse you, we encourage the Swadeshi movement and aspire for swaraj by intentionally sacrificing our lives considering that we cannot save ourselves from starvation. But we do all this because of our starvation. Be it as it may, forgetting all, we are to-day absorbed in the Holi festival! You are our own Lieutenant-Governor. We shall not abuse you to-day, but recite to you laudatory kabirs (satirical songs sung during the Holi festival . . . . . .)

HINDOSTHAN, 19th March, 1908.

The Holi festival.

19. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 19th March, referring to the Holi festival, remarks that Indians will considerably benefit themselves, if instead of indulging in obscene language and in intoxicants during the Holi festival, they perform havans and hold meetings to discuss social reform and the progress of the country.

HIND, 19th March, 1908.

The Holi Festival.

20. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 19th March, publishes poems on the Holi festival, in which the writer complains of the severity of the famine, the poverty of the masses and their inability to enjoy even such important festivals. One writer passes severe strictures on these men who by studying English have become denationalised, and another exhorts the people to use swadeshi articles, in order to regenerate Indian industries.

HINDI PRADIP, January, 1908.

Disunion.

21. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for January (received on the 14th March) contains a poem under the heading "Disunion" in which the writer deplores the disaster which disunion has caused to Hindus from time to time, such as in the war between Kauravas and Pandavas, and during the Muhammadan invasions of India, and recently in the Surat Congress, and exhorts the Indians, now that they have awakened from their slumber, to dispel disunion from their midst and make it give place to unity.

HINDI PRADIP, January, 1908.

The Sovereign and his subjects.

22. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for January (received on the 14th March) contains an article entitled "The Sovereign and his subjects" of which the following is a literal translation :-

"The relation between a sovereign and his subjects is like that between a master and his servant, or that between husband and wife. . . . Where the king and his subjects equally realise their respective duties and perform them, nothing is to be said about that country, where there are found all sorts of prosperity. The question is now with regard to that country, of which the people perform their duties with docility, while the king never fails to act the part of a close-fisted master, and serves his own interests in every way and drains the wealth of the people, which is, as it were, their very life. For the momentary enjoyment of one man, others lose their lives. The people have become so destitute owing to famines, that they mostly have to live on one meal only, even in times of plenty, while the members of the ruling race enjoy themselves heartily at the people's expense who are regarded as uncultured, uncivilized, semi-educated and ignorant. The former laugh at the attempt of the latter to uplift themselves, and, far from extending to them a helping hand, endeavour to dishearten them. Whenever after repeated entreaties they extend a helping hand in any matter, it is not without some deep design, and in that very support there must be some advantage to themselves. Close-fisted they are to such an extent that there is no government department but yields some profits after defraying the cost of its establishment. Sovereigns of former times used to do such things as tended to distribute their treasure among the people, whereas such thrift (baniyayi) is now observed in the undertakings of the administration, that government keeps its eye even on the triflest profits. For instance, a commission of one pice or two a rupee was formerly allowed to postage stamp-vendors, and stamps, cards and envelopes were available at two or four places in all large cities, which has now been abolished and postage stamps are only available at post offices. It may be granted that Government may derive a profit of some two or four thousand rupees annually from this arrangement, but now it has caused much inconvenience and trouble to the public. When the King cares so much for his self-interest, how long can the people escape from being reduced to utter indigence. Having marked the progress of the swadeshi movement, Government has felt pity on (the condition of) Indian coolies and labourers. The Factory Commission has been instituted, which will visit centres of industries to inquire into the condition of labourers, and will pass such regulations as will render foreign-made goods (still) cheaper as compared with those of indigenous manufacture. The Government of India will certainly be saddled with the expenditure involved by this commission. Government wants the diffusion of primary and technical education among us. This proposal of the Government is praiseworthy in every respect, provided that it does not interfere with our higher education. If the instruction in the carpenter's and blacksmith's craft turns out to be detrimental to our higher education, and Government becomes cold in its attention towards the latter, then farewell to this primary and technical education. In almost all measures of Government it has been observed, that it leads us into a path untrodden by us; but when we have, by dint of our intellectual powers, acquired proficiency and mastery in it, it becomes anxious to obstruct us. There was a time when we were quite unacquainted with Western education. Later on education was diffused among us. But now, when we, acquiring mastery in it, have begun to understand the inner meanings of their policy, they are hesitating to impart to us higher education. Whatever may be the inner import of the abstruse policy of the Government, it will surely be said that a breach has come about between the people and the Government which is becoming wider day by day. It is for this reason that we say that feelings of affection between the ruler and the ruled are fast disappearing. The people do certainly retain their affection (for Government), but the diplomacy and self-interest of the rulers are eating into this affection like a weevil, so as to weaken it. To preserve the stability of the empire it is advisable that this weevil should be removed.

Before the Russians, French, Germans and other European nations the Government of India declares with great pride that its administration in India is very liberal, but how can other nations understand the latent meaning of this liberality. With regard to the rulers the people are certainly generously disposed towards them; with the exception of a few educated persons, the general mass of the people is so ignorant of politics that they understand nothing of political complications, show the same respect to the rulers as ordained in the shastras, and, without making any distinction at all whether the rulers are swadeshi or bideshi, are ready to obey their orders without question. There are individuals among the people in whom patriotism has become extinguished to such an extent, owing to their condition of bondage, that they are declaring in utter hopelessness:—

> No matter whoever may be the king, their interests are not in jeopardy;
> For they are never to rise from the position of a maid to that of a mistress.

Such being the case, we must bear whatever Government may boast of its liberal administration. It is for exposing the hollowness of this very liberal administration that now-a-days several journalists are enduring the hardships of jail-life.

God is favourable to our Government and in every way its star is in the ascendant. Fortunately such men have been secured to carry on the administration, that in the present state of affairs whatever they may say befits them.

Far from imbibing the political spirit, old fashioned men through cowardice say that for the people to serve (?) the sovereign is, as it were, to lick the edge of the sword, to fight with the lion, and to kiss the cobra. Such ideas depress the country to such a degree, and, if attempts are now made to awaken them, that is taken to be sedition. It may be said that there is an end of liberalism. On one side there is the extremity of cleverness and cunning, and on the other of simplicity and temerity. This being the case, it is no wonder that India, thus downtrodden, grows more destitute and helpless day by day.

23. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for January (received on the 14th March), contains a long article in which the writer traces the growth of slavish sentiments among Hindus as developed by the devotional aspect of Hinduism and fostered by Muhammadan domination; and remarks that it should be no wonder if Hindus are wedded to slavery, considering that their religion itself teaches them to be slaves.

HINDI PRADIP, January, 1908.

The degeneration of Hindus.

24. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for January (received on the 14th March), writes under the heading "We are slaves":—

HINDI PRADIP, January, 1908.

"We are slaves."

"We are slaves! Of course not slaves of an ordinary type! We are slaves in our religion! We are slaves in society! We are slaves within and outside (our) homes! We are slaves in manners and customs! We are slaves in colour and form, and we are slaves of slaves . . . . . We are trustworthy and obedient slaves of our masters. We toil unceasingly, and know not what is called fatigue. . . . . We carry out the orders of our masters, however arduous they may be, without murmuring in the least. Alas, still we are called seditionists and disloyal! It is no wonder that some of us, sometimes when hard pressed raise a commotion and think it proper to cry and lament in this way, since there are such agitators among our masters too, who are very much respected and held in high esteem by the public. There seems to be no reason why we should be treated as criminals like thieves and robbers though we cannot help laughing at the folly and stupidity of some foolish or ignorant people, and have to point to them that there is vast difference between Indian agitators and English agitators. As the former are black while the latter are white; the former are cowards while the latter are valorous people; they are armed while you are without arms . . . . . they are friends of their country while you are enemy of your country; they are masters of masters, while you are slaves of slaves! Well, if you want to be emancipated from slavery you should endeavour to imitate them! If it is very difficult for you to imitate them in all things, you should at least essay a few of them . . . . . Take pure meals in hotels, have your hair cut after Alfred (sic) fashion. The easiest way for freeing yourselves from slavery is to send your wives to England so that they may give birth to British-born subjects; in this way you will be freed from bondage without any great effort.

25. The Yad-i-Beza, (Sikandrabad-Bulandshahr), for January, (received on the 14th March) contains an article from Shams-ul-ulma Maulvi Muhammad Zaka-ul-lah, in which the writer while describing the blessings of liberty, notes with regret that its meaning has been entirely misunderstood by Indians. Liberty is, he says, a very rich and rare blessing, which the English have dearly bought with their blood, and bequeathed it, a valuable and proud legacy, to their children.

YAD-I BEZA, January, 1908.

Indian views regarding independence.

Indians are slavish by temperament and cannot fully appreciate its charms and the value of its blessings. They have always been in the habit of crying amen to every remark of the voice of authority and have not possibly understood its real meaning.

Western education has created quite a new spirit of independence among Indians. Educated Indians have divided themselves into various factions each crying for liberty with a peculiar notion of its meaning in their mind

Some of them have even gone so far as to claim absolute liberty, which is simply a cry for the moon, as there is in reality no such thing as absolute independence, especially when a man wants to live in an organised society where he will have to tolerate and yield to the general laws which bind the various members of the community together.

Some of these claimants of liberty are not sincere in their purpose, as their thoughts and private life do not coincide with their outward actions, and any independence allowed to them will simply make a chaos of society, and will also prove most dangerous to the Government as well as to the country.

A proper expression of the spirit of liberty requires strict indifference to the whispers of sycophancy, and a full, free and harmonious exercise of all our powers of understanding, according to the peculiar circumstances of every phase of human life. He is a most unfortunate person whose ears are entirely shut to the voice of his opponents, as it is this defect which has been the prime cause of the downfall of many an empire in the world.

BHARATBASI, 10th March, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai at Allahabad.

26. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad),of the 10th March, referring to the recent visit of Lala Lajpat Rai to Allahabad, notes that when the Lala came to this city last year he was welcomed there by the local Extremists alone, but that it was not so this time. The editor remarks that Lala Lajpat Rai, having changed his policy since the Surat Congress, or rather after his return from deportation, has rendered himself popular with all sections of Indians irrespective of religion and political differences. He further says that, when Pandit Madan Mohan Malvya rose to address the audience after Lala Lajpat Rai had finished his speech the other day, he was met with much opposition, and enquires why Mr. Malvya has incurred so much unpopularity.

He concludes with the advice to Mr. Malvya that he will do well to either renounce his political career or to endeavour to regain the good will of the public.

BHARATBASI, 10th March, 1908.

A poem.

27. The Bháratbási (Allahabad), of the 10th March, contains a poem in which the writer calls upon the Indians to wake up from their deep slumber, which they have been enjoying for the last one thousand years since the invasion of Mahmud and the subjugation of Indian princes by the various Muhammadan conquerors, and further urges that they should wake up, now that the good government of India under British rule, which has brought in its train many splendid things and incomparable prosperity, has dispelled their ignorance and ushered in the era of enlightenment.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 4th and 11th March, 1908.

Indians and British Government.

28. The Aligarh Institute Gazette in its issues of the 4th and 11th March publishes an article by Shamsul Ulama, Khan Bahadur Muhammad Zakaullah, in which he discusses the comments of Sir H. Cotton in his New India, on the comparative loyalty of the ruling princes and the educated classes of India. He repudiates the insinuations made by Sir H. Cotton that the loyalty of Indian princes is not unalloyed but is forced, and remarks that their unflinching loyalty to the British Government during the Mutiny removes all doubts about them. Besides this they are really grateful to the British for the protection of their states from foreign invasions and from internal strife. They are invited to Darbars not to be slighted, but to add to the magnificence of the scene, as has been the custom from time immemorial in India. It is wrong to say that they think it a disgrace to be invited to Darbars and the heart-burnings are due to rivalry between them and desires for precedence, etc. It is true that the British Government is often obliged to interfere in the management of the native states, and exercises its powers of suzerainty, but this is not done with a view to impair the integrity of the state, but is done in the interests of the people of the state, for whose welfare the Government has the same regard as for its own subjects.

Referring to the statement of Sir H. Cotton that the educated class of India is generally loyal to the British Government, and would prefer it to the rule of Russia, remarks that this is true to some extent, but their loyalty has not been as yet tested. Besides this they are by their continued agitation setting a bad example to other people. He says that it is true that there is not much mutual sympathy between the English and the people, and this he ascribes to diversity of race, and to devotion to self-interest on both sides.

He concludes by saying that English education has up to this date penetrated only skin deep and the clamouring for swaraj is confined to an infinitesmal minority.

AL-BASHIR, 12th March, 1908.

The Provincial Conference.

29. Al-Bashir (Etawah) of the 12th March, referring to the protest raised in the Provincial Conference against the allotting of special seats in the legislative council, regrets that the Hindus grudge their Musalman brethren even such petty concessions, and that Mr. Sayani and Nawab Saiyid Mohammad whose names they so often take do not represent any section of the Musalmans.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th March, 1908.

Sir Andrew Fraser and Bande Matram.

30. Referring to the episode about the shouting of Bande Matram which His Honour Sir Andrew Fraser recently related when presiding at the prize distribution of a school, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th March, remarks :--

"Within the last two or three years riots have occurred at several places owing to Europeans being annoyed at the shouting of Bande Matram. Readers will not have forgotten the Coconada riot. It is natural with men, and especially with boys that they annoy an individual all the more when he takes offence at any particular words. If Europeans were not to take offence at the shouting of Bande Matram it is unlikely that any person would have shouted these words at them. If all European officials were to take shouting of Bande Matram in the same light as did His Honour Sir Andrew Fraser there would happen no such riots in future, as they have their origin in the annoyance and exasperation of imprudent officials. It is true that Bande Matram is our national anthem, but it does not stir or excite the masses like the national songs of France and other countries. It is expressive of the greatness and power of the country and is not a war cry. There is nothing in it to cause alarm to Englishmen."

Destruction of Indian industries.

31. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 14th March, contains an article in which the editor tries to prove how the English have gradually destroyed the indigenous industries. He says that at first they contented themselves with buying the manufactures of India as cheaply as possible and sold them advantageously in European markets. Then when they saw that by this way they were enriching India, at the expense of European countries, they resolved to cripple Indian industries by compelling the artisans to produce large quantities of manufactured articles in short periods. The result was that the poor artisans had to leave off their trades and take to agriculture. By this the English gained two objects: India no longer remained a manufacturing country, and it became a granary for England. SWARAJYA, 14th March, 1908.

The editor then says that the English have ruined the industry by the same methods which they employed to conquer the country, which was by setting one man against another.

He concludes by exhorting the people to beware of the tactics of the English and stick with all their might to the swadeshi and the boycott.

Indians in British Columbia.

32. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 15th March, referring to the treatment of Indians in British Columbia writes:— INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 15th March, 1908.

"Great indignation will be felt by Indians at the treatment meted out to their fellow-countrymen in British Columbia, and at the failure of the Government to employ counsel to defend them during the recent proceedings. The fact that Japanese are protected by Treaty is no reason why Indians should be subjected to inferior treatment. Their position as subjects of the King-Emperor should in itself be sufficient to protect them from such flagrant injustice."

Military expenditure.

33. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of 16th March, expresses its approval of the Hon'ble Munshi Madhc Lal's proposals regarding the reduction of the standing army in India and its replacement by volunteers, and suggests that Government restrictions regarding volunteers in India should be withdrawn. HINDOSTHAN, 16th March, 1908.

Unrest in Bengal.

34. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 16th March, referring to the throwing of stones at the Viceroy's motor-car, remarks that the time has gone when the Bengalis could be overawed by mere threats, and suggests that they should be treated in the same way as the Zakka-Khels. RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 16th March, 1908.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

The Amir and the Anglo-Russian conventions.

35. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th March, referring to the reticence of the Amir as regards the Anglo-Russian convention, remarks that the Amir most probably wants some of its provisions to be amended and expresses a hope that the Amir will be wise enough to accept the decisions of the British Government. SHAHNA-I-HIND, 8th March, 1908.

The Zakka-Khel expedition.

36. The Agra Akhbar of the 14th March, publishes a dialogue on the Zakka-Khel expedition, and remarks that the effect of these punitive expeditions is merely temporary and that it would be better if the more civilizing influences of commerce and education were employed to turn these turbulent frontier tribes into peaceful citizens of the Empire. AGRA AKHBAR, 14th March, 1908.

III.—Native States.

Nil.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 29th February, 1908.

Conviction of a Unani physician.

37. Referring to the conviction of a Unani physician of Mirzapur by the trying magistrate for accidentally injuring one of the eyes of a patient and acquitted by the High Court on appeal, the Almora Akhbar of the 29th February (received on the 16th March), remarks on the differential treatment accorded by Government in letting off certificated physicians and punishing those who, though with no academical qualifications are equally skilful, if they happen to commit any mistake.

SAHIFA, 12th March, 1908.

Jurisdiction of the Courts of Native Magistrates.

38. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 12th March, reproduces an article entitled "A black man's court, will not try a white man's case" from the Darul-Sultanat without any comments of its own.

"Alluding to the case of a banya in the court of the Native Magistrate of Alipore against some European boys who beat the complainant with a bat and refused to attend the court when summouned on the ground that they had a birth-right not to be tried by a native court; and to the case of a European swindler who had at several times cheated some European merchants and among them, the General Manager at the Great Eastern Hotel, the Darul-sultanat remarks that it is the consequence of the Ilbert Bill, in the framing of which a major and prominent part was taken by the late Sir Saiyid.

AGRA AKHBAR, 14th March, 1908.

Phaphund Munsifi ?

39. The Agra Akhbar of the 14th March, referring to the proposal of abolishing the Phaphund Munsifi in the Etawah Judgeship, remarks that it would put the people of that important town to great trouble, as they will have to go a great distance to have their cases settled.

CITIZEN, 15th March, 1908.

Serious allegations against a Magistrate.

40. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of 15th March, in an article entitled "Serious allegations against a Magistrate" relates that an application was recently made to the High Court for the transfer of a case from the court of Ram Prasad, Tiwari, Deputy Magistrate, Aligarh, to some other court on the grounds that the Magistrate was prejudiced in the matter and used objectionable language to the complainant and his Muhammadan witnesses. The case, it appears, had already been transferred from a Muhammadan Magistrate's Court to Deputy Magistrate Ram Prasad's court. The editor notes that the case is not without its moral. "It brings us in touch," he says, "with the Etawah and Rawalpindi cases which aptly form the text of a sermon on the undesirability of strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th and 16th March, 1908.

Cow-killing in Allahabad.

41. The Awaza-i-khalq (Benares), in its combined issue of the 8th and 16th March, referring to the cow-killing case in Allahabad, remarks that it is a matter of deep regret that instead of removing natural animosities people are accentuating them.

HINDOSTHAN. 19th March, 1908.

Political prisoners in Lahore.

42. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 19th March, writes that so far it was the common practice in Lahore to send educated prisoners to the central jail, where they had to work in the press, but that the same kind of treatment is not now accorded to Lala Dina Nath and Pindi Dass and others convicted in the Lahore riot case, and that they are made to do fatiguing mechanical work, such as the making of mattings and the grinding of food grains.

(b).—Police.

MURAQQA-I-TASAWWUR, 7th March, 1908.

Police.

43. The Muraqqa-i-Tasawwur (Fatehpur), of the 7th March, while refuting the charges of incompetency and corruption brought against the police by the public, remarks that the police has in its hand so many cases that it cannot do full justice to all of them. In a police station, a man can prefer any report without having to pay any fee, so false reports are very frequent. Besides this when the police makes enquiries it does not receive the least assistance from the public, but is often put on the wrong track, as people are loth to implicate their friends, relations or neighbours in criminal cases. The result is that criminals very often get off scot-free, and they are consequently encouraged to continue their career of crime and in a short time become habitual offenders, and the police has to suffer for it.

Police.

44. A mutiny veteran writing in the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 10th March, defends the police against various charges of corruption and incompetency brought against the force by the people, and requests the public to help it in its investigations, and not to defend criminals whom they know to be guilty and exhorts them to give evidence in order to convict them.

MUFID-I-AM, 10th March, 1908.

The Criminal Investigation Department.

45. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 10th March, contains the following :—" The stronger the political agitation is growing in the country, the heavier is becoming the cost of the detective department of the Government. This expenditure is growing by reason of our officials being oppressed by the incubus of sedition. To such an extent have the officials grown suspicious of sedition that they are not content with setting detectives on leading men in India alone. Government detectives also dog the steps of those Indians who have gone to England, France, Germany, America, Japan and other countries for purposes of study.

BHARATBASI, 10th March, 1908.

It is said that India has to pay for these foreign detectives also, but we are unwilling to give credence to such a report at once, although such a thing is not an impossibility, considering the policy which those who are the makers of the destiny of India (the English) are at present following.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

The Allahabad Municipality.

46. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 10th March, writes that when under the incumbency of Mr. Lovett, a health officer was appointed on a fat salary to look after the sanitation of Allahabad, it was hoped that the sanitation of the city would improve, but the people have been disappointed in their expectations, since, when the Municipal Board itself is remiss in the discharge of its duties and does very little solid work, it naturally follows that its employés cannot be over particular as to their work. In view of the fact that accumulation of refuse encourages rats, which Government thinks to be a means of communication of plague and for the destruction of which the municipality incurs considerable expenditure, the editor complains that refuse-houses in the city are never properly cleared of rubbish and dirt, and ascribes this defective arrangement to the paucity of refuse carts at the disposal of contractors engaged by the municipality for the purpose. To remedy this evil he suggests that mules or horses should be used in refuse-carts so as to enable the contractors to do their work more efficiently and thoroughly, as much time is wasted under the present system in which bullocks drag carts. He also complains of the bad condition of roads which are not frequented by European officers, and remarks that, in view of the fact that the Board assesses a tax on every sort of conveyance, it should also see that the wheels of bicycles, ekkas and carriages are not damaged by the rickety condition of roads.

BHARATBASI, 10th March, 1908

The Allahabad municipality.

47. The Citizen (Allahabad) of 19th March, fails to understand why pipes of a certain thickness that are not obtainable in India, are required by the Allahabad water works. The editor notes that owing to these pipes not being available in India, the Allahabad public have been put to considerable inconvenience, as water pipe extension works have practically come to a stand still. He does not think Allahabad more up to date than Calcutta and sees no necessity for increased municipal expenditure in the purchase of special pipes.

CITIZEN, 19th March, 1908.

CITIZEN, 19th March, 1908.

48. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad) of 19th March notes that it is rumoured that a Government official, probably Mr. Moore, is to be appointed Chairman of the Allahabad Municipal Board. He remarks that there is no objection to this provided the chairman's salary is paid by Government. Otherwise he declares there is a very decided objection to the arrangement.

The Allahabad municipality and its chairman.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 15th March, 1908.

49. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 15th March, notes that a public meeting was held at Agra on 3rd March to protest against the octroi rules at present in force in Agra. The meeting was attended by most of the leading men of Agra and great enthusiasm characterised the proceedings. Various resolutions were passed and it was decided to forward copies of them to the Lieutenant-Governor, the Viceroy and the Secretary of State for India.

Public meeting at Agra.

(e).—Education.

OUDH AKHBAR, 14th March, 1908.

50. While deploring that the system of education in India is very unsatisfactory and too expensive for the majority of poor people to educate their sons, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 14th March, notes with satisfaction that the Government has of late, begun to consider the question of how to make it useful and easily accessible to men of ordinary circumstances.

Intended abolition of the Agra collegiate school.

The editor disagrees with the proposal of the Government to abolish the Agra collegiate school owing to insufficiency of funds, as it goes against the present policy of the Government in making education cheap and accessible to all persons.

He expresses the desirability of the Government allowing the school to continue as usual by allotting for its aid portion of the big sum it is going to spend on education in this province.

CITIZEN, 15th March, 1908.

51. A correspondent writes to the Citizen (Allahabad), of 15th March, with reference to the proposed abolition of the Agra collegiate school and the establishment of a Model High School instead, and states that all the trustees are opposed to the idea. He says that, when the matter came up for discussion recently at a meeting of the trustees, the Chairman, Mr. Cobb, Commissioner of the Agra Division, asked those present for their opinion on the proposal.

Intended abolition of the Agra collegiate school.

ADVOCATE, 15th March, 1908.

52. With reference to the proposal of Government to abolish the Agra collegiate school in view of the opening of a Model High School at Agra, a correspondence writes to the Advocate (Lucknow) of 15th March and points out that the trustees are altogether opposed to the proposal, and that the suggestion has caused much dissatisfaction in Agra.

Intended abolition of the Agra collegiate school.

HINDI PRADIP, January, 1908.

53. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for January, (received on the 14th March), contains a poem, in which the writer urges the encouragement of the use of the Hindi language as the first step in the regeneration of India, and also exhorts Indian youth to compare the ancient and the present condition of their country, so as to realise its degeneration and to adopt steps whereby to improve their condition.

Encouragement of the Hindi language.

AL-BASHIR, 12th March, 1908.

54. The Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 12th March, referring to the Jubilee of the Calcutta University, remarks that it has done nothing to be proud of, and that its graduates possess neither the virtues of the English or of the Indians, nor have they proved themselves true to the Government or the country. On the contrary they are solely responsible for the dissemination of discontent in the country.

The Calcutta University.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 15th March, 1908.

55. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of 15th March, remarks that the esignation of his appointment by Mr. F. French, a professor at the Muir Central College, has caused universal regret amongst the students of the college. The editor does not consider the reason given for Mr. French's resignation, viz., that he was unable to take any interest in the students' games, the correct one. He suggests that the general discontent that prevails amongst teachers and students since Dr. Thibaut's retirement is the real cause of it.

The Muir Central College.

56. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) in its combined issue of 8th and 16th March, referring to the deplorable condition of the municipal schools in Benares, complains that the Secretary of the Municipality, who is the officer in charge of the schools, is an overworked man and cannot pay sufficient attention to schools. In his duties he is helped by a supervisor who is incompetent to discharge his duties. The authorities have everything their own way and resent any interference by the Honorary visitors of the schools. He complains also that Urdu is not taught in any school, and that the Secretary has given large grants to zenana mission schools which do not want any aid.

Municipal Schools in Benares.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th and 16th March, 1908.

The editor suggests the advisability of appointing an advisory educational council which shall have full control over the schools, and that the immediate officer in charge of the schools should be a trained supervisor who will be able to examine the boys regularly and to hold training classes for teachers. Attempts should be made to bring over by persuasion all maktabs and pathshalas under Municipal control.

57. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 19th March, referring to the formation in Bengal of an Association for the diffusion of practical education in Agriculture, &c., remarks that it would be well if the people of the Punjab will follow the lead of the Bengalis.

Education in Bengal.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 19th March, 1908.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

58. While pointing out that the failure of the monsoon has always been the cause of famine in the country, the Zamindar-wa-kashtkar (Bijnor), for January, (received on the 13th March) remarks that the introduction of railways into India has not only facilitated the export of grain, but has also greatly assisted the import of grain in time of need. The only difference the railway has made between the past and the present condition of India is that formerly as there were no easy means of transferring the products of one country to another or from one province to another, the products of every district which were usually numerous and plentiful were necessarily consumed and utilised by the people of the place, but now they have to share them with the people of other provinces and countries.

Famine and the storage of grain.

ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR, January, 1908.

He remarks that on the other hand the exports from India raise the value of the soil, and that if Government stop exports agriculture is sure to suffer.

He recognises that India cannot live on money in the absence of corn, and recommends therefore the preparation of Mulvas (stores) as was done in former days to be utilised in time of famine in the land. Experience shows that there is famine in India every ten years, and so it would be better if the question of laying up stores were considered every eight years.

59. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 19th March, publishes some poems under the heading 'Holi during famine' in which the writer deplores the present condition of the country when the people cannot enjoy their festivals owing to famine and exorbitant taxes, and when plague is carrying off so many of their friends.

Famine and the Holi.

OUDH PUNCH, 19th March, 1908.

60. A correspondent in the Almora Akhbar of the 29th February, (received on the 16th March) deplores the wasteful and imprudent extravagance of Indians, and says that at the present time, when India has been reduced to utter indigence under a foreign yoke, and labours under chronic famine and plague, the people should exercise more discretion and, instead of wasting money on personal enjoyments, should relieve the distress of their famine-stricken brethren.

Famine and Indian extravagance.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 29th February, 1908.

61. The Jedd-o-Jehad, (Shahabad), of the 16th March, bewails the deplorable condition of the zamindars during the famine, as they cannot recover their rents from their tenants, and consequently run into debt, and as a result probably lose their ancestral property in a short time. The editor expresses the hope that Government will do something to relieve them.

Famine and the zamindars.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 16th March, 1908.

(g).—General.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 29th February, 1908.

Agitation against foreign sugar.

62. A correspondent in the Almora Akhbar of the 29th Februa on the 16th March) reproduces portion said to have been circulated last year by Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya on 'country sugar versus foreign suga quotations were made from the Encyclopædia Britannica, Dr. Bray's (?) of Arts, Manufactures and Mines and Dr. Haschel's (?) Food and its A to prove that foreign sugar was refined by means of bovine blood and b other objectionable ingredients and that its use was injurious to the hea

The correspondent, pointing out that the use of foreign sugar b contrary to the religion of Indians, is also a drain upon their money them to refrain from using it, thereby protecting their religion and ret money in the country itself.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 29th February, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

63. One Har Lall Sah Gangola contributes a poem under the h appeal to the children of India" to t Akhbar of the 29th February (received o March), of which the following is a literal translation :—'Liste women of India, to the whole of this appeal of mine. Mark, India has and helpless. All of our wealth finds its way to foreign countries; the was formerly replete with riches is now, alas! penniless. The people various calamities, from virulent epidemics, and from severe famine money. The one remedy for all this is never to give (your) money countries. You should give up all the clothes manufactured in foreig using only those of indigenous make. Understand and think over should buy piece goods of your country alone even at some sacrifice, so a age their production and sale, and look upon this as your (only) suppor

If you care for the well-being of India, you should sink your q cultivate unity and then you will be victorious in the world.'

NAGRI PRACHARAK, March, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

64. The Nágri Prachárak (Lucknow), for March, contains a po "Motherland," in which the writer dwe blessings that the motherland confers upo ren. He condemns those Indians who have brought ruin upon their the use of foreign-made articles, and eulogizes those who use swadesh serve the country even at the risk of their lives.

BHARATBASI, 10th March, 1908.

A swadeshi meeting at Lucknow.

65. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 10th March, reports tha meeting was held under the presidency Piarey Lal Sharma, M.A., on Monday house of Hakim Abdul Aziz, in Mashukganj, Lucknow. Babu Shar editor of Swarajya, Babu Kashi Prasad, Babu Banarsi Lal and Babu Sahai were the chief speakers at the meeting once again aroused the int Lucknow public in the swadeshi movement. The meeting was a very cr

ABHYUDAYA, 13th March, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

66. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th March, repro article from the Basumati, entitled "th gift," in which the writer ridicules anti and others who make very high sounding professions of loyalty to Gove the sake of being honoured with titles.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th March, 1908.

Holi and the swadeshi movement.

67. One Madhava Shukla contributes a poem to the Abhyudaya of the 13th March, in which he exhorts men to celebrate the Holi festival in swad using swadeshi clothes and dyes and casting off their foreign made garm should affectionately embrace one another and bow to their motherla occasion. He remarks that they should encourage the swadeshi movem less of hardships and sufferings, of the frowns of the enemy and even ment. He deplores the fact that their apathy to politics led to the con country passing into the hands of foreigners, and invokes a blessing Tilak, Lajpat Rai, Dadabhai Naoroji, Bipin Chandar Pal, Gokhal Indian leaders for rendering valuable services to their country. In c prays to God to make India once more prosperous and happy.

COPYRIGHT PHOTOGRAPH-NOT TO BE REPRODUCED PHOTOGRAPHICALLY WITHOUT PERMISSION OF THE INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

Reference IOR ~~101~~ L/R/5/83

(g).—General.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 29th February, 1908.

Agitation against foreign sugar.

62. A correspondent in the Almora Akhbar of the 29th February (received on the 16th March) reproduces portions of a leaflet said to have been circulated last year by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya on 'country sugar versus foreign sugar,' in which quotations were made from the Encyclopædia Britannica, Dr. Bray's (?) Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures and Mines and Dr. Haschel's (?) Food and its Adulterations, to prove that foreign sugar was refined by means of bovine blood and bone-ash and other objectionable ingredients and that its use was injurious to the health.

The correspondent, pointing out that the use of foreign sugar besides being contrary to the religion of Indians, is also a drain upon their money appeals to them to refrain from using it, thereby protecting their religion and retaining their money in the country itself.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 29th February, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

63. One Har Lall Sah Gangola contributes a poem under the heading "An appeal to the children of India" to the Almora Akhbar of the 29th February (received on the 16th March), of which the following is a literal translation :—'Listen, men and women of India, to the whole of this appeal of mine. Mark, India has become poor and helpless. All of our wealth finds its way to foreign countries; the land which was formerly replete with riches is now, alas! penniless. The people suffer from various calamities, from virulent epidemics, and from severe famine for want of money. The one remedy for all this is never to give (your) money to foreign countries. You should give up all the clothes manufactured in foreign countries, using only those of indigenous make. Understand and think over this. You should buy piece goods of your country alone even at some sacrifice, so as to encourage their production and sale, and look upon this as your (only) support.

If you care for the well-being of India, you should sink your quarrels and cultivate unity and then you will be victorious in the world.'

NAGRI PRACHARAK, March, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

64. The Nágri Prachárak (Lucknow), for March, contains a poem entitled "Motherland," in which the writer dwells upon the blessings that the motherland confers upon her children. He condemns those Indians who have brought ruin upon their country by the use of foreign-made articles, and eulogizes those who use swadeshi goods and serve the country even at the risk of their lives.

BHARATBASI, 10th March, 1908.

A swadeshi meeting at Lucknow.

65. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 10th March, reports that a swadeshi meeting was held under the presidency of Pandit Piarey Lal Sharma, M.A., on Monday last at the house of Hakim Abdul Aziz, in Mashukganj, Lucknow. Babu Shanti Narayan, editor of Swarajya, Babu Kashi Prasad, Babu Banarsi Lal and Babu Rameshwar Sahai were the chief speakers at the meeting once again aroused the interest of the Lucknow public in the swadeshi movement. The meeting was a very crowded one.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th March, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

66. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 13th March, reproduces a long article from the Basumati, entitled "the Christmas gift," in which the writer ridicules anti-swadeshists and others who make very high sounding professions of loyalty to Government for the sake of being honoured with titles.

ABHYUDAYA, 13th March, 1908.

Holi and the swadeshi movement.

67. One Madhava Shukla contributes a poem to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 13th March, in which he exhorts his countrymen to celebrate the Holi festival in swadeshi fashion, using swadeshi clothes and dyes and casting off their foreign made garments. They should affectionately embrace one another and bow to their motherland on this occasion. He remarks that they should encourage the swadeshi movement, regardless of hardships and sufferings, of the frowns of the enemy and even of imprisonment. He deplores the fact that their apathy to politics led to the control of their country passing into the hands of foreigners, and invokes a blessing on Messrs. Tilak, Lajpat Rai, Dadabhai Naoroji, Bipin Chandar Pal, Gokhale and other Indian leaders for rendering valuable services to their country. In conclusion he prays to God to make India once more prosperous and happy.

68. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 14th March, referring to the prohibition of swadeshi lectures in the Allahabad Chauk, remarks that for many years past lectures have regularly been delivered in the Chauk, and no one raised any objection. Recently however it has been objected that while such lectures are being delivered traffic is interfered with. The reason for this objection is not apparent. "Is this a manifestation of the Government sympathy with the swadeshi movement? Is it in this manner that the Government is teaching us the lesson of honest swadeshism and devotion to Britain. Well, the order of the ruler is to be obeyed even unto death but very foolish are those who are proud of the royal crown. Heaven can in a moment relegate to the wing of a Huma (a bird of good omen) the duty of driving off flies."

SWARAJYA, 14th March, 1908.

Swadeshi lectures in Allahabad.

69. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 14th March, publishes a poem by Munshi Kalka Prasad of Lucknow in which he compares the present degraded condition of India with its prosperity in the ancient times and exhorts the people of India to revive their industries and to use swadeshi articles only.

SWARAJYA, 14th March, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

70. The following is an extract from the Citizen (Allahabad), of March 15th:—

CITIZEN, 15th March, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

"LORD SAVE US FROM THESE GENUINE FRIENDS!

"The light in which the alien bureaucracy and its watchdogs, the Anglo-Indian papers, regard the manifestations and activities of new India is well known to all. But we do not blame them for it is in human nature to view with alarm the self-consciousness of an awakened people, whom they have been domineering for a century and a half, and whom it is necessary chiefly for their commercial supremacy to put down as long as possible. We are certainly not impressed at the attitude of certain Anglo-Indians who are always on the look out to descredit the swadeshi movement by associating it with rowdiness. The means at once adopted by them to destroy the once flourishing cotton and silk industry of the country, though they have been sanctioned by a Christian spirit, deserve to be associated with something yet worse than rowdyism; and thus it is quite in the fitness of things that the columns of Anglo-Indian papers should now overflow with the milk of human kindness for keeping the swadeshi movement within the bounds of "honesty and genuineness." The Indian Daily News, while commenting luminously on the Tuticorin strike comes out with the assertion:—"The way this affair at Tuticorin has been advertised far and wide as an example of swadeshi effort must have caused sorrow to all sympathisers with genuine swadeshism." Indeed, we do not doubt that the affair at Tuticorin has struck the heart of some benevolent Anglo-Indians with dismay, but it is only in fixing the reasons for this benevolent sorrow that we differ in spite of the protestations of our well wishers, and cannot forbear crying, Lord, save us from these genuine friends!"

71. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) in its combined issue of the 8th and 16th March, notes with satisfaction the sympathy expressed by the Deputy Commissioner of Hissar towards the swadeshi movement and the political aspirations of the people of India.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th and 16th March, 1908.

The swadeshi movement in Hissar.

72. The Al-Bashir (Etawah) of the 17th March, referring to the comments of the Hindu press on the Etawah incident, remarks that they are entirely wrong in presuming that the Musalmans at large have conspired together to vilify their Hindu brethren, and that the Government wants to hush up the matter. The Government, the editor says, has done its best to bring the culprit to justice.

AL-BASHIR, 17th March, 1908.

The Etawah conspiracy.

73. The Musafir (Agra), of the 15th March, referring to the renewal of the criminal proceedings against Khalil, the accused in the Etawah forgery case, complains that the Government does not seem to be in earnest about the matter, and has no intention of unravelling the mystery or of having the man Khalil punished. The man is still at large, and even if he is convicted he cannot be imprisoned. The Government pleads that it cannot find any trace of the man and so cannot bring him to justice.

MUSAFIR, 15th March, 1908.

The Etawah conspiracy.

The editor doubts whether Government is sincere in the matter, and says that when it could get the Punjab political offenders arrested in Nepal, it ought to be able to arrest this man too.

QULQUL, 28th February, 1908.

74. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 28th February, received on the 19th March, notes with satisfaction the opening of a Musalman banking concern in Lahore and expresses the hope that the Musalmans will take advantage of it.

Musalmans and usury.

SWARAJYA, 14th March, 1908.

75. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 14th March, notes with satisfaction the release of Babu B. C. Pal, but complains that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji was not present to welcome him.

The release of B. C. Pal.

ADVOCATE, 15th March, 1908.

76. Referring to the recent Weaving Conference in Madras, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of Sunday, 15th March, notes with satisfaction that Government delegates attended from several provinces, and that all who took part in the discussions were eminently practical in their suggestions. He approves of the resolutions of the conference, but suggests that more attention should be given to the instruction of the young in the use of all modern weaving appliances. Trained parties, too, he thinks, with a set of improved looms, should be sent out into all weaving centres for purposes of demonstration. The introduction of western methods, he believes, would be a great advantage, but confining weavers to work in factories would, he points out, break up the present cottage system and disintegrate families. To prevent this he advocates that model cottages be attached to weaving factories so that weavers could live near at hand and keep their families intact.

The Weaving Conference.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th and 16th March, 1908.

77. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) in its combined issues of 8th and 16th March, notes with satisfaction the dismissal of Mr. Alfred Nundy from the editorship of the Tribune (Lahore) and ascribes it to his malicious attacks on Lala Lajpat Rai.

Mr. Alfred Nundy and the Tribune.

HIND, 19th March, 1908.

78. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 19th March, reports that the Postmaster of Lucknow recently became angry with Babu Chiranji Lal, head parcel clerk, and threw several packets (?) at him, some of which struck him.

Assault on a subordinate by a postmaster.

The editor expresses the hope that the Postmaster-General will look into the matter.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

MUFID-I-AM, 10th March, 1908.

79. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 10th March, referring to the frequency of collisions on Indian Railways, suggests the advisability of having double lines on all railways.

Railway accidents.

CITIZEN, 15th March, 1908.

80. The editor of the "Citizen" (Allahabad), of the 15th March, comments on the reticence of Railway officials as regards accidents, and expresses the opinion that the public have a right to know the damage done to rolling stock and the number of persons injured or killed in every railway accident.

Railway accidents.

VII.—Post Office.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 19th March, 1908.

81. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 19th March, referring to the grievances of the telegraphists, suggests that the number of signallers should be increased and the night programme changed to meet their convenience.

Telegraphists' grievances.

The editor expresses the opinion that it would be unwise to introduce Mr. Newland's proposals in the Lahore telegraph office.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

NIGAMAGAM CHANDRIKA, February, 1908.

82. Referring to the interview of Rai Bahadur Pandit Maharaj Narayan Sheopuri, president of Bharat Dharam Mahamandal with His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, Eastern Bengal and Assam, in January last, in connection with the work of the Sabha in that province, the Nigamagam Chandrika (Benares) for February, (received on the 12th March), expresses a hope that the Seditious Meetings Act in force in Eastern Bengal will not interfere with religious meetings there, as Government is merciful and just.

The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal in Eastern Bengal.

NIGAMAGAM CHANDRIKA, February, 1908.

83. The Nigamagam Chandrika (Benares), for February, (received on the 12th March) publishes the following :—

Meeting of the Managing Committee of the Mahamandal.

The Managing Sub-Committee of the Bharatdharam Mahamandal held a meeting in its office (Kashmir Bhawan), at Benares, on Tuesday, the 24th December 1907. The following is a memo. of the business transacted :—

1. Raja Shahsi Shekhareshwar Deva Sharma, Rai Bahadur of Tahirpur, was elected president of the meeting.
2. The minutes of the last committee (?) were passed.
3. With reference to the resolution No. 8 passed at the last meeting held on the 8th November 1907, a letter received from His Highness the Maharaja Bahadur of Darbhanga in connection with the relief and protection of orphans, was read out. It was unanimously resolved that the following gentlemen should be asked to form a committee to carry out the work referred to :—
   (1) The Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal, Benares.
   (2) Seth Moti Chand, rais of Azamgarh, Benares.
   (3) P. Ram Chanda Nayak Daji Kalia, Benares.
   (4) Babu Nidva Narayan Singh, M.A., Benares.
   (5) Maha Mahopadhyaya Pandit Sudhakar Dwivedi, Benares.
   (6) Babu Somnath Bhaduri, Benares.
   (7) Rai Bahadur Pandit Maharaj Narayan Sheopuri, President of the Mahamandal.
   (8) Babu Tula Pati Singh, Private Secretary to the Maharaja Bahadur of Darbhanga.
   (9) Jyotishi Babu Shiva Prakash Dwivedi, Muttra.
   (10) Babu Ramanuj Dyal, Meerut.
   (11) The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur, Seth Nehal Chand, rais of Muzaffarnagar
   (12) The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Sri Ram, C.I.E. Lucknow.
   (13) Pandit Raj Nath, retired Sub-Judge, Allahabad.
   (14) Raja Peari Mohan Mukerji, C.I.E., Uttarpara, Calcutta.
   (15) Dewan Harish Chandar, Rai Bahadur, Kapurthala.

4. The resolutions in connection with the Sanskrit Examination of the meeting of the Committee of Brahmavarta Mandal held on the 19th October were read out. It was unanimously resolved that the Central Office of the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal should submit a memorial on the subject of the examination to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces.

5. A resolution was passed expressing the sorrow of the members of the sub-committee at the death of the Maharani of Damraon who was a generous patron of the Bharatdharam Mahamandal and a vote of condolence was unanimously passed to the deceased Maharani's family members.

6. Gratification was expressed at the glad tidings that a son had been born to His Highness the Maharaja Bahadur of Darbhanga, and God was entreated to bestow long life, fame, and greatness on the Maharaj Kumar and His Highness was congratulated on the happy event.

7. The meeting broke up with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 29th February, 1908.

84. The editor of the Almora Akhbar in the issue of the 29th February, (received on the 16th March), deploring squabbles between Hindus and Muhammadans during the Moharram, remarks that Hindus and Muhammadans alike being inhabitants of India, should have brotherly love towards each other, and that the festivals of each party should be celebrated without any molestation or obstruction from the other.

The Moharram.

AN-NAJM, 11th March, 1908.

85. An-Najm (Lucknow), of the 11th March, while describing in detail the quarrel between the Shias and the Sunnis on the occasion of the last Moharram procession in Lucknow, holds the local police entirely responsible for the disturbance.

Moharram riots at Lucknow.

The editor points out that the police from the Kotwal down to the constables were all Sunnis ; that they helped their brethren; excited them to assault the Shias whose numbers were small and connived at the arrest of Sunnis on the spot.

In conclusion he remarks that the case is now pending trial in the court of the City Magistrate and expresses the hope that the trying Magistrate will consider the matter very carefully and do full justice to the aggressors and to the police who have taken advantage of their official position to pay off their religious grudges against the Shias.

TAFRIH, 14th March, 1908.

Moharram riots at Lucknow.

86. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th March, referring to the Moharram riots at Lucknow, remarks that neither the Shias nor the Sunnis are responsible for them, but that the whole blame rests on the police. All the injured persons state that they were belaboured by the police. If the police had not interfered, the casualities would not have been so numerous.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th March, 1908.

Use of foreign sugar and adulterated ghi on the Parasnath Hill.

87. A correspondent writing to the Jain Gazette (Deoband) of the 16th March, complains that foreign sugar and ghi adulterated with fat is freely consumed on the Parasnath Hill by pilgrims, and suggests that steps should be taken to provide them with country sugar and pure ghi.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th March, 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

88. One Suraj Mal Jain of Harda, district Hoshangabad, announces in the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 16th March, that a society has been formed at Harda under the title "Shri Sammed Shikhar Rakshakmarg Pradarshak Samiti, the object of which is to point out to the Jain community ways and means of protecting the Parasnath Hill and of carrying on agitation in connection with the hill on constitutional lines. Jains of all three sections are eligible for its membership.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th March, 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

89. The Jain Gazette (Deoband) of the 16th March, contains a letter to the editor by one Har Narayan Jain on the Parasnath Hill question. The following is a literal translation :—

Religion is a source of worldly enjoyment as well as a means of attaining of the highest beautitude. A man without religion is a beast. Religion supports the entire universe and all human beings. It is therefore our first duty to strengthen its position, for if what supports us were to become weak, we would be sure to fall down. It is our duty to hold Shikharji dearer even than our lives and to protect it as the place where our innumerable mahátmás attained nirvána for it is our holy place too. All the Jains were alarmed as soon as they heard the proposal to construct bungalows for Europeans on their most revered hill, yet they counted much on the sense of justice of the officials. But seeing the policy of the officials, they were bitterly disappointed and their eyes were opened. Many learned men and journalists have already expressed their opinion as to the means whereby this calamity may be averted, but mere cries will avail nothing for a sick man. He must be given proper medicine in time. All of us are sailing in the same boat of religion, and it is the duty of all of us to save the boat which is sinking. Accordingly we should pay greater attention to the measures for the protection of the Shikharji to be discussed in the forthcoming session of the Indian Jain Conference. I make the following few suggestions in the hope that the secretary of the conference will invite the attention of the members to their consideration :—

1. The boycott of foreign sugar by the Jain community.
2. The propagation of the swadeshi movement.
3. Agitation for the protection of Shikharji.
4. The formation of a committee for the protection of the sacred hill and the appointment of preachers to carry on the agitation regarding it.
5. The collection of funds for giving effect to the last proposal.
6. The conversion of the Jain Gazette into a daily paper so as to ensure thorough agitation.
7. Agitation in English daily papers.
8. The promotion of amity in the Jain community, especially between its two sections.

90. The Nigamagam Chandrika (Benares), for February (received on the 12th March), contains a satire on Arya Samajists in which the writer challenges them to support their doctrines and practices such as niyog and widow-marriage by the authority of shastras, or else to renounce Arya Samaj. He also indulges in vituperative language against Swami Dayanand whom he describes as a good liver in the guise of a sanyasi.

A satire on Arya Samajists.

NIGAMAGAM CHANDRIKA, February, 1908.

91. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th March, appeals to the public for funds towards the Arya Samaj Gurukul at Farrukhabad with a view to making it a model college in which such instruction may be provided as will produce educated and devout men to carry the banner of Arya Samaj into every part of the world, making it a universal religion.

The Arya Samaj Gurukul at Farrukhabad.

ARYA MITRA, 16th March, 1908.

92. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for January (received on the 14th March), denounces the deprecatory remarks which Pandita Gaitri Devi, a female Arya Samajist made on Brahmans in the course of her lectures at Allahabad, and expresses the hope that Arya Samajists will give up their religious bigotry and will refrain from indulging in disparaging language regarding Brahmans, as the present is not the time to allow such differences between orthodox Hindus and Arya Samajists.

Pandita Gaitri Devi in Allahabad.

HINDI PRADIP, January, 1908.

93. The Nigamagam Chandrika (Benares) for February (received on the 12th March), contains a long article entitled 'The ancient religion of India,' in which the writer deplores the present degradation of India in almost every respect, in valour, prowess, learning, intelligence and morality and that too in the country which once mainly contributed to the prosperity and civilisation of the world. He laments the fact that India has at present fallen very low from her once high and proud position and that her land is sullied by many non-Aryans, and attributes this degradation to the Indians falling off from their ancient religion and being entrapped into modern false religions. (The writer seems to refer to the Arya Samaj in particular). In conclusion, he remarks that, if Indians are desirous of being restored to their old high position, they should stick to their ancient religion as inculcated in the Vedas and Shastras and other scriptures, and should not be deceived by distorted interpretations of them.

The ancient religion of India.

NIGAMAGAM CHANDRIKA, February, 1908.

94. An-Najm (Lucknow), of the 11th March, alluding to the request of the Asnai Ashri (Delhi) of the 1st March, asking the permission of Government to pronounce the tabarra openly, remarks that Government cannot be so foolish as to allow such a request when the object is to wound the religious feelings of a community of its subjects, especially as the Sultan of Turkey has been obliged to forbid the practice of pronouncing the tabarra in this manner.

Pronouncing the tabarra.

AN-NAJM, 11th March, 1908.

95. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 13th March, learns with gratification that Sister Nivedita has commenced delivering her lectures on Vedanta in England, and remarks that Indians must be gratified to find Vedanta, their ancient religion, attracting the attention of foreigners.

Sister Nivedita's lectures on Vedanta in England.

HINDOSTHAN, 13th March, 1908.

96. The Mahavidyalaya Samachar (Hardwar) of the 15th March, notes with satisfaction the growing interest shown by the Arya Samajists in the Mahavidyalaya, Hardwar, and the active support it is receiving, notwithstanding the efforts of Lala Munshi Ram and his party to ruin it.

The paper also publishes articles and letters from correspondents, defending the conduct of Swami Darshanand, the founder of the Mahavidyalaya, and refuting the insinuations of the Gurukul party which is headed by Lala Munshi Ram, the principal of the Gurukul. One correspondent accuses Lala Munshi Ram of being ambitious, and states that his sole object is self-aggrandisement, whilst another accuses the Gurukul authorities of enticing away several boys from the Mahavidyalaya, and thinks that, if this state of things continues, the Arya Samaj movement will suffer.

The Mahavidyalaya, Hardwar.

MAHAVIDYALAYA SAMACHAR, 15th March, 1908.

MUSAFIR, 15th March, 1908.

97. The Musafir (Agra), of the 15th March, publishes a religious dialogue on the inspiration of the Koran in which the writer calls the prophet Mohammad Khair-ul-Makirin (i.e. the cleverest of deceivers).

Criticism of the inspiration of the Koran.

CITIZEN, 15th March, 1908.

98. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of 15th March, notes that a meeting presided over by Rai Bahadur Lala Baij Nath was held at Allahabad on the 13th March, to organise a permanent band of workers in the cause of famine relief. The question of organising a pabitra Holi at Allahabad came up before the meeting and was unanimously carried. The editor hopes that other cities and towns will imitate Allahabad in this respect. In conclusion he trusts that the proposed pabitra Holi will be free from the obscene practices that disgrace the Holi.

Famine relief and the Holi.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 15th March, 1908.

99. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 15th March, referring to the proposal made by Raja Rampal Singh in the Social Conference at Lucknow, to request the Government to put an end to the indecent songs during the Holi, remarks that if this request is made the Government will be led to believe that Indians cannot do anything themselves and are dependent on Government aid. Foreigners it is suggested, should not be informed of social evils and corruptions.

Social reform.

BHARATBASI, 17th March, 1908.

100. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad) of the 17th March, contains a poem in which the writer deplores the slaughter of cows in India and puts in a plea for their protection as being a very valuable asset in the agricultural and industrial economy of the country and as being an animal which is regarded as sacred by the Hindus.

Cow-killing.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

Nil.

ALLAHABAD:
The 23rd March, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 13 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 28th March, 1908.

CONTENTS.

Page.

I.—POLITICS.

(a)—Foreign:

1. Indians in America 289
2. The Anglo-Russian Convention ... 289
3. Japan and its progress 289
4. State of affairs in Turkey 289

(b)—Home:

5. The Tinnevelly riots 289
6. The Tinnevelly riots 289
7. The Tinnevelly riots 290
8. The Tinnevelly riots 290
9. The Tuticorin riots 290
10. Extremist and Moderate parties of India 290
11. The Congress fiasco 290
12. The Congress fiasco 290
13. The Congress fiasco 291
14. The Provincial Conference 291
15. The Bombay Provincial Conference ... 291
16. India past and present 291
17. Indian aspirations under British rule ... 291
18. Woman's cause in India 292
19. The Empire and the country ... 292
20. Babu Bipin Chandra Pal ... 292
21. Babu Bipin Chandra Pal 293
22. All India Muslim league 293
23. Army Expenditure 293
24. Mr. Clarke 293

Page.

25. Prosecution of the editor of the Barisal Hitaisi 293
26. The Anglo-Indian Press 293
27. The deputation of the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal 293
28. Lala Lajpat Rai 294
29. The duty of Indian journalists and preachers 294
30. Babu Bipin Chandra Pal on unity in India 294
31. Loyalty in students 294
32. The Decentralisation Commission ... 294

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

33. The Zakka Khel expedition 294
34. The Zakka Khel expedition 294
35. The Zakka Khel expedition 295
36. The Zakka Khel expedition 295

III.—NATIVE STATES.

37. Wasteful arrangements 295
38. The Hindi vernacular in Native States ... 295

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Judicial and Revenue:

39. Tours of Revenue officers 295
40. The status of Mukhtars 295
41. Powers of Honorary Magistrates to entertain complaints 296
42. The Behta Goshain cow-killing case ... 296

(b)—Police:

43. Double murder at Allahabad ... 297

		Page.
44.	Inconvenience to public owing to firing from fort at Allahabad	297
45.	Inconvenience to public owing to firing from fort at Allahabad	297
46.	Inconvenience to public owing to firing from fort at Allahabad	297
47.	Women in the Police force	298
48.	Plague observation of Ajmer station ...	298
49.	The holi and the police	298
	(c)—Finance and Taxation :
	Nil.
	(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :
50.	Paid chairman for the Allahabad Municipality	298
51.	Paid chairman for the Allahabad Municipality	298
52.	The Allahabad municipality	298
53.	Municipal arrangements for the sale of meat...	299
54.	Election of Muncipal Commissioners ...	299
55.	Municipalities	299
56.	The death-rate in Municipalities ...	299
57.	Municipalities in India	299
	(e)—Education :
58.	The School department of the Agra College	299
59.	The School department of the Agra College	299
60.	The School department of the Agra College	300
61.	The Tata Research Institute ...	300
62.	The Tata Research Institute... ...	300
63.	Education of Indians	300
64.	Entrance class examination of the Punjab University	300
65.	School boys punished	300
66.	Religious education for Kayasths ...	301
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :
67.	Disadvantages of the irrigation system...	301
68.	The famine	301
	(g)—General :
69.	The Bengali and swadeshi institutions ...	301
70.	The swadeshi movement	301
71.	Hopes and fears for Indian Industries ...	302
72.	Commerce and its blessings	302
73.	The industrial developments of India ...	302
74.	The Industrial Conference	302
75.	The treatment of the Indian sepoys ...	302
76.	America and India	303
77.	Regiments in Agra city	303
78.	A case against the editor of the Aftab ...	303
79.	Plague inoculation	303
80.	Trust of funds and Government ...	303
81.	Cow-killing	304
82	Nawab of Dacca	304
83.	Unani and Western systems of medicine	304
84.	The All-India Digambar Jain Conference	304
85.	Hindi and Urdu	304
86.	The Etawah incident	304
	V.—LEGISLATION.
	Nil.
	VI.—RAILWAY.
87.	Railways in India	304
88.	The East Indian Railway	305
89.	The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway ...	305
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
90.	The new value payable parcel form ...	305
91.	The new value payable parcel form ...	305
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
92.	The Holi festival	305
93.	The Holi festival	305
94.	Social reform	305
95.	Social reform in the Punjab... ...	306
96.	Position of women in India	306
97.	Position of women in India	306
98.	Influence of education on females ...	306
99.	A National poem...	306
100.	The Kayasth Temperance Association ...	306
101.	Pseudo-patriotism	306
102.	Lala Lajpat Rai on the Bhagwat Gita ...	306
103.	Prostitutes and Nau-chandi fair ...	307
104.	The Shias and the Sunnis at Lucknow ...	307
105.	Inter-sectarian marriages	307
106.	The Bharat Dharam Mahamandal ...	307
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
107.	The Din Ellahi of Akbar and its lessons to Modern India ...	307

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. Saint Nihal Singh contributes an article to the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March entitled "Indians in America", in which he traces the origin of emigration from India and discusses the prospectsof Indian immigrants in America. The emigrant class, he thinks, is drawn chiefly from the military classes of North Western India. The reason for this, he points out, is obvious. Soldiers on receiving their discharge are unable to settle down to the hum drum existence of village life, and are forced to seek an outlet for their enlarged ideas in emigration. The Indian peasant, he notes, is the next class that swells the ranks of emigrants. Small holdings and bad years, he thinks are responsible for this. The first lot of Indian workmen emigrants landed in America, sometime between 1895 and 1900, and were favourably received being looked on as a curiosity ; but as other Indians followed in their steps Americans began to get dismayed, and the cry of the 'Hindu peril' was raised. He remarks that since that time Indians in America have been forced to leave town after town, and endure all kinds of hardships, but that latterly various American ladies and gentlemen have been exerting themselves on their behalf. The issue he describes as doubtful and as depending on the result of the conflict between Americans and Asiatics on the Pacific coast.

Indians in America.

MODERN REVIEW, March, 1908.

2. Referring to the silence of the Amir in connection with the Anglo-Russian Convention, the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 27th March, expresses doubt as to the foresight of the English Government in not consulting the Amir before the ratification of the convention.

The Anglo-Russian Convention.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 27th March, 1908.

3. While commending the progress and success achieved by Japan in all matters of social, intellectual, moral and national development ; the feelings of mutual love and sympathy that actuates her people from the King downwards; the self-sacrifice and undaunted spirit of her people as displayed in the late wars with Russia, the Kanauj Punch of the 23rd March, remarks that Japan has taught a lesson of humility to the white races of the West.

Japan and its progress.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 23rd March, 1908.

4. Alluding to the misunderstanding existing between the Sultan of Turkey and his people, the Kanauj Punch of the 23rd March remarks that the Sultan is much influenced by Russia and certain of his selfish statesmen, and that, if he will not yield to the request of the people and insists in putting restrictions in the way of the Parliament, it is likely to prove very disastrous for him.

State of affairs in Turkey.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 23rd March, 1908.

(b).—Home.

5. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 24th March, referring to the riots in Southern India, expresses the opinion that the cowardly officials of Tuticorin and Tinnevelly are as much to blame for the riots as the people, and that they acted in such a manner as to cause a breach of the peace, which they professed to be anxious to prevent. The editor remarks that there is no proof of the alleged connection between the Coral Mill strike and the riots, and that the officials are apparently labouring under a misapprehension.

The Tinnevelly riots.

BHARATBASI, 24th March, 1908.

6. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th March, referring to the Tinnevelly riots, writes :—"Such outbursts are to be regretted, but the rulers should have some regard for the feelings of the people. The accounts show clearly that there is no sedition in India ; it is only discontent and the objectionable acts of the officers which produce slight irritation."

The Tinnevelly riots.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 24th March, 1908.

ADVOCATE, 26th March, 1908.

The Tinnevelly riots.

7. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 26th March, attributes the Tinnevelly riots to the action of the District Magistrate in ordering the arrest of Mr. Chedambaram, and thinks that he should be held responsible for the damage done in the town. The editor notes with approval that the Governor of Madras has agreed to receive a deputation from Tinnevelly and trusts that an exhaustive enquiry will be made into the causes that led the people to take the law in their own hands.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th March, 1908.

Tinnevelly riots.

8. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th March, referring to the riots in Southern India, remarks that the indiscretion and carelessness of the authorities are the chief causes of the riots, inasmuch as had they allowed the people to hold their meeting in honour of the release of B. C Pal, their enthusiasm and excitement would have found an outlet, and would have never ended in rioting, as is evident from the fact that similar meetings in Calcutta passed off very quietly and calmly.

The editor remarks that riots have never taken place after holding a meeting, but only when it has been stopped, and that the presence of the police at a meeting often induces its terminating in a riot. He concludes with the remark that Government may well punish the real culprit, but that it should not bring into trouble innocent men, especially those who take part in political and swadeshi agitation, or else Southern India will become a second Eastern Bengal.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th March, 1908.

The Tuticorin riots.

9. Referring to the Tuticorin riots, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of 26th March, remarks that if the authorities had left matters alone there would have been no trouble of any kind. The proceedings instituted before the Sessions Judge were, he considers, absolutely illegal. The leaders of the populace when arrested, should, he states, have been released on bail. When they were released by the High Court, the district authorities instead of admitting their own error, rearrested them on a non-bailable offence. He regrets to notice that Tuticorin has been converted into a stronghold of unrest and discontent.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, March, 1908.

The Extremist and Moderate parties of India.

10. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for March, reproduces a letter from the Indian correspondent of the National Review on the political situation in India, past, present and future, in which the writer gives a brief account of the two parties, Extremists and Moderates, that exist in India to-day and then relates how the Indian National Congress was wrecked and the two parties divided. He begins by stating that the general idea that Bengal is the centre of Indian politics is wrong. The effective control of all political agitation is not, he says, in Bengal nor in the Punjab, but in Bombay and Poona. Calcutta may make all the noise but the wires are pulled from Western India. The writer then gives a brief account of Mr. Tilak and the position he occupies in politics at present in India. He considers him the apostle of anarchy and holds him entirly responsible for wrecking the Congress. He believes that, though Mr. Tilak has been banished by the Moderates from their assemblies, he will once again gather his partisans around him and make himself more formidable than ever. The position, the writer believes, is fraught with grave consequences to the empire. A complete disregard of both parties, he thinks, will hasten the advent of trouble in India, but a little judicious support given to the Moderates by recognising their aims and ambitions will, he suggests, prove an effective check to the unlimited views of the Extremists, and perhaps keep them within safe bounds.

NAGRI PRACHARAK, March, 1908.

The Congress fiasco.

11. The Nagri Pracharak (Lucknow), for March, referring to the Congress, remarks that the gratuitous criticism and advice of Anglo-Indian newspapers on the congress given at its breaking up at Surat are due to the fact that they are afraid of the Congress passing from a piece of passionless machinery into a living body, and warns the people against their insidious suggestions to keep the congress in the hands of the Moderates, who cannot be real leaders, in asmuch as they do not represent the people and merely care for their own personal aggrandizement.

QULQUL, 13th March, 1908.

The Congress fiasco.

12. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 13th March, reviews the incidents that led to the failure of the Congress, and holds the Moderates entirely to blame for it, entirely exculpating Mr. Tilak and his party.

13. The Al-Bashir (Etawah) of the 14th March, publishes an article in which the writer reviews an article in the Zamana on the Congress fiasco, and remarks that the members have conclusively proved that they are unfit to carry on the work of government sensibly, and advises the Mussalman adherents of the Congress to sever their connection with it, as the Hindu members cannot agree among themselves.

AL-BASHIR, 14th March, 1908.

The Congress fiasco.

14. While pointing out that the various provincial conferences have their direct origin in the National Congress, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 23rd March, announces its disagreement with the insolent policy of the Extremist leaders, and suggests that the best policy is to sub-missively approach Government and ask for the rights of the people, and to be always loyal, sincere and in sympathy with it.

OUDH AKHBAR, 23rd March, 1908.

The Provincial Conferences.

He remarks that Government on its part can never suppress the agitated feelings of the people by a harsh and unsympathetic policy, nor by repressive measures, and, that it will be for its interest to win over the people by kindness, justice and sympathy, without regard for racial or sectarian prejudice.

Referring to the views of Mr. Nevinson, Dr. Rutherford and Mr. Keir Hardie, and to the disregard of the movement in the Parliament to appoint an official Commission to enquire into the causes of the existing unrest in India, the editor remarks that such commissions have never done any good to Indians, and that the English Government moreover will never appoint such a commission, as it will clearly bring to light the abuses and shortcomings of the Government as expressed by Mr. Keir Hardie and other sympathisers of India.

15. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of 26th March, states that a new departure, in the shape of a swadeshi bazar, is to be made in connection with the next Bombay provincial conference to be held at Dhulia. The Collector, he notes, is in favour of the movement, and the Agricultural department has sanctioned a sum of Rs. 3,000 for agricultural exhibits. A proposal too has been made to hold a cattle show, and it is rumoured that the District Board will give its support. As regards the political programme, he remarks that a compromise has been effected; boycott resolutions are to be dropped, while self-government and national education are to be discussed.

ADVOCATE, 26th March, 1908.

The Bombay Provincial Conference.

16. In an article entitled "Reflections on the East India Company's charter of 1813," the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad), for March, points out that the present state of India is attributable to the charter of 1813. Before the advent of the English to India, he remarks, other nations had conquered and ruled the country, and did not attempt to enforce their national institutions and peculiarities. The English however, he says, being a nation of shopkeepers, were not satisfied with having the control of the country in their hands, but also desired to monopolise its trade. To attain this end, he states the charter of 1813 was framed and on the advent of free trade the death knell of all Indian industries was rung. This charter, he remarks, was also disastrous to India from a moral point of view. Prior to its being granted Indians lived simply and had but few wants, but the introduction of English goods made them luxurious in their habits and depravedin their tastes. He states that the English did not confine themselves to the territory they had acquired, but with a view, to extend their trade all over India, they decided to exterminate the native states. The charter, he notes in conclusion, was framed for the benefit of England and the English, and the claims of India were not considered.

MODERN REVIEW, March, 1908

India, past and present.

17. In an article in the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for March, Mr. M. S. Damodaran Nair discusses Indian aspirations under British Rule. India of to-day, he points out, is not the India of fifty years ago, for Indians have advanced with the times, and are alive to their interests, and recognise that their national aims and ambitions can only be obtained by self-sacrifice. The saying that Indians are unfit for a larger share in the administration of the country reflects unfavourably, the writer thinks, on Britsh rule. Government, he believes, as at present constituted, is unable to cope with the growing aspirations of the country or has failed to adapt itself to the times, with the result, that there is a deep discontent all over India at the exclusion of Indians from all important offices. Another real cause of grievance that Indians have is the refusal of Government to hold the Civil Service examination simultaneously both in India and in England in spite of a resolution of the House of Commons on the subject. Then again the writer points out the martial spirit of the great fighting races of India are degenerating under British rule. The idea that by admitting Indians to the Military service Government would be courting another mutiny is, he thinks, absurd, as the educated Indian knows that his destiny is irrevocably bound up in that of England. Then again he notes that the lack of representation of the purely Indian element on the executive councils of the Imperial and Provincial Governments and of the Secretary of State is another of the grievances of educated Indians. In conclusion the writer hopes that the English nation will consider the desirability of revising the government of India in the light of modern progress, and of adapting it to the needs and requirements of the times.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, March, 1908.

Indian aspirations under British rule.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, March, 1908.

Woman's cause in India.

18. Mr. S. Subrahmanyam contributes an article to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for March, entitled "Woman's cause in India." He begins by pointing out that the restrictions imposed on the actions of Indian women at the present day originated in human conditions that have long since passed away. In early days, he says, women occupied an important position in India, but with the rise of the Musalman dynasty they were gradually deprived of their freedom and privileges, and confined to the homes of their husbands or fathers. The result, he states, was that women became a secondary consideration, and were given in marriage by their fathers before they were old enough to have anything to say in the matter. Hence, he says, originated the disastrous system of early marriage, followed in many instances by girl widowhood. But, he notes with pleasure, times are changing and the condition of Indian women is being considerably ameliorated. He urges that female education should be more generously encouraged, so that the women of India may fill their rightful spheres. He strongly advocates remarriage and the discountenance of child marriages, and points out the desirability of allowing women to be guided by their feelings as regards marriage.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, March, 1908.

The Empire and the country.

19. Reviewing "the Empire and the country," a volume of essays published by Mr. John Murray, the editor of the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for March, criticises articles contributed by Sir Francis Younghusband, Sir Charles Crosthwaite and Mr. Theodore Morison. Sir Francis Younghusband's essay is entitled "Our true relationship with India" and the essayist places a very high ideal before his countrymen. The editor of the Hindustan Review regrets that a competent Indian writer was not asked to contribute an article on the real state of India, as Anglo-Indians, he believes, are unable to understand the thoughts and feelings that are agitating the minds of educated Indians at the present day, with the result that though Sir Francis Younghusband's sentiments are admirable in the extreme, they are adopted in theory only by officials in India and not in practice. Sir Charles Crosthwaite's paper on the Past, Present, and Future of India, the editor considers an expression of the views of the average Anglo-Indian bureaucrat. The tone of the essay he characterises as antagonistic to the growing aspirations of the country, and considers the ill-disguised contempt with which the writer treats the claims of India a sure means of engendering dissatisfaction and strife. Indians, he notes, do not object to fair discussion, and can bear criticism even of a most trenchant nature, so long as it is actuated by the right kind of motive; but, he remarks, it is impossible to treat with forbearance, statements such as Sir Charles Crosthwaite's essay contains. The editor concludes by stating that the writer has shown that he is incapable of understanding the great moral and intellectual forces that are moulding the future of the East.

Mr. Morison's paper deals with Indian education. The editor is loud in his praises of the essay, and trusts that the gems of truth it contains will be recognised by Englishmen and Indians alike, and gain the consideration they deserve.

TAFRIH, 21st March, 1908.

Babu Bipin Chandra Pal.

20. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st March, notes with gratification the enthusiastic reception accorded to Babu Bipin Chandra Pal on his release from jail and remarks that his patriotism and unprecedented self-sacrifice in the cause of the country fully deserve the distinction and honour paid to him by the people of Bengal.

21. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th March, writes that Sir Gurudas Banerji is reported to have said at the anniversary meeting of the Bengal National Council of education that it would have been adequate punishment to have accorded Bipin Chandar Pal one day's imprisonment for the contempt of court, and remarks that had an ordinary man refused to give evidence before the court in an ordinary cause, he would not have been punished more severely. This shows, the editor remarks, that in political matters judges are generally actuated with motives of vengeance rather than with the sense of justice. He notes that Government must have become convinced that the man whom it punishes for his services in the cause of the country is all the more respected by the people and commands greater influence over them, and that they are estranged from it for having punished him severely, and inquires if, in the face of such facts, Government will still persist in its harmful policy of repression.

Babu Bipin Chandar Pal.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th March, 1908.

22. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 18th March, refers to the proceedings of the All-India Muslim League Committee convened at Aligarh on the 18th March, and to the resolution to send a sum of £100 to help the committee lately established in England under Maulvi Saiyid Amir Ali, to protect and defend the rights of Muhammadans of India in England.

All-India Muslim League.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE. 18th March, 1908.

23. The Muraqqa-i-Tasawwar (Fatehpur), of the 21st March, complains of the injustice of the Liberal Government in not relieving starving India of the excessive burden of army expenditure, in spite of the ratification of the Anglo-Russian Convention.

Army expenditure.

MURAQQA-I-TASAWWAR, 21st March, 1908.

24. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 21st March, referring to the precautions alleged to have been taken by Mr. Clarke, Magistrate of Mymensingh, to protect himself, remarks "Tyranny makes a man a coward, while justice makes him brave. It would be well if the present rulers were to leave off their policy of injustice towards the people, and treat them fairly, so that they may have no fear."

Mr. Clarke.

SWARAJYA. 21st March, 1908.

25. Referring to the encouraging words sent to Babu Durga Mohan Sen, the editor of the Barisal Hitaishi, by his wife and aged father, while undergoing trial for seditious publication, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 21st March, says that if the country can produce a few more of such well-wishers and patriotic persons, it will never fail to improve and become illustrious.

Prosecution of the editor of the Barisal Hitaishi.

SWARAJYA. 21st March, 1908.

26. Referring to the outcry raised against the swadeshi and boycott movements by the Anglo-Indian Press in general, and to the good services the latter renders in upholding the policy of the Government and in defending and protecting the rights of the English in this country, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 21st March, remarks that the attitude and policy of the Anglo-Indian Press is directly opposed to the interests of Indians, and further that the only good Indians have derived from it is that it has created and infused in the Native Press a spirit of patriotism, nationality and union, which foreshadow a happy future for India.

The Anglo-Indian Press.

OUDH AKHBAR, 21st March, 1908.

27. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 24th March, referring to the Hindu deputation, writes that it did not represent all the Hindus, and that it was a poor imitation of the Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy. He remarked the sentiments of loyalty which were expressed by the deputation were falsified by the attempt to wreck Sir A. Fraser's train and by stones being thrown at the Viceroy's motor car and that the interest in education shown by the Hindus had not led to any healthy results, but simply to the dissemination of sedition. The revival of Sanskrit which is a dead language will not, he considers, prove of much use, and it would be more profitable if time was devoted to modern languages and especially to Urdu.

The editor concludes by saying that it is a matter of wonder that the champions of Swaraj are now so loud in their assertions of loyalty.

The deputation of the Bharat Dharam Mahamandal.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE. 24th March, 1908.

ARYA MITRA, 24th March, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai.

28. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th March writes: – "At the time when the deportation of Lala Lajpat Rai was ordered, he wrote in a letter to his son that 'he should not be anxious about him as what God wills is always for good.'"

It is to be seen that every word of this sentence of Lala Lajpat Rai has turned out to be true. After his deportation an attempt was made to deal a heavy blow to the Arya Samaj by representing it to be a political body, but (fortunately) it has been performing its duties with great perseverance. Besides there were dissensions between the Gurukul and the College parties in the Punjab, but now friendly relations have been established between them. Generous hearted Lala Lajpat Rai attended the anniversary celebrations of the Gurukul at Kangri this year and delivered an eloquent speech on national education. He made a splendid exposition of what was meant by national education and spoke of the Gurukul as the only institution in India where brahmacharya (celibacy) was observed by students.

BHARATBASI, 24th March, 1908.

The duty of Indian journalists and preachers.

29. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 24th March, after pointing out that, if the Indians keep up their present revival for some considerable time, their economical future at least will be assured, and that if they relapse into sloth after their present display of energy they are bound to become extinct sooner or later, urges all Indian journalists and preachers, who consider it their duty to save their mother land, to keep the people awakened by means of public speeches and writings on religion and politics.

OUDH AKHBAR, 26th March, 1908.

Bipin Chandra Pal on unity in India.

30. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 26th March, publishes without any comments a lecture delivered last year by Babu Bipin Chandra Pal on 'Unity between Hindus and Muhammadans' at the Moslem Anjuman in Madras, dwelling at length on the great service done by the Musalmans to India, and exhorting both of them to sink their mutual rivalries, and form a united nation without losing their distinctive characteristics.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th March, 1908.

Loyalty in students.

31. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th March, referring to the Vice-Chancellor's speech at the convocation of the Calcutta University, in which he exhorted the student community to be loyal to Government, remarks that students can be made really loyal only when they are given high places in the administration of their country, and when arrangement is made to enable them, like the students of other civilized countries to live in ease and with honour in their after-life, and that the exhortation to loyalty is a mere cry in the wilderness so long as the present state of things continues, when they have to work for seven and eight hours like slaves in offices on miserable pittances, after having surmounted all the difficulties of University education.

OUDH AKHBAR, 28th March, 1908.

The Decentralisation Commission.

32. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 28th March, makes the following proposals for the consideration of the members of the Decentralisation Commission:—

(1) The Panchayat system which has now become extinct should be revived, so that the people may be saved from frequent litigation.

(2) Indians should be given a greater hand in the administration of their country, as they have given unmistakable proofs of their ability to carry on the work satisfactorily.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

ANJAN AKHBAR, 19th March, 1908.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

33. Referring to the recall of the force from the Zakka Khel expedition, the Anjan Akhbar, (Moradabad), of the 19th March, remarks that there is a general rumour that this withdrawal of the force from, and the settling of the dispute with the Zakka Khels at a nominal indemnity of 60 rifles is mainly due to the Amir's silence in connection with Anglo-Russian convention.

ADVOCATE, 22nd March, 1908.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

34. The Advocate (Lucknow), of Sunday, 22nd March, notes that, although the Zakka Khel expedition has returned covered with glory, raids still continue, and that great insecurity is felt all along the frontier. The generous treatment of the Afridis is, the editor thinks, regarded by the frontier tribesmen as a sign of weakness on the part of Government. It is rumoured, he states, that British residents on the Frontier are anxious that Afridis and Pathans should not be allowed across the border without a pass and that British border subjects should be allowed arms. Peace on the Frontier, he thinks, is not to be bought, but must be enforced at the point of the bayonet.

35. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th and the 23rd March, remarks that, considering the position and the insignificant number of the Zakka Khels, the expedition against them brings no credit or glory to the Government, and it would have been better had they been captured on the scene of committing dacoities and ravages and punished. CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 15th and 23rd March, 1908.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

The expedition against them, says the editor, is a useless waste of India's money, and might have been better spent in relieving the starving millions from the distress caused by the famine.

36. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 24th March, referring to a recent Afridi raid into Peshawar, suggests the advisability of repealing the Arms Act in the Frontier districts, so that the people may protect themselves when in danger, or of granting licenses without any objection. SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 24th March, 1908.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

III.—Native States.

37. The Sahifa (Bijnor) of the 19th March, notes with regret that Their Highnesses the Nizam of Hyderabad and the Nawab of Rampur waste their valuable time in composing verses and conducting mushairas, a pastime which was the cause of the downfall of the Lucknow and the Delhi dynasties. SAHIFA, 19th March, 1908.

Wasteful amusements.

The editor advises them to take a lesson from the Maharajas of Mysore, Travancore, Baroda, Gwalior, Kapurthala and Her Highness the Begam of Bhopal, and to spend their time in useful pursuits conducive to the happiness of their subjects such as collecting subscriptions for the Hedjaz railway.

38. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 21st March, notes with gratification that Rana Bhawani Singh of Jhalawar has ordered the Hindi vernacular to be used in place of Urdu in his territory from the 1st of October next, and expresses the hope that other Indian princes will follow in the footsteps of the Rana and order the Hindi vernacular to be introduced in their respective states in place of Urdu. HINDOSTHAN, 21st March, 1908.

The Hindi vernacular in Native States.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

39. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st March, brings to the notice of the Government, the following grievances of the people concerned in the tours of the revenue officers:— ZUL-QARNAIN, 21st March, 1908.

Tours of Revenue officers.

(1) They do not publish programmes of their tours and when they do so, they seldom adhere to them.

(2) Litigants find it very difficult to secure legal advice in out-of-the-way places.

(3) Places fixed for the hearing of cases are sometimes twenty-five miles from their residences.

(4) In such places there is no accommodation and people have to sleep under trees and do not get anything to eat.

(5) It is very difficult to get coolies or bullock-carts, as they are all appropriated by chaprasis.

40. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 22nd March, expresses astonishment at the recent ruling of the Allahabad High Court regarding the status of mukhtars. He points out that mukhtars have always appeared, pleaded and acted for their clients and that no one has questioned their right to do so. If the views of the Allahabad Judges are accepted as correct, he considers that mukhtars will come under the CITIZEN, 22nd March, 1908.

The status of Mukhtars.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

same category as uncertified persons, as they cannot appear in a case except with the permission of the court concerned. He trusts that the Legislature will deal with the matter in a satisfactory manner at an early date.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 23rd March, 1908.

Powers of Honorary Magistrates to entertain complaints.

41. Referring to the provision of the law that Honorary Magistrates should not be empowered to accept complaints independently of the District Magistrates, and that they should only try cases made over to them by District Magistrates, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 23rd March expresses disagreement with this view of the law, and remarks that there appears to be no necessity to interfere with or detract in any way from the powers of Honorary Magistrates.

He further remarks that there is no necessity to watch the work of these Magistrates very closely, because though they are not very well educated, their local knowledge of the facts of cases enables them to pass better judgments than stipendiary Magistrates.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th March, 1908.

The Behta Goshain cow-killing case.

42. Referring to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the Behta Goshain cow-killing case that cow-killing is not contrary to law and that every person has a right to slaughter cows within his house, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th March remarks sarcastically that it appeared quite absurd to the majestic (alishan) intellects of the High Court Judges that the old and deep-rooted prejudices of Hindus should be so much respected that cows should not be allowed to be slaughtered in places where they were not killed before.

"The village of Behta Goshain has a population of three thousand persons, of which the Muhammadans number less than a thousand, but in the opinion of Sir Y. Stanley and of Sir W. Burkitt, Muhammadans as also Christians have a full right to slaughter cows in their houses. So far the people were under the impression that the slaughter of cows was allowed in certain fixed places and the Muhammadans and Christians could not slaughter them wherever they liked; but now through the favour of the High Court one restriction on the slayers of cows has been removed. Now every Muhammadan and Christian can freely slaughter cows in his house even in the neighbourhood of the holiest of holy temples of Hindus, Buddhists or of Jains and the proud of religion Hindus and Jains till lately so proud of their religion, will have to sit in their houses and listen to the wailings of cows being slaughtered. The anxiety of the High Court Judges that the Hindus should not try to save the cows, impelled them to do a quite unlawful action. The counsel for the appellants had withdrawn their request for prohibiting Hindus from causing any interference, and in consequence Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, the counsel for the Hindus, refrained from discussing that point. But the Judges on their own initiative gratuitously gave an order in favour of the Muhammadans that the Hindus should not interfere with them in their slaughter of cows.

"Well, Hindus, you should now give up your pride of duty in protecting cows. The cows, the protection of which you considered to be part of your religion, and the slaughter of which you regarded as the highest sin, will now be slaughtered before your eyes, their bones will be seen scattered in front of the entrances of your houses, and the spirits of slaughtered cows will plaintively call upon you, and, when they quit the body will haunt you, while you will have no means of redress according to British law, and your leaders having no remedy for it, will hoist the flag of your false religious Mandals, and acting like selfish flatterers, will take vows of loalty. Fie upon your flattery, fie upon your lives, fie upon your pride (in) your religion!

"Either you should give up calling yourselves Aryas and resolve that you will not be grieved to see cows being slaughtered, or, if you still desire to be called Aryas, you should raise such a strong agitation on constitutional lines both in India and England, so as to have cow-killing in India abolished once for all."

The editor points out that this decision will be the cause of many riots between Hindus and Muhammadans, and will alienate the former from Government, and prays that it should stop cow-killing by passing an enactment.

He concludes with inviting the attention of the Government to the following couplet quoted in one of his judgments by the late Justice Mahmood :—

"The judgment day, friend, is near, how long will the blood of the slaughtered be concealed.
Even if the edges of the dagger be silent, the drops of blood on the sleeves will cry out."

(b).—Police.

43. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad) of the 24th March, reports that recently two women were murdered in Jauhari Muhalla, Allahabad, in broad daylight, and remarks that when such is the state of affairs in the very capital of the province, one does not know what condition must be prevailing in the Mufassil. Government ought to bestow special attention on such atrocious crimes.

BHARATBASI, 24th March, 1908.

Double murder at Allahabad.

44. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) of Thursday, 26th March notes that there are numerous complaints regarding the interference by the military authorities with the arrangements for the convenience of pilgrims resorting to the confluence of the Ganges and the Jumna. The erection of sheds and huts for the shelter of pilgrims has, he states, been prohibited by the military authorities. A good deal of discontent also prevails, he says, on account of the drain from the Fort that empties into the river a little above the most favoured bathing place on the river side. The editor believes that the late Lieutenant-Governor personally inspected this drain but took no steps to have it removed. Further, he points out, firing over this sacred bathing-place is regarded as sacrilege by devout pilgrims. He notes that as firing takes place very rarely, it would not perhaps have been a matter of complaint did it not involve the stoppage of funeral processions proceeding to the ghats. He regrets to notice that the police stopped two funeral processions while firing was going on on the 21st March, forgetful of the fact that any such stoppages is an outrage to the feelings of the mourners. In conclusion he hopes that steps will be taken to respect the feelings of Hindus regarding the most sacred spot of their sacred river

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th March, 1908.

Inconvenience to public owing to firing from fort at Allahabad.

45. The following is an extract from the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th March: —" We hear that some funeral processions were stopped by the Daraganj police on the morning of the 21st instant, when they were proceeding to the cremation ground. The reason assigned for this stoppage was the cannonade and rifle shooting which was being practised at the Allahabad fort. We understand that the cremation grounds were not within the range of firing and that when this was pointed out to the Sub-Inspector in charge of the police by a gentleman belonging to one of the funeral parties and permission was asked for the processions to proceed to their destination, the Sub-Inspector refused permission and rudely dismissed his interviewer. That a police Daroga should not have a civil tongue even for a mourner in a funeral procession is not to be wondered at, but it cannot be regarded as anything short of a grave public scandal that funeral processions should not be allowed to proceed to the cremation ground. The military authorities cannot but be aware of the existence of the cremation ground which is not far from the fort. But even if they are not, it is incumbent on the civil authorities to arrange with them that the sanctity of the cremation ground is respected by the firing range being fixed beyond its limits. We hope that the local Government will institute inquiries as to who was responsible for the outrage on the feelings of the people which was perpetrated by the obstruction of funeral processions and will take prompt steps to prevent the recurrence of such an outrage."

CITIZEN, 26th March, 1908.

Inconvenience to public owing to firing from fort at Allahabad.

46. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th March, complains that owing to the target practice on the previous Saturday people were not allowed to bathe in the Ganges, nor were the corpses allowed to be burnt at the burning-ghat from morning to 11 A.M. The editor says that the Muhammadan Inspector of Daraganj and Sub-Inspector Bhola Nath behaved very rudely to a gentleman who wanted permission to burn the dead body of a relative of his. He deplores that the police in this country treat the people as if they were their slaves, and urges that the police should be given clearly to understand that they are servants of the people and have no powers beyond preventing crime and that they should behave in a gentlemanly way towards respectable people.

He expresses a hope that His Honour Sir John Hewett, in consultation with the military authorities, will make suitable arrangements to exclude bathing and burning ghats from the shooting ranges and that the Muhammadan Inspector and Sub-Inspector Bhola Nath will be suitably dealt with for their rudeness.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th March, 1908.

NASIR-UL-AKHBAR, 5th February, 1908.

47. The Nasir-ul-Akhbar (Meerut), of the 5th February, received on the 25th March, contains an article in which the editor notes that he has heard of a proposal to enlist women in the police. He enquires whether they will be white or black women, and remarks that the former will be not only captivating but useful.

Women in the Police force.

MUFID-I-AM, 20th March, 1908.

48. Referring to the various troubles and inconvenience to which the passengers are subjected by the police and the medical officer at the Ajmer railway station, for plague observation, the Mufid-i-Am (Agra) of the 20th March, asks Government to remove these complaints.

Plague observation at Ajmer station.

CITIZEN, 22nd March, 1908.

49. A correspondent writing to the Citizen (Allahabad) of the 22nd March, states that the police are chiefly to blame for the obscene songs and practices that disgrace the Holi, as not only do they not try to stop the abuses they see, but go through the streets themselves singing foul songs and molesting the passers by. He declares that he saw police constables take wood and other things from villagers who had brought in commodities for sale for the burning of the Holi. He urges that police officers should be asked to see that their subordinates do not take advantage of the license allowed by the Holi.

The Holi and the police.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

CITIZEN, 22nd March, 1908.

50. Discussing the question of the appointment of a whole-time chairman for the Allahabad municipality, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of 22nd March, points out that the municipality has been in existence over forty years, and that the necessity for a paid chairman was never suggested until 1906. He admits that the duties of the chairman of a large municipality like Allahabad are very onerous, and involves a serious tax on the Collector's time, and agrees that the appointment of a whole-time chairman is perhaps advisable. But he fails to see why a civilian should be appointed when there are plenty of non-official Indians fully qualified for the position. It has been suggested, he notes, that the pay of such a chairman should be Rs. 1,200 to Rs. 1,600 per month, but this would not be the total expenditure involved as officers, clerks, etc. would also have to be appointed bringing the total cost up to about Rs. 30,000 per year. He is sceptical regarding the suggestion that a whole-time chairman would earn his pay by the savings he could effect, and thinks that any great retrenchment in the existing establishment is impossible. In conclusion he argues that instead of imposing fresh taxes for keeping up a chairman on a princely salary, a little more should be done for the improvement of the municipality.

Paid Chairman for the Allahabad Municipality.

BHARATBASI, 24th March, 1908.

51. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 24th March, referring to the proposal of having a paid chairman for the Allahabad municipality, remarks that Government should not appoint to the post a member of the Civil Service, inasmuch as his high salary will press hard upon the rate-payer, who is already over-taxed, and that, by way of an experiment, an Indian Deputy Collector on two or three hundred rupees should be appointed as a temporary meausure.

Paid Chairman for the Allahabad Municipality.

BHARATBASI, 24th March, 1908.

52. A correspondent in the Bharatbasi (Allahabad) of the 24th March, complains of anomalies in connection with the election of Municipal Commissioners of Allahabad for the last four years, and remarks that had Government paid any attention to the matter, the existing members would never have been allowed to carry matters in their own way without the least regard for public comfort and convenience.

The Allahabad municipality.

The editor endorses the complaint of the correspondent, and asks why the notice for the election of Municipal Commissioners is not given to the public and to the local newspapers, and why public opinion is not called for on their election when the municipality is an institution of the people and for their good alone.

53. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 19th March, commends the regulations of the Partabgarh Municipality for the sale of meat within its limits as published in a recent issue of the United Provinces Gazette. The editor says that in the mufassil meat is offered for sale in a very dirty manner, which has a very detrimental effect upon public health, and suggests that special care should be taken by all municipalities and by the general public to ensure cleanliness in markets, where meat and other eatables, having great attractions for flies, are exposed for sale.

Municipal arrangements for the sale of meat.

HINDOSTHAN, 19th March, 1908.

54. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th and the 23rd March, contains a poem entitled "Municipal Commissionership" in which the poet describes the various mean devices adopted by the members for their election, and the objectionable manner in which they treat the public after their election, and eulogises Mr. Westcott for his efforts to reform the system of election now in vogue, by admitting to the post only well qualified and educated persons.

Election of Municipal Commissioners.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 15th and 23rd March, 1908.

55. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 24th March, complains that the municipalities are trying to introduce improvements and are always imposing fresh taxes on the people, although they are no longer able to pay them.

Municipalities.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th March, 1908.

56. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of 26th March, notes with dismay that it appears from the recent administration report for the United Provinces that the provincial death rate is the second highest in India and that the death rate in municipalities exceeds the birth rate by about 10 per 1,000. The British Government, he states, pride themselves on the sanitary effects of their rule in India, but these facts afford little cause for self-congratulation. Government, he thinks, should try to devise a means of checking this seriously increasing death rate instead of considering how there may be a surplus in the exchequer at the end of each year.

The death rate in municipalities.

CITIZEN, 26th March, 1908.

57. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 27th March, contains an article under the heading "The farce of municipalities in India," in which the editor describes how municipal boards were established in India by Lord Ripon as an instrument for the political education of the people, and how Government, urged by the European community, whose willing tool it is, has since been endeavouring to make municipalities mere shows of puppets with no original powers.

Municipalities in India.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th March, 1908.

The editor quotes the refusal of the local Government to sanction the proposal of the Allahabad Municipal Board to exempt from assessment to water-rate, the houses in Allahabad, of which the annual rental value was thirty-six rupees or under, and asks if this instance does not make clear that the self-government of municipalities is merely nominal. He also criticises an article in a recent issue of the Pioneer in which it was attempted to make out that municipal institutions were unsuited to India, and it was insinuated that the Decentralisation Commission should not therefore recommend the enlargement of the powers of Indian Municipalities, and remarks that, in spite of the groundless arguments of the Pioneer, which exists merely to abuse the Indians, for which service it receives the support of Government, it is a historical fact that the East is the parent of municipalities.

(e).—Education.

58. The Aryá Mitra (Agra), of the 24th March, referring to the proposal to separate the School department from the Agra College, writes :—"To speak the truth, it is nothing short of breach of faith with the soul of a dead man, not to fulfil the terms of his will. Those who entrust their institutions into the hands of Europeans, in order to free themselves from care and anxiety, should take a lesson from this incident of the Agra College."

The School department of the Agra College.

ARYA MITRA, 24th March, 1908.

59. The following extract is taken from the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th March :—"The proposal of the local Government to close the School department of the Agra College, so that the Government may erect a model high school of their own, does not appear to find favour with the local public. Why is the Government so anxious to relieve the

The School department of the Agra College.

CITIZEN, 26th March, 1908.

College authorities of the School department? In what respects is the existing school found wanting? What again is meant by 'a model high school?' If the proposed school is to be an institution, perfect in every phase, the public would naturally shake off their allegiance to the existing school and support its 'model' rival. The protest meeting which was held at Agra on the 22nd instant in connection with this matter clearly indicates the views of the Agra public and we beg to invite to the proceedings the attention of Sir John Hewett."

NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th March, 1908.

The School department of the Agra College.

60. Referring to the meeting of the old students of the Agra College to protest against the intention of the Government, to replace the Agra Collegiate school by a Model High school, the Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th March, expresses the hope that the Government will let the school remain as it is, because it has done much good to the Agra people, and because the present number of schools in the town is not enough for the ever increasing number of students.

CITIZEN, 22nd March, 1908.

The Tata Research Institute.

61. Referring to the rumour that the Tata Research Institute at Bangalore is to be called "The King Emperor's Polytechnic and Research Institute," the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of 22nd March, remarks that the proposed name is not a suitable one. He points out that Mr. Tata intended the college to be a private concern, but that now it appears to be settling down into a Government controlled institution, and that the name of the generous founder is being lost sight of. The editor hopes that a college that was intended for research work will not degenerate into a prosaic technical institute.

ADVOCATE, 26th March, 1908.

The Tata Research Institute.

62. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of 26th March, notes with regret that it is rumoured that the Tata Research Institute is to be changed into a College for instruction in advanced science, chemistry and electricity, on the grounds that India offers no field for research. If the rumour is true he thinks it would have been infinitely better if Mr. Tata had appointed a committee of management to administer his estate and carry out his ideas regarding the institute.

MODERN REVIEW, March, 1908.

Education of Indians.

63. An editorial article entitled "Conversion and education of Indians" appears in the Modern Review (Allahabad,) for March, in which the motives of missionary enterprise and education are discussed. The writer refers to the Charter Act of 1813 in which it is laid down that persons desirous of accomplishing the spiritual and moral improvement of Indians ought to be afforded every facility for doing so by law, and points out that Warren Hastings and Sir John Malcolm were opposed to missionary work in India on the grounds of political expediency. Mr. Charles Grant, he notes, proposed that clauses in favour of missionary enterprise should be introduced when the Company's charter was being renewed in 1793, and, when this proposal was vetoed, he states that Mr. Grant appealed to philanthropists and men of the world on behalf of India, pointing out to the former that the inhabitants were in a deplorable state of heathenism, and demonstrating to the latter that great commercial prosperity would be incidential to missionary enterprise. Political expediency and material advancement, the editor thinks, formed the basis of Mr. Grant's agitation on behalf of missionary effort. This being the case, he fails to see how Christianity could possibly appeal to Indians. England, he remarks, is famed for immorality drunkenness and all kinds of vice, so that when missionaries are sent out by English people, it is naturally concluded that the salvation of souls is not the object in view.

MURAQQAI TASAWWAR, 21st March, 1908.

Entrance class examination of the Panjab University.

64. The Muraqqai Tasawwar (Fatehpur), of the 21st March, complains that the examination paper in Arabic set for the Entrance class of the Panjab University this year, was very stiff and difficult, and asks the examiners to be somewhat liberal in awarding the marks.

SWARAJYA, 21st March, 1908.

School boys punished.

65. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 21st March, referring to the sentences of imprisonment passed on some schoolboys and one teacher for destroying sweatmeats made of foreign sugar in Bayzitpur (Bengal?), remarks that it is strange travesty of justice that an Englishman is let off with a nominal fine for murdering an Indian, while Indian boys are imprisoned for destroying their own property. The editor concludes by remarking, "In our opinion such incidents foretell that one day they will have to wash the hands of the Empire (lit). The present rulers ought to govern with justice and equity, so that union and goodwill may increase daily, as good fortune does not last long. A poet says

"Even the atom will one day shine as a star, if the earth and the sky, retain their position."

In a subsequent note on the same incident, the editor advises the people to have their own schools and colleges, so that their children may not be rusticated and fined.

66. The Kayastha Hitkari (Agra), of the 24th March, remarks that as, owing to the diversity of religions among the various sections of the Hindu community, the Government cannot possibly make any arrangement for religious education, it will be much better if Kayasths, like their Muhammadan brethren, make some private arrangement for it, by appointing pandit teachers in several places.

KAYASTHA HITKARI, 24th March, 1908.

Religious education for Kayasths.

The editor remarks that as Allahabad will not be conveniently within the reach of Kayasths living in other provinces, and as the Pathshala is not prepared to give free education, the Kayasth community should try to fix their seat of learning in Gwalior where it is hoped they can get help from the State.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

67. While pointing out that the introduction of canals and other artificial means of irrigation has conferred many blessings upon the people in this country, the Agra Akhbar of the 21st March, remarks that it has some evils also connected with it, inasmuch as it is creating new sources of trouble for agriculturists and zamindars.

AGRA AKHBAR, 21st March, 1908.

Disadvantages of the irrigation system.

1. It has weakened the productive power of the soil.
2. It has made the climate too moist.
3. Irrigation rates are very high and the poor are not able to take advantage of the canal system as well-to-do and influential cultivators win over the employés of the Canal department.

The editor expresses the hope that the Government will consider the matter and remove the troubles and abuses prevalent in the department.

68. Summing up the history of famine in India during the last ten years and commenting on the rise in prices during the recent scarcity, the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th March, remarks :—The Government of India, while assuring those affected, of sympathy, are yet said to be considering the question of making enquiry into the causes of the high range of prices. It is admitted they have not yet come to any final decision. How long are they going to be in this state of suspense, looking helplessly on? It is publicly felt that high prices are due to artificial causes, and unless immediate remedial measures are adopted, the consequences will be far more widespread and disastrous than those of the famine. While the public are called upon to do what they can for the famine-stricken, we trust the Government will realise their responsibility and take immediate steps to avert the disaster of high prices which is mainly of their own making.

CITIZEN, 26th March, 1908.

The famine.

(g).—General.

69. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 21st March, notes with satisfaction the opening of an institution in Calcutta where swadeshi preachers are to be trained, and expresses a hope that such institutions will be established all over the country.

SWARAJYA, 21st March, 1908.

The Bengalis and swadeshi institutions.

70. A correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 24th March, says that foreign merchants are destroying Indian trade and industry in every way and that they are sucking the wealth of India like leeches, and urges that the spread of the swadeshi agitation is the best means of checking the gradual ruin of the country. He specially appeals to the Jains who form the major portion of the trading community of India to refrain from not only using impure foreign articles, but also from selling them and to encourage the swadeshi movement in a practical way.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th March, 1908.

The swadeshi movement.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, March, 1908.

Hopes and fears for Indian Industries.

71. Mr. P. Wattell contributes an article to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for March entitled "Hopes and Fears for Indian Industries," in which he treats his subject very exhaustively. He begins by pointing out that although India has every facility for being a great Industrial country, yet she is dependant on foreign countries for most of her wants, the result being that Indian markets are at present flooded with foreign-made articles many of which are made of the raw material she herself exported. India, he thinks, being more of a continent than a country possesses every kind of material necessary for the support of her people. Added to this, labour is cheap and most of the people being engaged in agriculture, the wants of life are few. In spite of all this, he notes, the industrial state of India is deplorable. He attributes this to the want of business ability and the want of self-sacrifice on the part of the people. The first defect he believes will right itself. The second can only be remedied by the spread of moral education and the recognition by each of his own responsibility. The writer does not favour the idea of sending young Indians to foreign countries for instruction, but thinks that technical colleges should be established all over the country where students could be trained. This, he suggests, would gradually familiarise educated Indians with industrial pursuits and show them that there is no disgrace in adopting a commercial career. During her industrial constructive period, India, the writer thinks, requires strong protective measures. For a long time she will not be in a position to compete with the other great manufacturing countries of the world, and till she is, her growing industries must be fostered and guarded. This, the writer points out, can only be done by the imposition of a tax on all foreign-made goods or by a strict system of boycott. The Indian Government, however, he fears cannot adopt a protective policy, so that it rests with Indians themselves to build up their industries on the lines indicated. The swadeshi agitation he considers, is a step in the right direction, but he points out that the objects of the movement can never be attained unless Indians work together harmoniously and unselfishly for the general good.

NASIM-UL-AKHBAR, 20th March, 1908.

Commerce and its blessings.

72. While pointin g out the priceless blessings of commerce, the Nasim-ul-Akhbar (Meerut) of the 20th March, exhorts Indians to try with heart and soul to qualify themselves for every department of commercial activity as commerce alone can remove the indigence of India and raise the country from its present impoverished state to glory and prosperity.

HINDOSTHAN, 261st March, 1908.

The industrial development of India.

73. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 21st March, remarks that Indians will not be able to stand European competition in trade nor improve their material condition unless they manufacture articles after Western methods with the aid of electric and steam power, and suggests that Indian students should be given more opportunities in Europe and America to learn the art of making machinery driven by electricity and steam power, so that on their return to India they may be enabled to establish big factories and workshops to supply all local wants.

CITIZEN, 26th March, 1908.

The Industrial Conference.

74. Referring to Mr. A. C. Chatterji's speech at the opening of the Industrial conference, the editor of the Citizen of 26th March, remarks that several Allahabad gentlemen promised large sums towards the industrial development in these provinces last year, but failed to fulfil their promises. He fears that their object was to gain notoriety and to pose as public benefactors. He trusts that this idea is wrong and hopes that these gentlemen will prove their sincerity by subscribing the sums promised.

MODERN REVIEW, March, 1908.

The treatment of the Indian sepoy.

75. An article, presumably editorial, entitled 'The Barrackpur Massacre' appears in the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March. The writer begins by pointing out that although the English owe their empire in India to their Indian army, yet native regiments have always been ill-treated by the nation that they serve. He thinks that no one will deny that the sepoy possesses many virtues, and refers to the high terms in which the various witnesses before the Select Committee of 1832 spoke of the Indian army. As early as 1824 he says, the Bengal troops were much worse off than their comrades in Bombay and Madras. Their pay was small, they got no allowances, their feelings were not considered on manœuvres, adequate house arrangements were not made for them, and promotion was slow. Consequently, a general spirit of discontent prevailed at the time throughout the whole Bengal army. The writer then goes on to relate that during the Burmese war, the 47th Regiment was ordered on service from Barrackpur. The feelings of the regiment, he says, were not considered in the matter. The sepoys consisted of high caste Hindus who had not enlisted for service in countries to which they could not march. Consequently, they were dismayed at the idea of proceeding by sea from Calcutta to Rangoon, and petitioned the military authorities on the subject. The regiment was paraded on October 30th, 1824, when the sepoys put forward their grievances. They objected, the writer states, to going to Rangoon, as they could not go there by land. If sent on service, they demanded, he says, certain allowances, as things were dear in Burma. The matter was referred to General Sir Edward Paget, and he ordered a parade of the regiment on November 30th, 1824. In the meantime a petition was sent to him by the sepoys of the regiment, pointing out their grievances, but this, the writer says, was wrongly translated. On the 30th November the regiment paraded, and was surrounded by British troops who opened fire on the sepoys and shot them down almost to a man. The writer condemns the cruel action of the Commander-in-Chief and his staff, and expresses the opinion that, with a little tact and sympathy, all the grievances of the regiment could have been settled.

America and India.

76. An article entitled "Opportunity in India and America" is contributed to the Hindustan Review for March by Mr. Saint Nihal Singh in which an unfavourable contrast is drawn between the enterprise of the American and the indifference of the Indian. The writer points out that practically all great Americans have risen from obscurity by hard work, whereas the caste system in India prevents a man from doing menial work and from following any other occupation than that of his father's.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, March, 1908.

Regiments in Agra city.

77. The Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra), of the 16th March, (received on the 25th March), complains that the passing of regiments through the streets of the city of Agra on the 16th March caused great inconvenience to the citizens, as roads were stopped from 6 A. M. to 11 A. M., and women could not go to bathe in the Jumna for fear of the soldiers.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR, 16th March, 1908.

The editor remarks that Government must have had some object in marching so many men through Agra city.

A case against the editor of the Aftab.

78. Referring to the charge brought against Saiyid Haidar Raza, editor of the Aftab (Delhi), for not printing the names of the printer and the publisher of the paper, the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st March, remarks that although it is a very serious mistake for a journalist, yet it is hoped that the officials will not take a very serious view of the matter as to err is human.

TAFRIH, 21st March, 1908.

Plague inoculation.

79. A correspondent writing to the Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 21st March, says:—The dose of prophylactic needs some diminution for those who are of weak constitution. When the syringe is withdrawn, it looks as if a small ball of cotton had been placed inside the flesh, by which nervous people are frightened. It would therefore be advisable to decrease the quantity and to proportionally increase the strength of the prophylactic, if it could be effected easily. This, the writer states, will do a good deal towards popularising inoculation against plague.

HINDOSTHAN, 21st March, 1908.

Trust funds and the Government.

80. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 21st March, deprecates Dr. Rash Behari Ghose's proposal for making it obligatory on the trustees of trust funds to produce their books in court whenever called upon to do so by two respectable men, and remarks that this would give the Government a hand in the management of trusts, and, that all temples and other religious institutions would pass into its control. Such measures do not bring the people nearer to their ideal of self-government, but in reality retard its progress. The editor concludes by appealing to the members of the Bharat Dharam Maha-mandal and to orthodox Hindus in general :— "O Hindus of India : it would be better if you were to commit suicide by drowning. When you cannot protect your temples and gods, what can you do and what has education taught you ?"

SWARAJYA, 21st March, 1908.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

SWARAJYA, 21st March, 1908.

Cow-killing.

81. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 21st March, publishes a letter from a correspondent who traces all the evils from which India is suffering to the slaughter of cows and advises the people of India to refrain from cow-killing.

SWARAJYA, 21st March, 1908.

Nawab of Dacca.

82. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 21st March, attributes to Messrs. Nevinson and Keir Hardie, the remark that the Nawab of Dacca supports the partition of Bengal as Government has saved him from bankruptcy by lending him money.

DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI, 23rd March, 1908.

Unani and Western Systems of medicine.

83. The Dabdaba-i-Sikandari (Rampur), of the 23rd March, publishes an article in which the writer discusses the comparative merits of the Unani and Western systems of medicine, giving preference to the former.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th March, 1908.

The All-India Digambar Jain Conference.

84. A correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 24th March, offers a few suggestions for consideration at the forthcoming All-India Digambar Jain Conference. He says that memorials and petitions will be of no avail to the Jains in the matter of the protection of the Parasnath Hill, that they should have recourse to passive resistance like the Bengalis and the Transvaal Indians in order to attain their object, that they should popularise Bande Jinendra Devar on the analogy of Bande Mataram, as a religious cry, that the Jains should boycott foreign goods inasmuch as they are a source of ruin to men of their profession and that a vote of thanks should be passed to Lala Lajpat Rai for his services in the cause of the country.

KAYASTHA HITKARI. 29th March, 1908.

Hindi and Urdu.

85. The Kayastha Hitkari (Agra) of the 29th March, referring to the Hindi-Urdu controversy, remarks:—"We do not disapprove of the object of these persons who are in favour of the general adoption of Hindi characters but it can be affirmed that Urdu characters cannot become extinct in India, as long as Hindu men and women are born in the country where Urdu is the mother tongue.

ABHYUDAYA, 27th March, 1908.

The Etawah incident.

86. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 27th March comments on the unsatisfactory reply given in a recent meeting of the Viceregal Council to the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal's question regarding the Etawah incident, inasmuch as it neither revealed any new fact nor removed the doubts of the public. The editor remarks that the Etawah incident is a deep mystery which cannot be unravelled until Khalil is arrested, and says that he cannot congratulate the Police department for their not being able to arrest Khalil as yet.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

MODERN REVIEW, March, 1908.

Railways in India.

87. Mr. Dewan Bahadur Ambalal Sakar Lal Desai contributes an article entitled "Railway transport in India" to the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, in which he points out that there are three great defects in the railway system of India at present. These are extensive pilfering of goods and blackmailing, inadequacy of rolling stock, and excessive delay in transit. As regards the first, he remarks that all subordinate railway employés consider that they have a right to levy toll on all goods passing through their hands, even station masters, he states, have been known to take advantage of the busy season to supply trucks to the highest bidders only. The authorities, he notes, are well aware of this and have frequently commented on it. He suggests that the remedy lies in the co-operation of the superior officers of the Railway and Police Departments with a view to detect all dishonest Railway employés. As regards the other defects, he notes that a considerable sum has now been devoted to increasing the rolling stock, as the result of strong agitation on the subject in England Delay in transit is general, he states all over India, and is entirely due to the indifference and apathy of the Railway staff. The rapid and cheap transit of goods is, he thinks, a matter of vital importance to the public at large. Primarily the consignor or consignee may suffer, but the burden eventually falls on the consumer. The cost of carriage in India, he states, is much higher than in any other country with the natural result that a large credit balance is shown by Indian Railways every year. The balance, he suggests, instead of being included in the general revenues of the country, should be devoted to removing the defects that characterise Indian railways at present.

The East Indian Railway.

88. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 22nd March, notes that a munsif has brought an action against the East Indian Railway for wrongful confinement. From the account given it appears that the munsif was asked by the station master of Jubbulpur to vacate a second class compartment in which he was travelling in order that a lady might occupy it. He pointed out that the carriage was not reserved for ladies and refused to vacate it, on which the station master handed him over to the police.

CITIZEN, 22nd March, 1908.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

89. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), of 26th March, states that it is rumoured that the management of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway is to change hands, and that the Directors of the East Indian Railway have applied to Government to hand the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway over to them. Rumour also has it, he says, that the Bengal and North-Western Railway has made an application to the same effect. He fails to see how these rumours originated, and thinks that Government would never be willing to centralize the management of the chief railways of Northern India. The idea that a little railway like the Bengal and North-Western Railway company could take over the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway he characterises as absurd, and thinks that the East Indian Railway has more than enough to do to manage its own affairs. If anything is done, he suggests portions of the East Indian Railway should be handed over to other companies. The section from Delhi to Umballa might, he thinks, be made over to the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and the Lucknow-Cawnpore section to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway.

ADVOCATE, 26th March, 1908.

He points out that the public in general and traders in particular, would have a good deal to say regarding any changes and would undoubtedly oppose any monopoly by one party.

VII.—Post Office.

The new value payable parcel form.

90. The Anjan Akhbar (Moradabad), of the 19th March, asks the postal authorities to alter the new value payable parcel form as soon as possible, because instead of facilitating the work, it has made it more complicated and difficult.

ANJAN AKHBAR, 19th March, 1908.

The new value payable parcel form.

91. Referring to difficulties created in the work by the introduction of the new value payable parcel form, the Mufid-i-Am (Agra) of the 20th March, asks the postal authorities to remove this source of inconvenience and trouble as soon as possible.

MUFID-I-AM, 20th March, 1908.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

The Holi festival.

92. The editor of the Citizen, (Allahabad), of 22nd March, notes with regret that obscene songs, disgraceful actions, and foul language still continue in connection with the celebration of the Holi. He points out that the license allowed while the ceremony lasts, arouses the worst passions of the human heart, and altogether banishes the spiritual aspect of the festival. He is glad to note that an effort has been made this year to put down some of the abuses that disgrace the Holi, but thinks that until the masses are invited to join in the movement nothing can be effected.

CITIZEN, 22nd March, 1908.

The Holi festival.

93. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of 26th March, is glad to note that a very successful effort was made to check ribaldry at the recent celebration of the Holi in Allahabad. A devoted band, he states, collected around Pandit Ramakanta Malavya and Mr. Parushottam Tandon and celebrated the festival in the orthodox spiritual manner. He congratulates the promoters of the movement and wishes them every success.

CITIZEN, 26th March, 1908.

Social reform.

94. The editor of the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for March, notes that the Literary Digest of New York comments favourably on the progress of social reform in India and attributes it to the influence of England, and especially of America.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, March, 1908.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

ADVOCATE, 22nd March, 1908.

Social reform in the Punjab.

95. The editor of the Advocate of the 22nd March notes with approval that nautch girls were conspicuously absent on the occasion of the Maharaja of Patiala's marriage recently, and that liquor was not provided for the guests. This, he remarks, is a step in the right direction, and hopes that the example set by the Maharaja of Patiala will be generally followed.

AL-AZIZ, January, 1908.

Position of women in India.

96. A correspondent of Al-Aziz (Agra), for January, strongly denounces the growing tendency the part on of young and educated Indians to allow freedom to their women on English lines and so create in them a spirit that will chafe against all the restrictions of pardah.

He thinks that this new tendency is attributable to the influence of Western education.

He maintains that Indians have far more regard and respect for their women than any of the so-called enlightened and advanced nations can pretend to have, and that what they call respect for women is looked down upon by Indians as the grossest sort of disrespect.

SWARAJYA, 21st March, 1908.

Position of women in India.

97. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 21st March, reproduces an article from the Sadhu in which the writer discusses the freedom that should be granted to women. He is of opinion that woman's proper sphere is the home, and that she should be taught to adorn it. She should not be made to earn her own bread, but should be able to manage her home. The writer deprecates the freedom allowed to women in the West.

SAHIFA, 10th March, 1908.

Influence of education on women.

98. Alluding to the incident of a young respectable Indian lady abruptly leaving the company of her father with whom she was walking on a railway platform, to receive and greet her husband who happened to arrive by train, the Sahifa (Bijnor) of the 10th March, strongly condemns such freedom of manners in a young lady of India as the pernicious effect of education upon Indian women.

The editor criticises the efforts of the ante-pardah party and remarks that if strenuous measures are not taken to nip the growing evil in the bud, the time is not far distant when Indian women just like men will be sunk into the lowest depth of moral degradation.

URDU-I-MUALLA, January, 1908.

A National poem.

99. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), for January (received on the 23rd March, contains selections from a poem entitled Tarraqqi wa Tanazzul or "Progress and Decline," in which the poet describes un ion, patriotism and self-sacrifice as conducive to the happiness and progress of a nation, and disunion, mutual dissension and selfishness as the chief causes of the decay and downfall of a people.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, March, 1908.

The Kayastha Temperance Association.

100. The Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for March, publishes an appeal from the promoters of the Kayastha Temperance Association in which contributions are invited on behalf of the movement which, it is set forth, has already done inestimable good to the Kayastha community.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, February, 1908.

Pseudo-patriotism.

101. Referring to an article entitled "Pseudo-Patriotism", contributed to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for February by an Arya, Mr. Manohar Lal Zutshi, writing in the March number of that magazine explains his position, as it was assailed by the writer referred to. He does not, he states, object to being termed a cosmopolitan provided the term does not imply negation of patriotism, but his patriotism does not make him blind to the faults of his country, nor does his religion cause him to attribute perfection even to the ancient Hindus. Such individuals as blindly bestow unalloyed praise on early Hindus and claim that they were perfect he considers pseudo-patriots, and that their action, he thinks, is injurious to the community and cannot possibly impress foreigners.

MODERN REVIEW, March, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai on the Bhagwat Gita.

102. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for March, contains an article entitled "The message of the Bhagwat Gita," written by Lala Lajpat Rai during his exile at Mandalay. The article is a commentary on the Bhagwat Gita and deals purely with the religious side of the epic.

103. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut) of the 16th March, strongly disapproves of the permission granted to the prostitutes of Meerut to publicly drive in their carriages, and remarks that no one will be surprised if their application to pitch their tents in the exhibition ground will also be allowed by the authorities.

Prostitutes and Nau-chandi fair.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 16th March, 1908.

The editor further remarks that although the permission referred to is not consistent with morality and civilisation, yet the law provides no restrictions in such cases, and the Government only cares for money without any regard for the means by which it is obtained.

104. While expressing its regret at the growing dissension between the Shias and the Sunnis of Lucknow, the An-Najm (Lucknow) of the 18th March, alludes to a notice recently circulated by the Shias urging that the celebration of the Chehlum, should be postponed until the disputes between the parties had been settled, and remarks that these are open threats to the Government, which it is hoped will be ignored.

The Shias and the Sunnis at Lucknow.

AN-NAJM, 18th March, 1908.

105. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 21st March notes with satisfaction, that certain Bengali and Punjabi families have inter-married, and remarks that the introduction of this custom of inter-marriage between different sects in India will not fail to have good influence over Indian social life and to conduce to the happiness and wellbeing of the people of India in general.

Inter-sectarian marriages.

TAFRIH, 21st March, 1908.

106. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 24th March, institutes a comparison between the work of the Theosophical Society and that of the Bharatdharam Mahamandal, and deplores the fact that the latter has done little to justify its existence. The editor remarks that he cannot regard the Mahamandal as a well-wisher either of Hinduism or of the British Government, for it has done no valuable work beyond testifying its loyalty to Government by merely presenting an address to the Viceroy.

The Bharatdharam Mahamandal.

BHARATBASI, 24th March, 1908.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

107. Dr. Nishikanta Chattopadhyaya contributes an article entitled "The Din Ellahi of Akbar; its lessons to Modern India," to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for March, in which he describes the greatness of the Mughal Empire under Akbar. The object of the essay is to demonstrate the religious toleration that was allowed to all denominations by a Muhammadan ruler who was broad-minded enough to recognise that his own religion was not the only one that contained the germs of truth. The writer then points out the effect that Akbar's broad-mindedness had on his era, and urges his readers to lay aside their bigotry and superstition and to march with the times. "Now or never," he states, is the time for India to arise and strive to be worthy of her glorious past, for Akbar's prophecy that an alien race would come out of the West and build India up once again and establish peace, love and justice in the land, is now being fulfilled. The English, he believes, are the people Akbar saw in his dream. King Edward is seated on the throne of Akbar the Great, and the place of the latter's chief friend and Councillor, Abbul Fazl, has been taken by Mr. John Morley.

Din Ellahi of Akbar and its lessons to Modern India.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, March, 1908.

ALLAHABAD:
The 30th March, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 14 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 4th April, 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
I.—POLITICS.
(a)—Foreign:
1.	Indians in America	315
2.	Indians in America	315
3.	Indians in America	315
4.	Indians in America	315
5.	The Lisbon outrage	315
6.	Britain and Turkey	315
(b)—Home:
7.	Mr. R. C. Dutt on Moderates and Extremists	315
8.	A congress of Indian ladies	316
9.	Europeans and Indians	316
10.	Europeans and Indians	316
11.	Unity in India	316
12.	Government Administration report	316
13.	The Tinnevelly riots	316
14.	The second United Provinces Provincial Conference	316
15.	The Swarajya	317
16.	Press prosecution...	317
17.	The press as a profession	317
18.	Condition of the Muhammadans in India	317
19.	Mrs. Besant on the Public Spirit ...	317
20.	Mr. Gokhale's visit to England ...	318
21.	The Government and Lala Lajpat Rai ...	318
22.	All-India Muslim League	318
23.	Government and religious trusts ...	318
24.	The Hindu deputation	318
25.	Conviction of the Barisal Hitaishi ...	318
26.	Conduct of the new Magistrate of Mymensingh	318
II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
27.	The Zakka Khel expedition	319
III.—NATIVE STATES.
Nil.
IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
(a)—Judicial and Revenue:
28.	Patwaris	319
29.	The Behta Goshain cow-killing case ...	319
30.	The status of mukhtars	319
31.	Justice and the political bias ...	319
(b)—Police:
32.	Police	319
33.	Alleged misconduct of the police at Aligarh	319
34.	Ajit Singh and the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore	319
35.	The police and the Moharram riots in Bombay	320
36.	Punitive police at Tinnevelly ...	320
37.	Gambling in Cawnpore	320
38.	Lala Lajpat Rai and the police ...	320
39.	Lala Lajpat Rai and the police ...	320
(c)—Finance and Taxation:
Nil.
(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:
40.	The Benares municipality	320

		Page.
41.	The Lucknow Municipality	321
42.	Bareilly	321
	(e)—Education :
43.	The improvement of primary education	321
44.	Education in United Provinces ...	321
45.	The Madras University	321
46.	Technical scholarship	321
47.	Technical scholarship	321
48.	The Agra collegiate school	321
49.	A system of shorthand writing for the Nagri character	322
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :
50.	The famine	322
51.	Famine orphans	322
	(g)—General :
52.	Begar in the Punjab	322
53.	The Begar system	322
54.	Mr. Gokhale and Lala Lajpat Rai : their proposed visit to England ...	322
55.	Lala Lajpat Rai in Benares	323
56.	The swadeshi movement	323
57.	Government and the swadeshi movement	323
58.	The scheme of sugar manufacture ...	323
59.	Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji	323
60.	Sir H. Risley and students	323
61.	The cow-killing case of Allahabad ...	323
62.	Grievances of clerks	323
63.	Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Hindi	324
64.	New records for gramophone ...	324
65.	The Etawah incident	324
66.	The new dewan of the Maharaja of Benares	324

V.—LEGISLATION.

Nil.

VI.—RAILWAY.

67.	Railway accommodation at time of fair...	324
68.	The Bengal-Nagpur Railway scandal ...	324
69.	A victim to official caprice on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway	324
70.	A new train	324

VII.—POST OFFICE.

Nil.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

71.	Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow ...	324
72.	Moharram disturbances in Lucknow ...	325
73.	The Gurukul anniversary	325
74.	Pilgrims to Kedarnath and Badrinath ...	325
75.	Conversion of Musalmans to Hinduism ...	325

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Nil.

QUARTERLY LIST OF NEWSPAPERS.

No.	Name.	Locality.	Name of publisher.	Circulation.
	ENGLISH.
	Monthly.
1	Agra Magazine ...	Agra	Priya Lál Saksena ...	500 copies.
2	Allahabad Magazine ...	Allahabad	S. C. Roy	230
3	Central Hindu College Magazine.	Benares	Board of Trustees, Central Hindu College, Benares.	11,000 „
4	Hindustán Review ...	Allahabad	Munshi Shádi Lál ...	1,500 „
5	Modern Review ...	Allahabad	Ráma Nand Chatterji, M.A. ...	1,500 „
6	Poet	Mirzapur	Bhugwan Dás	Very small.
7	Student World ...	Allahabad	Bábu Chinta Mani Ghose ...	300 copies.
8	Theosophy in India ...	Benares	Theosophical Society, Benares	5,000 „
9	Virjanand Magazine ...	Partábgarh	S. S. Tug, M.A.	1,000 „
	Twice a month.
10	Allahabad Law Journal ...	Allahabad	Pandit Man Mohan Lál Nehru	1,000 copies.
	Weekly.
11	Express	Lucknow	Siddíq Ahmad	600 copies.
	Pice Messenger ...	Dehra Dun	Pandit Keshwa Rám Swámi ...
	Twice a week.
12	Advocate	Lucknow	Bábu Ganga Prasád Varma ...	1,000 copies.
13	Citizen	Allahabad	Sen & Co., Allahabad ...	650 „
14	Indian People ...	Allahabad	Ramzán Ali Shah ...	700 „
	Daily.
15	Hindosthán	Kálákánkar (Partábgarh) ...	Rája Rámpál Singh ...	200 copies.
16	Indian Daily Telegraph	Lucknow	C. H. Bull	1,250 „
	ROMAN.
	Monthly.
17	Sipáhi	Cawnpore	Sita Rám	250 copies.
	ANGLO-HINDI.
	Monthly.
18	Bharat Bandhu ...	Benares	A. P. Misra
	ANGLO-SANSKRIT.
	Monthly.
19	Prabudha Bharat or Awakened India.	Almora	Swámi Parmananad ...	1,500 copies.
	ANGLO-HINDI.
	Weekly.
20	Báránasi	Benares	Bábu Rás Mohan Sarkár ...	500 copies.
21	Khichri Samáchár ...	Mirzapur	Madho Prasad	Very small.
	ANGLO-URDU.
	Monthly.
22	Aligarh Monthly ...	Aligarh	Wiláyat Husain	500 copies.
	URDU.
	Monthly.
23	Álamgir	Aligarh	Bábu Pyáre Lál	500 copies.
24	Al Aziz	Agra	Abdul Aziz Khán ...	500 „

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

Quarterly list of newspapers—(continued).

No	Name.	Locality.	Name of publisher.	Circulation.
25	Al Hádi	Simrauta (Rae Bareli) ...	Shaikh Fárúq Ahmad ...	937 copies.
26	Al Islám	Allahabad	Hámid Husain	250 ,,
27	Al Nur	Nawabganj (Bara Banki) ...	Wahid Álam	50 ,,
28	An Nadwah	Lucknow	Abdul Hai	450 ,,
29	Árya Bandhu ...	Meerut	Dr. Rám Chandra ...	550 ,,
30	Árya Patra	Bareilly	Pandit Púran Mal... ...	1,900 ,,
31	Árya Samáchár ...	Cawnpore	Bábu Ánand Sarup ...	500 ,,
32	Educational Magazine ...	Ghazipur	Rám Saran Lal
33	Hamdard-i-Quam ...	Meerut	Raghu Náth Singh ...	800 copies.
34	Kanya Saháyak ...	Meerut	Rám Dás	500 ,,
35	Khátún	Aligarh	Ali Muhammad Khán ...	500 ,,
36	Pardah Nashin ...	Agra	Abdul Aziz Khan	1,100 ,,
37	Postal Magazine ...	Agra	Ditto	1,000 ,,
38	Satopkári	Bareilly	Bareilly Satopkári Sabha ...	1,500 ,,
39	Urdu-i-Mualla ...	Aligarh	Fazl-ul-Hasan, B.A. ...	750 ,,
40	Vaishya Hitkári ...	Meerut	Vaishya Hitkári Sabha ...	750 ,,
41	Victoria Yádgar ...	Sultanpur	Lakshmi Náth	300 ,,
42	Yadi Bayza	Sikandrábad (Bulandshahr) ...	Saiyid Muhammad Said ...	250 ,,
43	Zamána	Cawnpore	Dayá Narain Nigam ...	1,000 ,,
44	Zamíndár-wa-Káshtkár ...	Bijnor	Muhammad Khalíl-ur-Rahmán	300 ,,
45	Ziá-ul-Islám ...	Moradabad	Mushtáq Husain ...	524 ,,
	Twice a month.
46	Akhbár-i-Imámia ...	Lucknow	Saiyid Abid Ali	250 copies.
47	Anjan-Akhbár ...	Moradabad	Hakím Mindhai Lál ...	300 ,,
48	Khurshíd-i-Nánpára ...	Nánpára (Bahraich) ...	Saiyid Ali	500 ,,
49	Muraqqa-i-Tasawwar ...	Fatehpur	Karím Bakhsh	127 ,,
50	Násir-ul-Akhbár ...	Meerut	Ahmad Husain	150 ,,
	Weekly.
51	Agra Akhbár	Agra	Khwája Siddiq Husain ...	250 copies.
52	Al Bashír	Etáwah	Muhammad Bashír-ud-din ...	850 ,,
53	Aligarh Institute Gazette	Aligarh	Muhammad Mumtáz-ud-din ...	350 ,,
54	Al Islám	Aligarh	Shaikh Saiyid Ahmad ...	250 ,,
55	An Najm	Lucknow	Maulvi Abdus Shakúr ...	400 ,,
56	Áwáza-i-Khalq ...	Benares	Guláb Chand	600 ,,
57	Cawnpore Gazette ...	Cawnpore	Har Nám Singh	500 ,,
58	Dabdaba-i-Sikandari ...	Rampur	Muhammad Fárúq Hasan ...	300 ,,
59	Fitnah	Gorakhpur	Hakím Abdul Karím Khán ...	1,000 ,,
60	Hind	Lucknow	Rám Shankar Prasad ...	215 ,,
61	Hindustáni	Lucknow	Bábu Ganga Prasád Varma ...	1,300 ,,
62	Jadd-o-Jehad	Sháhábád (Hardoi) ...	Shaikh Faiyáz Ali ...	280 ,,
63	Jádu	Jaunpur	Abdur Rahman Khán ...	Very small.
64	Kanauj Punch ...	Kanauj (Farrukhabad) ...	Abdur Rahim Khán ...	470 copies.
65	Káyasth Hitkári ...	Agra	Ahmad Husain	400 ,,

Quarterly list of newspapers—(continued).

No.	Name.	Locality.	Name of publisher.	Circulation.
66	Mahá Vidyálaya Samáchár	Jwalapur (Haradwar) ...	Swámi Darshana Nand ...	600 copies.
67	Mashriq	Gorakhpur	Hakim Barham	1,000 „
68	Mufíd-i-Ám ...	Agra	Qádir Ali Khán Súfi ...	250 „
69	Mukhbir-i-Álam ...	Moradabad	Qázi Abdul Ali	300 „
70	Musáfir	Agra	Pandit Bhoj Dat	1,000 „
71	Naiyar-i-Azam ...	Moradabad	Saiyid Ibn-i-Ali	350 „
72	Najm-i-Bázigh ...	Moradabad	Muhammad Ismáil Khán ...	200 „
73	Nizám-ul-Mulk ...	Moradabad	Qázi Mazhar Qayúm ...	367 „
74	Oudh Punch	Lucknow	Muhammad Sádiq	300 „
75	Qulqul	Bijnor	Qázi Nazar Husain ...	350 „
76	Rafíq Punch	Moradabad	Mahmúd-ul-Hasan ...	450 „
77	Rahbar	Moradabad	Brij Lál	400 „
78	Rastgo	Allahabad	Anand Deo Prasád ...	500 „
79	Riyáz-i-Faiz	Pilibhít	Munshi Dál Chand ...	160 „
80	Rohilkhand Gazette ...	Bareilly	Shaikh Abdul Azíz ...	500 „
81	Sahífa	Bijnor	Maulvi Ahmad Hasan ...	300 „
82	Shahna-i-Hind ...	Meerut	Ahmad Hasan Shaukat ...	250 „
83	Sitára-i-Hind ...	Moradabad	Pandit Banvari Lal ...	115 „
84	Sulaimáni Akhbár ...	Benares	Kashi Náth	1,000 „
85	Surma-i-Rozgár ...	Agra	Itrat Husain	184 „
86	Swarájya	Allahabad	Shánti Nárain	1,000 „
87	Tafríh	Lucknow	Ahmad Ail Kamil... ...	1,000 „
88	Tohfa-i-Hind	Bijnor	Munshi Jiráj Singh ...	375 „
89	Union Gazette ...	Bareilly	Karam Iláhi	175 „
90	Zul Qarnain	Budaun	Faizul Hasan	700 „
	Twice a week.
91	Nasím-i-Agra ...	Agra	Bíreshwar Sányál ...	276 copies.
92	Riyaz-ul-Akhbar ...	Lucknow	Saiyad Riyáz Ahmad ...	300 „
	Daily.
93	Oudh Akhbár... ...	Lucknow	B. Manohar Lál	600 copies.
	ARABIC-URDU.
	Twice a month.
94	Al Bayán	Lucknow	Maulvi Abdul Wali ...	150 copies.
	HINDI.
	Monthly.
95	Anand Kádambini ...	Mirzapur	Pandit Badri Naráin ...	Very small.
96	Bhárat Sudasha Pravartak	Farrukhabad	Pandit Ganesh Prasád Sharma	275 copies.
97	Bráhman Samáchár ...	Parichhatgarh (Meerut) ...	Pandit Chhuttan Lál ...	400 „
98	Bráhman Sarvasva ...	Etáwah	Pandit Bhímsen Sharma ...	800 „
99	Dayanand Patrika ...	Meerut	Pandit Mutsaddi Rám ...	150 „
100	Garhwáli	Dehra Dún	Pandit Girja Dat Naithání ...	850 „
101	Hindi Pradíp... ...	Allahabad	Bálkrishna Bhatt ...	200 „
102	Jásús	Gahmar (Ghazipur) ...	Gopál Rám ...	500 to 600 copies

Quarterly list of newspapers—(concluded).

No.	Name.	Locality.	Name of publisher.	Circulation.
103	Kalwár Gazette ...	Cawnpore	Bábu Sita Rám	1,100 copies.
104	Kalwár Mitra ...	Allahabad	Bánke Lál	400 „
105	Kánya Kubj Hitkári ...	Cawnpore	Manohar Prasad	1,000 „
106	Kavindra Bátika ...	Allahabad	Bisheshar Náth	400 „
107	Kávya Kalánidhi ...	Mirzapur	Mahabir Prasad Malviya Vaidya.
108	Khatri Hitkári ...	Benares	Bálmukund Varma ...	500 „
109	Kshatriya	Meerut	Shádi Rám Varma	1,200 „
110	Nágri Prachárak ...	Lucknow	Bábu Gopál Lál	96 „
111	Nigamágam Chandrika ...	Benares	Narayan Rao Marhatta ...	3,750 „
112	Sanádhyopkárak ...	Agra	Shankar Lál	400 „
113	Sanátan Dharm Patáka ...	Moradabad	Pandit Rám Sarúp ...	1,350 „
114	Saraswati	Allahabad	Bábu Chintámani Ghose ...	1,600 „
115	Shri Rághavendra ...	Allahabad	Chaube Dwárka Prasád ...	500 „
116	Sudha Ságar	Cawnpore	Pandit Sahdeo Prasád Vaidya ...	1,000 „
117	Swadesh Bándhava ...	Agra	Kunwar Hanuwant Singh ...	1,000 „
118	Vánijya Sukhdáyak ...	Benares	Bábu Jagannáth Prasád Singh	1,000 „
119	Ved Prakásh	Meerut	Pandit Tulsi Rám ...	1,000 „
	Twice a month.
120	Almora Akhbár ...	Almora	Munshi Sadánand Sanwál ...	155 copies.
121	Rájpút	Agra	Lalji Singh	1,700 „
	Weekly.
122	Abhyudaya	Allahabad	Sital Prasád	1,500 „
123	Ánand	Lucknow	Pandit Shiva Náth ...	100 „
124	Árya Mitra	Agra	Hukam Singh	1,800 „
125	Bhárat Bási	Allahabad	Rám Gopal Sharma ...
126	Bhárat Jíwan ...	Benares	Bábu Shri Kishan Varma ...	1,550 „
127	Jain Gazette ...	Deo Band (Saharanpur) ...	Pandit Shimbhu Nath ...	1,500 „
128	Sunder Shringár Samáchár	Muttra ...	Jagannáth Dás ...	1,000 „
	Twice a week.
129	Mohini	Kanauj (Farrukhabad) ...	Puttan Lál	250 „
	Daily.
130	Hindosthán	Kálákánkar (Partabgarh) ...	Rája Rámpál Singh ...	250 „
	HINDI-URDU.
	Monthly.
131	Árya Darpan	Sháhjahanpur	Bakhtáwar Singh ...	600 „
132	Baranwál Saháyak ...	Moradabad	Dwarka Prasád	500 „
133	Dharm Panch ...	Meerut	Surju Lál	300 „
134	Kashmír Darpan ...	Lucknow	Munshi Ajodhia Prasád ...	300 „
	SANSKRIT.
	Monthly.
135	Saddharm	Bindrában (Muttra) ...	Vámna Chárya	200 „

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. Referring to the sensational rumour that Indians are stealthily importing firearms from America, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of 28th March, asks Government not to lend an ear to such excitement-loving newsmongers who find peculiar pleasure in mischief making.

Indians in America.

RAHBAR, 28th March, 1908.

2. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 29th March, notes that the Amrita Bazar Patrika recently contained an article to the effect that the American Press was full of the doings of Indian secret societies in America which were said to be shipping rifles and bombs to India, declaring them as sewing machines. The editor remarks that the American Press was undoubtedly having a joke at the expense of the Indian Government, as of course there was no truth in the rumour. He suggests, however, that if these rumours were believed by the American public it was simply because the wish was father to the thought.

Indians in America.

CITIZEN, 29th March, 1908.

3. The Bhâratbâsi (Allahabad), of the 31st March, writes regarding the rumour that has appeared in New York papers that seditionists in India have received one hundred thousand rifles and a large number of bomb shells from America, which were shipped to India as sewing machines and tins of condensed milk. The editor remarks that the New York papers are convinced that the Indians will shortly overthrow British rule and drive the English out from their country, and that Indians can judge for themselves the truth of the report.

Indians in America.

BHARATBASI, 31st March, 1908.

4. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 2nd April, referring to the rumours published by the New York Press that some Indians living in New York are trying to smuggle fire-arms and bombs into India, and that 17,000 rifles have been stolen from the Madras fort, remarks that they are entirely false, and that no one is thinking of revolting against Government in India.

Indians in America.

HIND, 2nd April, 1908.

5. Referring to the assassination of the King and the Crown Prince of Portugal and to the attempts made by the people to murder the President of the Argentine Republic and the King of Persia, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 1st April, points out that such disastrous events are the inevitable consequences of oppressive treatment and unsympathetic attitude of those rulers towards the people.

The Lisbon outrage.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 1st April, 1908.

6. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 1st April, reproduces the comments of Mr. Stead in the Fortnightly Review and an article from the Near East (London), on the improvement of the existing relations between Britain and Turkey, and remarks that a rapprochment between Britain and Turkey would be hailed with delight by all the Musalmans living under the protection of the Union Jack, and that there is ample room for territorial expansion for both the Powers without coming into actual collision with each other. But if unfortunately the relations are not improved and war is inevitable, the Musalmans of India would be unflinching in their loyalty to the King-Emperor, howsoever they may be grieved at heart.

The editor concludes by appealing to the English papers of India and England to advocate an entente cordiale between England and Turkey, and expresses the opinion that the difficulty can be easily bridged over if the King and the Sultan were to visit each other at Windsor Castle and Yildiz Koushik.

Britain and Turkey.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 1st April, 1908.

(b).—Home.

7. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of 29th March, remarks that Mr. Dutt when recently interviewed on the subject of the political outlook, stated that the Moderates cannot renounce their creed and their trust in Government, whereas the Extremists despise the Moderates' creed and have no confidence in Government. Which party will ultimately carry the country with it, he stated, rests entirely with

Mr. R. C. Dutt on Moderates and Extremists.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 29th March, 1908.

Government, for as things now stand the faith of the country must continue to diminish, if shadowy and ridiculous reforms are gravely offered to the country.

BHARATJIWAN, 30th March, 1908.

8. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 30th March, in announcing the proposal to hold a congress of Indian ladies at Calcutta in November next, says that admission to this congress will be restricted to women only.

A congress of Indian ladies.

MASHRIQ, 31st March, 1908.

9. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur) of 31st March, ascribes the present unrest to the want of cordial social intercourse between Europeans and Indians, and in support of its contention it cites a passage from the speech of His Excellency Sir George Sydenham Clark, Governor of Bombay. The editor, however, expresses gratification at the appearance of a change in the attitude of European gentlemen which he regards as a sign of returning common sense.

Europeans and Indians.

HIND, 2nd April, 1908.

10. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 2nd April, refers to the following incidents :—

Europeans and Indians.

(1) the alleged attack on a Mahamahopadhya by an Englishman in the Assam Bengal mail train ;

(2) the alleged forcible ejection of an Indian Munsif from a railway carriage by the Station staff of Jubbulpur, because they wanted to seat a European lady in it ;

(3) the sentence of transportation for life passed on five Indians for dishonouring a Christian woman ;

(4) the release of Mr. Moore at Rawalpindi who dishonoured an Indian woman ;

(5) and the release of a European Traffic Inspector who is alleged to have made an attempt on the honour of a respectable Indian lady passenger ;

remarks that the tension of feeling between the two classes is increasing owing to such incidents, that respectable Indians cannot but resent such disgraceful treatment, and that it is such partial judgments that are responsible for the growing unpopularity of the Government, and not the action of popular leaders.

The editor requests Government to take special notice of such serious cases.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 20th March, 1908.

11. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit) of the 20th March, discussing the question of unity in India, remarks that unity can be attained only when the people are ready to sacrifice their personal interests for the public good, and to abstain from petty inter-racial squabbles.

Unity in India.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th March, 1908.

12. Referring to the Administration report of the Government of the United Provinces, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th March, agrees with the remark that Indians have entirely neglected their literature, as is clearly shown by the insignificant number of books published, but contests the accuracy of the statement that the Indian press was encouraging the boycott of foreign sugar.

Government Administration report.

HIND, 26th March, 1908.

13. The Hind (Lucknow) of the 26th March, referring to the Tinnevelly riots, remarks that they were the indirect results of the unsympathetic attitude of the local officers towards the people. The editor condemns the opening of fire on an unarmed crowd and the assault on an innocent man by an English officer. If Chidambaram Pillay had delivered seditious speeches he ought to have been charged with sedition under sections 124A and 151 of the Indian Penal Code, and not under sections 107 and 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If he had not been arrested, these riots would never have occurred. The High Court has seen this and has set him free. The editor surmises that this was all due to the machinations and false reports of the detective police.

The Tinnevelly riots.

ANAND, 26th March, 1908.

14. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 26th March, referring to the Provincial Conference held at Lucknow, says that a perusal of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's presidential address shows that the organizers of the Conference seem to think that mere speech-making is the end of political agitation ; and that it contains not a single argument likely to produce any lasting effect on the mind of the readers. The editor commenting on the address, remarks that there is no doubt that all the grievances detailed by Mr. Malaviya are real, but that the arguments employed by him to establish his points are unsound.

The second United Provinces Provincial Conference.

He considers the claim urged by Mr. Malaviya for the appointment of educated Indians to high posts in the Army to be absurd, so long as they do not enlist themselves in large numbers in the army and prove their fitness for higher appointments.

In conclusion he remarks that the Conference ought to have made its arguments worthy of the notice of the Government before expressing, as it did, regret at the indifference of the Government towards its resolutions and suggestions.

15. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 28th March, referring to the many warnings it has received from its well-wishers to adopt a more moderate tone, remarks that it has adopted this tone simply to arouse its countrymen from their stupor, so that they may become aware of their degraded condition, and of the rapidity with which their country is being exploited by foreigners. They are getting poorer daily, and if they continue in this state of bondage under the foreign yoke, a time will surely come when they shall be reduced to utter penury. Under these circumstances the editor remarks that the patriot cannot but bestir himself, and expose the tricks of the tyrants. He thinks that it is impossible to hoodwink the ruling power by outward professions of loyalty, and that it is therefore necessary to have moral courage at the present crisis. He concludes with an exhortation to his countrymen to be sincere, and to work for the salvation of their country, without seeking external aid.

SWARAJYA, 28th March, 1908.

The Swarajya.

16. Referring to the frequent press prosecutions, the Zul-Qarnain (Budaun) of 28th March, enquires if it would be well for Government to gag the entire press, because of the use of intemperate language by a section of the Bengali press, as that policy, if adhered to, would deprive Government of the only means of ascertaining public opinion in the country.

ZUL QARNAIN, 28th March, 1908.

Press prosecutions.

The editor advises Government to differentiate between honest expressions of opinion and the rank sedition of the Bengalis.

17. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun) of 28th, March deplores the indifference of the educated Indians towards the Urdu press, and suggests the desirability of young Indians turning their attention to this profession, which is more profitable than the ordinary clerkships in Government offices. This suggestion if seriously adopted will, in the opinion of the editor, raise the tone of the Urdu papers, and also afford a better field to Indians for the display of their intellectual powers.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 28th March, 1908.

The press as a profession.

18. A correspondent in the Agra Akhbar of the 28th March, while describing the past greatness and prosperity of the Muhammadans of India, contrasts it with their present poverty and degenerated condition, and exhorts them to resort to the cultivation of art and industry and of a love for commercial enterprise, which are the main sources of the progress and prosperity of a nation.

AGRA AKHBAR 28th March, 1908.

Condition of the Muhammadans in India.

19. With reference to the lecture on 'The Public Spirit' by Mrs. Annie Besant, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 29th March remarks that the spirit of sacrifice and feeling of universal brotherhood with a desire to serve the motherland is floating on the surface, and that Mrs. Besant, by her experience of a varied life, is eminently fitted to point out the way to proceed, warning the young and enthusiastic worker against the dangers and the pitfalls that one invariably meets with. She is at the same time, the editor says, modest enough to admit that it is not for her to take active part in Indian public life, as she is not born of their race and the work must be done by Indians. "For," as she very pithily observes, "a nation's liberty, a nation's happiness, must grow out of the brains and the hearts of her own people, and unless rooted in these, they have no possibility of life. No truer argument in favour of self-help could be uttered and with a commendable absence of aggressiveness in it."

ADVOCATE, 29th March, 1908.

Mrs. Besant on the Public Spirit.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

ADVOCATE, 29th April, 1908.

Mr. Gokhale's visit to England.

20. With reference to the intended visit of Mr. Gokhale to England the Advocate (Lucknow) of March 29th, under the heading "Mr. Morley and reform proposals" has the following:—"In response to Sir William Wedderburn's invitation Mr. Gokhale is leaving the Indian shores for England on the 27th April. We wish there were other friends able to follow him. But times are hard and we think it will not be possible to send more delegates to England. Mr. Gokhale holds a unique position in India. If there is any accredited representative of educated Indians, any leader who is loyally followed by Indians in all parts of India, it is Mr. Gokhale; and we doubt not that he will be able to persuade Mr. John Morley to believe that the scheme, as drafted by the Government of India, has failed to give any satisfaction to the people, and that the best way to mitigate the discontent lies in his amending the reform proposals, so as to remove the impression that the Government of India in any way feels jealous of the growing influence of educated Indians.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 29th March, 1908.

The Government and Lala Lajpat Rai.

21. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), remarks in the issue of the 29th March that Lala Lajpat Rai has been shadowed by detectives night and day since his return from Mandalay. But the popular hero, he says, is not in the least perturbed by the attentions of the police. On the contrary he believes that familiarity with police methods is breeding general contempt and is removing the fear that the public formerly entertained for the Police department.

HINDOSTHAN, 30th March, 1908.

All India Moslem League.

22. Commenting on the resolutions passed at the recent All-India Moslem league conference at Aligarh, the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 30th March is doubtful whether they will result in any benefit to Muhammadans in general, and notes that Government is not to be influenced or led away from the path of strict impartiality by any number of leagues. When Muhammadans are educated up to the standard of their Hindu brethren they will then, he says, be eligible for the posts they now covet.

BHARATBASI, 31st March, 1908.

Government and religious trusts.

23. The Bháratbási (Allahabad), of the 31st March, condemns the proposal recently made by Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh for an enactment enabling the Government to interfere with the religious affairs of Indians, and remarks that Government will do well to stick to its policy of non-interference in religious matters, as enunciated by the late Queen Victoria in the proclamation of 1858.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st April, 1908.

The Hindu deputation.

24. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st April, referring to the Hindu deputation which waited upon the Viceroy last month, remarks that it was in imitation of the Muhammadan deputation, but that it was less sincere in its assertions. The former had an end in view and boldly declared it, while the latter contented itself with harping on its loyalty. The editor asks whether, if both the Hindus and Musalmans are loyal, any one was responsible for the disturbances in Eastern Bengal, Punjab and Madras.

The editor concludes by saying that this was simply an attempt to remove the bad impression that the Government had formed of the Hindus during the last year.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 1st April 1908.

Conviction of the Barisal Hitaishi.

25. Alluding to the noble and encouraging words uttered by the wife and the father of B. Durga Mohan Sen, the editor of the Barisal Hitaishi, at his conviction, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 1st April, remarks that India can never fail to free itself provided it can beget a few more well-wishers of this type.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 1st April, 1908.

Conduct of the new Magistrate of Mymensingh.

26. Alluding to the conduct of the successor of Mr. Clarke, the Magistrate of Mymensingh, in confiscating the licenses for arms of the Hindus, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 1st April, remarks that such conduct will only make the gulf still wider between the rulers and the ruled. The editor expresses the opinion that mere deprivation of arms will not ensure sincere loyalty towards Government.

He exhorts Government to treat Indians with kindness and sympathy in which case they need not apprehend the least disorder or disloyalty even if they were allowed free and unrestricted possession of all sorts of arms and weapons.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

27. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 20th March, referring to the return of the Zakka-Khel expedition, remarks that such punitive expeditions have little effect on the turbulent frontier tribes, as has been proved by the experience of many years past, and advises Government to inflict upon them a punishment which they will not easily forget.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

SAHIFA, 20th March, 1908.

III.—Native States.

Nil.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

28. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th March, asks Government to consider the condition of patwaris, and to raise their prospects so as to make the work attractive to persons of respectable classes.

Patwaris.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th March, 1908.

29. The Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 28th March, referring to the recent ruling about cow-killing, remarks that now the Musalmans will be free to slaughter cows in quarters occupied by Hindus, Jains and Buddhists. The editor expresses the opinion that this is an attempt to win over the Musalmans, and that one day the Sikhs and Christians will be permitted to kill swine in their houses.

The Behta Goshain cow-killing case.

SWARAJYA, 28th March, 1908.

30. With reference to the recent ruling of the Allahabad High Court regarding the status of mukhtars, the editor of the Citizen of the 29th March, points out that mukhtars are under the ruling no better than unlicensed persons as they cannot appear in a case without the permission of the presiding Judge. This, he considers, is not in the interests of the public, as the average individual is not able to afford a pleader, especially when magistrates are on tour and when they study their own convenience as regards hearing or postponing a case. On such occasions, he notes, a mukhtar is invaluable, as he charges only a small fee and has plenty of time to place at the disposal of his client. But under the new ruling, the editor points out, the mukhtar has no status, and thus a popular class, that has fully justified its existence, suddenly finds itself shunned and avoided.

The status of mukhtars.

CITIZEN, 29th March, 1908.

31. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of 3rd April, says that owing to the political bias of the presiding officers in law courts there is every possibility of an accused not getting a fair trial at the hands of the authorities.

Justice and the political bias.

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd April, 1908.

(b).—Police.

32. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st March, referring to a recent case of police Zulum in Jubbulpur, remarks that even with all this corruption, Sir A. Fraser is disposed to call them his friends.

Police.

RAHBAR, 21st March, 1908.

33. The Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 28th March, reports that some days ago two chaukidars Habib Ul-lah and Godha called at the house of one Hira Lal Vaish in Koryaganj (Aligarh district) at 2 o'clock in the night and enquired if he was at home. Being informed that he had gone to Aligarh they went away but returned after an hour and asked his wife, who was alone in the house, to open the door, as they suspected that there were some thieves in the house. She opened the door and Godha entered the house and, in his attempt to dishonour her, gagged her mouth. She however succeeded in coming out of the house, and by her cries, called her neighbours to the rescue, when the chaukidars decamped. Her husband on his return from Aligarh reported the matter to the police and the Sub-Inspector is making enquiries.

Alleged misconduct of the police at Aligarh.

SWARAJYA, 28th March, 1908.

34. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 29th March, notes that the Punjabee gives a full account of an interview that Ajit Singh had with the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore, from which it appears that Ajit Singh was annoyed at his reception by the Ajit Singh and the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 29th March, 1908.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

Deputy Commissioner as the latter termed him the paid agent of turbulent and rebellious persons. Prior to the interview it seems a Sub-Inspector named Hira Singh gave Ajit Singh some safe advice as to how he should conduct himself in the Deputy Commissioner's presence. In his general remarks the Sub-Inspector is said to have told Ajit Singh that police reporters are bound to exaggerate all political speeches and represent them as violent and inflammatory, or their superiors will think they are not reporting correctly. The editor of the Indian People remarks that police reporters are themselves only too ready to misrepresent speeches, and that if they are encouraged to do so by their officers the matter assumes a very serious aspect.

BHARATBASI, 31st March, 1908.

The police and the Moharrum riots in Bombay.

35. Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 31st March, expresses surprise that, notwithstanding the condemnation of police negligence during the Moharrum riots at Bombay by the entire native press, the Bombay Government has expressed satisfaction at the work of the police and praised it, exculpating it from the blame of causing death of some innocent persons on the ground that, the riots being formidable, a few deaths were inevitable. The editor remarks that, if it is impossible for the police to save the lives of innocent persons during riots, there could be no necessity of its protection in times of public peace.

BHARATBASI, 31st March, 1908.

Punitive police at Tinnevelly.

36. The Bháratbási (Allahabad), of the 31st March, condemns the quartering of the punitive police force at Tinnevelly inasmuch as it will press hard equally on the innocent and the guilty, and inquires if such police acts are calculated to infuse feelings of loyalty into the minds of the Indians.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 1st April, 1908.

Gambling in Cawnpore.

37. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 1st April, complains that gambling is rife in the town and asks the police to suppress it to the best of their power.

ARYA MITRA, 1st April, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai and the police.

38. The Arya Mitra (Agra) has the following in its issue of April 1st :—

"A representative of our contemporary the Punjabee, met Lala Lajpat Rai and enquired as to the behaviour of the police during his recent tour.

"Lala Lajpat Rai, in reply, said that the United Provinces Government was more vigilant than the Punjab Government. The Police accompanied him always in the United Provinces, so much so that they used to be present even in meetings held in private places. At one place a magistrate was also deputed to hear his speech. A goodly number of European police spies were also seen busy in their duty on railway stations.

"The police, however, do not interfere in any case."

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd April, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai and the Police.

39. Referring to the police vigilance and espionage in connection with Lala Lajpat Rai's recent tour, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 3rd April, says that the Government is not yet satisfied with the motives of Lala Lajpat Rai. It cites the opinion of the Lala about the United Provinces police, and concludes with the remark that where they ought to be present, the policemen are conspicious by their absence. It is to the peaceful meetings only where they can go without any fear of bodily injury.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th March, 1908.

The Benares municipality.

40. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th March, invites the attention of the Municipal Board, Benares, to the following suggestions :—

(1) The rates of pay of the employés of the Benares municipality are not well considered and satisfactory and should be reconsidered.

(2) The pay of the Sub-Registrars of births and deaths should be raised from Rs. 8 per mensem to Rs. 10 per mensem.

(3) Considering the nature and amount of work of the Conservancy inspector, his pay is small and should be equal to that of other inspectors and at least Rs. 100 per mensem.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

(4) The post of the assistant superintendent is entirely useless and should be abolished.

(5) The salary of the girdawars ought to be increased as they have to perform the major portion of the work.

(6) There seems to be no need of the water works sub-inspector, as the daroghas, if trained, can do the work without any difficulty.

(7) The salary of the octroi superintendent should not exceed Rs. 150 per mensem, and that of the secretary Rs. 300 if a native, and Rs. 400 if European.

41. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 26th March, complains that, although the European quarter in Lucknow is kept very neat and tidy, dirt and rubbish accumulates for months in the native quarter before it is removed. As an instance the editor cites that refuse has been accumulating for over a month near the Kali temple, yet no steps have been taken to remove it. He also complains that one of the stone-slabs of the drain in the lane leading from Sondhitola to Choorigali has been broken, leaving a gap dangerous for pedestrian traffic, and requests the municipality to repair it as soon as possible.

The Lucknow Municipality.

ANAND, 26th March, 1908.

42. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 1st April, remarks that the people of Bareilly are much grieved to hear that it is intended to build some latrines near the new Hospital in the library gardens, as such a step would offend them.

Bareilly.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st April, 1908.

(e).—Education.

43. While thanking Government for the various steps taken in the direction of the improvement of primary education, the Educational Magazine, (Ghazipur), of February 1908, suggests several reforms, such as increasing the pay of village school masters and inspecting officers, in order to attract more qualified men, the establishment of the postal system with proper sanitary arrangements, etc., etc.

The improvement of primary education.

EDUCATIONAL MAGAZINE, February, 1908.

44. Referring to the annual report on education in the United Provinces, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th March, notes with satisfaction that Government has of late begun to take interest in the cause of education, and is trying to make education cheap and accessible to all classes of people in the country.

Education in United Provinces.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th March, 1908.

45. The editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 30th March, is glad to note that as the result of a complaint made in the columns of the Hindosthan a short time ago regarding the stiffness of the Matriculation Examination of the Madras University last year, a small committee has been appointed by the Syndicate to consider the matter.

The Madras University.

HINDOSTHAN, 30th March, 1908.

46. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 31st March, commends the interest of His Honour Sir John Hewett in the industrial development of India, as evidenced by his instituting a scholarship for technical education in England. The editor, however, points out that the Government notification on the subject does not clearly specify whether the scholarship will be awarded to an Indian or a European resident in these provinces, and expresses the hope that it will be awarded to the former.

Technical scholarship.

BHARATBASI, 31st March, 1908.

47. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 1st April, while commenting favourably upon the intention of the Government to award a scholarship to a student wishing to proceed to England for instruction in the dyer's trade, exhorts its countrymen to take advantage of the offer so generously made. It concludes the article with an admonition for the cultivation of the virtue of self-reliance.

Technical scholarship.

HINDOSTHAN, 1st April, 1908.

48. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 1st April, referring to the proposed abolition of the Agra Collegiate school, remarks that this measure would produce universal dissatisfaction in Agra, and especially among the past students of the school and of the college, on whose moral support both institutions virtually depend.

The Agra collegiate school.

OUDH AKHBAR, 1st April, 1908.

The editor examines and discusses all the arguments that are advanced in favour of the measure, and with regard to the financial aspect of the question, he remarks that the M.A. classes at which the attendance is meagre, may be abolished, and the money spent on it diverted to the improvement of the other school and college classes. Besides this if the University objects to the holding of the college and school classes in the same building, another building could be constructed at an expense of about Rs. 5,000. The abolition of the school will be very hard on the teachers who have served in it for a long time, and who will find posts elsewhere with difficulty. The school, he notes, was named after the late Prince Victor, and the people would be much shocked if his memorial were abolished.

The editor concludes by appealing to Government to let the school remain as it is, and not to discontinue its grant-in-aid, as is apprehended, in case the trustees do not accept its proposals.

HINDOSTHAN, 2nd April, 1908.

A system of shorthand writing for the Nagri character.

49. While appreciating the work done by the various associations for the renewal of Nagri Literature, the Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of 2nd April, invites the serious attention of the Local Government to the possibility of establishing a scientific system of shorthand writing for the Nagri character. In this connection it acknowledges the action of the Madras Government, in having taken steps to introduce a similar system for the languages prevalent there. It concludes with the appeal to the people to take up the cause with earnestness.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 23rd March, 1908.

The famine.

50. A correspondent in the Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 23rd March, says that although the occurrence of famines in India is due to natural causes, yet much of the distress among the people could be relieved, if food grains were not allowed to be exported, nor stored up in godowns with a view to cent. per cent profit, and if steps were taken for the systematic development of cultivation in the country on scientific lines.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 29th March, 1908.

Famine orphans.

51. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of 29th March, notes that under the Famine Code, boys and girls deserted by their parents in time of scarcity, are practically the wards of Government, and says that during the present famine some Collectors have refused to allow orphans to be removed to orphanages outside their districts. This, he thinks, is wrong unless there is any chance of the orphans being reclaimed by their parents. When there is no clue to the parents of destitute children, he says that the latter should be removed to one of the many orphanages in existence all over the country instead of being sent to district poorhouses to associate with beggars.

(g).—General.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 29th March, 1908.

Begar in the Punjab.

52. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), of 29th March, notes that Begár is not yet extinct in the Punjab and United Provinces. He refers to a case that recently it is said occurred in Ludhiana, in which a man named Jhandu filed a complaint against the Assistant Court Inspector, a tahsil peon, and a tahsildar, for beating him because he had refused to do begár work. The case finally came before the Sessions Judge who was of opinion that illegal violence had been used in the demand for labour.

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd April, 1908.

The begar system.

53. Referring to the general complaint of official oppression in connection with begar and rasad, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 3rd April, cites by way of illustration two cases of oppression reported from the Punjab. It asks Government not only to express sympathy, but also to take practical steps for the suppression of this unjustifiable custom. It concludes the article with an appeal to the educated community to devise measures for enlightening the masses, and for making them understand that the law does not require any such service from them.

RAHBAR, 28th March, 1908.

Mr. Gokhale and Lala Lajpat Rai: their proposed visit to England.

54. Referring to the rumour that Lala Lajpat Rai is to accompany Mr. Gokhale to England, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th March, says that, if the motive is to lay an appeal before the British public, it would be extremely unwise to test what has already been tested (and failed).

55. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of 30th March, in announcing the intended arrival of Lala Lajpat Rai at Benares on 1st April, says that he will deliver a lecture in the Arya Samaj temple on "Female Education and the duties of the Samaj." In conclusion it exhorts all to muster strong on the occasion.

Lala Lajpat Rai in Benares.

BHARAT JIWAN, 30th March, 1908.

56. From the fact that the tax levied on the imported goods in Bengal has decreased by $7\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th March, concludes that the swadeshi movement has been pre-eminently successful. Another proof of the popularity of the movement is the fact that the tax on the goods manufactured in India has increased correspondingly.

The swadeshi movement.

RAHBAR, 28th March, 1908.

57. Referring to the persecution to which the advocates of the Swadeshi Steam Navigation Company in Madras are alleged to be subjected, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 3rd April, says that inasmuch as the Government has allowed all this oppression, it cannot make good its claim to be a friend of the swadeshi movement. It should show its practical sympathy with the movement by taking action against the officials who are trying to nip in the bud this new enterprise.

Government and the swadeshi movement.

ABHYUDAYA, 3rd April, 1908.

58. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 29th March, referring to the opening of the Baraon sugar factories, notes that Mr. Hadi's scheme of sugar manufacture appears economic and practicable, and trusts that it will be speedily adopted all over the country. Mr. Hadi, he remarks, has undertaken to supply skilled men to start sugar factories, and to train the country people in the process of sugar manufacture.

The scheme of sugar manufacture.

CITIZEN, 29th March, 1908.

59. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st March, referring to the convalescence of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, remarks that, if he had been present at the Surat congress, the disgraceful scenes which marred it would have never taken place, and hopes that he may still have the strength to guide the destinies of India.

Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

RAHBAR, 21st March, 1908.

60. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 26th March, referring to Sir H. Risley's circular about the attendance of students at political meetings, advises him to issue circulars to prevent students from frequenting race-courses, liquor shops, gambling dens and houses of ill-fame.

Sir H. Risley and students.

HIND, 26th March, 1908.

61. A correspondent writes to the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 29th March, that the City Police Inspector when recently interviewed on the subject of the Kurbani disturbances in Allahabad, stated that the sacrifice was no innovation and was not objected to by any Hindu resident of the place in question, when he asked them of their opinion on the matter. The letter represents the Inspector as saying that Babu Charu Chander Mitter, Honorary Magistrate, did not take any precaution to prevent a breach of the peace, though he anticipated trouble, and that he wrote to the Joint Magistrate and did not consult him (the Inspector). It implies that the Inspector considers that he has been unfairly treated in the matter.

The cow-killing case of Allahabad.

CITIZEN, 29th March, 1908.

62. In an article entitled "Grievances of clerks," the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 29th March, notes with pleasure that the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya is to ask a question at the next meeting of the Provincial Legislative Council regarding the long hours that Secretariat clerks have to work at Allahabad. The editor points out that long hours are not confined to Allahabad clerks alone, but are general in all Government offices. Government clerks, he says, have to work overtime, frequently have to take work home with them, and usually cannot take advantage of gazetted holidays. He remarks that when the Citizen agitated a short time ago on behalf of clerks in the Railway Mail Service their lot was considerably improved. He trusts that now the Secretariat clerks will meet with the generous treatment they deserve.

Grievances of clerks.

CITIZEN, 29th March, 1908.

BHARAT JIWAN, 30th March, 1908.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Hindi.

63. A correspondent writing to the Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of 30th March, says that Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya has done great harm to the cause of Hindi literature by refusing to deliver his presidential speech at Lucknow in Hindi. Such action does not inspire confidence in the patriotic mission of Mr. Malaviya's life.

BHARAT JIWAN, 30th March, 1908.

New records for gramophone.

64. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of 30th March, referring to the records advertised as containing the swadeshi speeches of Surendra Nath Banarji, says that the swadeshi movement will benefit the gramophone companies as well.

AL-BASHIR, 31st March, 1908.

The Etawah incident.

65. Al-Bashir (Etawah) of the 31st March, refutes the insinuations made by the Hindustan (Lahore ?), and the Amrit Bazar Patrika (Calcutta) that the forgery was committed by some European, that the Magistrate did not allow Munshi Zorawar Singh to cross-examine some witness, being afraid that it would lead to the exposure of some of the officials concerned, and that the police is doing nothing to arrest Khalil, and remarks that now that the Hindu press has failed in proving the Musalmans guilty of forgery, it seeks to lay the blame at the door of the English, and that Munshi Zorawar Singh was not allowed to cross-examine the witness as he was himself a witness.

BHARATBASI, 31st March, 1908.

The new dewan of the Maharaja of Benares.

66. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 31st March, condemns the appointment of a Bengali as dewan of the Maharaja of Benares, and inquires why an upcountry man has not been appointed in his place.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

SWARAJYA, 28th March, 1908.

Railway accommodation at time of fairs.

67. The Swarajya (Allahabad) of the 28th March complains that, although the railway authorities reduce fares on the occasion of fairs, they pack up passengers in dirty and unswept goods wagons like so many animals, and make no attempt to make them comfortable.

RAHBAR, 28th March, 1908.

The Bengal-Nagpur Railway scandal.

68. Commenting upon the conduct of a Eurasian ticket collector in the employ of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, who is reported to be inclined to offend against the modesty of Indian lady passengers, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th March, takes serious exception to the attitude of the authorities, who, it says, are evidently bent upon suppressing the facts. He remarks that the sanctity of the pardah should be respected even by those who are not very particular about the honour of their own women.

RAHBAR, 28th March, 1908.

A victim to official caprice on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

69. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th March, appeals through its columns against the order of dismissal passed upon a clerk by the District Traffic Superintendent, Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Lucknow, which it considers is based on very trivial grounds.

BHARAT JIWAN, 30th March, 1908.

A new train.

70. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of 30th March, referring to the intention of the East Indian Railway authorities to run a comfortably equipped train between Bombay and Calcutta, says that presumably this train is meant for European passengers only.

VII.—Post Office.

Nil.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

ANAND, 26th March, 1908.

Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow.

71. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 26th March, says that on the occasion of the Chehlum, on the 24th instant, Shias did not lead their tazias in procession at Lucknow, owing to the Deputy Commissioner having ordered that they were to do so after 11 A. M., when the Sunnis had taken their tazias to Daulat Ganj, and that no offensive verses were to be recited by either party.

72. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 28th March, entirely agrees with the views of the Advocate on the Moharram disturbances between the Shias and Sunnis of Lucknow, and notes with regret that it is very difficult to make the people understand that what is being done in this matter is entirely for their good and benefit.

Moharram disturbances in Lucknow.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 28th March, 1908.

73. The Gurukul anniversary, which passed off with great éclát this year, was marked, says the Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th March, with the high sense of morality noticeable in the pilgrims there. No cases of theft nor even of ordinary petty quarrels were reported. In short everything passed off quite peacefully. The editor suggests that this was due to the wholesome teachings of the Arya Samaj?

The Gurukul anniversary.

RAHBAR, 28th March, 1908.

74. Referring to the notification in the Government Gazette warning pilgrims not to visit Garhwal as scarcity is very prevalent in the Kumaun Division, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) of 29th March, points out that as large numbers of pilgrims proceed on foot, there will be some difficulty in warning them, unless men are stationed on the route and below the hills to persuade them to go back. Another difficulty he notes is that as Hindu pilgrimage is always associated with privation and even hunger, the warning may not prove effective.

Pilgrims to Kedarnath and Badrinath.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 29th March, 1908.

75. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 31st March, referring to the conversion of some Rajput Musalmans to Hinduism, ascribes it to the paucity of Musalmans in the higher and lower branches of the Educational Department, and remarks that the teachers in the village schools exert a great influence on their pupils, and that it would be well if the Musalmans were to turn their attention to this.

Conversion of Musalmans to Hinduism.

AL-BASHIR, 31st March, 1908.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

Nil.

ALLAHABAD:
The 6th April, 1908.

C. E. W. SANDS,
Assistant to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 15 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 11th April, 1908.

CONTENTS.

Page.

I.—POLITICS.

(a)—Foreign:

1. Indians abroad 329
2. England and Turkey 329
3. Anglo-Russian Convention 329
4. The Tibetan language in English Universities 329
5. Armament of European Powers ... 329
6. India and Egypt 329

(b)—Home:

7. The Tinnevelly riots 329
8. The Tinnevelly riots 330
9. The situation at Tuticorin 330
10. The Tuticorin riots 330
11. The Southern India riots 330
12. Riots in India 330
13. The National Convention 330
14. The Congress creed 331
15. The Moderate party and their leaders ... 331
16. Reconciliation of Moderates and Extremists 331
17. Indian ladies' swadeshi Congress ... 331
18. Indian members of the India Council ... 331
19. Questions in the Council 331
20. Questions in the Council 331
21. Unrest in India 331
22. Sedition trials 332
23. Result of political agitation in Bengal ... 332

Page.

24. India under Muhammadan and British rule 332
25. The future of India 332
26. England and India 332
27. The Provincial Conference 333
28. H. L. Varma's letter 333
29. Indians under good leaders 333
30. Lala Lajpat Rai's suits 333
31. Might is right 333
32. The Times and Aryan civilization ... 333
33. Self-government 333
34. Lord Minto's rule 334
35. Unity among the Musalmans ... 334
36. Deportation of three hundred residents of Calcutta 334
37. Dismissal of a constable 334
38. The omnipresent police 334

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

39. The Zakka Khel expedition 334
40. The Zakka Khel expedition 334
41. The Zakka Khel expedition 335

III.—NATIVE STATES.

42. The Dumraon estate 335

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Judicial and Revenue:

43. The status of mukhtars 335
44. Separation of judicial and executive functions 335
45. Separation of judicial and executive functions 335

		Page.
46.	Separation of judicial and executive functions	335
	(b)—Police :
47.	The police	336
48.	Alleged embezzlement in the Kohkheraj Thana of Allahabad district ...	336
49.	The police and Lala Lajpat Rai ...	336
50.	A question of saluting	336
51.	Detective police at Gurukul	336
	(c)—Finance and Taxation :
52.	The Budget debate	336
53.	The budget debate	336
	(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :
54.	The Agra municipality	337
55.	The Allahabad municipality	337
56.	The Allahabad municipality ...	337
57.	The Allahabad municipality	337
	(e)—Education :
58.	National education	337
59.	Students and politics	338
60.	The Jubilee of Calcutta University ...	338
61.	Aligarh College Dinner	338
62.	The Agra College	338
63.	The Agra College	338
64.	The Agra College	338
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :
65.	The Anna Rakshini Sabha	339
66.	Lord Minto and relief work	339
67.	The state of agriculturists	339
68.	Famine in the United Provinces ...	339
69.	Famine in the United Provinces ...	339
70.	Famine in India	339
	(g)—General :
71.	Warning to the Swarajya	339
72.	Warning to the Swarajya	340
73.	The Deputy Commissioner of Lahore and Ajit Singh	340
74.	The Deputy Commissioner of Lahore and Ajit Singh	340
75.	The Afridi raids	340
76.	The Afridi raids	340
77.	The swadeshi movement	340
78.	The swadeshi movement	340
79.	The dairy industry in the United Provinces	340
80.	Foreign cloth	340
81.	The swadeshi Steam Navigation Companies	340
82.	European officials and Indians ...	341
83.	Europeans and Indians	341
84.	Bengalis suspected to be Japanese ...	341
85.	Protection of children	341
86.	Government forests	341
87.	The Divisional Darbar	341
88.	The Etawah conspiracy	342
89.	Ajit Singh and Colonel Parsons ...	342
90.	A Moslem National Bank	342
91.	Life of Robert Clive	342
92.	Amalgamation of the Arya Samaj and the Sanatan Dharam	342
93.	Plague and inoculation	342
94.	Military expenditure in India ...	343
95.	Indians as Sanitary officers	343
96.	Kayasthas and Government Service ...	343
97.	Cow-killing	343
98.	Villagers how they are duped ...	343
99.	Illicit importation of firearms ...	343
100.	The Englishman and Bengalis ...	343
101.	The Rawalpindi riots	343
	V.—LEGISLATION.
102.	The Religious Endowment Bill ...	343
103.	Religious Endowment Bill	344
	VI.—RAILWAY.
	Nil.
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
	Nil.
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
104.	Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow ...	344
105.	Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow ...	344
106.	The Holi	344
107.	The Holi	344
108.	Conference of Sarola Brahmans in Garhwal	344
109.	Unity between Hindus and Muhammadans	344
110.	The Nau Chandi fair at Meerut ...	344
111.	A religious campaign at Agra ...	344
112.	Injury to a cow at Cawnpore ...	345
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
113.	A man-eating tiger in the Almora district	345

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd April, notes that a copy of a resolution recently adopted by the Government of the United States, America, limiting Indian immigration on the grounds that America is now unsuited for Indian labour has been received by the Indian Government. The editor suggests that student immigration should also be restricted.

Indians abroad.

ADVOCATE, 2nd April, 1908.

2. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 4th April, referring to an article in the Near East, London, on the improvement of the existing relations between England and Turkey, remarks that it would be highly gratifying to Musalmans if England would revive her old policy of friendship with Turkey. Friendly relations, the editor remarks, would benefit both countries.

England and Turkey.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 4th April, 1908.

3. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 5th April, contains an article in which a correspondent gives expression to his views upon the question of the Anglo-Russian convention.

Anglo-Russian convention.

SAHIFA, 5th April, 1908.

The writer first refers to the rumour concerning the extension of the Indian Railway system in the direction of the Northern frontiers in such a way as to facilitate communication between Asia and Europe. He goes on to say that cautious steps are being taken to ascertain the feelings of the people on the matter in Kabul, and that if public opinion is opposed to the remoured railway extension—a thing which is not quite impossible, considering the conservative nature of the Kabulis—it would be a serious question for the British Government to decide whether it should retain Kabul or Russia as its ally. This is crisis No. I. Crisis No. II will, the writer thinks, arise when the different Powers find themselves face to face with the proposal to curtail expenditure of the army and navy, as it will be contended that there is no need for all this mighty armament when international peace has been established.

The writer calls it a crisis, for it throws the weaker Powers upon the mercy of their stronger rivals who may at any time come down upon them.

4. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, referring to the proposal that the Tibetan language should be taught in English Universities, remarks that were this not done, the British Government could never have facilities for being acquainted with mysteries of the frontier states of Tibet, acquaintance with which is essential as trade regulations between India and Tibet have been settled with China?

The Tibetan language in English Universities.

BHARATBASI, 7th April, 1908.

5. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, referring to the military preparations of the European Powers, remarks that it betokens that they are soon going to engage in a general conflict. Commenting on Sir Robert Jeffin's advice that England should be prepared beforehand for the worst that may happen, the editor expresses the opinion that none of the European Powers will be eager for war, and that the Powers who have suffered defeat recently will never countenance an aggressive policy.

Armament of European Powers.

BHARATBASI, 7th April, 1908.

6. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th April, referring to the question put by Mr. Cox and the reply given in Parliament by Mr. Haldane, contrasts the treatment of India with that of Egypt by the British Government in connection with army charges, and remarks that the moral is obvious and need hardly be pointed out.

India and Egypt.

ADVOCATE, 9th April, 1908.

(b).—Home.

7. The Musafir (Agra), of the 30th March, referring to the Tinnevelly riots, remarks that they had their origin in the intolerant attitude of the local officials towards the swadeshi and boycott movements just as at Rawalpindi.

The editor thinks that if the officials had behaved with moderation, justice and tact, the peaceful people of the south would never have defied the law.

The Tinnevelly riots.

MUSAFIR, 30th March, 1908.

ANAND, 2nd April, 1908.

The Tinnevelly riots.

8. Referring to the release of Chidambaram Pillay by order of the Madras High Court and to his subsequent arrest on a charge of sedition, the Anand (Lucknow) of the 2nd April, remarks that had Mr. Pillay been a European he would never have been put to all the trouble to which he has been subjected.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 5th April, 1908.

The situation at Tuticorin.

9. The editor of the Indian People in the issue of the 5th April refers to the proceedings of the authorities at Tuticorin and remarks that the conditions there appear to be the same as they were a short time ago in Bengal and the Punjab as the methods of repression are identical. The residents of Southern India, he notes, are famed for their law-abiding spirit, but Government appears determined to provoke them.

ANAND, 9th April, 1908.

The Tuticorin riots.

10. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 9th April, says that the Tuticorin riots are the outcome of an ebullition of sedition and that there too the drama of trials is being enacted.

The editor remarks that such riots do not only involve the rioters in trouble, but also reflect serious discredit on the administration in that it is never statesmanlike to get the people into difficulty at the risk of one's own good name.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th April, 1908.

The Southern India riots.

11. Referring to the causes of the Tinnevelly and Tuticorin riots enumerated by Mr. P. Narayan Murti in a meeting held at Madras to express sympathy with Mr. Chidambaram Pillay, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 10th April, remarks that had the Madras Government ordered an impartial inquiry into the riots it would have surely found out that they were caused not by the speeches of Mr. Chidambaram and others, but by the arrest of the popular leaders. Now-a-days Government accepts official reports as gospel truth and adopts repressive measures on their strength. It is to be hoped, the editor says, that some day or other Government will realize that official opinion counts for nothing when compared with public opinion, and that administrative measures ought to be based on the latter. The editor further remarks that Government being very much afraid of inquiries, did not institute an impartial inquiry into the riots.

The people, however, he notes have now adopted the system of unofficial commissions, with the result that they frequently find that official reports are not always correct

ABHYUDAYA, 10th April, 1908.

Riots in India.

12. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th April, says that none of the riots that have taken place in India have been due to political agitation in the country, but to the false reports of detectives and to the want of foresight on the part of officials. Under these circumstances, the editor remarks, that it is never statesmanlike to punish political agitators and to set detectives on their track and to adopt repressive measures in the country. He suggests that if Government were to exercise the same check over officials who create discontent among the people by their arbitrary conduct as it does over political agitators, the state of affairs in the country would never have come to such a pass.

In conclusion he remarks that the educated classes realise that internal strife is detrimental to the interests of the country and consequently are opposed to civil disturbances. Government, accordingly, he thinks, should not hold them responsible for any riots that occur.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 5th April, 1908.

The National Convention.

13. Referring to the approaching meeting of the National Convention Committee at Allahabad on the 18th and 19th instant, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) in the issue of the 5th April, says that it is not yet known whether the committee is composed of persons who were actually present at the convention or of others, who though not present, sympathise with its creed, and asks if the All-India Congress Committee is dissolved, and if so, by what authority. If one party seeks to include another, the revival of the Congress, he thinks, is impossible, the real differences being personal and not political. Self-reliance is acceptable to all parties, but boycotting the Government, he points out, is not necessarily the same thing as self-reliance.

He hopes that the committee of the convention will devise a method for united action, otherwise a party organisation cannot be called a National Congress, and exclusiveness will not in any way help the cause of the country.

The Congress Creed.

14. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 5th April, has an article from a correspondent on the congress creed in which the writer says that those who attempt progress by enforcing old-world beliefs are seeking to command forces that are beyond their control. He expounds the views of the extremists and cautions those that are imbued with a sincere love for their country never to lose sight of the fact that all persons who allow the considerations and exigencies of the public welfare to be overridden by their personal beliefs and caprices are undoubtedly the deadliest enemies of progress and regeneration.

CITIZEN, 5th April, 1908.

The Moderate party and their leaders.

15. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, has an article entitled "Our Leaders and Practical Reform" in which the editor ridicules Pandit Moti Lal Nehru and the objects of the Moderate party.

CITIZEN, 2nd April, 1908.

Reconciliation of Moderates and Extremists.

16. Discussing how the Moderates and the Extremists can be reconciled, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 10th April, remarks that the bitterness of feeling between the two parties is due to mutual recriminations in the press and on the platform and that if the people were to occupy themselves in real solid work such as the education of the masses and the development of arts and industries they would find little time to waste in fruitless discussions.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th April, 1908.

Indian ladies' swadeshi Congress.

17. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 11th April, notes with satisfaction the proposal to hold a ladies' swadeshi congress in Calcutta, and remarks that it will give a great impetus to the swadeshi cause.

OUDH AKHBAR, 11th April, 1908.

Indian members of the India Council.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, referring to the appointment of Messrs. Bilgrami and Gupta as members of the Indian Council, remarks that the people wanted a man like Mr. Dadabhai Naorji who had an unrivalled knowledge of Indian affairs, to represent them in the council and that the appointment of these gentlemen has not aroused any enthusiasm, even in England.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd April, 1908.

Questions in the Council.

19. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 5th April, says that the reply that Government has vouchsafed to the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya in connection with his question on the grievances of clerks in the office of the Examiner appears rather vague. Government on the one hand seems to acknowledge that the clerks are considerably overworked, but does not consider that that constitutes a grievance, and on the other thanks them for the cheerful and ungrudging spirit in which they have undertaken additional duties. Mr. Swetenham, the editor remarks, cannot cite a single instance in which he expressed his thanks to his subordinates for their systematic hard work, whilst his haughty and overbearing nature leaves nothing undone to render their lot still more miserable.

CITIZEN, 5th April, 1908.

Questions in the Council.

20. Referring to the replies given to the two questions of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya, the Adocate (Lucknow) of the 5th April, says that the treatment accorded to the clerks in the office of the Examiner of Accounts, Allahabad, will not help in securing efficiency in the office. As regards the employment of Kayasths, the editor observes that partiality towards particular creeds and classes is responsible for a deal of discontent and racial feeling in the country. The reply given by Government, the editor thinks, will cause great dissatisfaction, and the Kayasth community, he argues, will be justified in moving Government to consider their case.

ADVOCATE, 5th April, 1908.

Unrest in India.

21. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th April, referring to the growing unrest and discontent among the educated classes in India, remarks that the spirit of the age is due to the absence of religious education in Government schools.

The editor notes with satisfaction the attempts that are being made to supply this deficiency by the Mahamandal.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th April, 1908.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 5th April, 1908.

Sedition trials.

22. Referring to Mr. O'Grady's suggestion to Mr. Morley regarding the amendments of the sections of the Indian Penal Code that relate to political agitation, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th April, remarks that whenever the law of sedition has been brought up for revision it has been made more stringent and rigorous. A prosecution for sedition, he points out, gives the accused no chance of escape. The moment he is prosecuted, he is as good as convicted. No defence ever avails him and the trial is almost superfluous, for political offences in India are treated almost in the Russian fashion. The estrangement between the Government and the people is more pronounced than it was twenty years ago and the gulf, he prophesies, will go on widening.

ANAND, 9th April, 1908.

Result of political agitation in Bengal.

23. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 9th April, considers the proposed separation of the executive and judicial functions in Bengal the fruit of the political agitation of the Bengalis, and remarks that the inhabitants of these provinces, flatterers as they are, will look in vain for this reform, whereas it will soon become an accomplished fact in Bengal.

RAJPUT, 31st March, 1908.

India under Muhammadan and British rule.

24. A correspondent in the Rajput (Agra), of the 31st March, contrasting Muhammadan and British rule in India, assigns the palm to the latter, but remarks that the peace established by the English in the country has produced a very bad effect upon the people inasmuch as it has rendered them idle and entirely dependent upon others. The editor urges that Indians should take advantage of the Pax Britannica and regenerate their motherland by reviving and developing native arts and industries and by reverting to the old customs that were in vogue before the Muhammadan rule.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 5th April, 1908.

The future of India.

25. Referring to the question that is occupying the minds of the thinking portion of the people of India as to whether freedom is consistent with excessive power, or should be untrammelled by any condition, or should be absolute such as England herself enjoys, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th April, observes that the problem is a difficult one to solve. The consciousness of Indians has been awakened and they yearn for a national existence as distinguished from a state of dependence. O e section of the educated community whose number is now rapidly growing, holds, he states, that India can develop in many directions without Government assistance, whereas the other party cherishes the hope that Government will gradually withdraw all restrictions and ultimately leave Indians to themselves. But the question naturally arises as to whether the benefits received help India to become a nation; and whether it is possible for her to develop into a nation without weakening the position of the Government. Of course he thinks, it is certain that the Government will help India to become an ideal subject race, but never an independent one.

Whatever reforms may be proposed, they will be mere variations of the present system, for no country which has ruled another has ever helped it to become free and independent: and so England after all can only follow the traditions of all conquering races. The future of India is therefore in the hands of the people of India, if they will only respond to the call of duty.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 1st and 8th April, 1908.

England and India.

26. The Aligarh Institute Gazette in its issue of the 1st and 8th April, publishes an article by Khan Bahadur Mohammad Zakaullah in which he reviews Townsend's "Europe and Asia", and refers specially to his discussion of the question as to whether England will always retain India or not, commenting on the following passage from the book referred to—"The above account shows that the Indians will never be able to turn out the English from India, nor will the kingdoms of Europe and Asia ever dare to do this. The English too will not leave India of their own accord and allow it to be destroyed and ruined. So they will never relax their grip on it and will not allow it to pass into the hands of others." The writer says this statement has proved true, but the Congress has raised shouts of freedom and Bande Matram which are spreading in the country like an epidemic and can never be checked. The incidents which are taking place daily in Europe owing to a general desire for freedom, will be repeated here in a short time and the Anglo-Indians will be obliged to treat Indians in another way and will not be able to rule in the same dauntless spirit in which they have ruled up to this time. The desire for freedom will wax stronger daily and will not be satisfied till the government in India will be such as is desired by Indians. But they will not attain this, the writer says, until they develop unanimity of opinion and military strength. It is difficult for them to do this, he admits, and even if they could do so, it would take a very long time.

The Provincial Conference.

27. The Musafir (Agra) of the 30th March, referring to the Provincial Conference held at Lucknow, remarks that it was a mere farce and that its promoters wanted to curry favour with the Government and so thanked Government for its various proposals and that they deliberately attempted to deceive the public by including among the delegates some Musalmans who did not represent any district.

MUSAFIR, 30th March, 1908.

H. L. Varma's letter.

28. The Musafir (Agra), of the 30th March, reproduces from the Hindi Kesari (Nagpur), a letter written by H. L. Varma containing an account of his interview with Dr. Rutherford and Princess Dhulip Singh in Cairo. Dr. Rutherford expressed his regret at the Congress split especially as it was due to Mr. Tilak; but he thought that Mr. Tilak was not entirely to blame, as he was given sufficient provocation by the Moderates. He thought that the Extremists would win in the end and expressed his gratitude for the hospitality which he received in India.

MUSAFIR, 30th March, 1908.

He believed the Arya Samaj to be a non-political institution, and admired it for the great work it had done.

Princess Dhulip Singh, he stated, made several enquires about the Punjab, Sikhs and Ajit Singh.

Indians under good leaders.

29. Referring to the opinion of the Indian Engineering that South Africa must be preserved from the intrusion of the "unquestionably degenerate Asiatic," the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th April quotes Sir John Hamilton's views on the fighting material in the north of India and in Nepal, which according to that eminent soldier could under good leadership shake the artificial society of European to its foundation. The editor remarks that Sir John Hamilton is capable of recognising facts, which the average English politician is unable to do owing to his insularity and narrow national vanity.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 5th April, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai's suits.

30. Referring to the damage suits which Lala Lajpat Rai proposes to bring against some of the English and Anglo-Indian papers, the Zul Qarnain (Buduan) of 7th April, says that if no compromise is arrived at, the cases will lead to wonderful disclosures which may cast a flood of light upon the doings of the police in the Punjab.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 7th April, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai, continues the paper, goes to Burma to collect subscriptions for the famine stricken immediately after the Allahabad convention.

Might is right.

31. Referring to the compensation which Canada proposes to Japan for alleged ill-treatment, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th April, says that if Indians had the requisite strength at their command, they also would be entitled to similar compensation from the Transvaal Government.

RAHBAR, 7th April, 1908.

"Now is the time," says the editor, "to prove our strength."

The Times and Aryan civilisation.

32. Referring to the statement of the Times denying the benefical effect of the Aryan civilisation upon Europe, as published in the Historians' History of the World, the Rahbar (Moradabad) of 7th April, says that Europeans were formerly anxious to trace their descent from the Aryan race, simply because of its established superiority over other races. Now they want to belittle the effect of the Aryan civilisation because they find that the consciousness of the superiority of their race is helping Indians to form an Indian Nationality which may prove dangerous to the best interests of Europeans in general and of Englishmen in particular.

RAHBAR, 7th April, 1908.

Self-government.

33. The Cawnpore Gazette, of the 8th April, refers to the proposal to give self-government to the Phillipines, who were conquered by the Americans only four or five years ago, and asks if after 150 years of British rule the time has not yet come to grant self-government to Indians.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th April, 1908.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st and 8th April, 1908.

34. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), in its combined issue of 1st and 8th April complains that from the time that Lord Minto took the Government of this country into his hands it has been continuously suffering from divers evils such as press prosecution, railway strikes, &c. The editor thinks that this is due to lack of initiative in His Excellency and to his relying too much on his subordinates. The press is silent and cannot express itself freely and expose the doings of the bureaucrats. Lord Minto believes that a policy of repression is highly conducive towards good government.

Lord Minto's rule.

The editor however hopes that His Lordship will one day discover his mistake, and advises the Liberal Ministry to caution him against his reactionary government.

OUDH AKHBAR, 9th April, 1908.

35. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 9th April, referring to the growing dissensions among Musalmans, remarks that it would be advisable for present day Musalmans to lay aside the discussion of their religious differences as discussions lead to nothing, and that they should take up the work of political advancement by first promoting union among themselves and then with the Hindus. Thu only, the editor says, a united nation will be formed in India, as has been done in Egypt, where all sections of the people have joined in the common cause.

Unity among the Musalmans.

He concludes by saying that religion is an affair of the heart, and that union in religious beliefs cannot be attained by discussion and therefore differences in religion should not be allowed to hamper political progress.

HIND, 9th April, 1908.

36. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th, April publishes an article entitled "Deportation of three hundred men of Calcutta," an exact translation of which is given below :—

Deportation of three hundred residents of Calcutta.

"A rumour is current in Calcutta that the Government will deport to Western Africa, three hundred politicians of Calcutta city. Several proprietors and editors of Indian newspapers will also be entangled in the meshes of the punishment (lit.). It is stated that the list of the persons to be deported has already been prepared. If the news is correct, there is no doubt that the repression of Government has reached its limit and unrest three hundred times greater than that which spread in India after the deportation of Lala Lajpat Rai and Sardar Ajit Singh is to spread (in the near future). While committing actions like these, can the Government still hope that Indians will remain loyal? For God's sake do not think of such oppression even in dreams and imagination. No nation ever has and never will make any one loyal by deportation and imprisonment. If there be any doubt as to this, read the History of England herself.

HIND, April, 1908.

37. Referring to the dismissal of a constable for the alleged offence of allowing some boys to shout Bande Mataram, the Hind (Lucknow), of April says that one is quite at a loss to understand why these European authorities are so afraid of Bande Mataram, especially when the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has said that there is nothing objectionable in the words.

Dismissal of a constable.

HIND, 9th April, 1908.

38. Referring to the presence of the police at a meeting at Amritsar where a lecture was to be delivered on "Man is the Lord of creation," the Hind (Lucknow) of 9th April, says that the devil of sedition may lead the authorities to commit any amount of nonsensical acts.

The omnipresent police.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

MUFID-AM, 1st April, 1908.

39. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of 1st April, contains a narrative poem dealing with the Zakka Khel expedition. The cause, incidents, and the result of the expedition are all dealt with in a masterly way.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

ADVOCATE, 2nd April, 1908.

40. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 2nd April, refers to an article in the Bande Mataram entitled "Squabbles of the gods, in which it was noted that the Zakka Khel expedition was hastily patched up and concluded because it had been undertaken without the orders of the Secretary of State.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

41. The Anand (Lucknow). of the 9th April, endorses the remarks of a correspondent about the Zakka Khel expedition to the effect that such expeditions are worthy of savages and that the punishment of a whole tribe for the offences of a few of its members cannot be justified by any code of morality and observes that this expedition is but one of the instances of the oppression of the weak by the strong.

The Zakka Khel expedition.

ANAND, 9th April, 1908.

III.—Native States.

42. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, complains of Munshi Shiwa Saran Lal's being replaced by an inexperienced European in the managership of the Dumraon estate, although the former has managed it very creditably for the last ten years.

The Dumraon estate.

BHARATBASI, 7th April, 1908.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

43. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 5th April, discusses the status of Mukhtars and the restrictions imposed on them. The ruling given recently regarding their status cannot, the editor thinks, be true to the spirit of the Indian legistature which always jealously guards the liberty of the subject.

He promises to discuss at an early date the interpretation of the sections of the code relating to mukhtars, recently adopted by the High Court, Allahabad.

The status of mukhtars.

CITIZEN, 5th April, 1908

44. Referring to the scheme for the separation of the functions of executive and judicial officers laid before the Imperial Council Meeting by Sir H. Adamson, the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 9th April, remarks that it is questionable if this is not too wide a reservation of power in favour of district officers. The public, the editor thinks, will have no means of protecting themselves against the abuse of certain provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure which are not unfrequently resorted to by the police and the executive in the mufassil without sufficient justification.

The editor suggests the desirability of proceedings being initiated by executive officers, but that in the interest of justice the trial should be conducted by independent judicial officers.

Referring to the control of the Divisional Commissioner over both, he argues that the success of the scheme would have been ensured had judicial officers been placed under the District Judge and the High Court, independent of the Commissioner. Otherwise, he thinks, the judicial officer will not be able to rise above the influence of the executive.

Separation of judicial and executive functions.

CITIZEN, 9th April, 1907.

45. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, referring to Sir H. Adamson's speech on the separation of the executive and judicial functions, remarks that he has merely sketched an outline of the scheme for public criticism and no provision has been made in the budget for the additional expenditure that may be incurred in carrying out the proposed separation. The editor believes that the idea of this reform has originated with Mr. Morley and not with the Government of India, and regrets that Government has taken a very long time to discover the need for such reform.

Separation of judicial and executive functions.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd April, 1908.

46. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 5th April, referring to the budget debate remarks that no part of the debate will be read with a greater feeling of satisfaction than that in which the Government of India has conceded to the constant demand of educated Indians for reforms in the administration of the country. The editor congratulates Bengal on the concession made to its public demand, and remarks that the detractors of Bengal in North India should note that constituted as the Government of India is, nothing carries such influence with it as systematic agitation. The Government has to be convinced that cases of failure of justice lower the prestige of the magistracy in the eyes of the people. Sir Harvey Adamson, in a manner, invites the people of those provinces which are not to be favoured with this welcome reform, to follow the footsteps of Bengal and to carry on a sustained agitation. He concludes by saying that the people will not fail to take the hint.

Separation of judicial and executive functions.

ADVOCATE, 5th April, 1908.

(b).—Police.

MUFID-I-AM, 1st April, 1908.

The police.

47. While denouncing the policy of those newspapers which constantly attack the members of the police force for their alleged dishonesty and oppression, the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of 1st April, admits that much reform can be effected if the police all over the country follow the example of the Agra police.

CITIZEN, 2nd April, 1908.

Alleged embezzlement in the Kohkhiraj Thana of Allahabad district.

48. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, refers to a case of alleged embezzlement at the Kohkhiraj police station in the Allahabad district already referred to in a previous number, and remarks that the case instituted against Sub-Inspector Sant Singh was a counterpoise to the case against constable Maula Baksh He expresses the opinion that the former was innocent and the victim of intrigue and that it was the latter who should have been punished.

HIND, 9th April 1908.

The police and Lala Lajpat Rai.

49. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th April, referring to the espionage on Lala Lajpat Rai by the police, remarks that the police are ever ready to bully harmless persons whose only means of defence is the tongue or the pen and do nothing to defend the people from the hooliganism of the badmashes in Eastern Bengal or from the depredations of the Afridis on the North-Western frontier.

HIND, 9th April, 1908.

A question of saluting.

50. The Hind (Lucknow) of the 9th April, referring to the caning of Seth Rakhab Dass, a Jain priest by the District Superintendent of Police, Chindwara, remarks that the facts show that the Superintendent is to blame as no one is compelled to show his respect to a Government official except in a court of law and that he should be duly punished for insulting a fellow citizen.

HIND, 9th April, 1908.

Detective police at a Gurukul.

51. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th April, has an article entitled 'Gurukul men khufia police (Detective police at Gurukul) of which the following is an exact translation :—

The Magnificent celebration of the Gurukul of the Arya Samaj has (just) passed off. But even here members of the detective police did not refrain from doing their secret work. The Sat Dharam Pracharak writes—"Many detectives came to the assembly in various dresses. They used to wander about till two in the morning, some representing themselves as political preachers, some as well-wishers of the Arya Samajists; some as doctors and some as friends of the Arya Samaj, and they used to ask of the people what work the Arya Samaj was doing and what it aimed at. One of these gentlemen met one of the workers and told him that he was related to the Amir of Kabul and that he had come to see Lala Lajpat Rai.

We are justified (in objecting and) do not know why the detective police turned its favourable (lit.) eye on the Gurukul which is a religious institution and has nothing to do with political affairs When Government has been assured that the Arya Samaj is a religious body, it is not known why these improper proceedings are adopted.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

ADVOCATE, 5th April, 1908.

The budget debate.

52. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 5th April, has a leader entitled "Some hard nuts" in which the editor refers to the speeches of the Maharaja of Darbhanga, Mr. Gokhale and Mr. Chitnavis at the budget debate and remarks that the discussion revealed the existence of a few financial and economic points that have taxed the ingenuity of such experienced officials as Messrs. Baker and Miller to successfully explain them away.

The issues referred to relate to questions concerning the food supply of the people and the currency policy of the Government.

CITIZEN, 9th April 1908.,

The budget debate.

53. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 9th April, reviewing the dominating feature of the budget debate in the Imperial Council remarks that it is high time that the Government should face the question of this perpetual scourge of famine manfully and see that the demands of the State allow for the retention by agriculturists of a fair margin of their profits in good years to tide them over bad years. The next important duty of Government is to remove this dependence on agriculture by encouraging industrial and commercial activity within the country and to see that the interests and economic welfare of the country are not sacrificed to the self-interest of the ruling race.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

54. The Swadesh Bandhava (Agra), for March, cites an instance in which a house owner in Agra was made to pay house-tax twice and complains that similar occurrences take place from time to time in almost all the wards of the Agra municipality.

The Agra municipality.

SWADESH BANDHAVA, March, 1908.

The editor attributes this state of affairs to incompetent municipal commissioners and to the indifference of the public towards municipal affairs.

55. Referring to the notification regarding the removal of rubbish issued by the Allahabad municipality on the report of the Sanitary Commissioner, pointing out the unsatisfactory state of the Allahabad municipality from a sanitary point of view, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 5th April, remarks that the only inference which one can draw from the notification is that the municipality is having recourse to desperate measures for financial reasons and not with a view to sanitary improvements. The Sanitary Commissioner recommends improvements in the rubbish carts while the municipality creates a new source of income by imposing heavy fines. The action of the municipality is so extraordinary and so unjust, the editor thinks, that the intervention of the higher authorities is called for.

The Allahabad municipality.

CITIZEN, 5th April, 1908.

In the same issue he enumerates the importance and sanctity of Allahabad and deplores the fact that the crying evils of neglected sanitation do not contribute to attracting people to the city. He then mentions a number of defects and suggests remedies for the same, for no amount of patchwork, he points out, is likely to help much.

56. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 2nd April, complains of the action of Government in vetoing the proposal of the Allahabad municipality to remit house-tax for the poorer house owner. The editor also draws attention to the defective sanitary arrangements in the city and to the unpleasantness of the system of irrigation by means of sewage water.

The Allahabad municipality.

CITIZEN, 2nd April, 1908.

57. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, draws the attention of the Local Government to the following evils in the Allahabad municipality :—

The Allahabad municipality.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd April, 1908.

(1) The streets and lanes in the "Black Town" remain as usual the receptacles of filth, night-soil, urine and sweepings which are highly injurious to public health.

(2) The municipality does not prosecute the owners of the borrow-pits near the Government High School and in Malacca. The pits are not fenced in and so are freely used by the people living in the neighbourhood for latrine purposes, and during the rains are filled with water, forming breeding grounds for mosquitos. Most of these pits belong to the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Company, who ought to be asked to have them fenced in.

(3) The sowing of high crops near human habitations is injurious to public health: but there are many such fields near the Government House and the Government High School most of which are sown with arhar. These fields are used by the people as latrines and hence are a source of great nuisance.

(e).—Education.

58. The Educational Magazine (Ghazipur), of March, reproduces the views of Lala Lajpat Rai on National Education and endorses them. The present system of education is defective, the editor says, because it ignores the moral and religious instruction of the boys.

National Education.

EDUCATIONAL MAGAZINE, March, 1908.

CENTRAL HINDU COLLEGE MAGAZINE, April, 1908.

Students and Politics.

59. In the Central Hindu College Magazine (Benares) for April, Mrs. Besant in the editorial notes, says :—" It ought, however to be clearly understood that while I earnestly deprecate political action by youths in a state of pupilage, I earnestly encourage among them political study and a keen interest in public affairs. It is right that a young man, who will soon be going out into the world, should study present day movements and admire the patriots of his country. Government officials who try to curb this open interest and admiration are drawing the reins too tightly, and can only provoke mischief and resentment. Let them remember their own boyhood, and how they shouted themselves hoarse, no man forbidding them, when some idol of the moment visited their own town. Why should they deny to these youths such inspiring moments of love of country, of national pride, as brightened their own youth ? Take as an instance, Mr. Lajpat Rai. For many years he has been one of the hardest working and most self-sacrificing of educationalists ; he is a sincere patriot and a fine speaker. True, he belongs to " the Opposition," as would be said in England ; but such men as he have always been admired by Englishmen. He is no fire-brand ; he is a restraining influence and even the harsh treatment he has received has not embittered him. He is an example of work, of sacrifice, of patriotism, of law abiding zeal, that is most valuable in its effect on the youthful mind. He ought to be loved and admired by Indian youths and to check their natural and legitimate pride in him is most unwise. I shall continue to stop in the C. H. C. premature action in party politics, but I will take no part in the attempt to forcibly silence all signs of interest in their country, by the youths into whose hearts I am trying to instil the feelings that have made England great—patriotism and public spirit."

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th April, 1908.

The Jubilee of Calcutta University.

60. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th April, complains that the address presented by the representatives of the Allahabad University to the Calcutta University on the occasion of its jubilee was in Sanskrit, and remarks that it was due to the predominence of the Hindus in the Educational Department of this Province.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 7th April, 1908.

Aligarh College Dinner.

61. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of 7th April, announces that the Aligarh old boys dinner will take place on 19th and 20th, and that His Excellency the Viceroy will pay a visit to the college on the 22nd April.

ADVOCATE, 9th April, 1908.

The Agra College.

62. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 9th April has the following telegram from Agra :—

" The Agra College is in danger, intense and indignant feeling in the college and boarding houses. Great sensation throughout the city; one hundred college students already on strike. Principal and a Superintendent of the boarding-house are very unpopular and European staff of the college losing public confidence. A grand mass meeting of the Citizens of Agra going to be held to protest against the despotism of the Principal and the European staff. A memorial to the Government is under preparation. Situation is serious and critical."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th April, 1908.

The Agra College.

63. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th April, publishes a letter under the heading " Reign of terror in the Agra College " from an old boy, and remarks in its editorial notes that it is the old story of an unsympathetic staff and of students driven to exasperation. The editor observes that affairs are assuming a serious aspect and hopes that the timely intervention of higher authority will avert the crisis. Of course popular sympathy is entirely with the students, and if the present course of high-handed oppression is persisted in, the editor thinks the very existence of the College will be jeopardised.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th April, 1908.

The Agra College.

64. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th April, says that some hundred students of the Agra College, exasperated at the conduct of the Principal and the Superintendent of the Boarding-house, have gone on strike and that the students and the public alike are losing confidence in the European staff.

The editor requests Government to make an early inquiry into the matter so as to remove the grievances of the students and restore peace in the college.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

The Anna Rakhshini Sabha.

65. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 2nd April, referring to the starting of an Anna Rakhshini Sabha in Bengal to concert plans and adopt measures to stop the rise in the price of grain and to limit grain exports, remarks that it would be well for the Landholders' Association of Allahabad to join hands with capitalists and other influential people to stop the injurious export trade at least during the famine by forestalling the foreign exporter in the purchase of grain and by establishing village banks and co-operative societies.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 2nd April, 1908.

Lord Minto and relief work.

66. "Lord Minto," says the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th, April "has committed himself to a very peculiar statement. While emphasising the duty of the State to relieve the distressed, he says he cannot justly spare the tax-payer's money for relief works."

'Providence,' says the editor, 'must be smiling at this,' knowing what is in the heart of man.'

RAHBAR 7th April, 1908.

The state of agriculturists.

67. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 8th April, says that the present low condition of the Indian zamindar and peasant is due to the fact that they have ceased taking proper care of their cattle. After graphically depicting the misery to which they are subjected, the writer appeals to Government to secure part of the land, say one-fifth, in every village for grazing purposes. He would like also to see a tank in the middle of all pasture land to afford drinking facilities to cattle.

HINDUSTANI, 8th April, 1908.

Famine in the United Provinces.

68. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 9th April, publishes a letter from Mr. Avinash Chandra Mojoomdar of Lahore, giving an account of famine and the measures taken by Government to relieve the distressed in the Bharaich district.

CITIZEN, 9th April, 1908.

Famine in the United Provinces.

69. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 9th April, publishes a report compiled from telegraphic reports by Lala Lajpat Rai on the famine in the United Provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th April, 1908.

The Advocate (Lucknow), also publishes the letter in its issue of the 9th April, and asks people to respond to the appeal made by him as to their duty towards orphanages.

ADVOCATE, 9th April, 1908.

The editor also says that this is the time when the proposed Lucknow orphanage should come into existence without any further delay so that by the time the famine is over it should be in a position to receive every orphan found in the Government poorhouses in Oudh.

Famine in India.

70. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 9th April, referring to the rigour of the famine, observes that in spite of all official reports of a hopeful nature it is now being realised that a famine in India, whether slight or severe, always takes its toll and that heavy loss of human life is inevitable. He admires the prompt and extensive measures organised by the Lieutenant-Governor but at the same time points out that distress is so extensive and is growing so acute that the expenditure on relief has become quite insufficient. The editor criticises the system of affording relief, and says that the actual distribution of relief is entrusted to persons who are sometimes callous and sometimes dishonest, and that the ratio of wages to labour is also sometimes cruelly disproportionate. For instance, he says, the wages given to men employed in the stone quarries at Mirzapur are absurdly small.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 9th April, 1908.

He regrets to note that the efforts of Government are not supplemented by those of the people of the country everywhere.

(g).—General.

Warning to the Swarajya.

71. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad) of the 7th April says :—"The Swarajya is an Urdu weekly newspaper which has published in one of its issues an article on "famine." Having read the article the magistrate has sent for the editor. It is said that the magistrate has received instructions on the subject from higher authorities.

BHARATBASI, 7th April, 1908.

ABHUYDAYA, 10th April, 1908.

72. The Abhuydaya (Allahabad), of the 10th April, also refers to a warning said to have been given to the Swarajya, a local Urdu weekly newspaper for publishing a seditious article in one of its issues.

Warning to the Swarajya.

HINDUSTANI, 8th April, 1908.

73. Referring to the interview between Sardar Ajit Singh and the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore, the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 8th April, says that both parties were guilty of impropriety. Ajit Singh relied too much upon the retentiveness of his memory for he did not hesitate to communicate to a press representative all that passed in an interview in which he had taken no notes.

Deputy Commissioner of Lahore and Ajit Singh.

The Deputy Commissioner placed too much confidence in the truth of police reports, for otherwise, says the editor, he would not have warned Ajit Singh as he did. A little foresight and prudence on both sides, the editor remarks, would have averted all unpleasantness and unnecessary irritation.

OUDH AKHBAR, 10th April, 1908.

74. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 10th April, referring to the conversation between Ajit Singh and the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore, which has been published in the Press, remarks that it was very uncivil on the part of the Deputy Commissioner to insult a man whom he had himself invited, to his house and that by such insults the flame of patriotism grows brighter.

The Deputy Commissioner of Lahore and Ajit Singh.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 7th April, 1908.

75. Referring to the Afridi raid on the Peshawar district in which the Hindus suffered most, the Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th April, says that it is extremely imprudent to conclude that the attack upon the Hindus was actuated by religious feelings. It calls upon the Hindu leaders to denounce any insinuation of this nature for otherwise the cause of nationality will suffer.

The Afridi raid.

BHARATBASI 7th April, 1908.

76. Referring, on the authority of a correspondent of the Bengalee, to a rumour that Afridis are going to arrange a raid on Rawalpindi, the Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, observes that whether the report be true or false it is likely to produce a very bad effect later on.

The Afridi raid.

KAVYA SUDHA NIDHI, 10th March, 1908.

77. The Kavya Sudha Nidhi (Benares), of 10th March, contains a very pathetic description of the havoc caused among the labourers and the capitalists of Manchester owing to the swadeshi movement which has spread all over the eastern countries now.

The swadeshi movement.

HIND, 9th April, 1908.

78. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 9th April, says that owing to the success of the swadeshi movement, dealers in foreign clothes are extremely depressed, while swadeshi merchants are jubilant all over the country.

The swadeshi movement.

ADVOCATE, 5th April, 1908.

79. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 5th April, publishes a note on the Dairy Industry in the United Provinces by Saiyed Husain, Department of Land Records and Agriculture United Provinces, in which the writer after enumerating the measures which were taken by Government with a view to improving the dairy industry in the country, says that "there is no risk whatever in the trade and as the price of ghi does not very much fluctuate: a moderate profit can always be secured."

The dairy industry in the United Provinces.

OUDH AKHBAR, 8th April, 1908.

80. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 8th April, referring to a statement made by the Financial Member in his budget speech to the effect that no decrease has taken place in the use of Foreign cloth, as the import duties realised from it were greater than those in former years, remarks that this is not quite correct. Dearer cloth than usual was imported during the year, and though the quantity imported was less than that of previous years, there was no decrease in the amount of duty levied. Much of the cloth imported, the editor states, was not used but is lying in godowns. In support of his assertion he quotes a Reuter's telegram to the effect that the cotton trade of Lancashire is at a standstill.

Foreign cloth.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th April, 1908.

81. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 10th April, referring to the alleged hostility of officials to the swadeshi Steam Navigation Company, remarks that it will be extremely prejudicial to British rule in India if a feeling grows in the mind of Indians that they cannot develop their indigenous trade and industries and that Government should express its avowed sympathy with the swadeshi movement by punishing those officials who are opposed to it.

The swadeshi Steam Navigation Company.

European officials and Indians.

82. Referring to the article contributed by Mr. Shahdin to the Hindustan Review, the Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th April, says no doubt the time has come when steps should be taken to establish better and more cordial relations between Europeans and Indians. It reviews at some length all that Mr. Shahdin has said and practically agrees with him in his proposals. But the editor concludes by saying that unless both parties are animated by sincere motives, no good result can be obtained. He further says that no measure can be successful which does not pay sufficient regard to the real population of India, peasants and other uneducated classes.

ZUL QARNAIN, 7th April, 1908.

Europeans and Indians.

83. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 10th April, reproduces a story from Justice in which Sir Denzil Ibbetson is alleged to have remarked to one of his friends who had sentenced a European to two years' imprisonment for murdering a 'native' that he held the lives of Indians very valuable and that it was foolish of him to do so. The editor observes that he is quite at one with Sir Denzil Ibbetson, since Indians for the most part are even worse than beasts, and it is therefore but reasonable that their lives are not regarded more valuable than those of beasts and that whenever a European happens to kill a native, he is let off with a very light fine as was the case in the recent Sundarban coolie murder case.

He concludes with the remark that as long as Indians remain ignorant, weak, disunited and dependent they can never expect to be treated well and accorded greater respect.

ABHYUDAYA, 10th April 1908.

Bengalis suspected to be Japanese.

84. The Kavya Sudha Nidhi (Benares), of March, relates an amusing incident of two Bengali gentlemen in English costume who were refused entrance into the Allahabad fort, because the sergeant on duty suspected them to be Japanese spies, their noses being a bit flatter than that of the ordinary Indian.

KAVYA SUDHA NIDHI, March, 1908.

Protection of children.

85. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd April, refers to the first annual meeting of the society for the protection of children in Bombay and gives an account of the aims and objects of the association, and draws attention to the fact that this is a noble work in which all classes can work together.

ADVOCATE, 2nd April, 1908.

Government forests.

86. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, in a leading article entitled State versus the People discusses an article that recently appeared in the Pioneer regarding grazing in Government forests. The writer of the latter article complains that Government forests are now practically closed to every one.

The editor of the Citizen remarks; "there is no sign, however, of any steps being taken by the Government of these provinces to redress the grievance that the people have in respect to forest land. If people are driven by such infringement of their rights to have recourse to passive resistance or other means of expressing their resentment, their action will doubtless be set down to the designs of the agitator and sedition monger."

CITIZEN, 2nd April, 1908.

The Divisional Darbar.

87. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 2nd April, has the following under the heading "Invitation, seduction or summons?"

Now that the 'Moderate leaders' are going a few days hence to hold in Allahabad what they would feign elevate by the name of Convention, it may be interesting to surmise the ways in which they would entice to it their confiding friends to gulp down their throat the proverbial laddu of Delhi, the Surat creed. It is at the special request of their 'friend, philosopher, and guide' our Secretary of State with his serio-comic mood, that they are going to hold the Convention at all. That the Convention is to prove the panacea of all evils. That lawyers would at once find themselves translated to the bench or at any rate to the Provincial haven. That taluqdars hankering after Raoship, Khanship and Bahadurship would forthwith find themselves decorated with all the letters of the English alphabet. That a full-fledged politician would at least have a Kingship, being saluted by three witches at the gate as the uncrowned King of some province or other. Should the one that would be a King hereafter chance to have a young hopeful and should he produce him at the Convention, the young hopeful would be made on the spot pasha of seven tails. Blessed are they that join the Convention for they will be the protegés of Mr. John Morley. Blessed are they that sign the creed, for they will be the favourites of Lord Minto. Happy are the "Moderate Leaders" of Allahabad, for if they were persecuted before for having introduced into the town firebrands from north and south and east and west, Sir John Hewett would presently bless them for having invited here a number of milksops. Come one, come all. Now or never. Those that do not respond to the invitation shall receive from that redoubtable Magistrate, Mr. A. W. McNair, a copy of the same letter that we reproduce below and that a little bird whispers into our ears he made it a point to forward not many weeks ago to certain defaulters.

CITIZEN, 2nd April, 1908.

'SIR,—I am directed by the Commissioner of the Division to ask you to kindly send me per bearer your explanation in writing showing reasons for neglecting to reply the letter of Invitation for the approaching Darbar till now.'

Blessed are they that do not again receive the above letter. Come one, come all. Now or never.

CITIZEN, 2nd April, 1908.

The Etawah conspiracy.

88. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 2nd April, has an article entitled "Etawah scheme of deportation that failed—Reward for not arresting Khalil-ul-lah—Keeping surveillance over Hindu victims" in which the appointment of a Muhammadan Kotwal at Etawah is objected to.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 5th April, 1908.

Ajit Singh and Colonel Parsons.

89. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 5th April, referring to the version of the interview Ajit Singh had with Colonel Parsons as appeared in the Observer (Lahore), says that there is no material difference between the account of the interview that appeared before and the Deputy Commissioner's version. This, the editor notes, does not help to mend matters.

OUDH AKHBAR, 7th April, 1908.

A Moslem National Bank.

90. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 7th April hails with delight the proposal for the establishment of a Moslem National Bank. It congratulates the organiser on his enterprise and says that considering the extremely wretched condition to which Muhammadan labourers and artisans have been reduced, it is high time to take up the question of their improvement in all seriousness. The journal hopes that every patriotic Muhammadan will co-operate in making the scheme a success.

BHARATBASI, 7th April, 1908.

Life of Robert Clive.

91. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, in advertising the Life of Robert Clive in Hindi, remarks that he is famous as the founder of British rule in India. The book besides giving an account of his life portrays what India was one hundred and fifty yea s ago. It contains an account of the French attac kon Madras, of the war in the Carnatic, and of the attack on Calcutta by Sirajud-dowla. It discusses the Black Hole incidents, Lord Clive's improper conduct towards Ami Chand, and the battle of Plassey.

BHARATBASI, 7th April, 1908.

Amalgamation of the Arya Samaj and the Sanatan Dharma.

92. On the authority of the Sanatan Dharma Gazette, the Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, says that at the Anniversary meeting of the Lahore Arya Samaj on the 1st of April, Lala Lajpat Rai declared that the Arya Samajists could not understand the aims of Swami Dayanand, that the present Satyartha Prakash was quite opposed to the Swami's Satyartha Prakash, and that the Swami was the greatest votary of Shiva. The meeting thereupon passed a number of resolutions proposing the amalgamation of the various Arya Samajas with the Bharat Dharma Mahamandal, and suggested that the Dayanand college should be called a Sanskrit academy. The editor remarks that if the report is true, and if Lala Lajpat Rai is able to remove the effect of the bad feelings caused by the Arya Samaj and can once more evoke reverence for Sanatan Dharma in the hearts of the Arya Samajists, he will have sown the seed of the regeneration of India.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 7th April, 1908.

Plague and inoculation.

93. Referring to the system of paying Re. 1 per head to every individual willing to submit to inoculation, the Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 7th April, says that the system will be appreciated very much as is evident from the fact that it has already been pre-eminently successful in the Budaun district.

94. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, says that if after all it is absolutely necessary to keep up the present strength of the Indian Army and not to curtail it from considerations of political expediency, the cost of doing so ought to be charged to the Imperial exchequer.

Military expenditure in India.

BHARATBASI, 7th April, 1908.

95. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), in its combined issue of the 1st and 8th April, referring to the Government Resolution on Sanitary Improvements, remarks that Sanitary officers should be as far as possible Indians, that Indians should be well-represented in the Sanitary Boards and that municipalities should not be made to bear the costs of the proposed increase in the staff.

Indians as sanitary officers.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st & 8th April, 1908.

96. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), in its combined issue of the 1st and the 8th April, referring to a question put in the Legislative Council by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya about the employment of Kayesthas under Government, remarks that if the number of Kayesthas to be employed in Government service is going to be limited, the number of members of other communities too should be limited.

Kayesthas and Government Service.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st & 8th April, 1908.

97. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) in its combined issue of the 30th March and 8th April, referring to the recent cow-killing case decided by the North-Western Provinces High Court, remarks that the Hindus who are crying for self-government are themselves very intolerant and do not allow others to perform their religious duties. Considering this the editor thinks that they are not fit to govern themselves.

Cow-killing.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 30th March & 8th April 1908.

98. The Cawnpore Gazette, of April, draws the attention of the Local authorities of Gujrat to the deceitful conduct of certain badmashes, who rob villagers of their money by representing themselves as agents of the Recruiting Agency for Africa.

Villagers and how they are duped.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, April, 1908.

99. Referring to the news that cartridges have been found on the banks of the river Ganges in Calcutta, the Hind (Lucknow) of the 1st April, reproduces an article from the Englishman on this subject, setting forth that a regular illicit importation of firearms from Chandarnagar is going on in Calcutta.

Illicit importation of firearms.

HIND, 1st April, 1908.

100. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 9th April, considers the allegation made by the Englishman regarding the stealthy sale of cartridges in Calcutta entirely unfounded and remarks that its contemporary is moved to make such insinuations only to discredit the Bengalis.

The Englishman and Bengalis.

ANAND, 9th April, 1908.

101. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 10th April, referring to the imprisonment of the Rawalpindi lawyers without any trial on doubtful information, remarks that Government does not take the police to task for making false allegations against private persons.

The Rawalpindi riots.

OUDH AKHBAR, 10th April, 1908.

The editor thinks that in such cases Government should give some compensation to the injured parties and punish the Police. He considers Mr. Morley's statement in the House of Commons on the question vague and unsatisfactory.

V.—Legislation.

102. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 2nd April, referring to the timidity with which Sir Henry Adamson accepted the religious endowment bill introduced by Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh in a recent meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council, remarks that the bill will be beneficial to all classes except selfish trustees of religious endowments and that there is nothing in it which should make Government hesitate and consider it deeply before adopting it.

The Religious Endowments Bill.

ANAND, 2nd April, 1908.

BHARATBASI, 7th April, 1908.

The Religions Endowments Bill.

103. Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, referring to the Religious Endowments Bill proposed by Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh, expresses its suprise at such a bill being proposed, considering that it will curtail the already limited rights of Indians, while the universal desire is to extend them, and expresses a hope that Government will not pass the Bill without inviting public opinion thereon, which, he notes, is decidedly against it.

VI.—Railway.

Nil.

VII.—Post Office.

Nil.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

ANAND, 2nd April, 1908.

Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow.

104. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 2nd April, says that the quarrel between Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow is assuming a very serious aspect. On the occasion of the last chehlum the Shias did not lead their tazias in procession, nor do they intend to do so again unless the Sunnis refrain from reciting the charyari mersia.

The editor remarks that the unanimity with which the Shias have acted on the occasion shows that they feel very strongly on the point and that the authorities will do well to settle the question as early as possible.

ANAND, 2nd April, 1908.

Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow.

105. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 2nd April, says that a very strong deputation consisting of some four thousand Shias waited upon Mr. Saunders, the Commissioner of Lucknow, and complained to him about the charyari mersia.

The editor states that the Commissioner has promised to consider their complaint, and remarks that steps should be taken to remove the dissensions between Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow.

EDUCATIONAL MAGAZINE, March, 1908.

The Holi.

106. The Educational Magazine (Ghazipur), in its issue of March, presents a retrospective view of the Holi festival which is just over. After tracing its history and the principle underlying it, the magazine asks Government to join hands with the people in suppressing some of the bad practises that have unfortunately come to be associated with the festival.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 5th April, 1908.

The Holi.

107. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th April, complains that during the last Holi dramatic performances were given at certain places which were calculated to injure the feelings of Musalmans. The editor notes with regret the growing tension between Hindus and Musalmans, which is manifesting itself everywhere.

GARHWALI, March, 1908.

Conference of Sarola Brahmans in Garhwal.

108. A correspondent in the Garhwali for March, referring to the conference of Sarola Brahmans in Garhwal, remarks on the undesirability of holding sectarian conferences, as they give rise to feelings of mutual hatred, and suggests that a conference representing all castes and classes should be held to discuss social reforms among hillmen.

SWADESH BANDHAVA, March, 1908.

Unity of Hindus and Muhammadans.

109. A correspondent in the Swadesh Bandhava (Agra), for March, puts in a plea for the unity of Hindus and Muhammadans as belonging to the same race and being the children of the same soil who have identical interests.

BHARATBASI, 7th April, 1908.

The Nau Chandi fair at Meerut.

110. A correspondent in the Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, says that Mr. Adams, C.S., the Joint Magistrate of Meerut, has laid the entire public of Meerut under a heavy obligation to him by not allowing prostitutes admission into the Nau Chandi fair at Meerut this year.

AGRA AKHBAR, 7th April, 1908.

A religious campaign at Agra.

111. Referring to the proselytizing action of the Arya Samajists and to the counter-movement of the Muhammadans, the Agra Akhbar of the 7th April, reproduces in its columns the proceedings of meetings held in Agra where renowned speakers addressed the assembly on the superiority of Islam.

The editor hopes that such meetings will be held every year in order to confirm the wavering and arouse the apathetic.

Injury to a cow at Cawnpore.

112. A correspondent writing from Cawnpore to the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 10th April, complains that a cow was grievously injured near the slaughter-house on the 18th ultimo by a Native Christian recklessly driving a water-cart belonging to the Tramway Company, that the police requested him to remove the cow to hospital, but that he refused to do so, and went away laughing, remarking that none could punish him for not doing so. ABHYUDAYA, 10th April, 1908.

The correspondent remarks that nowadays it has become very difficult to protect one's property and guard one's religion on account of wicked persons and that under the circumstances one cannot now remain a Moderate.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

A man eating tiger in the Almora district.

113. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad) of the 10th April reports that a man-eating tiger has recently visited the Changrakha pargana in the Almora district and has been causing serious loss of life. The editor ventures to assure Government that there should be no cause of apprehension in granting arms to the inhabitants of villages which are subject to the periodical visitations of man-eating tigers, and expresses a hope that His Honour Sir John Hewett will take steps to issue licenses freely to villages which are liable to such visitations. ABHYUDAYA, 10th April, 1908.

ALLAHABAD :
The 14th April, 1908.

S. T. HOLLINS,
Offg. Asst. to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 16 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 18th April, 1908.

CONTENTS.

Page.

I.—POLITICS.

(a)—Foreign:

1. Indians in America 349
2. Islam in Russia 349
3. China and Japan 349

(b)—Home:

4. Advice to Indians by the Indians ... 349
5. The present condition of India ... 349
6. The Allahabad Convention 350
7. The ensuing Convention 350
8. The Surat Congress 350
9. The Congress fracas 350
10. The proposed Ladies' Congress ... 350
11. Moderates and Extremists 350
12. Europe and Islam 351
13. Europe and Islam 351
14. Europe and Islam 351
15. Tinnevelly riots 351
16. The Tinnevelly cases 351
17. Punitive police at Tuticorin ... 352
18. The Tinnevelly and the Tuticorin deputation 352
19. The present condition of India ... 352
20. The present situation in India ... 352
21. Civic elements in Indian life ... 352
22. An Englishman and Lala Lajpat Rai ... 353
23. Self-sacrifice a means of future greatness 353

Page.

24. Warning to the Swarajya 353
25. The government of a country ... 353
26. The birthday of Shri Ram Chandra ... 353
27. Lessons to be learnt from the West ... 353

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

Nil.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

Nil.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue:

28. Permanent settlement 353
29. Circuit Bench of the High Court ... 354
30. The Sub-Registrar's office at Benares ... 354
31. Indian juries 354
32. Separation of the judicial and executive functions 354
33. Separation of the judicial and executive functions 354

(b)—Police:

34. Hardwar police 354

(c)—Finance and Taxation:

35. The Provincial Budget Debate ... 354

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:

36. The Lucknow strike 355

(e)—Education:

37. The Sikh Educational Conference ... 355
38. The Agra College strike 355

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

		Page.
39.	The Agra College	355
40.	The Agra College	355
41.	National education	356
42.	Government Technical scholarships ...	357
43.	Tom Browne's school days	358
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land:
44.	The famine	358
45.	Scarcity and strike	358
46.	Famine and the Imperial Council ...	358
47.	Famine and its remedies	358
48.	Pasture land	358
49.	Famine relief and the weaver community of Agra	358
50.	Misappropriation in famine relief work	358
	(g)—General:
51.	The paper industry in India	359
52.	Metal industry	359
53.	Indian trade and industries	359
54.	Dairy industry in the United Provinces ...	359
55.	The Swadeshi movement	359
56.	India and England	360
57.	Europeans and Indians	360
58.	Reduction of licenses	360
59.	The arrest of temperance volunteers ...	360
60.	A canal officer drowned	360
61.	Nauchandi Fair	360
62.	Begar and rasad	360
63.	Queen Victoria's statue at Lucknow ...	361
64.	Medical aid for Indian women ...	361
65.	Compensation to the Rawalpindi pleaders	361
66.	The Deputy Commissioner of Lahore and Ajit Singh	361
	V.—LEGISLATION.
	Nil.
	VI.—RAILWAY.
67.	Hardwar Railway station	361
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
68.	Postmen's wages	361
69.	Unrest in the Postal and Telegraph Department	362
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
70.	Islam	362
71.	Charitable institution	392
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
	Nil.

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

Indians in America.

1. Mr. Sunt Nihal Singh contributes an article to the Modern Review for April entitled "Indians in America" in which he gives a brief account of the various Indian missionaries who visited America at different times and of the success their efforts met with. Americans, he states, are gradually recognizing the great truths of the Hindu religion, and schools are being established in many American cities for the study of the Shastras and the Vedas. MODERN REVIEW, April 1908.

Islam in Russia.

2. The Dabdaba-i-Sikandari (Rampur), of the 13th April, notes with satisfaction the conversion to Islam of thirty-eight Russian families in the Samara Province. DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI. 13th April, 1908.

China and Japan.

3. Referring to the boycott declared by China of Japanese goods, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th April, asks if Indians can deduce any moral from this attitude of the Chinese. HIND, 16th April, 1908.

(b).—Home.

Advice to Indians by the Indians.

4. The Kalwar Mitra (Allahabad), for March (received on the 16th April), in an article entitled "Keep quiet and listen" remarks :— KALWAR MITRA, March, 1908.

"It is a saying of the Pandits of old that silence is conducive to the accomplishment of one's object. Besides this it is also a general rule that the person who is given to much talk loses his capacity for practical work. Nobody should therefore pay the least attention to the attacks made by others, but all should go on doing their work silently and steadily. The person who is enraged at the attacks of his enemies, entangles himself in verbal retorts, and gives cause of satisfaction to his enemies as his whole time is wasted in anger and spite, and his cherished object comes to nothing. It is, therefore, the duty of every individual to go on listening quietly to the taunts of his enemies and to do his work with perseverance.

The present condition of India.

5. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 16th April, publishes a poem headed "O God, have mercy on our nation : for it has been covered with misfortune," of which the following is a literal translation :— OUDH PUNCH, 16th April, 1908.

"Ignorance is increasing every
The nation's honour (prestige) is decreasing every moment,
Why should not love and affection decline,
When (mutual) hatred is increasing every moment ?
One is harbouring enmity towards the other,
Why should not (mutual) hatred increase every moment ?
Let us see what this national disunion produces (leads to),
Our condition is becoming worse every moment.
Union has departed from us,
Love is decreasing every moment.
Where is now the friendship between kinsmen,
For (mutual rivalry) is increasing every moment ?
What a split there is among the Musalmans,
The passion of love (lit.) is on the wane every moment.
The germs of rebellion have been produced (generated)—
In the heart : there rages the passion for revolt every moment.
(They ?) have left courtesy and good breeding (lit.)
Humanity is being blotted out every moment.
Lathis are brandished on the occasion of religious ceremonies,
Barbarism is now increasing every moment.
The disease of family discord has crept into them (lit.)
Why should not thy power decrease every moment ?
They have nothing to do with learning or arts,
Wealth is flying from them every moment.
They have no affection for their youngers,
They hate (their) elders every moment.

They cannot labour hard ;
They want ease every moment :
These are all signs of decline,
Why should not misfortunes befall them every moment ?
Friends, a nation which is in such a state,
Its poverty increases every moment.
Enough, enough, O ! Saiyid, stop thy pen,
(My) inclination for weeping is increasing every moment.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 11th April, 1908.

The Allahabad Convention.

6. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 11th April, referring to the Convention session to take place at Allahabad on the 18th and 19th April, appeals to Indians of whatever opinion they may be, to unite together in the common cause of their country and to find a successful solution of the problem that faces them at the present juncture.

ADVOCATE, 12th April, 1908.

The ensuing Convention.

7. Adverting to the meeting of the committee of the Convention during Easter at Allahabad, to settle the future programme of political activity, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 12th April, says that any effort to go behind the creed settled at Surat, should be resisted at all costs. He warns the leaders of the Moderate party that if they give way to any kind of direct or indirect pressure, that if they tamper, in the least, with the Convention creed, or if they forget even for a moment, that the reconciliation for which the Extremists are secretly striving is bound to be hollow, artificial and insincere so long as there is no genuine and lasting repentance for the past, they will be untrue to themselves, disloyal to their principles, and false to their country. The whole fabric of the Indian national congress has been reared on faith in the British nation. If the Extremists think that the principles of the Moderates are not progressive enough let them go their own way. The editor expresses the hope that, though the place of meeting is far away from the southern and western provinces, Bombay and Madras friends will not allow any consideration to stand in their way at the last moment, but attend in large numbers.

ANAND KADAMBINI, December & January, 1908.

The Surat Congress.

8. The Anand Kadambini (Mirzapur) in its combined issue for December and January (received on the 17th April) discusses the Surat Congress fiasco. The editor holds the Extremists, particularly Mr. Tilak, responsible for the failure of the last Congress, but does not altogether exonerate the Moderates from blame. He expresses the opinion that though the Surat Congress has destroyed the fruit of twenty-three years' hard labour, it is satisfactory to note that Congress has again shown signs of vitality which is sure to bring forth good results. He warns both parties against wasting their energies in mutual friction, and exhorts them to make up their differences and work in unison in the cause of their father-land.

OUDH AKHBAR, 14th April, 1908.

The Congress fracas.

9. The Oudh Akhbar, (Lucknow), of the 14th April, presents in its columns a retrospective view of the causes that led to the Surat fracas. It practically agrees with the Moderates in holding the Extremists responsible for the break up of the Indian National Congress. The editor then discusses the question of self-government, which, with the provision that it should be under the British flag, he accepts as the ultimate goal. Progress towards this goal should, he points out, be made only by constitutional means.

TAFRIH, 14th April, 1908.

The proposed Ladies' Congress.

10. Referring to the establishment of a congress for ladies, the Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 14th April, says that this is a move in the right direction, as no progress is possible unless Indian ladies take to heart the cause of the regeneration of India.

TAFRIH, 14th April, 1908.

'Moderates and Extremists.'

11. Under the heading " Moderates are Extremists, " the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th April, publishes an article of which the following is a literal translation :—

A meeting of the All India Congress (convention) is to take place at Allah abad in which measures will be adopted to give fresh life to the congress, and rules will be framed to strengthen it.

Although those that are unfortunately called Extremists, are fully prepared to give place to, and be reconciled with the Moderates, yet the so-called Moderate party is growing so extremist that there is no hope of its attaining to the right path.

In the organs of this party a proposal is being made not to admit the Extremists at all.

This attempt is regrettable, especially as the Moderate party appreciate (lit. accept) the self-sacrifice of the Extremists and have not the courage to doubt their sincerity.

12. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th April, publishes a letter written by one Mohammad Azam Khan on the attitude of the European Powers towards the Islamic Powers in general and the Pan-Islamic movement in particular. The writer complains that while the European Powers are daily forming alliances, and concluding treaties amongst themselves, whenever they see the possibility of concerted action in Islamic countries, they raise the cry of war and declare that the Moslems are going to declare a Jehad on Europe. He notes with regret that the people of Europe are so much opposed to the Pan-Islamic movement the objects of which are not political as it simply aims at the development of a feeling of brotherhood among the Moslem nations.

Europe and Islam.

UNION GAZETTE, 7th April, 1908.

He concludes by saying that Moslems expect that England will stand by them in their trials and will have some consideration for the feelings of the seventy millions of Indian Musalmans living under her protection. If England does so, he thinks it will help the Sultan of Turkey out of his present difficulties in Macedonia, and will not make the situation so difficult for him as if England acted in concert with the other European Powers.

13. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 16th April, while discussing the treatment which the Musalmans are receiving at the hands of European nations, remarks that although Europeans claim to be highly civilised, yet they retain some of the characteristics of their barbaric ancestors. They claim to be advocates of justice and freedom, but they have little regard, the editor says, for the principles they profess when they have to deal with the Musalman. This he thinks has been clearly proved in Macedonia and Morocco. They overlook the most glaring iniquities of their co-religionists, but are ready to take their Musalman neighbours to task for the most insignificant breach of the peace.

Europe and Islam.

OUDH AKHBAR, 16th April, 1908.

14. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 17th April, while discussing the existing relations between European and Islamic nations, advises the Sultan of Turkey to enter into friendly relations with England, as she rules over one hundred millions of Musalmans. He also urges Musalmans in general to lay aside their religious differences and to try to form themselves into a strong and powerful group of nations, as the spirit of the times requires greater attention to political matters and less to religious, religion having been relegated to a secondary position in the affairs of the world.

Europe and Islam.

OUDH AKBHAR, 17th April, 1908.

The editor notes with regret that most of the Musalman kingdoms have been annexed by European nations, He thinks, however, that Musalman possessions could be considerably developed, and that if Musalmans were to follow in the wake of Japan, they would be sure to assert their independence one day. He thinks that Musalman rulers can take considerable advantage of the mutual differences and jealousies of the European Powers.

15. The Nasim-i-Agra of 11th April, understands that sixty-four arrests have been made in connection with the Tinnevally and Tuticorin riots, and that Chidambaram Pillay and his two other compatriots have been released on bail by an order of the High Court. It also understands that license-holders have been required to deposit their arms with Government for the time being.

Tinnevelly riots.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 11th April, 1908

16. Referring to the prosecution of Mr. Chidambaram Pillay, the founder of the swadeshi steamer service, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) in the issue of the 12th April asks, "How can a man be said to have a fair trial when the charge against him rests on a speech said to have been made by him, but of which a complete or authentic copy is not before the court." It will be no wonder, the editor remarks, if Mr. Pillay becomes a hero and a martyr and if men of his faith multiply in the Madras presidency.

The Tinnevelly cases.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th April, 1908.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

CITIZEN, 12th April, 1908.

Punitive police at Tuticorin.

17. Referring to His Excellency Sir A. Lawley's reply to the deputation that waited upon him from Tinnevelly, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 12th April remarks that if from an impartial enquiry it is ascertained that the people alone are to blame and not the officials, let punitive police be stationed at Tuticorin by all means, and let the people, good citizens as well as the bad, be made to pay for them.

But to strengthen the hands of those whose high-handedness, shortsightedness and racial partiality has led to a breach of the peace is, he remarks, a policy which is as shortsighted as it is unjust.

HIND, 16th April, 1908.

The Tinnevelly and the Tuticorin deputation.

18. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th April, commenting upon the deputation which waited upon His Excellency the Governor of Madras in connection with the posting of punitive police in Tinnevelly and Tuticorin, severely criticises the conduct of the public men in Madras. It says that in order to maintain their position as Loyalists they went so far as to throw all the blame upon Chidambaram Pillay and his compatriots. In spite of all this they did not succeed in receiving a recognition from His Excellency the Governor of Madras. The cold reply that they received, must serve, the editor thinks, to show them the utter futility of the petitioning policy of the Moderate politicians.

The paper also criticises the speech of the Governor, and says that there was no necessity to fire at the mob in Tinnevelly and Tuticorin. Riots occurred in Rawalpindi and Calcutta also, but the authorities there did not consider it worth while to have recourse to such unjustifiable methods of suppressing them.

SWARAJYA, 4th April, 1908.

The present condition of India.

19. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 4th April, publishes a poem in which the writer notes with regret the deplorable condition of India, with its poverty, suffering from famine, plague, &c. He exhorts the people to educate their children, to revive their commerce and industries and to work manfully for the salvation of their country.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 15th April, 1908.

The present situation in India.

20. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra) of the 15th April, while deploring the impression prevailing in official circles that sedition is taking deeper root in India, remarks that Indians have ever been loyal to Government from the inmost recesses of their hearts and that Government should not be deluded by the misrepresentations of selfish flatterers. The editor suggests more intercourse between the officials and the people as the best means of allaying the so-called unrest in the country.

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

Civic elements in Indian life.

21. Sister Nivedita writing on the "Civic Elements in Indian Life" in the Modern Review (Allahabad), for April, demonstrates how Indians may develop civic life by taking advantage of certain features of their social life. She points out that the development of a strong civic spirit depends on the maintenance of the communal life and consciousness, and that oriental countries are eminently suited for such development. In the East, she says, a general spirit of unity and friendliness underlies everything. Men meet together in the bazars and streets of all towns and cities and under the pipal tree in the villages and hamlets, and in a friendly manner discuss the topics of the day. Teachers and travellers, she states, are generously entertained in all villages and collective action is never confined to one section of the community. All this she thinks affords the largest possible basis for civic realisation of the highest order. To Indians, she states, there is no symbol so holy as, firstly, their native land and secondly their city. Civic life will thus offer a conception as clear as that of family and home, and the duties of citizenship will seem not less precious than those of jat and samaj.

22. The Muraqqa-i-Tasawar (Fatehpur), of the 7th April, notes with satisfaction that an Englishman who went into a printing press in Lahore when some pictures of Lala Lajpat Rai were being printed, praised him highly and bought seven copies.

An Englishman and Lala Lajpat Rai.

MURAQQA-I-TASAWAR, 7th April, 1908.

23. Referring to the adage 'no pain, no gain,' the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 15th April, says that national regeneration is possible only through self-sacrifice. We should not grow dissatisfied with the result of our endeavours, insignificant though they have been; we should close our ranks and present a solid front to the opposing forces. In conclusion, the editor says, we should be inspired by that lofty patriotism which cares not for bodily injuries and imprisonments. He pays a high tribute to those national martyrs that are suffering all sorts of privation in jails

Self-sacrifice a means of future greatness.

OUDH AKHBAR, 15th April, 1908.

24. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th April, referring to the warning given to the editor of the Swarajya by the Collector of Allahabad, remarks that the Government of these provinces is very wise in warning the editors of papers containing seditious articles before prosecuting them, and thinks that if the magistrates of Bengal and the Punjab had been equally wise, the Governments of those provinces would not have got such a bad name.

Warning to the Swarajya.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 16th April, 1908.

25. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 17th April, publishes a translation of an article in the Sanjibani, (Calcutta), entitled "Can a king govern a country well without the help of the people."

The Government of a country.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th April, 1908.

26. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 17th April, publishes an article entitled "Ram Navami" (the birthday of Sri Ram Chandra) in which the writer sighs for the reign of Ram Chandra when the people were afflicted neither by famine nor by plague, but when there was prosperity and plenty all round. He deplores the present lot of Indians who are labouring under all sorts of calamities. The writer further observes that the mere celebration of Ram Navami day will not do now and that Indians in general, and Hindus in particular should pray to God to send a second Ram on earth to deliver them from misery.

The birthday of Sri Ram Chandra.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th April, 1908.

27. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 17th April, contains an article on what India should learn from the West in which the writer urges Indians to take the following lessons from the West: –

Lessons to be learnt from the West.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th April, 1908.

(1) Indians should imbibe the spirit of patriotism from Europeans, so much so that they should hold their rights dearer than their lives and protect them at all costs.

(2) They should follow the example of Europeans in the matter of political agitation if public opinion be disregarded, with this difference that their agitation should be strictly on constitutional lines.

(3) They should like Europeans, see that money realized in the form of taxes is devoted by Government to the good of the people themselves.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Nil.

III.—Native States.

Nil.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

28. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th April, referring to the poverty of the ryots writes :—

Permanent settlement.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th April, 1908.

"It is said that the cause of poverty is that in some parts of the country land revenue has produced a great depression. Cultivators are bitterly complaining that they do not get adequate compensation for their hard labour.

The progress of cultivation is much hampered by the frequent assessment of revenue under the present system and Government is constantly reminded of its promise made forty years ago, regarding the effecting of a permanent settlement, so that the people could confidently devote their energies and capital to the development of their lands. Government should remove the disabilities of the people of India and enact measures by which its poverty may be lessened."

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 12th April, 1908.

Circuit Bench of the High Court.

29. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 12th April, under the heading "Circuit Bench of the High Court" remarks :—"It is proposed by the Bengal Government that a Bench of the High Court should go on circuit to hear appeals so that the people may realize their proper position in relation to the High Court. It is wery necessary that the Circuit Bench should be imposing and that its appertainments should be worthy of its position, and make an impression on the minds of the people. It should raise the power and prestige of the British Government in their estimation.

We like this proposal, because it would make the dispensation of justice easier, and, not because it would enhance British prestige and honour, unnecessarily."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th April, 1908.

The Sub-Registrar's office at Benares.

30. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th April, complains of the delay in the issue of copies from the Sub-Registrar's office, Benares, and suggests that an inspection by the District Registrar would disclose the fact that methods there are so time-worn and slow that they require drastic treatment.

CITIZEN, 12th April, 1908.

Indian juries.

31. Referring to Mr. Morley's reply to Mr. O'Grady's question, the editor of the Citizen, (Allahabad) in the issue of the 12th April, says that he does not remember a single case of sedition in which a jury composed mainly of Indians has been called upon to deliver a verdict regarding the guilt or innocence of an Indian editor charged with sedition. Even in the sedition case against Mr. Tilak the majority of jurors were Europeans and so Mr. Morley's reply about a jury mainly composed of Indians does not stand the test of inquiry.

JED-O JEHAD, 13th April, 1908.

Separation of the judicial and executive functions.

32. While thanking the Government for the preliminary steps taken in the direction of separating the judicial function from the executive, the Jed-o-Jehad (Shahabad-Hardoi), of the 13th April, says that there is no reason why similar experiments should not be undertaken in other provinces as well.

TAFRIH, 14th April, 1908.

Separation of the Judicial and executive functions.

33. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 14th April, reproduces the important portions of Sir Harvey Adamson's speech on the subject of the proposed separation of the judicial and executive functions. After setting forth the details of the scheme, the editor requests the Government to consider the desirability of undertaking similar experiments in other provinces as well.

(b).—Police.

SWARAJYA, 4th April, 1908.

Hardwar police.

34. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 4th April, complains that Musalman constables do not conduct themselves decently in their behaviour towards Hindu female pilgrims bathing in the Harkipairi at Hardwar, and suggests that Hindu policemen should be appointed in their place.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

ADVOCATE, 12th April, 1908.

The Provincial Budget Debate.

35. Commenting on the discussion on the United Provinces Financial statement, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 12th April, remarks that famine relief being the dominating factor in the finances of the year just over, and of the one that has opened, all the members present had some thing to say regarding it.

The Government of Sir John Hewett, he says, deserve to be congratulated on the success of their relief measures.

Referring to sanitary reforms, in connection with which a conference is to be held at Naini Tal, later on, the editor points out that Pandit Madan Mohan's demand for a sanitary survey was opportune.

He expresses surprise at the silence of the official members as to how the newly organised agricultural department is going to help the people in adding to the yield of their fields, and remarks that although Pandit Madan Mohan's suggestion of a permanent settlement was outside the province of the Provincial Council, his request for an enquiry into the economic condition of certain villages was not.

He regrets to note that His Honour said nothing on the controversy about wells and canals, which on such an occasion could not but have cropped up, except in as far as he delivered a funeral oration on the Sarda Canal project.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

The Lucknow strike.

36. Commenting upon the strike of the butchers in Lucknow, the Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th April, says that the public are much inconvenienced by the increase in the price of meat. The prices have risen because municipal authorities are uncompromising in the matter of reducing the tax. The situation, says the editor, deserves the serious attention of the authorities.

HIND, 16th April, 1908.

(e).—Education.

The Sikh Educational Conference.

37. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 15th April, notes with gratification that the educational problem is attracting the attention of the Sikhs as is evidenced by the formation of the Sikh Educational Conference which will hold its first session on the 18th and 19th instants to consider the ways and means of imparting religious education to the Sikh community.

HINDOSTHAN, 15th April, 1908.

The Agra College strike.

38. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 15th April, says that owing to a difference of opinion between the European and Indian professors of the Agra College, a number of students of the 1st year class were not promoted to the higher class. This led to the strike of the students. But unfortunately the editor states an Indian professor was suspected to be at the bottom of all the trouble. Consequently his services were dispensed with. This was followed by a meeting in the city where it was resolved :—

(1) that the trustees should hold an independent enquiry into the cause of the present strike ;

(2) that the proposal of abolishing the School department should be dropped.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 15th April, 1908.

The Agra College.

39. Referring to the proposal to abolish the School department of the Agra College, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 15th April, says that it would be extremely unwise to allow the proposal to go unchallenged. An institution which has been doing incalculable good to the people, must be maintained by them even at a great sacrifice. The editor concludes by asking his countrymen to give practical proof of their solicitude for the welfare of their children by contributing their mite towards the fund for the maintenance of the school. The Government too should come to the rescue of the people at this critical juncture.

OUDH AKHBAR, 15th April, 1908.

The Agra College.

40. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th April, referring to the ill-feeling between the European staff and the students of the Agra College and the proposal of the residents of Agra to send a memorial to the Government in that connection, remarks that Government should make a thorough enquiry into the matter, and find out why the students are dissatisfied with the European staff. It is, however, doubtful, he remarks, that the complaints of the students would be listened to judging by the case of Mr. Jermyn, late Headmaster, Queen's Collegiate School, Benares, who was promoted to an Inspectorship for rusticating some students who had sent him a petition.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 16th April, 1908.

SWARJYA, 4th April, 1908.

National education.

41. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 4th April, (received on 13th April) publishes an article headed: "Our greatest need," of which the following is a literal translation:—It is a settled fact that the greatest need of India is education. Up to this time our education has been in the hands of others. They educated us in their own way and taught us whatever they liked. Was it for our good and was it beneficial to our interest? Things may have been said in fear of imprisonment or ofbeing branded as traitors or from cowardice or policy, but we will say nothing that is unjust, false or contrary to facts. We will answer this question according to our own views at all times and at all places without the fear of any human or infernal power and without any regard for the presentiment of any one black or white or for the dangers of any prison or jail, not caring even for the pleasure or anger of the Lieutenant Governor or of kings.

For "We have not read the stories of Alexander and of Darius, and from us you shall hear nothing but the tales of love and constancy." Then why was education imparted to us? Simply that we should be content in our state of bondage and that we should believe foreigners to be our patrons, benefactors, and protectors and think that the English have conferred blessing upon us by relieving us of our independence (حکومت).

The other object in view in educating us was that we should work in their hands like automatons and be ready to put into execution all their orders immediately saying 'Yes Huzoor; and 'Ji Huzoor.' Their work could not be carried on without teaching us English and so they taught us English. It was impossible for one or two hundred thousand persons to rule from Kashmir to Cape Comorin and from Saugor to Sindh without teaching the people they govern English. Had they not taught us English how could they have got Babus to work from morning to evening and from evening to morning in railways, post offices, canals, tahsils and other offices like bullocks in a sugar cane press. So just as an oil-monger feeds his bullock, the potter his ass, and the butcher his sheep, goats and cows, our firingi rulers have thought it necessary to educate and teach us and to make us serviceable for their purpose. One of our respected and honourable leaders once remarked that we should be thankful to our Government for education as it has produced such sensible men as Mr. Gokhale and others. On this point I cannot agree with the respected leader. These words would have been appropriate had we been the descendants of the aborigines of Africa or of Australia, but as we are the descendants of those Aryan heroes whose accomplishments are known all over the world and of those Muhammadan sovereigns, noble men, and raises who ruled over India wisely and well for centuries, it is sheer folly and ignorance on our part to give utterance to such words.

Have there not lived in India before the British occupation, thousands of persons more conspicuous in ability, sensibility and foresight than Messrs Gokhale, Ranade, Tilak or Khaparde. In my own humble opinion all these able and sensible Indians have distinguished themselves without the help of English Government, and had not a foreign Government put obstacles in their way they would never have been inferior to the statesmen of other countries. So to show such persons as the result of the Government system of education and to thank the Government for it, is to express one's want of judgment or one's cowardice.

The present system of education when closely examined appears to be distinctly opposed to our national interests. According to Lala Lajpat Rai the present system of education is producing in our country merely slaves and hypocrites, so it is necessary to make some suitable changes in it.

The first and most important change should be to save our children from the poisonous education imparted to them by foreigners, for it has a very bad effect on our national independence and well-being. For instance the seed of mutual enmity and hatred between Hindu and Muhammadan children is sown by the teaching of Indian History in Government schools and as a result of this, bigotry and enmity are increasing between the two communities. Their mutual friendliness is on the decrease daily, although considering the matter from a religious standpoint neither are the Hindus as orthodox as they were twenty-five years ago, nor are the Musalmans as devout as their ancestors. Even at the present time if the educated and uneducated classes are compared, it will appear that one-tenth of the mutual bigotry and enmity that prevails among the uneducated classes does not exist among the educated. Does this not prove that this mutual strife and discord between the Hindus and Musalmans has its root in the Government system of education?

This measure is extremely necessary, but it is a wonder that adequate attention is not paid to it, as its great significance is accepted, and people wonder that the mutual discord and strife between the Hindus and Musalmans is not done away with, when there is a desire for union.

The second change required is that young men should be given industrial and technical education, so that they may have no inclination towards becoming the slaves of Government. Of late the Government has made a move towards this. But this is owing to a 'policy' the object of which is that the people may not make any efforts in this direction in the belief that the Government is attending to the matter. But the people should not be taken in by this. They should open small schools for the imparting of primary education with arts and industries.

The first advantage of having national schools will be that boys will maintain their natural independence, and the oppression which is now being wrought on our young men under the cover of discipline will have to be discontinued. Even those boys who cannot bear the undue severity of Government schools will be able to take advantage of these national schools and the jailors in charge of the Government schools will have to relax the rigour of their rules and regulations. The bogey of the Risley circular will be removed from the minds of the boys, they will not be afraid to shout the holy Bande Mataram and they will not run a risk in serving their country. The so-called Provincial Conference has admitted the necessity for such schools and the martyred hero Lala Lajpat Rai has delivered impressive lectures on this subject in various towns. Brethren why are you waiting? Is somebody's sanction necessary. Do you want the help of some Rai Bahadur or Khan Bahadur or are the coffers of some merchant or banker required. Take heed, if you are waiting for the help of these men, you will never get it. If they will help you, the Collector will become displeased with them. They have enough to maintain themselves for some generations. Their coffers can be opened only to please the Lat Sahib, the Collector Sahibs, Gauhar Jan or Said Jan, and not for national purposes. Their programme aims only at winning of the goodwill of the English rulers and supplying the requirements of prostitutes, and national well-being finds no room in it.

Heroes, be up and gird your loins. Lay in your village, street, town and city the foundation of a national pathshala, school, high school and college. Prepare suitable books for these institutions or adopt the courses of other national schools. At present you have to go twice a week without any food. Abstain from food once more in the name of the coming generation and devote the money saved by so doing to the national school scheme and you will see that your cowries will accomplish an object that can never be attained by thousands of rupees of the ill-gotten wealth of merchants and bankers. Friends, remember that in the history of the country these merchants and bankers have done nothing. As long as they get enough to eat without hard work they have no regard for the sufferings of others. If you had been like them you too would have had no regard for it. But now there is before you a question of life or death—take heed and try to conquer by your combined and united efforts.

Establish national pathshalas and national schools to impart education to the coming generation according to the national needs.

If you make combined and united efforts in this direction on behalf of national well-being, your hopes will be realised, you will be successful in your objects and God will help you. Be up and attend to your work and you will see that success is at your beck and call.

Government technical scholarships.

42. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th April, notes with satisfaction the granting of two technical scholarships by the local Government and thanks His Honour the Lieutenant Governor for the same.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th April, 1908.

ARYA MITRA, 16th April, 1908.

Tom Browne's school days.

43. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th April, condemns the substitution of Tom Browne's School Days for 'Golden Deeds' as a text book for the matriculation examination inasmuch as the former is neither calculated to elevate the moral character of students nor to acquaint them with their own social customs and manners. The editor wonders if it is because 'Golden Deeds' inculcates self-sacrifice in students in these days of swadeshism that it has been removed from the curriculum.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR, February, 1908.

The famine.

44. The Zamidar-wa-Kashtkar (Bijnor), for February, publishes an article showing that the burden of the present famine has fallen mostly on respectable people of the middle class and on Government servants of the lower grades.

CITIZEN, 12th April, 1908.

Scarcity and strike.

45. Referring to the strikes throughout India that appear to be on the increase, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 12th April, remarks that this should be viewed as a period of unrest on the part of many who have to work hard for a living. The rapidity with which strikes have been following each other of late in India is a bit phenomenal. The country is growing more expensive every day and its prosperity is not as great as many would try to make it appear.

TAFRIH, 14th April, 1908.

Famine and the Imperial Council.

46. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 14th April, reproduces in its column a list of the important speeches made in the Imperial Legislative Council on the subject of famine and its causes. The editor while thanking Government for the appointment of a commission of enquiry, requests that the proceedings of the committee should not be of a private nature but should be open to public criticism.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 15th April, 1908.

Famine and its remedies.

47. The Nazim-i-Agra of the 15th April, suggests the following remedies for the ever-recurring famines in India:—

1. Stopping the export of grain during famine years at least.
2. Establishing agricultural banks in order to advance money for grain to impoverished zamindars.
3. Advancing the cause of the swadeshi movement.

In all these three suggestions, the editor requests the Government to co-operate with the people.

OUDH AKHBAR, 14th April, 1908.

Pasture land.

48. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 14th April, publishes some correspondence on the subject of fields for grazing purposes. It asks the Government and zamindars to pay particular attention to this crying need of the moment.

HINDOSTHAN, 16th April, 1908.

Famine relief and the weaver community of Agra.

59. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 16th April, in expressing its gratitude to Government for the special arrangements made by the Collector of Agra to relieve the distress of the local weaver community, remarks:—"We praise Government for this action. Government is our protector and we are its protected subjects. We therefore deserve and pray for the kind help of Government. Our heartfelt thanks are due to Government for the various measures it has taken to relieve the distress of the people from famine." The editor further suggests that a co-operative credit society should be formed at Agra to advance loans to the local weaver community on the lines adopted at Madura and Bangalore.

ABHYUDAYA, 17th April, 1908.

Misappropriation in famine relief work.

50. Referring to the revelations made by Babu Abinash Chandra Mazumdar of Lahore regarding the misappropriation of famine relief allowances by subordinate government officials employed on relief work, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 17th April, remarks that such misappropriations can be prevented if Government co-operates with the representatives of the people and has famine relief afforded to the distressed through the medium of the volunteers organized by them.

(g).—General.

The paper industry in India.

51. An article entitled "Outlook of the paper industry in India" is contributed to the Modern Review (Allahabad), for April by Mr. James Imms, Manager of the Upper India Paper Mills, Lucknow. The writer is of opinion that the outlook is not gloomy, but points out the difficulties and tells young men to work with caution in starting new mills and advises those who wish to learn paper-making to enter Indian mills as apprentices, instead of going abroad.

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

Metal industry.

52. Prag Narayan Bhargava, proprietor, Lucknow Iron Works, contributes an article on "Metal Industry" to the April number of the Modern Review (Allahabad). He states that one of the chief difficulties in the trade arises from the lack of skilled labour. A very unfair form of competition, he states, exists for the employment of such skilled labour as there is, workmen being frequently induced to leave their employer by the offer of excessive wages elsewhere. Government, he notes, in order to encourage Indian industries, granted a concession in the freight of coal. But manufacturers, derived no benefit from this, as coal merchants promptly raised the price of coal. He then goes on to suggest that a Government-aided survey of the country should be made with a view to exploiting its mineral resources, and that a Director of Industries should be appointed by government to give expert advice to enterprising Indian capitalists as to the industries that might profitably be taken up. Such an expert, he says, has been appointed in Madras and his services are much appreciated.

The suggestion, he thinks, might be given a trial in these provinces, the Principal of the Thomason College, Roorkee, or the Director of Land Records and Agriculture, being appointed as a tentative measure.

He also advocates the establishment of free industrial schools with scholarships, if necessary.

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

Indian trade and industries.

53. The Modern Review (Allahabad), for April contains an editorial article entitled "Ruin of Indian trade and industries" in which the editor refers to Parliamentary Blue Books and to the writings of British Government officials to show the part played by Government measures in England and in India in the ruin of Indian commercial enterprise. The editor points out that in renewing their charter in 1813, the East Indian Company had only their own interests at heart. At that time England was engaged in a war with France and as Continental ports were closed, she naturally required an outlet for her exports in another direction. But after 1815, the aspect of affairs was changed and Continental harbours were once again open to British trade. Accordingly, the editor says, there was nothing to justify the policy pursued by the British in checking Indian trade and exterminating Native States. The British, he thinks, simply aimed at extending their territories in India and finding a market for their manufactures. He then refers to various representations made to Government by Bengal manufacturers, none of which, he says resulted in anything. The article concludes with a statement showing the duty charged in various years on the different articles imported into England.

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

Dairy industry in the United Provinces.

54. Mr. Saiyid Husain of the Department of Land Record and Agriculture, United Provinces, contributes a brief article on the Dairy industry in the United Provinces to the Modern Review (Allahabad), for April. He notes that there has been very little development in the industry since its institution with the establishment of the Aligarh dairy in 1891. He points out that dairies are eminently satisfactory and justify their existence in India, both from the point of view of cleanliness and from the returns they yield. He urges the people to give a little more attention to this subject and shows that with a moderate initial expenditure, a satisfactory return can be got for one's money.

NAISM-I-AGRA, 11th April, 1908.

The Swadeshi movement.

55. Referring to the closing of the Mills at Manchester during the Easter week, the Nasim-i-Agra (Agra) of the 11th April, says that this may be the effect of the Swadeshi movement which is so rapidly spreading all over the country.

HINDOSTHAN, 30th April, 1908.

India and England.

56. The following is an extract from the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of 30th April, :—"This is alright and very pleasing to hear, but God forbid it, again we say, while we assure Raja Prithwipal Singh that if there arises any such occasion that the British Government is in danger, the brave King-Emperor and his white soldiers (if they cannot crush their enemy single-handed) will not stop in the country. The British Government keeps its white soldiers to counterbalance the power of the feudatory chiefs and to check internal faction, lest it be overwhelmed before help can come. So we need not brag of our loyalty and of our unflinching devotion to the throne. The Government understands us fully well. Moreover, as we are kept unarmed and undrilled, we cannot undertake any immediate military service without being trained at least for a year."

SWARAJYA, 4th April, 1908.

Europeans and Indians.

57. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 4th April, notes with satisfaction the changes which are taking place in the attitude of Indians towards Europeans. Formerly, he says, Indians were afraid of any one wearing a European head-dress, but now they are ready to retaliate when insulted, and quotes as instances the attack on a European by coolies in Almora, and the thrashing of a missionary by some villagers in Bengal. He concludes by remarking that by such action the black colour and the puggri will be respected.

CITIZEN, 12th April, 1908.

Reduction of licenses.

58. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th April, notes with gratification the acceptance by Government of the recommendations of the Excise Committee regarding the reduction of the number of liquor licenses.

The editor remarks that the excise policy of Government has undoubtedly undergone a change since Mr. Morley's assumption of the Indian Secretaryship of State and that at last this very desirable reform is about to be carried out.

TAFRIH, 14th April, 1908.

The arrest of temperance volunteers.

59. Referring to the arrest of two temperance volunteers in Poona for the alleged offence of forcibly detaining and intimidating some persons at a grogshop, the Tafrih (Lucknow) of the 14th April, says that it is believed that the authorities have set their face against the temperance movement and that therefore they want to throw all sorts of obstacles in the way of its progress.

The editor requests Government to change its policy, though this would mean some pecuniary loss to the imperial exchequer.

SWARAJYA, 4th April, 1908.

A canal officer drowned.

60. Commenting on the death by drowning of a Canal Sub-Overseer of the Lyalpur district drowned in a canal, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 4th April, says that death would have been averted, if as requested, water had been let out of the canal or the flow had been stopped for the time being.

It further raises the question of remunerating the bereaved family ; for the deceased lost his life while doing Government work.

SHAHNA-I-HIND & TUTI-I-HIND, 8th April, 1908.

Nauchandi Fair.

61. Referring to the Nauchandi fair of Meerut the Shahna-i-Hind and Tuti-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th April, says that there was a noticeable decrease in business transactions which caused much disappointment and loss to the merchants there. The editor highly appreciates the police arrangements and thanks the authorities for their attempts to stop the influx of women of doubtful character.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 12th April, 1908.

Begar and rasad.

62. Referring to the question of begar and rasad, the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th April, remarks that the statement made in Council by the Hon'ble Mr. J. W. Hose can hardly be considered satisfactory. If specific instances of the prevailing abuses of the begar and the rasad system are wanted it is rather difficult to find them, for the simple reason that the practices complained of are so common and so notorious that no one takes the trouble to note them. The hardships are not incidental but are frequently felt, for the agency employed for finding labour and provisions is that of the tahsil which is admittedly unscrupulous. Payments made through tahsil peons never reach the proper persons and so long as this agency is not eliminated and a system of direct and immediate payment is not insisted on, the grievance will not abate.

63. Referring to the letter of an Indian regarding the restriction which has been placed upon Indians wishing to visit the Queen Victoria statue in (Lucknow), the editor of the Indian Daily Telegraph, (Lucknow) in the issue of the 14th April, says that this will cause a good deal of heart-burning among Indians not only in this province, but throughout India. The incident recounted by our correspondent happened, the editor says, to two prominent Indian gentlemen in Lucknow, and there is no reason to doubt the accuracy of the facts related. Is it any wonder that Indians are discontended when such indignities are offered to them? The money for the statue has come mainly from Indians, and no ground can exist for passing an order precluding them from viewing the statue, unless the authorities really believe that harm would be done to it. It is, however, impossible to think that Indians who venerate the memory of Queen Victoria would desecrate her statue, one to which they have so liberally subscribed. The editor says he is convinced that Sir John Hewett, whose broad-mindedness and sympathy for the people of the provinces are so well known, would not for a moment countenance an order of this kind.

Queen Victoria's statue at Lucknow.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH, 14th April, 1908.

64. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 14th April, while reviewing the valuable work done by the Lady Dufferin Fund during the past twenty-five years, notes with regret that the midwives trained under the auspices of the fund are mostly Christians, and as there is a general aversion towards the Christian both among the Hindus and Musalmans, their services have not been availed of by respectable Hindus and Musalmans. To remove this defect, the editor proposes that low-class Hindu and Musalman women should be trained as midwives and nurses.

Medical aid for Indian women.

ZUL QARNAIN, 14th April, 1908.

65 It is stated in the Bharat Basi (Allahabad), of the 7th April, and also in the Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th April, that the Government has kindly thought it proper to pay large sums of money, and grant rent free lands to the Rawalpindi pleaders as compensation for the troubles and expense they were put to during the hearing of the Rawalpindi riot cases. The news, if true, says the editor of the Hind, will be received with feelings of gratitude by the Indian people, though it will cause much heartburning to the members of the Punjab police force.

Compensation to the Rawalpindi pleaders.

BHARAT BASI, 7th April 1908, and HIND 16th April, 1908.

66. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 16th April, reproduces in its columns the details of the conversation which took place between the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore, and a representative of the Observer. In this interview the Deputy Commissioner is represented as contradicting the reports of Sardar Ajit Singh as published in the Hindostan (Lahore). The Hind also publishes some correspondence from Sardar Ajit Singh in which he says that the Deputy Commissioner has failed, completely failed, to disprove what the Sardar has himself reported to the press.

The Deputy Commissioner of Lahore and Ajit Singh.

HIND, 16th April, 1908.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

67. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 4th April, makes the following complaints about the railway arrangements in Hardwar :—

Hardwar Railway station.

SWARAJYA, 4th April, 1908.

(1) The third class waiting room is situated at a distance from the railway station and the latrine. Passengers have, therefore, to wait in an uncovered enclosure before getting into trains, where they are exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

(2) There are no female ticket collectors to help women passengers and pilgrims at the station.

(3) There is no booking office in the city where pilgrims can buy tickets easily.

VII.—Post Office.

68. The Dabdaba-i-Sikandari (Rampur), of the 13th April, complains that the wages of postmen are less than those of coolies and expresses a hope that Government will increase them.

Postmen's wages.

DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI, 13th April, 1908.

HIND, 16th April, 1908.

Unrest in the Postal and the Telegraph Departments.

69. The Hind (Lucknow) of the 16th April, says that there is much unrest these days in the Postal and Telegraph Departments. The causes are everywhere the same, small wages, much work and no holidays.

Since the public are much inconvenienced by the strike, which follows as a matter of course, the editor invites the serious attention of the authorities of the departments concerned and of the Government, and requests that immediate steps be taken to remove these grievances.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

NAIYAR-I AZAM, 12th April, 1908.

Islam.

70. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 12th April, in its leading article remarks that Islam is now in adverse circumstances and that it is more necessary to protect it from the machinations and the hostile criticisms of its many opponents in India than to propagate it in foreign countries.

The editor exhorts his co-religionists to prevent their ignorant brethren from returning to Hinduism thus becoming idolators, and to pay no attention to the wild projects of sending Islamic missions to Japan or other foreign countries, as it requires a good deal of self-sacrifice and enterprise, qualities that are wanting in the present generation of Musalmans.

CITIZEN, 12th April, 1908.

Charitable institutions.

71. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th April, eulogises the great service done to India by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, by introducing into the Viceregal Legislative Council a Bill to give greater facilities to the public for calling for and inspecting the accounts of Public Charities.

The editor characterises Sir H. Adamson's views as nervous and remarks that so radical an alteration of the rules governing charitable endowments will provoke resentment which may be politically dangerous. But when society is affected with evils, rules calculated to eradicate them, remarks the editor, must be enforced though they operate as subversions of barbarous customs.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

Nil.

Allahabad: The 20th April, 1908.

S. T. HOLLINS,
Offg. Asst. to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 17 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 24th April, 1908.

CONTENTS.

	Page.
I.—POLITICS.
(a)—Foreign :
1. Negroes in America	365
(b)—Home :
2. The Convention	365
3. The Allahabad Convention	365
4. Meeting of the Convention Committee at Allahabad	365
5. The Tinnevelly and Tuticorin disturbances	365
6. The Tinnevelly deputation	365
7. The Moderates and Extremists ...	365
8. The Moderates and Extremists ...	366
9. Congress and the Convention ...	366
10. The wreck of the Indian National Congress	366
11. National Government	366
12. National Volunteers	368
13. Nationalism in India	368
14. India during Hindu rule	368
15. Journalists and the public	368
16. India ; past and present	369
17. Warning to Swarajya	369
18. "Lord Minto, and his Government" ...	370
19. The Behar Provincial Conference ...	372
20. Lala Lajpat Rai in Sitapur ...	372
21. Musalmans and politics	372
22. Sivaji and Swaraj	372
II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
23. A Muslim heroine	373
III.—NATIVE STATES.
Nil.

	Page.
IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
(a)—Judicial and Revenue :
24. Mortgages	373
25. Mortgage	373
26. The Whipping Act	373
27. Separation of the judicial and executive functions	373
28. Separation of the judicial and executive functions	374
(b)—Police ;
Nil.
(c)—Finance and Taxation :
Nil.
(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :
29. Grievances of Agra traders ...	374
30. The extension of Allahabad ...	374
31. The extension of Allahabad ...	374
32. Benares water supply	374
(e)—Education :
33. The Agra College	374
34. The Agra College	375
35. The Agra College	375
36. Girls' schools	375
37. Government and female education ...	375
38. Technical and Commercial education ...	375
39. Secondary education in the United Provinces	375
40. Education in India	375
41. The Somvati festival and the Allahabad University	376
42. Lord Minto at Aligarh	376
43. Teachers' Training Colleges	376
44. The art of music	376

Page.

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :

45. Agricultural and manufacturing industries 376
46. Agricultural improvement in the United Provinces 376
47. Famine relief 377
48. Famine 377
49. The Famine Code 377
50. Scarcity 377
51. The economic condition of India ... 377
52. Pucca wells 377

(g)—General :

53. The swadeshi movement 377
54. The swadeshi movement 377
55. A hint to swadeshists 378
56. Kayasthas and the Government ... 378
57. The Kayasthas 378
58. The Muhammadans and the Government... 378
59. Musalmans in Judicial Service ... 378
60. The relations between Indians and Europeans 378
61. Indians and Europeans 379
62. The great war in Bengal 379
63. Boys spirited away to Baluchistan ... 379
64. A Bengali lady and the Afridis ... 380
65. Mr. Morley's elevation to the House of Lords 380
66. Frontier Hindus 380
67. Mr. Morley's peerage 380

Page.

68. Mr Morley's peerage 380
69. The Deputy Commissioner of Lahore and Ajit Singh 380
70. Cause and prevention of strikes ... 380
71. Our mill industry 381
72. Soldiering in time of peace 381
73. The Queen's statue at Lucknow ... 381
74. The temperance movement 381
75. Co-operative credit societies ... 381
76. Taxing pilgrims 381
77. Chikalda on the Satpura Hills ... 381
78. Russian trade in Afghanistan ... 382

V.—LEGISLATION.

Nil.

VI.—RAILWAY.

79. Railway ticket collectors 382
80. The congestion of traffic 382

VII.—POST OFFICE.

Nil.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

81. An improvement association at Almora... 382
82. The Paras Nath Hill 382
83. The Paras Nath Hill 383

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

84. A man-eating tiger in the Almora district 383

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. An article, presumably editorial, entitled "The Negro race in America" appears in the April number of the Modern Review. The writer by means of facts, figures, and character sketches, gives an account of the progress and the achievements of the Negroes in America, and points out what backward races can effect when actuated by a proper spirit. MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

Negroes in America.

(b).—Home.

2. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 11th April, referring to the Moderate convention to be held at Allahabad makes the following suggestions :— SWARAJYA, 11th April, 1908.

The Convention.

(1) that its sitting should not take place in camera, as it is remoured that they are to be, but should be open to the public ;

(2) that no attempt should be made to divide the congress into two factions of moderates and extremists as the divided bodies will have no influence ;

(3) that no attempt should be made to formulate a creed, as to do so would make reunion hopeless.

3. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 19th April, criticises the action of the gentleman in charge of the convention meeting arrangements in refusing admission to the representatives of the press. This step, the editor remarks, reflects no credit on the gentleman from whom the decision emanated. He concludes by saying that a political body that can drag on a miserable existence by excluding from its councils large numbers of capable and educated Indians has no justification for its existence and had better be abolished. CITIZEN, 19th April, 1908.

The Allahabad Convention.

4. The Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 21st April, expresses its approval of the quiet way in which the Moderates held the meetings of their convention at Allahabad, and remarks that the course they adopted was a proper one inasmuch as it was absolutely necessary that they should first agree among themselves, and then make overtures to the Extremists with a view to reconciliation and the revival of the Congress. The editor suggests that the Extremists should hold a similar conference and entertain the idea of a rapprochement with the Moderates. BHARATBASI, 21st April, 1908.

Meeting of the Convention Committee at Allahabad

5. Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th April, says that owing to police oppression, a reign of terror has been inaugurated in Tuticorin and Tinnevelly. Life and property are quite unsafe there. Intimidation of swadeshi workers is going on with unabated vigour. The editor says this is not the best way of crushing the swadeshi movement. Oppression will make the workers more zealous and will thus defeat its own purpose. NIZAM-UL-MULK, 8th April, 1908.

The Tinnevelly and Tuticorin disturbances.

The editor then goes on to thank the Sessions Judge for granting bail to the persons accused in connection with the riots. This, he says, will reassure the public mind and restore faith in British justice.

In conclusion he refers to the deputation that is to wait upon His Excellency the Governor. He trusts it will receive due attention from the Madras Government.

6. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 19th April, referring to the reply of the Governor of Madras to the Tinnevelly deputation, remarks that Government should not be expected to help the natives against itself, and that it should not be hoped that deputations and petitions could in any way influence the actions of Government. CITIZEN, 19th April, 1903.

The Tinnevelly deputation.

7. Referring to the efforts that are being made by the two principal organs of the new party, the Maharatta and the Bande Mataram to effect a compromise between the two parties, the Indian People (Allahabad) of the 19th April, observes that as a result of the deliberations of the Convention Committee, the new party has now come to realise that it can not stand by itself, that it must either be a part INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th April, 1908.

The Moderates and Extremists.

of the congress or must cease to be a constitutional body. The editor says that the congress began as a constitutional body and must remain so to the end of the chapter. He refutes the allegations that the Moderates attempted to throw over the Extremists in order to gain their own selfish ends, and doubts whether a compromise is under the circumstances possible.

TAFRIH, 21st April, 1908.

The Moderates and Extremists.

8. Political parties in India, says the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st April, are divided into Moderates and Extremists. These names have been given to them by the Anglo-Indian papers. The difference is said to be in their methods of striving for self-government. The Moderates advocate constitutional means, and the Extremists resort to more violent methods. Now this statement of the difference, the editor remarks, is not at all correct. He believes that this division is not due to an honest difference of opinion, for difference of opinion there is none, the Moderates and Extremists both having agreed to the necessity of swaraj, national education, swadeshi and boycott. The cause of the difference, he says, lies in the selfishness of the Moderates. There is one thing in the programme of the Extremists, namely the establishment of arbitration courts, to which the Moderates cannot reconcile themselves. For if the establishment of these arbitration courts becomes a reality, the Moderates, most of whom are lawyers and vakils, will find their only means of income gone forever. It is this selfish motive, the editor says, that is at the bottom of all this difference of opinion among the Indian politicians of the present day.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th April, 1908.

Congress and the Convention.

9. With reference to the Convention Committee meeting to be held at Allahabad, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 16th April, observes that if this committee frames a constitution for the congress, defines an electorate, lays down qualifications and then calls a session of the congress under those conditions, the difference between the old and the new congresses will be at once apparent and the new congress will be less representative than the old one. But it must be remembered, the editor remarks, that the congress has a fundamental constitution whether written or unwritten, and that it cannot therefore transgress the law, nor can it pass any resolution which would have the effect of repudiating British supremacy.

If the demand is for absolute swaraj, then the congress must cease to exist, and secret organisations must come into existence: but the question that naturally arises is whether any party in India is yet prepared for such a state of things. If not the terms of the compromise, if there be any, and the objects of the congress, must be clearly defined.

SHAHNA-I-HIND & TUTI-I-HIND, 21st April, 1908.

The wreck of the Indian National Congress.

10. The Shahna-i-Hind and Tuti-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 21st April, presents a retrospective view of the split in the Congress camp. The editor is inclined to think that the whole Congress would have been converted into a nest of Moderates, had a few more deportations of prominent men taken place in Poona and Bengal. The very distinction of Moderates and Extremists, says the editor, owes its origin to the demoralization that has followed in the wake of the repressive policy of the Government.

The editor, in conclusion, wants to know the future programme of the political activity of the Nationalists.

NASIR UL-AKHBAR, 5th April, 1908.

National Government.

11. The Nasir-ul-Akhbar (Meerut), of the 5th April, publishes an article headed "National Government is the pearl in the crown of all nations," of which a literal translation follows :—

"There are two kinds of government in the world—autocratic and republican. But there is a third, which is far higher and superior to them and is as it were their crown. This we shall technically call 'national Government,' compared to which all other governments are worthless and contemptible, and dependent on it. It is only the people of Europe who appreciate its worth and in reality this government is dominant in civilized countries. Beside this, all other governments are temporary and artificial. To maintain the system of the world and to make barbarians understand, you may call a government by any name you like, but we will view all such names in the spirit of theism and pantheism (impartially and admiringly ?) and will say that these are all innumerable rays of the same sun that is shining for the guidance (of the people). If any country or individual wants to live in ease and comfort, it would be better to live under the protection of a national government, in the shadow of which all (other) governments exist. A country which is held by the powerful government of national union, needs no government (at all). Only civilized countries can solve this riddle, and are acquainted with this mystery.

All civilized people in the world and all wise and learned persons are unanimous (in saying) that the evils of a society can be removed by the society itself. Neither the most tyrannous, nor the most merciful, nor the most civilized, nor the most barbarous government is able to root out national evils.

What is 'National Reformation'? It is the rectifying of human habits and manners, the recognition of human, national and legal (?) rights and the protection (assertion?) of these rights. No government can do more than this. When society has attained a position in which it can realise its rights, it will not be necessary for it to have recourse to government courts (of justice). It will itself dispense justice according to the principles of self-help and would be ashamed to allow its secrets and other private affairs to be revealed to others whether they be secular or religious.

The (people of) uncivilized countries would feel no shame in this for they are like barbarians, carnivorous animals and beasts. Their only desire is that they should not let their enemies go unvanquished in their beastial fight as far as possible. Such nations would always wear the collar of disgrace and contempt round their necks and the heavy shackles of barbarism would be on their legs. However enlightened, liberty-loving and liberty-giving a government may be, it would not liberate a barbarous nation which has made no efforts to free its conscience and attain spiritual freedom, for the outer limbs (the body) can become free only when the inner limbs (the faculties of the mind) are free.

Everyone is crying for freedem : even lower animals and beasts want their liberty. But if beasts are liberated or a double-edged sword is put in the hands of a child, it would seriously wound not only itself but others also. For instance the English Government has granted to the people of India only that amount of freedom for which they have shown themselves fit. Would not such freedom prove dangerous to India in the end, if the English were to pack up their baggage and sail away, declaring that they had taken up the Government of India, according to the Queen's Proclamation of 1857, for the good of the people of India and the preservation of peace in it, and that they now leave India to the Indians believing that the latter are now able to govern themselves. How inappropriate would this be for the (various) communities of India. Such is the state of our barbarism and incidents (riots ?), that the Mutiny of 1857 would be repeated, if the police were removed from a single district. Nature and circumstances demand that a country, whose inhabitants are of various temperaments, religions and opinions, should be subject to a foreign Government and that that Government should be tyrannous, oppressive and cruel, and that it should be as bigoted in religion as the people of the country it governs. Instances of this can be seen in Native States. It is India's good fortune that it has got such a civilized and liberal government as the English Government, for history testifies that whenever one of the nations of India held the upper hand one race swallowed up another, just as a big fish does a small one. If there had been no religious bigotry and disunion in India, then why should poverty, decline and other misfortunes have visited it? Again, no one understands the blessings of union and 'nationality.' Societies, sabhas and institutes have been established on European lines, but no one knows their objects and views. Are not these societies founded in order that the different individuals dispersed in confusion like atoms (?), may by mutual union attain unity and "real cohesion."

Nature has endowed the collection of societies with such a (potent) influence, that by its means, weak and subject countries (races) have become strong and powerful, barbarians have become civilized, and beasts have been transformed into intelligent beings (like men).

An untwisted thread or a hair is individually nothing, but by a strong rope made of thread, twine, or hair not only horses, but even elephants can be bound.

How does the rule of a national government begin? It begins in this way. In the beginning every nation rules itself by union, that is to say every individual brings another into his power by the 'overpowering' chain of mutual help and friendship, and every one becomes master of another's heart and temperament. Such a nation can rule over a foreign one too, if it likes, and modern conditions and history show that whenever a nation makes its national government strong and puts it on a firm basis, it expresses a desires to rule over foreign powers. No nation is civilized and strong in its early stages, but the high aspirations (evolved out) of national union make it civilized and strong. By means of union, poor and impecunious nations have become rich and prosperous. No nation is weaker, poorer and more unfortunate than that of the Musalmans, the reason for this being that there is no union and sympathy among them. There is enmity, hatred and bigotry. There are many things that we could say, but to whom should we say them. Musalmans will be able to understand this only when God himself (enables them to do so).

"O God, they have neither understood, nor would they understand what I say. Give them another heart, if not, a tongue to me."

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 14th April 1908.

National Volunteers.

12. An article appears in the Rahbar (Moradabad), in which the editor emphasises the need of organising a permanent corps of national volunteers. Commenting on this article, the Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 14th April, says that the success of such an organisation at Gurukul must inspire every one with confidence in the youth of the present day.

If young men continue to work so devotedly as they did at Hardwar, Government, the editor thinks, will at least acknowledge their worth in the long run.

OUDH AKHBAR, 21st April, 1908.

Nationalism in India.

13. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 21st April, says that not long ago India was the scene of religious feuds and discord. But these quarrels were more of a personal nature due to the aggressive tendency of one person towards another. Whatever they may have been they are now being rapidly swept away by the advance of a tide of nationalism in India. This national unconsciousness among a subject race, says the editor, is the result of the policy which Government has adopted in connection with the granting of National rights and privileges to Indians.

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

India during Hindu rule.

14. Mr. Abinas Chandra Das contributes an essay on the "People in Ancient India" to the Modern Review for April, in which he shows from ancient Sanskrit writings, the perfect harmony that prevailed between the kings and the people during the period of Hindu rule in India. This state of affairs he attributes to the confidence that the people had in their rulers and to the recognition by the latter of the fact that their interests were identical with those of the people they governed.

NAGRI PRACHARAK, April, 1908.

Journalists and the public.

15. The Nagri Pracharak (Lucknow) for April writes "We want three hundred million (leather) covers, large enough to tie over the faces of men, such as are put on the faces of bullocks employed in working oil presses, in order to blindfold them. We also want one hundred million iron nets to tie over men's hands. We require these things to remove the apprehension of imaginary sedition as the Seditious Meetings Act and the award of severe sentences to editors do not bid fair to accomplish our object. These Indians have become the followers of plague rats. Wherever they go and sit, they talk of swaraj, swadeshi, improvement of their mother tongue, social reform and the promotion of technical education. Such absurd ideas have begun to cross their minds that to put a stop to them, it will be necessary to tie (these) covers over their faces, and as educated persons write on the same subjects, it will therefore be necessary to tie nets over their hands so as to prevent them from writing anything. It is said that newspapers have come to such a pitch that they find themselves compelled to engage a jail editor. Tenders for the supply of both articles should be accompanied by one rupee, and should reach the undesigned before the 22nd April. If tenders are presented personally then a return ticket should be purchased,otherwise applicants will be put to serious inconvenience when returning, as now-a-days there is a very large number of detectives (to track persons).

Shriman Mahamahopadhyaya.

" Lala, Pandit, Babu, Mr. Mahapunchji sakuto alias a Toady."

" Andherpur " (City of anarchy).

" Hell."

India, past and present.

16. A correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Deobund) of the 1st and 8th April, institutes a comparison between past and present of India, in which he applauds the Indians of former times for their simple habits, strict morals and piety, and inveighs against the loose morals and laxity of present day Indians and against their love of foreign goods, although their use is contrary to religion. He expresses the opinion that this state of affairs has been brought about in the country by the influence of Western education and that a reversion to their former habits and manners by Indians and the prohibition of the export of grain from the country will insure their regeneration and prosperity.

JAIN GAZETTE, 1st & 8th April, 1908.

Warning to Swarajya.

17. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 11th April, publishes an article headed " The First Stage " of which a literal translation follows :—

SWARAJYA, 11th April, 1908.

" Some people may be afraid of death, but we are ready to die.
How long are we to continue this state of death in life.

We are ready to reach our goal with our heads in our hands and are prepared to be styled the martyrs of India."

" The first stage of the editorship of the Swarajya is over. Its opponents are now smelling sedition in its articles. So the Collector received a letter from the higher authorities directing him to send for the editor of the Swarajya and to inform him that the article entitled ' Famine and its last remedy ' published in its issue of 29th February was considered seditious by Government and that if he publish any other articles of a similar nature he would be prosecuted.

So the Collector sent for Narayan (the editor) and informed him of the Government's order. Narayan said in reply " I do not understand what is meant by sedition or what is its import. On considering (the articles) in the Anglo-Indian and Musalman papers, I have come to the conclusion that, anything may be written against the country, in praise of Government measures without any fear of the writers being prosecuted. Take for instance the Civil and Military Gazette case. All Indian vakils and barristers have unanimously declared that its articles are contrary to law. The Indian Association of Lahore asked the permission of Government to prosecute the Civil and Military Gazette but a flat refusal was given."

The Collector finally said " I cannot argue with you in the matter. I have read to you the Government order." Then he asked Narayan to go and thus the first stage of the editorship of the Swarajya came to an end.

What will take place now? Will Narayan be awed by these threats and sink down taking the Swarajya with him? No, readers, to expect this would be to underrate him unjustly. Before planting the standard of Swaraj, he had thought himself to be under a holy standard and so he now thinks himself free and not responsible to any one. If he has any cares, they are that this holy standard should not fall down and that it should be protected after him. If he can be thoroughly convinced of this, he will let the ill-wishers of mother India know what effect opponents' threat have on him.

Narayan thinks himself immortal, so he is not afraid of any opposing human or infernal power. He thinks it his duty to do his work with the best intentions and does not look to the consequences. It is his belief that the mission of the Swarajya is divine and that God will for the protection of his mission, produce in this unfortunate and cowardly province men who will devote their lives, bodies and property to the protection of this holy standard which will ultimately stream over the whole of India.

The Swarajya is now in danger. On one side its opponents are eyeing it like vultures, and on the other side it is not able to support itself as its circulation is not satisfactory. So it is necessary that all well-wishers of the country, who think that the Swarajya would be helpful in (the attainment) of swaraj, should be ready to help it by buying it, advancing money and by speaking to others for it. National volunteers who think it to be their national organ and who are willing to help in putting its management on a satisfactory footing and in increasing its circulation, should be ready to work as editors, assistant editors, managers, assistant managers and even as copyists and pressmen. So that if, though God forbed it ! (our) opponents exert their extraordinary power to dissociate the workers in the press from the work, even then it may not be stopped.

The Swarajya does not belong to one single man, nor should it be supposed to belong to any one. It belongs to all those who aspire for swaraj and should be supposed to belong to all such. So every one who has the love of mother India at heart should try to strengthen its foundation and to protect it from the attacks made upon it by opponents in various quarters.

Narayan is ready to devote his body, life and property to the service of the Swarajya. As long as his body and soul keep together, he will not depart from his principles. It is to be seen what hero steps into his place after him. O God give us strength to keep firm in our holy resolves so that our holy determination may be unchangeable.

" According to our principles it is heresy to cherish a grudge (against any one). Our policy is to keep our heart clean as a looking glass.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 16th April, 1908.

" Lord Minto, and his Government."

18. Under this heading, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th April, publishes an article of which a literal translation follows :—

If the newspapers of Madras, Anglo-Indian as well as Indian, are not (quite) unreliable, the excess (of oppression) which is being worked upon the subject people of India, is very much to be regretted. The question is often asked why the people of India like the Liberal Government and oppose the Conservative. The people of this country expect much from both parties, and also do not expect anything from any one of them ; for whatever be the attitude of either party it has no bearing upon India (Indian questions). Where the interest of the British Government is at stake, India is also included in the subjects discussed by Parliament. And where India is not concerned there is no trace (lit. name and trace) of any discussion to be found. It is only when there comes a Viceroy or a Governor of a province sympathetically disposed towards Indians, that the Indian Penal Code is interpreted in the right way, otherwise an officer in charge of a district puts whatever construction he likes on the various sections.

During Lord Ripon's time, a riot occurred at a certain place in Madras. The true facts were discovered by investigation. All the accused were released. Did the subject people of India grow impertinent by this proceeding ? No, never : on the contrary the power of the police was broken down. The inclination to entangle innocent persons was discouraged. When a case was started against the Bangabasi Sir Comer Petheram, considering the fact that the authorities of Bengal had gone to extremes and that a warning to the Bangabasi was necessary, appointed a committee and the whole affair was amicably settled. The reason of this was that the Viceroy of India was strong-minded and did not think the British Government so weak as to be injured by the writings of certain newspapers or by the speech-making capacity of certain persons. Lord Minto, contrary to the principles of the late Viceroy, has begun to show his cowardice in petty matters. Strong measures on the part of a ruler, of whatever principles he may be, are (always) beneficial. We state with much regret that in frontier affairs the Government of Lord Minto has shown much weakness. We are against making unncessary wars merely for the purposes of conquest. But if the subject people do not like peace and think it improper to abide by the established laws, it is necessary to mete out proper punishment to them. The Afridis commit raids on British territory and molest the people and yet they are let off by paying small fines. The Government of Lord Minto may approve of this, but generally speaking no statesman will do so. When the riot of At Masjid took place and Amir Sher Ali took refuge in Russia owing to a misunderstanding with the British Government, it was wise of the statesmen to show to the Afghans what the might of the British Government was. In India the state of affairs is such that whenever an editor writes a few lines (lit., four lines) on some administrative defects, a case is brought against him. (If) a meeting is held to contradict (criticise) the proceedings of Government, the followers of Lord Minto set themselves against the (convener). But when face to face with a tribe, which robbed Indians of their money and ornaments in broad daylight, Government settled (everything) in a very summary way, just like cases in Small Cause Courts. The then native ruler of Burma molested some merchants (?) there. Lord Lansdowne (?) set the tyrant right again. Does Lord Minto choose that thieves and highway robbers should molest his subjects in every way by day and that they should not get their well deserved punishment. If Lord Minto did forward a full representation of this case to the Secretary of State, and if the Secretary of State did not agree with the Viceroy, but allowed the Afridis to do whatever they liked and to go without being adequately punished, it would then have been proper for Lord Minto to retire from the Viceroyalty, like the Conservative Viceroy, Lord Lytton, who resigned immediately after the rise of a difference of opinion between him and the Home Government. Evils like those of the present day in India, were never found in the reign of any other Viceroy. We know that the seed of this unrest was sown by Lord Curzon. But cannot our present Viceroy grow good plants out of this seed in accordance with the new scientific method? Every Viceroy who came to this country previous to Lord Minto did not think the police of India (quite) good. But Lord Minto considers men of this department quite angelic in their nature. Those that are implicated in the Tinnevelly and Tuticorin riot cases, do not get a chance of being put up before the court, simply because the police inspector, the local sirkar, is not ready (to produce them.) Are witnesses not available? Or does he not get a chance to prepare them?

What is all this? Things have come to this that the complainant is not ready to prosecute a British-born subject for a criminal offence. This shows, how weak Government officials are deputed to some parts of the country. Not by severity (severe measures), but by gentleness (mild measures) man has made even lions obedient (to him). But side by side to this, the measures of imprudent men are such as to make even cats scratch out the eyes of lions. Lord Minto must be necessarily proud of his army and navy, but this is futile. In whatever streets, lanes or villages you inquire (you will find) how bad do the subject people of India think the Hindu and Musalman kings, and how full of praise are they for the British Government. But from the proceedings of recent years which are due to the reckless measures of impertinent police and of certain officials, the subject people are in a state of bewilderment and anxiety as to what calamity may befall them any day and at any moment. Almost all are at one on this point that Indian subjects fly from rowdyism and quarrels. Any kind of undue severity (oppression) upon such subjects is improper. The subject race of India is ready to bear the pangs of famine, the tyrannies which result from the ignorance or obstinacy of officials. But the subject people of India want this much only that like the other subjects of Britain, they should also profit by (the principle of) liberty. Will the Government of Lord Minto succeed in what it desires by the incarceration of editors or by the imprisonment of speakers (advocates) of political reforms. So far as experience goes, the fire which they wanted to extinguish with great rigour spread to a great distance on account of the shortsightedness of Lord Minto and his underlings (followers). Not a single spark of this fire is visible in those provinces where the provincial governors and district officers were men of common sense and were sympathetic with the subject people of India. The history of the past kings thoroughly teaches the lines on which the administration is to be carried on. If Lord Minto instead of following (lit. walking upon) the footprints of these past worthies, forms the opinion that the writings and reports of the police and of the officials of other departments are as true as the Word of God, then he is (really) correcting (lit? applying salamoniac (hartal) to the writings of the able statesme of Europe.

Every subject of India says that the intention, the motive, the aims and objects of the British Government are to keep the subject people of India in peace. But calamity comes upon them through the imprudence of the Viceroy of India, of the governors of provinces and of the officers of districts. A provincial governor sees through the eyes of district officers, and a Viceroy through the eyes of the provincial governors. If a district officer is not in the hands of tahsildars, and does not hesitate to mix among his subjects, the administration of the district is (really) very good. If on the contrary he is in the hands of his subordinates then the proverb of a certain Hindi poet "officials and peons rule" is seen in practice. The minds of some officials cherish hatred towards Indians—just as truant boys (lit. boys of bad inclinations) hate the (very) sight of books. We know that many do not agree with the policy of Lord Curzon, and some of the measures of the late Viceroy of India were of such a nature that we too do not agree to them. But all will agree (lit. this will be publicly said) that there was never a Viceroy so completely under the control of his officials (lit. followers) as Lord Minto, and that if there had been any such one his days must also have been marked by occurrences similar to those of the present day.

HINDOSTHAN, 19th April, 1908.

The Behar Provincial Conference.

19. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 19th April, notes with gratification the establishment of the Behar Provincial Conference which held its first session on the 13th idem under the presidency of Mr. Saiyid Ali Imam. The editor agrees with the views of the president that the talk of swaraj at present is sheer nonsense and that the most urgent need of the country is unity between Hindus and Muhammadans and the improvement of the economical condition of the country through industrial development. He remarks that Government is just and kind and will grant self-government to Indians of its own accord when it funds them fully qualified for it and that till such time they should do all they can to improve their social and economic conditions.

BHARATBASI, 21st April, 1908.

Lala Lajpat Rai in Sitapur.

20. "In these days of political reawakening, the question of patriotism," says the Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 21st April, "has come prominently to the front." Patriotism, like all other sentiments, the editor says, finds its expression in diverse outward signs. A patriotic man, therefore, will work for the country in various ways. He will look to the education of the people. He will care for the swadeshi movement. He will cherish feelings of respect towards those that have worked and suffered for the country.

But all these characteristics of a patriot, the editor notes with regret, are sought for in vain in the residents of Sitapur. Even the members of the Bar who are so conspicuous for their public work in other places, are sadly lacking in this respect there. All their cares are centred in themselves. They cannot manage even to show their love and respect for those that have dedicated their lives to the service of the motherland. Lala Lajpat Rai, says the editor, paid a visit to Sitapur very recently. No public reception was given to him. No meeting took place, no one stirred to do honour to the national martyr. The day passed off as if it was one of the ordinary days, and Lala Lajpat Rai left the city in the afternoon after having stayed there only for five hours. The editor in conclusion hints that in order to redeem their honour the residents of Sitapur should invite Lala Lajpat Rai again and give him a right royal reception.

RAHBAR, 21st April, 1908.

Musalmans and politics.

21. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st April, while discussing the causes of the continued aloofness of the Musalmans as a class from political movements, remarks that when the British first occupied India they began to uplift the downtrodden Hindus and to weaken the Musalmans as far as possible. This policy succeeded very well, the Hindus regained much of their influence while the Musalmans declined in every way and were obliged at last to have recourse to flattery. The Musalmans at this juncture ought to have asked their Hindu brethren to help them instead of expecting help from a Christian Government, for they know full well that the Christians are bent on ruining the Musalmans and that they would never like the idea of instilling life and vitality into seventy millions of Musalmans. The editor concludes by saying that the Musalmans will realise their critical position when they are better educated, and advises the Hindus to help their Musalman brethren, otherwise the latter will not be able to keep pace with them in the race of progress.

AL-BASHIR, 21st April, 1908.

Sivaji and Swaraj.

22. Al-Bashir (Etawah) of the 21st April, referring to a statement in the Zamana (Cawnpore), that Sivaji did not rebel against authority for selfish reasons, but that his ideals were higher and noble, in that he wanted to throw off a foreign yoke and to assert the independence of his nation, remarks that this is the ideal which inspires present day agitators, both Extremists and Moderates who are hankering after swaraj.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

23. A short paper entitled "a Muslim Heroine" is contributed to the Modern Review for April, by Professor Jadunath Sarkar. The heroine was the wife of the Governor of the Afghan borderland in the days of Aurangzeb. The sketch shows how unchanged in character the Afghan border tribes have remained since then up to the present day.

A Muslim heroine.

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

III.—Native States.

Nil.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

24. The Vaishya Hitkari (Meerut), for March, publishes an article by a mukhtar that condemns the action of the Musalman press for supporting the recent High Court ruling regarding the period of limitation for mortgages, on the plea that debtors are mostly Musalmans and creditors are mostly banias who do not contribute anything to the defence of the country and the protection of whose property involves a great deal of expense.

Mortgages.

VAISHYA HITKARI, March, 1908.

25. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 22nd April, referring to the question of the extension of the period of limitation for mortgages, remarks that Government should be strictly impartial in such matters and should take the part neither of the creditors nor of the debtors. It is urged that the extension of the period of limitation would be very much felt by a large number and would be beneficial to a few only, and that therefore the interests of the majority only should be considered. The writer concludes by saying that, morally speaking, creditors should be free to realise the money lent by them wheneer they like.

Mortgages.

HINDUSTANI, 22nd April, 1908.

26. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st April, notes with satisfaction that the Government is going to amend the Whipping Act and expresses a hope that such an inhuman ordinance will be totally repealed ere long.

The Whipping Act.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 21st April, 1908.

27. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 16th April, briefly reviews the circumstances connected with the urgently needed reforms regarding the separation of the judicial and executive functions, and notes with satisfaction the support lent to the proposed separation by the Moslem League.

Separation of the judicial and executive functions.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th April, 1908.

The editor further says that the abuse of power, the result of unholy combination, is inevitable as long as man is man. It is useless to attempt to justify the present system on any grounds whatsoever. It is wrong to say that the executive branch would be weakened with all the resources at its command. The judicial branch would become strong and independent and this, in the end, would prove beneficial to Government by strengthening faith and confidence in the decisions of courts and by removing a sense of insecurity which at present has taken possession of the popular mind all over the country. By the introduction of this reform one chief cause of misunderstanding will be removed provided the scheme is formulated in the right spirit. If steps are taken to minimise the mischief done by the secret police, the peace of the country will improve materially. But there are other considerations which cannot be lost sight of. At present it is proposed to try the scheme in the two Bengals, and this limitation detracts very much from the value of the gift. Because there is unrest and much agitation in Bengal, Government have decided to apply a healing process there. This may induce people in other provinces to believe that they cannot get reforms unless they agitate The combination of the executive and judicial cannot, the editor says, work great mischief in an advanced province where the press and public opinion are fairly strong. It is the backward provinces that require protection most. But it is obvious that backward provinces will take years to recognise and realise their position, and that Government can safely put off any extra expenditure for some time longer. At present the reform is granted as a balm for the soreness that exists in Bengal. But it is very doubtful whether the proposal will cool the zeal and ardour of the Bengāl leaders and reconcile them to the

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

Partition which they have not accepted as an accomplished fact. It would be much better, the editor remarks, if the scheme were not limited in its scope, and if its application did not degenerate into a political expediency.

CITIZEN, 16th April, 1908.

Separation of the judicial and executive functions.

28. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 16th April, disapproves several remarks made by Sir H. Adamson in connection with the tentative scheme for the separation of the judicial and executive functions, and remarks that unless the two functions are completely separated, the administration of justice cannot be satisfactory. It is said that the combination of functions tends to the enhancement of the authority of the executive, but when people are inspired with a distrust of the impartiality of the judiciary, the general feeling under such circumstances cannot but weaken the prestige of the executive. He says that as long as district officers and their subordinates retain the powers of first class magistrates and have jurisdiction under the preventive section of the Criminal Procedure Code, Chapters VIII (omitting section 106) to XIII, known as the badmashi sections, the separation is nominal and is bound to fail for the simple reason that the whole of the mischief of the combination of functions is centred there.

(b).—Police.

Nil.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

ADVOCATE, 16th April, 1908.

Grievances of Agra traders.

29. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 16th April, refers to the memorial submitted to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor by the citizens and traders of Agra through the Agra Baipar Samiti, and hopes that it will receive every consideration at His Honour's hands. He enumerates the various complaints of the memorialists, and remarks that the municipal executive committee should be prevented from overstepping the rules which the Government has laid down in the interest of the trade of the province.

ADVOCATE, 16th April, 1908.

The extension of Allahabad.

30. Referring to the Lieutenant-Governor's announcement that funds would be allowed for the opening out of Lucknow, Cawnpore and Allahabad, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th April, says that the Municipal Board, Allahabad, cannot employ its surplus funds better than in purchasing land for the extension of Civil Lines, in arranging for its drainage, in laying out roads, and in realising the money it has already invested by the sale of bungalows and sites. The only thing to do as regards opening out Allahabad the editor remarks, is to extend the limits of the city.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th April, 1908.

The extension of Allahabad.

31. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th April, supports the object of the municipal meeting held on Saturday week last, and say that if the Local Government would come to the rescue, a number of new houses could be built and the difficulty experienced at present would soon be removed.

ADVOCATE, 19th April, 1908.

Benares water supply.

32. A correspondent from Benares writes to the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th April, about the deficient supply of pipe-water in Benares, whichhas caused the greatest inconvenience. He is at a loss to account for the indifference and apathy of the authorities in the matter.

(e).—Education.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th April, 1908.

The Agra College.

33. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th April, publishes a letter from an old boy in connection with the Agra College strike, in which the writer asserts that the grievances of the student community are real and well founded. He explains the causes of such strikes which are attributed to the influence of the so-called agitators. In his opinion want of sympathy between teachers and students such as existed on a former occasion seems to be the cause of the great discontent that prevails amongst the students at present. In the same letter the writer says that the public have a right to demand from the Government a clear enunciation of its educational policy in regard to this country, for so long as the tone and character of education is not elevated by appointing better men to the Educational Department, peace and contentment cannot be expected.

He also points out that the establishment of the so-called "Model Schools" is a mischievous policy and doomed to failure, for it can never satisfy the public.

34. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 19th April, publishes two letters about the Agra College, one from a college student, and the other from an old boy. The former says that the so-called strike was not a strike at all and briefly states what actually occurred in order to remove the false impression that the public have formed regarding the matter. The latter gives an account of a public meeting at which resolutions criticising the policy that led to the strike and condemning the contemplated abolition of the Agra collegiate school were unanimously passed. He says that a memorial to the Local and Imperial Governments is under preparation.

The Agra College.

ADVOCATE, 19th April, 1908.

35. The Agra Akhbar of the 21st April, discussing the proposed abolition of the Agra Collegiate School, remarks that if the Trustees want to have their college in a flourishing condition, they ought to hand over the school to the Government and to utilise the savings thus effected in strengthening the staff of the college. If they want to maintain the school, they must collect funds sufficient to keep it up in an up-to-date manner.

The Agra College.

AGRA AKHBAR, 21st April, 1908.

36. The Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 21st April notes with satisfaction that the Government has decided that Hindu and Musalman girls should be educated in separate institutions. The editor expresses the hope that the same procedure may be introduced in boys' schools as well.

Girls' schools.

AL-BASHIR, 21st April, 1908.

37. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of the 22nd April, notes with satisfaction the grant of a lakh of rupees for female education. The editor thinks that the failure of girls' schools has been due to the non-participation of the leaders of the community in their management. People would have greater confidence in these schools if their leaders were interested in them. The Educational Department, the editor remarks, up to this time has taken but a lukewarm interest in this matter, but he notes with satisfaction that the present Director is more wideawake and enthusiastic.

Government and female education.

HINDUSTANI, 22nd April, 1908.

38. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th April, referring to the laudable attempts that are being made all over the country to give technical education to young men, points out that so far very little has been done to give such practical education, specially to the well-to-do classes. Young men, the editor remarks, who return to India after completing their education in a foreign land, are of very little use to the country unless they have had a sound practical education in their youth.

Technical and commercial education.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th April, 1908.

39. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th April, deprecates the apathy of public men in keeping silence as to the fitness or otherwise of the several changes that are being introduced in the educational system of these provinces. The editor condemns the abolition of private and aided schools to make room for Government "Model Schools," when the existing institutions are fit to carry out the behests of the Educational department satisfactorily.

Secondary education in the United Provinces.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th April, 1908.

He asks if all aided schools were to be abolished, would one "model school" suffice to meet local wants? He refers to the case of schools in Agra, and remarks that no proposal which practically means the compulsory termination of the education of Indian school boys, however speciously it may be supported, can or should be accepted by any responsible body of people interested in the welfare of the country and in its inhabitants.

40. The Modern Review for April contains an article entitled "Sir Henry Craik on education in India," contributed by Ananda K. Coomaraswamy in which he expresses his approval of Sir Henry Craik's condemnation of the educational system in vogue in India. He points out that the curriculum of an Indiam University fosters an objectionable cram system and does not allow students to select their own line of study. Light and flippant English authors, he thinks, are altogether out of place in the case of students who from their youth upwards have been instilled with ideas of formal courtesy and of studied respect for age and rank. Education, he states, should be built up on the sure foundations of existing culture. Traditions should be respected and instruction should be given as far as possible in the language of the country. True education in India, he thinks, must, in the future as in the past, be founded on the two great epics that enshrine the national ideals of the characters of men and women.

Education in India.

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

BHARAT JIWAN, 20th April, 1908.

The Somvati festival and the Allahabad University.

41. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 20th April, condemns the conduct of the Allahabad University in not observing the 13th of April as a holiday on account of the Somvati festival and in fixing it as the date of the commencement of the matriculation examination. The editor regards the action of the university as an insult to the Hindu religion, all the more marked by the fact that the Barawafat and Easter holidays were allowed, although the number of Muhammadan and Christian students is very small as compared with the number of Hindu.

ZUL-QARNAIN, 21st April, 1908.

Lord Minto at Aligarh.

42. Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st April, referring to Lord Minto's visit to Aligarh, suggests the advisability of perpetuating the memory of his visit by the foundation of some scholarship or professorship or by the construction of a new boarding-house.

HINDOSTHAN, 21st April 1908.

Teachers' training colleges.

43. Referring to the Secretary of State's sanction to the opening of two training colleges in the United Provinces, one at Allahabad and the other at Lucknow, the Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 21st April, remarks that the proposed measure will be highly beneficial to the teachers of these provinces, and expresses the hope that graduates and undergraduates will take full advantage of it.

HINDOSTHAN, 21st April, 1908.

The art of music.

44. Referring to the Madras school of music opened by Lord Wenlock in 1897, the Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 21st April, remarks as follows :—

"Music produces a very deep impression on the senses. This art reached such a degree of perfection in our country in days of yore, that the sages of those times assigned to it the highest place. Music has been dealt with very skilfully in our country. But just as in modern times all the arts of this country have decayed, in the same way music too has declined. We advise our countrymen to open schools of music with a view to the revival of this ancient art.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

Agricultural and manufacturing Industries.

45. Mr. K. P. Bose, a Meerut pleader, writing in the Modern Review for April strongly advocates the combination of the agricultural and manufacturing industries. He points out that factories in agricultural centres would be of great advantage to cultivators. If the idea was taken up and developed by a few wealthy landholders, he thinks they would be amply repaid for the initial expenditure incurred. The United Provinces, he says, are famous for cotton and sugar growing and what, he asks, could be more advantageous than to have sugar factories and spinning and weaving mills right in the midst of the producing fields. A little enterprise would put the idea into working shape. The territories of His Highness the Maharaja Scindia of Gwalior, he thinks, offer the most favourable field for putting the suggestion into practice. The Maharaja too, he notes, favours the idea and has leased a portion of his territory in the Mandsaur and Ujjain districts on moderate terms to a corporation formed to give the matter a trial.

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

Agricultural improvement in the United Provinces.

46. Mr. Zahur Ahmad contributes an article entitled "Agricultural improvements in the United Provinces" to the Modern Review for April in which he outlines the strides made by the Department since 1881. He points out the indebtedness of the people of India to Lord Curzon for his generous treatment of the agricultural question, and then gives an account of the encouraging results of the establishment of farms by the Local Goverment at various centres. Government, he points out, has done a great deal, and private enterprise should now take the matter up. Public spirited men, he suggests, who have the interests of the country at heart, should arrange for the distribution of good seed as well as for the demonstration of the value of ascertained agricultural improvements. There is an urgent need, he believes, for co-operative seed societies and for private agencies and factories for the manufacture of implements. He advocates an organisation to induce ignorant cultivators to try new seeds and implements. Enlightened and well-to-do zamindars, too, he thinks, could very largely assist in this by working their farms on approved methods and thereby setting an example to their tenants.

47. The Almora Akhbar of the 31st March (received on the 21st April), thanks Government for its measures to relieve the distress of the poorer classes from famine, and expresses a hope that the middle classes, too, will receive the consideration of Government in this matter, as famine has reduced them to utter indigence and they can no longer cope with it without Government help.

Famine relief.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 31st March, 1908.

48 The Nasim-i-Agra of the 19th April, discussing the causes of the ever-recurring famines in India, remarks that the two principal causes are—

Famine.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 19th April, 1908.

(1) The want of ready money in the country.

(2) The unchecked export of grain to foreign countries.

49. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st April, referring to the new famine code, remarks that although Government has taken great pains to revise the code, there are still many things that require improvement. For instance, wages are insufficient and should be increased and payments should be made in kind, as corn is not available near famine camps.

The Famine Code.

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st April, 1908.

50. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st April, referring to the committee which has been appointed by Government at the instance of the Maharaja of Darbhanga to enquire into the cause of scarcity, remarks that the committee should not rely on the reports of Government officials, but should tour in different districts and learn the causes of the scarcity by coming into contact with zamindars, ryots and traders.

Scarcity.

ZUL QARNAIN, 21st April, 1908.

51. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th April, compares the condition of the Indian peasants with that of the peasants of other countries, with regard to their financial position, and comes to the conclusion that the Indian peasantry represents the poorest type of its class. The reason of this, says the editor, is to be found in the frequent settlement and in the annual increase of rents.

The economic condition of India.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 8th April, 1908.

52. The Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 21st April, notes with satisfaction that several members of the United Provinces Legislative Council have drawn attention to the construction of pucca wells, as they are very helpful in time of famine when even canals get dry. The editor also advises the Government to interest itself in the maintenance of model farms and gardens.

Pucca wells.

AL-BASHIR, 21st April, 1908.

(g).—General.

53. The JainGazette (Deobund) of the 1st and 8th April publishes a poem which was read at the twelfth annual session of the All-India Digambar Jain conference held at Kundalpur Damoh on the 28th March, in which the writer deplores the present degeneration of the Jains, and suggests, that they should give up the use of foreign articles and adopt swadeshi ones as a means of bringing about their regeneration.

The swadeshi movement.

JAIN GAZETTE, 1st & 8th April, 1908.

54. While expressing his satisfaction at the success of the swadeshi movement as is evident from the reports of the agents from Manchester who have recently come out to India, the editor of the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) in his paper of the 14th and 21st April says that this success would be complete only when the capitalists of India turn their attention towards manufacturing thread in their own country. He further says that the poverty of India, and its recurring famines are not due to the export of grain, but to the extinction of All-Indian arts and industries.

The swadeshi movement.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 14th & 21st April, 1908.

ADVOCATE, 19th April, 1908.

A hint to swadeshists.

55. Under the heading "Made in Germany," the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in its issue of the 19th April, describes the remarkable increase in the trade of Germany with India. For their information regarding Indian affairs he says, Germans depend upon two Indian gentlemen who are associated with the Commercial Bureau in Berlin.

He remarks that if the increase in German imports is a warning to the British trader, it is no less a timely and very valuable hint to the swadeshi worker. If an alien race can study the requirements of the people of India—a people that live in villages—why should not Indians themselves, he asks, know their own people better and make them customers of swadeshi goods. The opportunity, he remarks, is so very favourable that to lose it would be a national calamity.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th April, 1908.

Kayasthas and the Government.

56. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 19th April, publishes a letter from a Kayastha in connection with the question asked by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya and the reply given by the Hon'ble Mr. Hose, in the Local Legislative Council in which the writer says, that the answer given was what every Kayastha could easily foretell, and that there can be no doubt but that the Kayasthas are in the bad books of Government. He says that it is folly for the Kayasthas to expect Government service, and advises them to await the day when they will be absolutely forbidden to enter Government service. The advent of that day he declares will enable them to do some more useful work and to serve their country better than they are doing at present. He then examines the policy of Government in relation to other castes, and considers their employment in the several departments of Government, and asks if it is a wise administrative policy to appoint an unsuitable non-Kayasth to a post of responsibility in preference to a Kayasth who is really fit for it.

He concludes by saying that Government by giving this reply openly has encouraged those officers who are in the habit of refusing applications for employment simply because the applicant is a Kayastha. He hopes that the Lieutenant Governor will take the matter into consideration.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 19th April, 1908.

The Kayasthas.

57. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 19th April, referring to the employment of Kayasthas under Government, remarks that they were the first to enter the service of the British Government when it occupied these provinces and that in offices in which they are not employed, the work is not properly carried on. The editor expresses a hope that Government will consider this matter.

RIYAZ I-FAIZ, 14th April, 1908.

The Muhammadans and the Government.

58. The Musafir (Agra), gives prominence to a letter purporting to be written by the Commissioner of Dacca to the Nawab of Dacca. In this letter the Commissioner asked the Nawab to let him know the best method of recruiting Muhammadans for the office of the Accountant-General of the provinces of Eastern Bengal and Assam, and for other Government offices as well.

Commenting upon this letter, the Riyazi Faiz (Pilibhit) of the 14th April, says it is extremely mischievous to make such caste distinctions. In order to inspire confidence, Government should give up the policy of favouring one class at the expense of another.

AL-BASHIR, 21st April, 1908.

Musalmans in Judicial Service.

59. The Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 21st April, notes with satisfaction that the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Fayyaz Ali Khan has very courageously ventilated in the Council several grievances of the Musalmans, among which was one that they are not well represented in the Judicial service, and that as several new posts were to be created according to the suggestions of the Judicial Redistribution Committee, the claims of the Musalmans in this connection should not be overlooked. The High Court has not shown itself very just in the appointment of Munsifs, so Government should take the matter into its own hands.

HINDOSTHAN, 20th April, 1908.

The relations between Indians and Europeans.

60. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 20th April, makes the following comments on the speech of the Tikka Saheb on the subject:—

That Tikka Saheb was right in saying that "men of birth and position who are received by His Excellency the Viceroy are often kept waiting under trees or in the verandahs of officials."

The paper remarks: "why should any officer hang about an official's bungalow? He should keep his position and only go to see officials by appointment." As an illustration of the fact that if a man fights for his principles he eventually succeeds, the editor gives the following account of a little unpleasantness that the Raja of Kalakankar had with Sir J. Digges LaTouche in which he says the Raja got the best of it:—

"We came to loggerheads with Sir J. Digges LaTouche about the payment of the subscription to the Anjuman-i-Hind. The British Indian Association claimed eight annas per cent. on the enhanced settlement revenue, and the Raja of Kalakankar only promised to pay what had been paid from the Rampur Estate from the time of the establishment of the Association. The late Lieutenant Governor ordered the name of the Raja of Kalakankar to be struck off the Talukdari list. The Raja represented the matter to the higher authorities and even to the India Office. But before the question was finally settled Sir J. Digges LaTouche sent word to Raja Rampal Sinh of Kalakankar, through Raja Partab Bahadur Singh of Qila Partabgarh, that if he paid the arrears according to his own calculation his name would be restored. The Raja at once paid what he had promised to pay and the late Lieutenent Governor graciously restored his name to the Taluqadari list. In this altercation Raja Rampal Singh of Kalakankar did not pay his respects either to His Honour, the late Lieutenant Governor, or to any other high official except the officers of the district. But he was not ostracised nor did he become at once an object of suspicion."

HINDOSTHAN. 21st April, 1908.

Indians and Europeans.

61. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 21st April, commenting on the Tika Saheb's speech regarding the relations between Indians and Europeans remarks:—It has been rightly said that the idea of equality of treatment is the fruit of English education, because the Prince cannot safely say, that to an Indian his izzat from time immemorial has been dearer than his own life. If this was the case, they should have given up their lives and not allowed Muhammadans to conquer the country, and after being conquered, Indians should not have become so subservient as to give their daughters to Muhammadans, mere contact with whom makes the orthodox Hindus bathe.

It is true that European officers do not often show due courtesy and politeness either in writing to, or in conversing with Indian gentlemen. But Indian gentlemen do not resent it. We ought to give tit for tat. If any European officer is devoid of humanity he should not be visited privately, for as a Persian poet says:—

آدمي را آدميت لازم است • عود را گر بو نه باشد هيزم است

Admira admiyat lazimast udra gar bu na bashad haizum ast: a human being is in duty bound to observe etiquette, without which he is a brute, as sandal without odour is an ugly piece of burning wood. An unmannerly man is devoid of humanity, and in public places he dare not misbehave. Some Europeans, the Prince says, cannot even distinguish an Indian lady's name from a gentleman's. But we do not understand why this is said. However, this defect does not harm Indians. But if the officer cannot distinguish male Indians from the females, and even cannot distinguish them when they come before him, he ought to be dismissed from the service of the British Government as one sex blind. And why should it not be so just as there are people colour blind?

MODERN REVIEW, April, 1908.

The great war in Bengal.

62. A serial story entitled "The Great War in Bengal, 1658-1660" is at present appearing in the Modern Review for April, the writer of which styles himself "Laboramus." The story is founded on Persian historical records.

SWARAJYA, 11th April, 1908.

Boys spirited away to Beluchistan.

63. Referring to the disappearance of all those characteristics of the British Government, which had made it a blessing to the Indian people, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 11th April, gives currency to a rumour prevalent in Hyderabad (Sinde) to the effect that Hindu boys of respectable families are being spirited away by Musalmans to Beluchistan for purposes of conversion to Islam. It cites cases of such disappearance in the concluding portion of its article.

SWARAJYA, 11th April, 1908.

A Bengali lady and the Afridis.

64. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 11th April, publishes an article under the heading : " A Bengali lady and Afridis," a literal translation of which is as follows :—

There was a time when the Bengalis were famous for their cowardice. But since the time the Swadeshi and Boycott (movements) began to be talked of and ignorant Muhammadans relying upon the help of Government, began to extend their (lit. hand of) tyranny upon them, a fresh spirit of manhood has developed in them. They have begun to face manfully the most severe calamities and misfortunes. So much so that they have begun to go forth to fight with lions only with sticks (in their hands). Now this manliness has begun to pass from men to Bengali women also. Only recently a Bengali lady, single-handed, faced several Afridis in Peshawar and saved her house from being robbed (by them), and got them all arrested.

SWARAJYA, 11th April, 1908.

Mr. Morley's elevation to the House of Lords.

65. Referring to the resignation by Mr. Morley of his post as a member of the House of Commons, and to his acceptance of a peerage, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 11th April, says that all this is due to the fact that Mr. Morley felt himself bored by the questions put to him in the House by Sir Henry Cotton and other well-wishers of India.

ADVOCATE, 16th April, 1908.

Frontier Hindus.

66 Referring to the agitation regarding the unprotected condition of Hindus in the Frontier Province, and to the proposal of the Indian Association of Lahore to send some of its members to make enquiries as to the situation with a view to taking necessary action, the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 16th April, remarks that the only way to ensure protection against the raids of the wild freebooters of the neighbouring hills, is to relax the provisions of the Arms Act.

ADVOCATE, 16th April, 1908.

Mr. Morley's peerage.

67. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th April, has the following :—" Mr. John Morley has caused many a surprise within the last two years and his acceptance of a peerage will be one of them. We are glad to be assured of his great love for India which has forced him to accept the peerage, albeit we want some tangible proof of this love. As for Indians, they are quite unconcerned in what Chamber he sits, so long as he does not give them proof of his practical sympathy with their troubles."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 16th April, 1908.

Mr. Morley's peerage.

68. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th April, refers to the changes that have been made in the Cabinet, and remarks that none is more astounding or unexpected than the announcement that Mr. Morley has accepted a peerage, while retaining his present office as Secretary of State for India.

The editor observes that in the long series of disappointments during Mr. Morley's term of office, this is the most grievous of all, for no longer will it be open to the Secretary of State to say that his anchor holds fast.

Having described Mr. Morley's career, literary and political, he says that a dignified retirement from the House of Commons would have been more becoming than seeking the shelter of the House of Lords.

ANAND, 16th April, 1908.

The Deputy Commissioner of Lahore and Ajit Singh.

69. Referring to the interview between Ajit Singh and the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore, the Anand (Lucknow) of the 16th April remarks that it is strange that European officials, avowedly just and generous as they ever have been, should smell sedition in ordinary conversation and speeches, and urges that if they were to do their duty by the people, keeping in view the interests of both the rulers and the ruled, even a thousand speeches of men like Ajit Singh could do no harm to British rule in India.

CITIZEN, 16th April, 1908.

Cause and prevention of strikes.

70. The ever increasing number of strikes following one upon the other in quick succession during the past few months, says the Citizen (Allahabad) of the 16th April, has opened the eyes of all, and nobody now dares insinuate that swadeshi is responsible for them. It must be remembered, the editor remarks, that in hard times like these a man will not do anything that exposes him to the risk of losing his billet, unless he is actually impelled to do so by a strong sense of wrong or injustice done to him. If employers put themselves in the place of their employés, and take a common sense view of things the editor thinks they will scarcely be troubled by such a thing as a strike.

71. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 16th April, commenting on the discussion at the annual meeting of the Bombay Mill Owners' Association devotes about three columns to discussing the Industrial situation as far as cotton-spinning and cloth-weaving are concerned. The editor shows what the swadeshi movement has done for the cotton industry in India and points out difficulties, apart from enterprise and capital, that still stand in the way of the home market being largely supplied by the products of Indian Mills.

ADVOCATE, 16th April, 1908.

Our mill industry.

72. Referring to reconnoitering, skirmishing, etc., in times of peace, the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th April, complains that in Allahabad trees and ditches do not afford sufficient shelter, so soldiers, sepoys and cavalrymen, enter the compounds of private houses, without asking for leave to do so. The editor says that there are Indian families living in civil lines and zanana ladies who have to live in purdah, but their houses are not exempt from the intrusion of soldiers.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th April, 1908.

Soldiering in time of peace.

He further remarks that the practice is not only open to serious objection but in law it is trespass, and asks the military authorities to stop it.

73. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 19th April has the following :—"Much dissatisfaction has been caused among Indians at Lucknow by a standing order of the engineer in charge of the Queen Victoria Memorial statue, recently unveiled by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor. The order places restrictions upon Indians wishing to view the statue. Two prominent Indian gentlemen were turned back by a constable on duty the other day and were told that they were not permitted to enter the pavilion."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 19th April, 1908.

The Queen's statue at Lucknow.

74. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 20th April, referring to the riots in connection with the temperance crusade in Poona, remarks that the volunteers should generally resort to persuasion and other gentle methods, and should not try to prevent people from entering liquor shops by force. It would be useless to expect help from the Government in this, as it is pledged to a policy of neutrality in such matters.

OUDH AKHBAR, 20th April, 1908.

The temperance movement.

75. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 21st April, referring to the work done during the past few years by the Sahaswan Co-operative Bank, remarks that in the interests of the Agricultural population of the country, it is extremely necessary that such banks should be established everywhere, with a central bank at the headquarters of the district from which capital can be drawn.

OUDH AKHBAR, 21st April, 1908.

Co-operative credit societies.

76. Referring to the tax which the Fyzabad municipality proposes to impose upon pilgrims coming to Ajodhya, the Bharatbasi (Allahabad) of the 21st April, asks whether the existing difficulties are not more than enough for pilgrims to bear without this new tax being imposed upon them. The editor asks the Goverment to look to this scandalous state of affairs and to abolish the tax which weighs so heavily upon the already distressed pilgrims.

BHARATBASI, 21st April, 1908.

Taxing pilgrims.

77. Referring to the prevailing distress caused by famine and plague, a correspondent of the Bharatbasi (Allahabad) of the 21st April, says that the forthcoming visit of Europeans to Chikalda on the Satpura Hills, will make the sufferings of the people still greater. Parties will go round hunting in the forests, goats and calves will be used as bait to attract lions and tigers. Accidents may lead to the death of innocent wayfarers. The system of rasad and begar will be brought into requisition—in short, says the editor, people will have to bear many untold miseries and all this at a time when famine and plague are stalking through the country. The editor hopes that the Government will now interfere.

BHARATBASI, 21st April, 1908.

Chikalda on the Satpura Hills.

OUDH AKHBAR, 22nd April, 1908.

78. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 22nd April, publishes translations from the diaries of one Alexander Barn who visited Afghanistan in 1838, and shows that even before the Russian occupation of Central Asia, its trade in Afghanistan was considerable. The coins used in these transactions were the ducats which were valued at Rs. 6 each. The principal articles imported from Russia into Afghanistan were gold dust, from the beds of the Oxus, pistols, guns, gun-locks, padlocks, knives, musical instruments, ornaments, copper and copper vessels, boxes of various kinds, snuff, needles, spectacles, looking-glasses, earthenware, paper, tea, iron, goods, velvet and other kinds of cloth.

Russian trade in Afghanistan.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 15th April, 1908.

79. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th April, complains that ticket collectors on Indian railways put female passengers to much inconvenience and often insult them, and suggests that lady ticket collectors should be appointed on all railways.

Railways ticket collectors.

ADVOCATE, 16th April, 1908.

80. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th April, complains of the congestion of traffic on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway owing to the discontinuance of the Dehra Dun mail,

The congestion of traffic.

VII.—Post Office.

Nil.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 31st March, 1908.

81. A correspondent in the Almora Akhbar of the 31st March (received on the 21st April suggests the desirability of an association being formed at Almora to improve the social, educational, economical and political condition of the inhabitants of the hill districts.

An improvement association at Almora.

JAIN GAZETTE, 1st and 8th April, 1908.

82. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 1st and 8th April, (received on the 22nd idem) contains an article on the Paras Nath Hill, of which the following is a literal translation :—

The Paras Nath Hill.

"Shri Sammed Shikhar is the greatest of all the holy places of the Jains, where innumerable sages in ancient times and twenty Tirthankars in modern times attained salvation. It is for this reason that the Jains have the greatest regard for it. It is said that he who pays obeisance to it, even once, never suffers the agonies of hell.

Alas! Our just British Government has proposed to erect bungalows for the comfort of its countrymen on the same hill which the entire Jain community holds sacred and which has been proved to be so by reason of its being the place where Jinendradeva attained salvation, and which even the iconoclast Muhammadan kings could not venture to desecrate. On this hill the Jains neither spit nor go to stool nor make water. Neither do they reside there, such is their reverence for their sacred hill. It is on this very hill that the members of the ruling race will hunt, and walk about with shoes on, and will drink liquor and take meat. Where the Jains repeated their prayers, there the English will fire their guns and killing helpless beasts, will cool (the heart of) the hill with their dying groans.

They will in this way interfere with our religious observances. It is now some nine months since this atrocious news was received and it is beyond all description what panic it created among the Jain community. Notwithstanding our hundreds of thousands of petitions and memorials, the Lieutenant-Governor could find no mercy in his heart for us. Fine Justice! Is the cry of fourteen lakhs of Jains nothing as compared with the comforts of a small number of officials. It has been said truly that the strong tyrannizes over the weak and do not let them complain. Our Lieutenant-Governor says that he will not have bungalows erected near the temple but at a distance from it, and that they will be built in a place where they may not be seen by Jain pilgrims, but that they shall be built positively and without fail. What a nice policy, what fine justice. It means that they will not sit on the head but on the back. But sit they must. Well, will it not injure our feelings when bungalows will be erected in a part of the hill, every particle of which we hold sacred. Are not the entire precincts of a temple or of a church sacred: if not, why are men prohibited from entering them with their caps and shocs on. The same is the case with the Paras Nath Hill. Where our Shastras declare the salvation of thousands of sages with each of the Tirthankars, no just man can say that those sages would have attained Nirvana within a piece of land one yard long. If thousands of men can stand together within the space occupied by the temple on the summit of the hill, our just Lieutenant Governor's statement that the entire hill is not sacred is correct, but if they cannot stand there, then what can be said of his statement beyond this that it is pure and simple injustice?"

The writer makes the following four suggestions for the protection of the sacred hill:—

(1) Now that petitions and memorials have had no effect the Jains should have recourse to law-courts for the settlement of the matter.
(2) They should offer prayers to Jinendradeva for help and perform religious ceremonies for deliverance from the calamity.
(3) Religious leaders should go to the hill and plainly tell the officials to kill them before erecting bungalows on their sacred hill.
(4) It is owing to the use of foreign impure sugar, the exportation of wheat from India and the strangling of native industries that this calamity has overtaken the Jains and it can be removed only by giving up the use of foreign goods and by using swadeshi articles.

The Paras Nath Hill.

83. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 1st and 8th April states that among other resolutions the Digambar Jain conference held at Kundalpur (Central Provinces), one was passed condemning the decision of the Government of India regarding the erection of bungalows on the Paras Nath Hill, and also another proposing that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Government of India and to the Secretary of State for India with a view to making them acquainted with the consequences of this unjust Government measure.

JAIN GAZETTE, 1st and 8th April, 1908.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

A man-eating tiger in the Almora district.

84. The Almora Akhbar of the 31st March (received on the 21st April), reports that a man-eating tiger has been causing considerable loss of human life in the pargana of Chowgarkha for some years past, and requests Government to take early steps to have it killed.

ALMORA AKHBAR, 31st March, 1908.

ALLAHABAD: The 26th April, 1908.

S. T. HOLLINS,
Offg. Asst. to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

CON

(a)—F

1.

2.

3.

4.

5.

6.

(b)—

7.

8.

9

10

11

1

1

1

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 18 OF 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 2nd May 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
I.—POLITICS.
(a)—Foreign:
1.	National traits of the English ...	387
2.	European policy	387
3.	The Anglo-Russian Convention ...	387
4.	The influence of India on Japan ...	387
5.	Arrest of a Russian spy	387
6.	Turkey and Italy	387
(b)—Home:
7.	Indians in the Transvaal	387
8.	Decline of Democracy and the rise of Imperialism in England	388
9.	Growth of race feeling in England ...	388
10.	India in Parliament	388
11.	If repression is remedy	388
12.	The present unrest in India	389
13.	Arts School and the Governor of Madras...	389
14.	Unrest in India	389
15.	India for the Indians	389
16.	Decentralization Commission... ...	390
17.	Moderates and Extremists	390
18.	The Convention Committee	390
19.	The Convention Committee meeting at Allahabad	390
20.	The Convention meeting at Allahabad ...	390
21.	Government and its subjects	391
22.	British Government and India ...	391
23.	Government measures	392
24.	European sympathy with Indians ...	392
25.	Advice to young Indians	392
26.	Decrease of Bengali Hindus	392
27.	Affairs in Chandanagore	392
28.	The punitive police tax and the swadeshi movement	392
29.	Prosecution of Volunteers in Poona ...	393
30.	Prosecution of athletes	393
31.	Hindus versus Muhammadans... ...	393
32.	A salaam-loving officer	394
II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
33.	Frontier tribes	394
34.	The Afghan inroads	394
35.	War on the frontier	394
36.	War on the frontier	394
III.—NATIVE STATES.
37.	Rampur...	394
38.	Bhopal	394
39.	British Government and Native States ...	395
40.	Liberty of people in Native States ...	395
IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
(a) Judicial and Revenue:
41.	Maulvi Liyaqat Hosain on bail ...	395
42.	Conviction of a woman for murder ...	395
(b)—Police:
43.	Horse allowance to police officers in the United Provinces	395
44.	The Indian Police	395
45.	His Honour's remarks on plague in his Budget speech	395
(c)—Finance and Taxation:
46.	The Budget debate	396
47.	The distribution of takavi	396

Page.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:

48. Encroachments on a public road in Shahabad 396
49. The unsanitary condition of Benares ... 396
50. The Agra Municipality 396
51. The Agra Municipality 397
52. Octroi duty on food-stuffs 397

(e)—Education:

53. Indian students abroad 397
54. The American Universities and Oriental students 397
55. European and Indian students ... 397
56. Education on scientific lines... ... 397
57. Calcutta University Jubilee celebration ... 397
58. Mrs. Besant's National University ... 398
59. The Gurukul Kangri 398
60. The Matriculation Examination, 1908 ... 398
61. The Anglo-Bengali School, Allahabad ... 398

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land:

62. The famine 399

(g)—General:

63. Industrial development of India ... 399
64. Industries in the United Provinces ... 400
65. Dacoity on female passengers on the Punjab mail 400
66. Kidnapping in Sindh 400
67. Kidnapping of Hindu boys in Hyderabad 400
68. Plague inoculation... 400
69. Contracts for the sale of intoxicants ... 400
70. Synod of India and Ceylon 401
71. Kayasthas 401
72. Kayasthas in Government service ... 401
73. Europeans and Indians in India in the hot weather 401

Page.

74. Europeans and Indians 401
75. Assault on a postmaster 401
76. Indian Fleet 401
77. An attempt on the life of the Mayor of Chandernagore 402
78. An appeal on behalf of Hindi ... 402
79. Mr. Morley's peerage 402
80. Amalgamation of the Arya Samaj and the Sanatan Dharm 402

V.—LEGISLATION.

Nil.

VI—RAILWAY.

81. Want of accommodation on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway 402
82. Lucknow junction station 402
83. Railway accidents 402
84. Railway lines in native states 402

VII.—POST OFFICE.

85. Postal department. How to reform it ? ... 403
86. Grievances of postal employés ... 403
87. Complaints against the Shahabad Post Office 404
88. Murder, the result of competition ... 404

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

89. Religion and reform 404
90. Social reform 404
91. The Gurukula Academy 404
92. The Parasnath Hill 404
93. All-India Shuddhi Sabha 405
94. Images of Jain gods on buttons ... 405

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

95. "At Home" in Benares 405

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. Discussing the character of the English, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, remarks that self-respect and pride are the most marked features of the natives of England. These qualities, he notes, are incomprehensible to Orientals. The inhabitants of the East are taught humility and modesty from their cradles, and consequently cannot realize the national traits of the character of the English. Their pride, he says, makes them aggressive and unsympathetic. The Scotch, on the other hand, are not noted for their haughtiness in their own country, but are chiefly remarkable for their close-handedness. Accordingly, the editor remarks, when Scotchmen of no position succeed in entering one of the Indian services, they generally lose their balance of mind, and as they are lacking in imagination, they fail to see the absurdity of the situation.

National traits of the English.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

2. Commenting on the policy of international peace advocated by the representatives of the Powers at the Hague Conference, the Anand (Lucknow), of the 23rd April, remarks that the advocacy of peace by European Powers is curious. They are at heart at daggers drawn with each other, while outwardly they proclaim a peaceful policy (lit. by beat of drums). In spite of the Conference at the Hague all the Powers are going to increase the strength of their armies. President Roosevelt is doing the same and, the editor remarks, he is fully justified in doing so, considering the progress of Japan.

European policy.

ANAND, 23rd April 1908.

3. Referring to the flat refusal of the Amir to ratify the Anglo-Russian Convention, the Cawnpore Gazette of the 23rd April, remarks that the action of the Amir is quite justifiable as he was not consulted when the terms of the treaty were drawn up.

The Anglo-Russian Convention.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 23rd April 1908.

4. Mr. J. N. Farquhar contributes an article to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for April, entitled "The influence of India on Japan", in which he points out that Japan is greatly indebted to India for her present position. When Japan was still in a crude state, he says, she came under the influence of Indian missionaries, whose primary object was the spread of religion, but who incidentally taught the principles of government and the rudiments of civilization. These missionaries, he states, found their way to Japan viâ Tibet and China, and it was in a great measure to their efforts that Japan has become the most civilized and the leading nation of the East.

The influence of India on Japan.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, April 1908.

5. Referring to the rumour of the arrest of a Russian spy in disguise near Herat, and to the recovery of a plan of the country from his possession, the Cawnpore Gazette, of the 23rd April, remarks that if the rumour is correct it is obvious that Russia has not yet given up her idea of extending her territories in the East.

Arrest of a Russian spy.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 23rd April 1908.

6. Referring to the state of affairs between Italy and Turkey, the Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi), of the 27th April, expresses its regret at the hostile attitude of Italy to the Sultan.

Turkey and Italy.

JADD-O-JEHAD, 27th April 1908.

The editor further remarks that if the Sultan is so effeminate and timid as to cede one portion of his empire to a European Power on demand, it will soon be recognized that Turkey is not subject to the Sultan only but to all the European Powers also.

In conclusion he remarks that this is the result of the disunion so noticeable among Muhammadans.

(b).—Home.

7. The editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, notes that Indians in the Transvaal have obtained a certain amount of relief since men of means and property have been allowed to register themselves by signing their names only. The gain, however, he remarks, is insignificant, but still it is a notable triumph for passive resistance. The white man, he points out, can exploit any country in the world.

Indians in the Transvaal.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

His skin is his passport. But the Asiatic has the door slammed in his face in all places that the white man considers his preserves. The Asiatics, he thinks, are themselves to blame for this. They have been too guileless, too mild, too submissive. Asia must possess a few more strong nations before things can be set right by means of a Pan-Asiatic League.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

Decline of Democracy and the rise of Imperialism in England.

8. A correspondent in London writes to the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, that democratic feeling is on the wane in England, and that the sentiment of Imperialism is invading even the domestic affairs of the country. The decay of village life and the decline of agricultural pursuits, he states, form a marked contrast to the vast number of the unemployed in London, who appear to concern themselves with nothing beyond the social and economic problems of the hour, as demonstrated by Socialist orators at park corners and outside public houses. On the other hand, the correspondent points out, there never was an epoch at which waste and extravagance stood so high. Decorum places no restraint whatever on the indulgence of personal luxury, and fortunes are lavished on the frivolities of the hour. In conclusion, he remarks that the nation that abandons the happiness of its children in favour of the aggrandisement of the few, is in a dying state, as each generation of the privileged is born to a larger and larger share of brainlessness and dissipation.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

Growth of race feeling in England.

9. In his editorial notes, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, remarks that race feeling in England is growing stronger daily. At the Bar and in the Universities, he states, the jealousy and dislike of Indian students is cynical, so much so, that it appears probable that in a few years Asiatics in England will be treated as in the Transvaal at present. How much longer, he asks, will India be content to send the flower of her wealth and talent to be saturated with the ideals of the West at its high places of learning.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

10. The following is an editorial note in the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March :—

ACTORS ON THE PARLIAMENTARY STAGE.

India in Parliament.

Shakespeare spoke of all the world being a stage and all men being actors on it. He may or may not have been right. But to us Indians the British Parliament does seem to be a stage, all M. Ps. being the actors. Some play the part of pro-Indians, others that of anti-Indians. But as soon as the old charmer, Mr. Stagemanager Morley, rings the bell of " sympathy for Indians" the pro-Indian actors immediately withdraw their amendments, and vanish behind the curtains. As on previous occasions, so on the last opening day of Parliament, the usual acting was gone through with consummate skill. We were, by mental vision, sadly amused spectators of scenes, from a distance ; but we confess that we were not edified, that we derived no benefit. Whose benefit night was it then ?

We have tasted enough of the fruits of Mr. Morley's sympathy. Indians have noted in interleaved copies of English dictionaries in their possession the new meanings which English words are acquiring. In many and many a copy sympathy has been noted to mean " the settled-fact-ness of a great wrong, " " regulation lathies, " " punitive police, " " sedition trials " " fomenting of religious hatred, " and the consequent rioting and assaults on women, " divide and rule, " " sedition laws, " " midnight search and looting of innocent homes, " " flogging of boys, " " police tyranny, " " deportation without trial, " &c., &c. We are requested to announce that there is much blank space in the interleaved copies for noting the new meanings of " antipathy " according to Mr. John Morley.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

If repression is a remedy.

11. Discussing sedition trials, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, asks if repression is a remedy. He thinks that the more the people are repressed the higher will their spirits rise. Government, he fears, have taken no steps to understand the people's point of view. The matter, he suggests, should be laid before the tribunal of the world, argument should be met with argument, imputation of wrong motives should be confronted with an exposition of right motives, and to bitter attacks should be opposed calm statesmanlike action. In conclusion, he admits that Government are justified in putting down all attempts at rebellion, but the idea of an armed rising in India he considers absurd.

UNION GAZETTE, 21st April 1908.

The present unrest in India.

12. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st April, publishes an article entitled "Who increases the Unrest", of which the following is a literal translation :—

"We have pointed out hundreds and thousands of times that a speaker or editor cannot desseminate sedition. If there should ever be sedition in India, it will be through want of foresight on the part of officials, for speakers and editors can hope to achieve something only through impressing on the public their (high-handed) practices. Such being the case, why should they be given an opportunity to cause unrest among the people? But every European thinks that he represents King Edward VII and takes anything said against himself as said against the King-Emperor and the Crown, although Indians are in no way hostile to the King-Emperor or the Empire. If they have any cause of complaint, it is against certain officials, who first oppress them and then fasten their own faults on their heads and hold the people to be disloyal in order to punish their opponents and preserve their dignity.

But it must be borne in mind that if the people were disloyal, they would never have so distinctly given expression to their inner thoughts and would never have disclosed their intentions until they were put into action.

The agitation of the people and their representatives and their demand for justice are adequate arguments to show that they are in no way hostile either to the King or to the Empire but to the executive officers of the King who will not improve their manners. Well, how far does this oppression go? When the tanks and wells of some of the villages of Patna, such as Balbapur, School bazaar and Patna bazaar dried up, and a number of girls and women of some respectable families went to bathe in the river Kosi before dawn on a certain occasion, cases were instituted against them under the Municipal Act !! Do those who instituted these cases know how unbearable it must have been to Indians to see pardah-nashin ladies brought to a court of law on a very trifling charge?

Could not a warning to their parents have served the purpose? But this was not done. Such are the practices that break the bonds of love. The authorities are going beyond bounds in their mistakes, and instead of improving their manners, they think it a compensation for their evils to oppress the people, and this is the way that unrest is increasing in the country."

RAHBAR, 28th April 1908.

Arts School and the Governor of Madras.

13. Referring to the refusal of the Governor of Madras to help in the opening of certain institutions for the teaching of technical science and art on the grounds that such institutions would do little good as there was no demand for skilled workmen in the country, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, remarks that it was a polite way of refusing the help that was asked, but that Indians have now become too wise to be misled in this way.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 23rd April 1908.

Unrest in India.

14. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 23rd April, says that no one except the blind and ignorant would deny that there is much unrest in India these days. This unrest will go on increasing in spite of regulation lathies, jails and punitive police. But if the Government would listen to the advice of "qualified doctors" the disease would soon be cured. In conclusion, the editor refers to Mr. Morley and says that he will not be troubled now with tales of Indian misery.

SWARAJYA, 25th April 1908.

India for the Indians.

15. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 25th April, reproduces an article from the Hitkari entitled "India for the Indians."

In this article the writer says that Indians cannot really call India their own ; for, had it been so, the children of the soil would not have been reduced to their present miserable condition. In those days when India could be said to belong to Indians, plenty reigned everywhere. There was no plague, no famine, Indian Rajas identified themselves with their subjects and looked after their comforts as earnestly as their own, and the result was that peace and content made life in those days quite enviable.

But now India is in the hands of foreigners. There is not that paternal solicitude for the welfare of the inhabitants that marked the public and private conduct of Asoka and Vikrmaditya. Every complaint that escapes our lips is sedition. Let Indians die but let them not speak, for India is not theirs.

All this, the editor says, is due to the fact that we have ceased to think India ours. Had we thought her ours, we would have loved her, we would have respected her, we would have sacrificed ourselves for the benefit of her other children. Unless and until we do all this, mother India will not acknowledge us.

The editor, therefore, asks his countrymen to love India devoutly, passionately, and jealously. Then, and then alone, Indians will be able to say : "We belong to India and India belongs to us."

MODERN REVIEW, April 1908.

Decentralization Commission.

16. Commenting on the Decentralization Commission, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for April, notes with approval that most of the witnesses before the Commission emphasized the despotic and irresponsible nature of the Government of India. It does not matter, he remarks, whether the Imperial, Provincial, or District authorities are supreme, provided they are responsible to the people and the latter have control of the affairs of State.

SWADESH BANDHAVA, April 1908.

Moderates and Extremists.

17. Referring to the split in the Congress camp, the Swadesh Bandhava (Agra), of April 1908, says that the Bengal and Bombay presidencies are for reconciliation, but that the United Provinces leaders and some others say that the time has come when peaceful work is impossible without excluding the Extremists from the Congress.

The editor's own opinion is that when both the parties are pledged to a common cause, of service to the motherland, division is not only unnecessary but mischievous. But if a division is inevitable, mutual good-will, sincerity, and patriotism should be exercised in such a way as to take away the bitterness of separation.

MOHINI, 21st April 1908.

The Convention Committee.

18. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 21st April, comments adversely on the exclusion of Extremists from the deliberations of the Convention Committee that held its sittings at Allahabad during Easter, and remarks that it would have been much better if the Convention had not come into existence, as it was nothing more nor less than a source of recreation to ease-loving babus, and that instead of helping forward the cause of the Congress, it simply added to the already existing differences between the Moderates and the Extremists.

ADVOCATE, 23rd April 1908.

The Convention Committee Meeting at Allahabad.

19. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 23rd April, commenting on the many apprehensions expressed as to the possibility of any union between people holding divergent views as regards the revival of the Congress, remarks that in spite of the apathy shown at Surat, the very fact that fifty-four gentlemen, all men of business, could travel long distances under a scorching sun, is a proof of their earnestness in carrying on the work for the best interests of the country. It was due to the combined effort of all the representatives that it was agreed by a majority of thirty-three to fourteen, that a new session of the reconstituted National Congress should be held. The new Constitution provides for an all-India Congress Committee, Provincial Congress Committees, and District Congress Committees. It lays down their functions, the rules for the election of delegates, the nomination of the President and the conduct of the proceedings. The writer believes the triumph of the peoples' cause rests on their own efforts and on their building up their own future "on constitutional lines." It clearly lays down :—"People who have no faith in the constitutional methods of agitation have no place in the Congress programme; they ought to remain out of it. Those who talk of absolute Swaraj, of independence from English overlordship, of something 'grim' other than constitutional agitation, shall have no place in either District, Provincial or all-India Congress Committees."

MUSAFIR, 30th April 1908.

The Convention meeting at Allahabad.

20. The Musafir (Agra), of the 30th April, remarks that the Convention meeting recently held at Allahabad has severed the vital chords that linked the Moderate and Extremist members of the Congress body, that from a Hindu point of view, the bed of the tirbeni was the fittest grave to receive the remains of such a grand and stupendous institution as the Indian National Congress, and that the obsequies performed by the Moderates have convinced the public that the Congress is now surely dead and gone.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th April 1908.

21. Under the marginal heading, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th April, publishes an article, of which the following is a literal translation :—

Government and its subjects.

"The higher authorities often say in their speeches that only the educated are responsible for this opposition to Government. They continue to oppose Government because they do not get high positions. But the Indian subject who lives in villages and huts considers Government his parent (lit.). If this is the case, why has Sir John Hewett said in his speech on the budget that the subject people view with suspicion (lit. suspicious eyes) the attempts of the Government for preventing plague? Many think that the Government is introducing inoculation with a view to reduce the population. Others have other suspicions. Why is this so? If our parents (lit. fathers and mothers) administer bitter medicines to us, we take them with pleasure. Or if we do not take them with pleasure, we can never accuse them of dishonest motives. The fact is that because of this daily repression, the people have lost all respect for Government. If the supply of water gets insufficient in the canals and people do not get enough, instead of investigating the real cause, they at once suspect that the Government wants to kill them by starvation so that they may not grow strong. In the same way the people look with suspicion on every act of Government, prompted by whatever motive it may be. This shows that they do not consider Government their parent, but rather take it to be a tyrant, an oppressor, and a selfish person. And there are many reasons for this. Poor men! They have no access to the Lieutenant Governor or to the Viceroy. They simply think the tahsildar, the sub-inspector, the deputy collector, and the magistrate their Government. And unfortunately whenever they have to come before these officers, they are treated so unsympathetically and rudely that, poor fellows! they lose all confidence in the good intentions of Government. The sub-inspector abuses them. The tahsildar rebukes them. The deputy stares at them angrily. And the Collector Sahib.—Well! What can be said of him? Where can he get time to conciliate (lit. to seek the heart of) the people. Under these circumstances how can they have faith in the pure motives of the Government. However! be that as it may, the people do not consider the Government their well-wisher, but think that it harbours bad motives (against them). The remedy that His Honour has proposed for this, is that leaders of people should exert their influence upon them and explain to them the intention of the Government. But let it be remembered that only those leaders of the people can perform this work whom they cherish with respect and veneration. The leaders who flatter the Government and hunt after titles cannot claim to have the confidence of the people. The latter think them spies and reporters of the Government. But it is a matter of regret that the repressive policy of Government has gone so far that those men who are entitled to be the real leaders of the nation are looked upon with suspicion and shadowed by the detective police and the district authorities. Attempts are being made to entangle them in the clutches of the law; for they have lost the confidence of the Government. And those that are in the good books of the Government, are looked upon by the people as their enemies (lit. ill-wishers). And those that possess the confidence of the people are considered by the Government as rebels and mischief-makers. When the Government and the people are thus at variance, how is it possible for the Government to impress upon the people the idea of its honesty and sympathy? It is a strange position that though it is said that the leaders of the nation can remove this distrust of the Government from the hearts of the people, yet it is thought dangerous if the leaders and people mix freely together."

ABHYUDAYA, 24th April 1908.

22. Referring to the conviction and fining of Viscount Curzon (meaning Lord Curzon) for rashly driving a motor car, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 24th April, remarks that Lord Curzon who formerly treated thirty crores of Indians as puppets, has been discredited by a Magistrate on the testimony of an ordinary police constable, so much so that he was found guilty and convicted. In India, however, no attention whatsoever is paid to the words of the leaders of society and of members of legislative councils in comparison with that of an ordinary white man.

British Government and India.

ABHYUDAYA, 24th April 1908.

Government measures.

23. Referring to the arrest of certain men concerned in a lathi bout at Manikganj (Bengal), the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 24th April, remarks that if the Government wants Indians to be loyal subjects, it can expect them to be so only when it acts for their benefit. The editor then quotes the Risley circular and the order of Mr. Jennings, Principal of the Muir Central College, as factors that alienate the people from the Government. He quotes a Bengali proverb meaning that a woman, who shows too much affection to another's child (lit. more than that of a mother) is really a witch.

RAHBAR, 28th April 1908.

European sympathy with Indians.

24. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, remarks that it is foolish to hope that any European, however sympathetic he may profess to be towards the cause of India, will ever sympathise with Indians at the sacrifice of the interest of his own nation.

It would be better, therefore, says the editor, that Indians should rely upon their own independent exertions.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

Advice to young Indians.

25. Writing on civic ideals, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, makes an eloquent appeal to young Indians to realize the civic ideal in their lives by the spread of knowledge, the distribution of food, the destruction of ignorance, the amelioration of the down-trodden, and the improvement of insanitary conditions. He warns them against assuming the airs and attitude of the patron, and points out that they must be ready to teach in villages, to be industrial pioneers, and to take their lives in their hands in many places where their duty calls them.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

Decrease of Bengali Hindus.

26. Referring to Mr. A. Chaudhuri's statement at the Pabna Conference that Bengali Hindus were not increasing, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, regrets to note that this is the case. The matter, he thinks, is one that calls for attention, as the welfare of the country depends on all sections of the people being strong and progressive.

RAHBAR, 28th April 1908.

Affairs in Chandanagore.

27. Referring to the state of affairs in Chandanagore, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, remarks that if the misunderstanding between the rulers and the ruled continues as it has done for some time past, the learning of the art of manufacturing bombs by the Bengalis will not prove useful to foreigners.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

The punitive police tax and the swadeshi movement.

28. The following is an extract from the notes in the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March :—

THE BRITISH "JAZIA".

"Aurangzib was a religious bigot. We may call the Britishers commercial bigots. Aurangzib imposed a poll-tax called jazia on Hindus;—on all those who would not accept his faith: the British rulers of India are imposing a punitive police tax on the inhabitants of localities which are not inclined to buy English goods and which are swadeshi; and this tax, too, falls for the most part heavily on Hindus and zealous swadeshists. Aurangzib offered his faith free of cost to all Hindus: nay, he would have been glad to reward them for accepting it; but the English want us to pay them for things which we do not wish to have. This British jazia has been imposed almost everywhere for political purposes, and presses heavily on many a poor innocent village and family. The Pabna Conference, therefore, did well to start a collection for helping such villages and families to pay the tax. But while the collection will be felt as a great relief by the oppressed villagers, and will create a bond of unifying sympathy between afflicited and non-afflicted areas, it may encourage the revenue-loving bureaucrat to impose punitive police on fresh localities in ever-increasing numbers! It will, therefore, no doubt occur to the sturdy patriots of East Bengal, sooner or later, to try an experiment in passive resistance by refusing to pay this unjust tax;—for he who submits to tyranny is almost as great an offender as the tyrant himself. Of course, passive resistance is not likely to be exactly as much of a luxury in East Bengal as it is in England. In that island if you refuse to pay a tax for conscience' sake you only feed yourself fat in the King's Guest-house (miscalled a jail) for a certain term. But in East Bengal a passive resister, before being sent to jail, is likely to have his head broken, his house devastated, his women insulted, his children flogged and his property looted;—quite accidentally, of course We would, therefore, suggest that before this interesting experiment is tried, as it is sure to be if matters do not mend, the passive resisters should remove their family and all their moveable property to a safe place.

Prosecution of Volunteers in Poona.

29. The Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi), of the 27th April, disapproves of the action of the Magistrate of Poona in prosecuting the Volunteers for stopping the people from going into liquor shops. JADD-O-JEHAD, 27th April 1908.

The editor remarks that the action of the Volunteers was in good faith and conducive to the good of the people, and that prosecution for doing what is good and for public utility is only ridiculous and foolish.

He further remarks that it is very funny that no complaints have been made against the Volunteers by the persons who were stopped by them from going into shops and that their prosecution is only based on the complaint of shopkeepers.

Prosecution of athletes.

30. Referring to the prosecution of twenty-nine respectable persons in Manikganj (Bengal) the Musafir (Agra), of the 30th April, remarks that the prosecution is based on the evidence of a single police constable that the sham fight practised by the accused resulted in the death of some combatants and that many were seriously wounded. MUSAFIR, 30th April 1908.

The editor doubts the veracity of the constable's statement and remarks that the accused belong to a society recently started by them for the development of physical culture and manly sports and that their performances only the other day got the approbation of the very Magistrate before whom they have now been produced to be tried for causing danger to public safety.

He then refers to the remarks of the Bengali newspapers to the effect that if tournaments and athletic sports when held by Indians are considered to endanger the public safety, they should also be ruled equally dangerous and criminal when held by Europeans.

In conclusion he observes: "It is all true. But we ask the Bengali Press what will then remain to mark the distinction between black and white. Alas! it is all due to the ignorance of dharam (duty) and such incidents will eventually lead to greater difficulties by making the gulf still wider between the rulers and the ruled."

Hindus versus Muhammadans.

31. Referring to the remark of the editor of the Agra Akhbar in connection with Saiyid Hyder Raza's sympathy with the swadeshi movement, to the effect that the Hindu community was the meanest, basest, foulest and the most prejudiced, the Musafir (Agra), of the 30th April, remarks that had such words been uttered by some Hindu journalist against Muhammadans, his conduct would certainly have been noticed by Government. MUSAFIR, 30th April 1908.

The editor further remarks that the silence of Government in this matter verifies the opinion of the Bengali Press that Government has now openly resolved to favour and patronize Muhammadans at the expense of the Hindus.

He then observes that hitherto the Governments of Sir B. Fuller, Sir L. Hare, and Sir D. Ibbetson have been looked upon as the patrons and advocates of this imprudent policy; but this incident proves beyond any doubt that Sir J. Hewett's Government also is no exception to the rule.

In conclusion he adds that he does not ask the Government to bring the erring editor to justice, but to see its way to maintain a similar silence and disinterestedness in such matters if the Hindus come forward to return tit for tat and blow for blow.

UNION GAZETTE, 21st April 1908.

A salaam-loving officer.

32. Referring to the case of a student in the Punjab, who is said to have been severely chastised by the Head Master at the instance of the Deputy Commissioner of Jhang for the alleged offence of not saluting him, the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st April, says :—

"Although it is no new thing to disgrace a promising and intelligent scholar before the whole school—and facts more wonderful than this are coming to light every day in the Indian world—yet it is a strange experience to find a district officer so fond (lit. hungry) of salaams in the Punjab. Our province has been so far safe from this plague; but it, too, is going to be affected now.

We want to ask Mr. Harcourt if his dignity feels enhanced now. No! Never. But, no doubt, he will be considered a bug-bear now, for whoever will see him will fly away. But we feel sorry at the cowardice of the Head Master who never raised his voice against obeying this illegal order. Shall our children learn their lessons of moral courage from teachers of this type?

It would be extremely amusing if Mr. Harcourt is deputed to Afghanistan, and there also betrays his anxiety for getting salaams."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

MODERN REVIEW, April 1908.

Frontier tribes.

33. While speculating as to why the British do not put down troublesome frontier tribes, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for April, wonders if the idea is to keep the trans-frontier regions as a training ground for the Indian army.

RAHBAR, 28th April 1908.

The Afghan inroads.

34. Referring to the incessant inroads and incursions of the frontier tribesmen into British territory, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, remarks that the chief cause of this lies in the disarmament of Indians, and that if the Government desires to put a stop to such inroads it should remove the restrictions imposed upon the possession of arms by Indians.

MUSAFIR, 30th April 1908.

War on the frontier.

35. Referring to the fresh outbreak of war upon the frontier, the Musafir (Agra), of the 30th April, remarks that in spite of all efforts and the useless waste of India's money these wars will never cease unless the Government once for all roots out the strongholds of these savage tribesmen and takes the country under its sway.

In conclusion the editor asks the Government on behalf of the Hindus residing on the frontier, to resort to extreme measures to stop for ever the savage inroads of the Afghanis and to save Hindus from falling a helpless prey to their unsparing hands.

MUSAFIR. 30th April 1908.

War on the frontier.

36. Referring to the crusades of the Mullas on the Frontier, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 30th April, humourously remarks that had Sir B. Fuller been present in India at this time instead of calling them "beloved wives" he would have termed these crusaders "husband-killing wenches."

III.—Native States.

MUSAFIR, 23rd April 1908.

Rampur.

37. The Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd April, reports that one Kallian Rai, a mustajir in Rampur, was beaten by a tahsil official for not paying his rent. He went to complain of this to the tahsildar, who ordered one Ibrahim Khan, a darogha, to bind Kallian Rai. After he was bound the darogha spat into his mouth, which enraged him and he killed the darogha with a knife.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 24th April 1908.

Bhopal.

38. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th April, referring to the magnificent celebrations that took place at Bhopal on the 20th April, to commemorate the day on which Her Highness the Begam of Bhopal took the reins of government into her hands, wishes long life and prosperity to the Begam who, on account of her administrative capacity, is a source of pride to the Musalmans of India.

39. Referring to the speech of Lord Curzon in England, in which he expressed his opinion regarding the Native States, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 25th April, says that the Native Chiefs are loyal to the British throne. But it is exacting too much to ask them to bear patiently the interference of the British Government in their internal affairs.

British Government and Native States.

OUDH AKHBAR, 25th April 1908.

The editor then goes on to describe how the Resident is all in all in Native States and how the Native Chiefs are mere puppets in his hands. He also refers to the annexation of Berar which, he says, the Nizam gave over to the British Government under compulsion. In conclusion he remarks that it was extremely unjust of Lord Curzon, that on account of personal grudge and ill-feeling, he did not even mention, much less praise, that most enlightened Native Chief of India, the Maharaja Gaekwar of Baroda.

40. While pointing out to the absolute powers exercised by Native Chiefs and their officials over the people, a correspondent of the Riayaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 28th April, asks the Government to look into the matter as Native States are subject to the British Government and consequently, as residents of such states, have every right to refer their grievances to it.

Liberty of the people in Native States.

RIAZUL-AKHBAR, 28th April 1908.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

41. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th April, highly appreciates and commends the good intention and sense of justice of the Calcutta High Court in releasing Maulvi Liyaqat Hosain on bail contrary to all expectations.

Maulvi Liyaqat Hosain on bail.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th April 1908.

42. Referring to the sentence of death passed upon a Hindu widow by the District and Sessions Judge of Cawnpore, the Musafir (Agra), of the 30th April, entirely disbelieves the prosecution story, that the accused wilfully murdered her child simply to implicate her husband's brother.

Conviction of a woman for murder.

MUSAFIR, 30th April 1908.

The editor doubts the truth of the prosecution story and asks His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to exercise his prerogative of mercy in this instance, especially as the unfortunate offender has two other little children.

(b).—Police.

43. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th April, finds itself at a loss to account for the inadequacy of the horse allowance granted to the police of the United Provinces, as compared with that of Bengal, and remarks that as a horse cannot be kept for less than Rs. 20 a month in these days of scarcity, the horse allowance paid to the police in these provinces should not be less than Rs. 15 a month, as is the case in Bengal.

Horse allowance to police officers in the United Provinces.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th April 1908.

44. The following appears in the editorial notes of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 29th April :—

The Indian police.

HINDOSTHAN, 29th April 1908.

"Whatever the Policeman's Friend may say in favour of his pet, cases crop up every now and then to show that the Indian police is the worst in the world. It must be admitted, of course, that there are exceptions to the rule, but generally it is seen that cases are sent up by the police which seem not to have a leg to stand upon. This gives rise to suspicions regarding a department where there is ample field for corruption and abuse of power and for wreaking cowardly vengeance upon unwary persons."

45. Referring to His Honour's remarks in connection with the plague measures, on the occasion of the last Budget speech, the Musafir (Agra), of the 30th April, suspects the detective police to be the chief agents in starting baseless and strange

His Honour's remarks on plague in his Budget speech.

MUSAFIR, 30th April 1908.

rumours to the effect that His Honour's tour was intended to spread plague in places which had been free from the epidemic.

The editor advises His Honour not to be too credulous and believe the statements of the police as if they were revelations from above, for they, too, are human beings after all and may err.

(c).—Finance and taxation.

JADD-O-JEHAD, 27th April 1908.

The Budget debate.

46. Referring to the speeches of the Hon'ble Members in the Provincial Legislative Council, the Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi), of the 27th April, remarks that it is no good to waste time and energy in making such lengthy speeches when Government does not consider any suggestions made and does not like any interference with its actions.

HINDOSTHAN, 30th April 1908.

The distribution of takavi.

47. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 30th April, makes the following observations in connection with takavi advances :—

"But we must say one thing here that the takavi department has been a notorious one from time immemorial, even in Nawabi times. The tenants take advances and very seldom use them in buying oxen. They buy seed and dig wells, too, but very seldom do they buy bullocks for ploughing. Then, when takavi is given, a small tax in the shape of presents is levied by the patwaris and other petty officials of Government. This exaction is twice enforced, first at the time of distributing the advance when the patwaris and amlas solicit their presents politely. But at the time of repayment they demand their gratification authoritatively. It is a pity, a very great pity, that it should be so. It is a sin to exact from such half-starved cultivators, living from hand to mouth, in the time of famine, a bribe which they cannot afford. For the stoppage of this high-handedness, before the establishment of the office of Registrar of the Co-operative Credit Societies, we proposed the co-operation of the Indian members of the Local Boards. But now we most gladly propose that all takavi advances should be made by Co-operative Credit Banks under the superintendence of the Registrar. The Registrar of this division, Mr. S. H. Fremantle, is a very able, sympathetic and painstaking officer, and his assistants have the reputation of being straightforward, honest and hardworking amlas."

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

JADD-O-JEHAD, 27th April 1908.

Encroachments on a public road in Shahabad.

48. While pointing out that the grand old road that leads from Shahabad to Fatehpur is gradually being encroached upon by the neighbouring farmers, the Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi), of the 27th April, asks the District Board to look into the matter, as the obstruction of this road will cause great inconvenience to the public.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 28th April 1908.

The unsanitary condition of Benares.

49. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 28th April, while complaining of the unsanitary condition and dirty state of the streets in Benares, makes the following suggestions for the consideration of the health officer of the place :—

(1) The use of petroleum oil by confectioners should be stopped, as the smoke contaminates sweatmeets and makes them injurious to health.

(2) The shops of dyers should be removed from thickly-populated centres.

(3) The carcases of dead animals should not be allowed to be dragged along the streets.

AGRA AKHBAR, 28th April 1908.

The Agra Municipality.

50. Referring to the grievances of the Agra traders and to the memorial presented by them to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor regarding the complaints they have against the octroi system now in vogue, the Agra Akhbar of the 28th April, asks the Agra Municipal Board to remove these grievances as they are a burden to the people and a disgrace to the administration.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 30th April 1908.

The Agra Municipality.

51. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 30th April, referring to the abuses prevalent in the Agra Municipality, the grievances of the people and to the memorial presented to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor in this connection, expresses a hope that the Government will be pleased to redress the grievances of the Agra public as soon as possible, and save them from unnecessary worry and trouble at the hands of the municipal employés.

52. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 30th April, remarks that octroi duty goes a long way in raising the price of food-stuffs and asks the Government to exempt all articles of food from such duty, as it will be a great relief to the poor, especially in times of famine and scarcity.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 30th April 1908.

Octroi duty on food-stuffs.

(e).—Education.

53. Mr. Lakshmi Chand, M.A., Indian Government Scholar, writing from Manchester to the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, suggests the formation of a society in India for sending intelligent young students abroad to study arts and industries. If each lawyer in the country contributed one rupee a month, a National Fund could be formed and the idea could then be put into practical form.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

Indian students abroad.

54. The editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, notes the receipt of a pamphlet entitled "Information about American Universities for Oriental students." The pamphlet advises students, who are anxious to study the industries of America, to acquire some knowledge of the particular industry they mean to devote themselves to, before they leave India. A warning is given that the opportunities for self-support in America are limited, and not so easy for strangers and foreigners to secure, as may be imagined.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

The American Universities and Oriental students.

55. Writing on students, European and Indian, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, remarks that the Indian student in Europe compares very favourably with the young men of the country. Though the attainment of the highest moral ideals is generally regretted in India, it is much more conspicuously absent, he states, amongst English students, and unfriendly statements regarding the youth of India must be guardedly accepted, as they are entirely prompted by racial antagonism.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

European and Indian students.

56. Discussing education, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, remarks that the crying need of the hour is education on scientific and technological lines. What is required, he states, is the realization of truth and the development of faculty, not the appropriation of a little information tabulated and arranged by others. A power of scientific research must be developed amongst Indian students, and there will then be no national or economic problem that Indians will not be able to solve themselves. India, he notes, is the only country in the world where scientific research is encouraged by religion, and so one day she ought to become the home of a type of science, so lofty, so pure, so final, that no other people shall be able to approach it, save as disciples. The great workman, he notes, is he who feels himself to be the hand and mouthpiece of the people, so those who have attained distinction by research and study, must share what they have gained with others. He strongly advocates magic lantern shows in villages and the opening of night schools with a view to the spread of general knowledge. A desire would thus be created in the minds of the ignorant to know a little more than what concerns them in their every-day life.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

Education on scientific lines.

57. Commenting on the Calcutta University Jubilee celebration, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for April, briefly summarizes the results of education in India. On the whole, he thinks, the system has been bad. It savours more of instruction or cram than of education. It has not produced original thinkers and workers, the few such men that have appeared, having developed their originality, not by the help of, but rather in spite of, the education they have received in India. On the other hand, the editor remarks, the beneficial results of the system, too, cannot be questioned. It brought India into contact with a living race when she had become all but effete, and when her literature had become stagnant, unprogressive, and mere harping on old rusty strings. Contact with aggressive civilization, he notes, has roused India from the national sleeping sickness with which she was afflicted, and even if Indian Universities have only been able to impart something of the knowledge that Western nations have garnered while India has been asleep, something has been gained. Again, contact with a free nation's thoughts, he points out, is bound to have a far-reaching effect, and this effect has already manifested itself in the number of nationalists India has produced, most of whom have been students of Indian Universities. He then goes on to note the repressive measures brought into force in connection with education in Bengal. He regrets the necessity for them, and suggests that it rests with Indians to withstand them by positive work in the development of their national life. This, he concludes, and the spread of knowledge through the medium of the vernacular will draw out and train the latent powers of the young of the country and, in short, educate them in the true sense of the word.

MODERN REVIEW, April 1908.

Calcutta University Jubilee celebration.

MODERN REVIEW, April 1908.

Mrs. Besant's National University.

58. Referring to Mrs. Besant's scheme for establishing a National University with a Royal Charter, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for April, expresses his disapproval of the implied idea of alien control. He who grants a boon, he notes, can also deal a blow, and a Royal Charter, he thinks, would warrant Government interference in the affairs of the University. He fails to see why Mrs. Besant is at present using all her persuasive eloquence to oppose the National Education movement.

JADD-O-JEHAD, 20th April 1908.

The Gurukul Kangri.

59. While admiring the unique success acheived by the Gurukul Kangri in bringing into perfect development the mental, moral, and physical powers of young students, and in imparting to them a sound and useful knowledge of ancient Hindu theology, the Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi), of the 20th April, exhorts Muhammadans to start a similar institution for the religious and secular education of young Muhammadans, if they care to hold their own against the rising generation of the Aryas in India.

CITIZEN, 26th April 1908.

The Matriculation Examination, 1908.

60. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 26th April, has the following on the subject :—

"Under the new Universities Act one of the many offsprings of that immaculate (at any rate in self-estimation) and, for the matter of that, Superior Purzon—we beg pardon—Lord Curzon for the first time the Matriculation Examination of this University is being held. The portentous sound and fury with which it was brought into being, struck terror into the hearts of the candidates no less into those of teachers and managers of schools. The educated public interested in educational matters are keenly watching to see its scope and nature, as to whether it is a change in mere nomenclature or some sinister policy, long suspected, viz. checking the growth of high education in India really underlies it. The poor schoolmasters, hitherto accustomed to move in the stereotyped groove of coaching candidates for the now defunct Entrance Examination, have been hard put to it; and the fates of not a few are trembling in the balance, lest the result should prove so unsatisfactory as to render them liable to be sent about their business. The Managing Committee of many a school fare no better. Their limited resources, scraped together by no means with ease, are being put to the severest strain owing to the new items, which are constantly springing up, and on which they are called upon to spend in the name of efficiency, failing which their schools are threatened with disaffiliation. One feature of the current Matriculation Examination is that some of the papers have leaked out. The feature is not altogether novel, considering that we made the same complaint last year, though the then Vice-Chancellor, easy-going as he was, was pleased to take no notice of it."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 26th April 1908.

The Anglo-Bengali School, Allahabad.

61. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th April, writes as follows :—

"The Bengali community of Allahabad, which is by no means an insignificant one, maintains a public school teaching up to the Matriculation standard of the University. Its career in the past, though one of uniform usefulness so far as the student community is concerned, has been of rather a chequered character so far as the favour of the authorities is concerned. The school has fought an uphill battle and has not been worsted. But the cast iron mould prescribed by the department of Public Instruction does not admit of much variation and the school is now said to be in danger of losing its individuality. In any case it may be seriously doubted if the school is likely in the future to fulfil its special purpose. The time has come for the authorities to consider whether some departure should not be made from the beaten track. The traditional system of education favoured in this country no doubt is that prescribed by the University. But it is now coming to be felt that not much good comes out of forcing every Indian boy through the selfsame mill. In the past Bengali boys have been very much to the fore as clerks in the public offices, but the studies prescribed by the University, it is now admitted, are not particularly fitted for the manufacture of clerks. It is also admitted now that it has become imperatively necessary for the young men of the country to chalk out for themselves careers wholly independent of public offices. The Bengali School of Allahabad, if it is to live and have a raison d'etre, must move with the times. Not only must clerico-commercial classes be established,—special instruction given for instance in typewriting, shorthand, book keeping, &c., but it is desirable to arrange for special training of students in agriculture, surveying, drawing and the like subjects, so that the student may be enabled to proceed for further special training to schools at, say, Roorkee, Poona or Dehra Dun. It is also desirable that a workshop should be opened in connection with the school where students may receive technical instruction of a practical character. In America almost all scholars in certain Universities are required to learn a practical trade. There is no reason why managers of private schools in India should not follow the American example. If they did, not only will they secure for their scholars mens sana in corpore sano but will also be able to make them a self-reliant and honourable body of men competent to fight the battle of life manfully. The Bengalis have set the example in many things in the United Provinces, let them set an example in the management of schools also."

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

JADD-O-JEHAD, 20th April 1908.

62. The Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi), of the 20th April, while describing the unsatisfactory state of the crops, pities the people who are suffering from famine, and suggests that the Government should open grain shops at certain centres and sell corn at reduced rates. In another part of the same issue the editor describes the urgent necessity of such a shop being opened in the Hardoi district, as the distress of the people has now reached a limit.

The Famine.

(g).—General.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, April 1908.

63. An able article entitled "The Commercial and Industrial Regeneration of India" appears in the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for April, from the pen of Professor Sohrab R. Davar, F.S.S., of His Highness the Nizam's Educational Service. The essayist begins by remarking that, within healthy limits, swadeshism will greatly contribute to the national progress of India. Enthusiasm, however, he thinks, should not be allowed to develop into hatred of foreigners. No civilized country, he points out, can expect to keep its place in civilization without being constantly in touch with other civilized nations, and no country can accumulate riches without obtaining a footing in the International Commerce of the world. The commercial men of India, at the present day, he notes, are not in a position to compete with the businessmen of other countries. The reason for this is the lack of commercial training in their early days. Generally speaking, the businessmen of India are illiterate and have no knowledge of the world beyond the narrow sphere in which they move. On the other hand, young men intended for a commercial career in any other country are trained in commercial colleges and are subsequently able to take up their duties with a good theoretical knowledge of business methods. Accordingly, in order to enable Indians to take their proper place in the commercial world, it is essential that commercial schools should be started in the country. Another thing, he thinks, that tends to put a check on the commercial activity of India is the employment of Europeans when competent natives are available. The reason for employing foreigners, he presumes, is that businessmen can advertise their houses as under "European management." The employment of Europeans, too, he remarks, is hardly consistent with the claims of Indians for a larger share in the administration of the country, as if they show that they do not consider their countrymen fit for positions of responsibility, it is scarcely likely that Government will alter its policy regarding them.

Industrial development of India.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th April 1908.

Industries in the United Provinces.

64. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 27th April, notes with satisfaction the marked success achieved by the industrial movement in Bengal and regrets the backward condition and general apathy of the United Provinces in this matter.

The editor exhorts the well-to-do people of these provinces to take a lesson from the Bengalis and to evince more energy and sympathy in improving the industrial condition of their province by sending young men to learn different arts in foreign countries.

RAHBAR, 28th April 1908.

Dacoity on female passengers on the Punjab mail.

65. Referring to the dacoity recently committed in the female compartment of a carriage of the Punjab mail, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, remarks that as such incidents have hitherto occurred in the case of native female passengers only Government, therefore, has not taken any notice of the matter.

The editor also remarks that further indifference on the part of the Government in taking prompt action in the matter will lead the people to doubt the good intentions of the Government.

RAHBAR, 28th April 1908.

Kidnapping in Sindh.

66. While pointing out that many cases of dacoity and kidnapping have occurred in Sindh, and that the kidnapped children are converted to Islam and then sent to countries on the frontier, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, asks the Government to take serious notice of the matter as it is not mere religious fanaticism but something else that is at the bottom of this reprehensible practice.

MUSAFIR, 30th April 1908.

Kidnapping of Hindu boys in Hyderabad.

67. The Musafir (Agra), of the 30th April, notes with regret that it has been a practice in Hyderabad, for some years past, to kidnap Hindu children of very tender age and belonging to respectable families, convert them to Islam by force, and then send them to some Muhammadan country on the frontier.

The editor further remarks that the recent recovery of a Hindu boy from Gazni, who had mysteriously disappeared, shows that other missing children, of whom unfortunately there are about eighteen, must have been removed from their parents for the sole purpose of converting them to Islam by force and then despatching them to some foreign Muhammadan country. The editor asks the Government to take serious notice of this most inhuman practice and exhorts the Hindus of Hyderabad to respectfully approach Government in this connection.

MASHRIQ, 28th April 1908.

Plague inoculation.

68. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 28th April, notes with satisfaction the marked success achieved by plague inoculation as a prevention against the epidemic, and suggests that lady doctors should now be trained in the art of inoculation so that pardah-nashin ladies may also take advantage of the system.

Contracts for the sale of intoxicants.

69. The Agra Akhbar, of the 28th April, notes with regret that the use of intoxicants in general is daily on the increase.

The editor remarks that the attempt made by the Government to put some check upon the consumption of intoxicants by enhancing the import duty on liquor and by raising the price of contracts, can hardly produce any satisfactory result.

Such preventive measures simply mean an indirect increase in the price of the articles which is still worse for impoverished Indians.

He points out that the raising of the opium contract in Agra has increased the price of opium from four annas a tola to six annas.

Although such measures appear to be advantageous yet in reality they tend to do more harm and engender graver evils. These measures will increase opium smuggling from the adjoining native states of Gwalior, Dholpur, and Bharatpur. The sale of illicit opium and an increase in crime and police work will be the natural result.

Synod of India and Ceylon.

70. Referring to various resolutions passed by the "Synod of the province of India and Ceylon", which met at Calcutta in January last, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad) for April, remarks that in the minds of the British, practise and profession appear to have no connection. This, he thinks, is noticeable as far back as 1813 when the Charter Act was framed. The Act contained many pious professions, but its aims were far other than its wording implied.

MODERN REVIEW, March 1908.

Kayasthas.

71. The Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd April, referring to the disinclination on the part of the Government to employ Kayasthas, remarks that from time immemorial Kayasthas have been doing clerical work, and even the Musalman sovereigns could not dispense with their services. The editor thinks that if they are not employed in larger numbers, Government work will suffer.

MUSAFIR, 23rd April 1908.

Kayasthas in Government service.

72. Referring to the questions asked in the Provincial Legislative Council by the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malavya regarding the restrictions put upon the employment of Kayasthas in Government service and to the comment of the Hindustani upon it, the Kayastha-Hitkari (Agra), of the 24th April, remarks that considering the glorious history of the Kayastha community, the various responsible offices they invariably held under different Governments, their social position and perfect loyalty to their sovereign, it can hardly be expected from the just and unprejudiced British Government that it will ever be so cruel as to entirely ignore and trample upon the rights of the Kayastha community in its service.

KAYASTHA-HITKARI. 24th April 1908.

Europeans and Indians in India in the hot weather.

73. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 23rd April, comparing the lives of the Indians and Europeans in India in the hot weather, points out that the former labour and sweat in the unbearable heat, while the latter pass their time in luxury and comfort and are protected from heat by tatties and electric fans, and remarks that the European officers, whose administrative duties oblige them to remain in the plains during summer, should also be allowed to escape from the heat of the plains and enjoy themselves in the hills, relegating their duties to their Indian subordinates, who would be highly pleased at their temporary promotion. This would simplify the work, and the Lieutenant Governor would have ample opportunity of consulting district officers.

HIND, 23rd April 1908.

Europeans and Indians.

74. The Kanauj Punch, of the 23rd April, referring to the assault by the Superintendent of Police (?) Chhindwara, on a Jain priest, remarks that the Superintendent is to blame, as no one can be compelled to salute anybody and that neither the Prince of Wales himself nor the Viceroy nor the Lieutenant Governor exacts salaams in this way, and never canes any one for not saluting them.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 23rd April 1908.

Assault on a postmaster.

75. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 23rd April, reports that Lieutenant-Colonel D. Edwards (?), Residency Surgeon, Srinagar, while going from Srinagar to Jammu halted at Garhi and despatched a servant to get an important letter from the Garhi post office, that he was expecting. The postmaster was taking his meals in a baker's shop and did not at once come out. Colonel Edwards accordingly rushed into the baker's shop and dragged the postmaster out, kicking and beating him. The postmaster has represented the matter to the Postmaster General, Punjab.

HIND, 23rd April 1908.

Indian Fleet.

76. Referring to the past glory and strength of the Indian Fleet, the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th April, says that it is a matter of great regret that within two and a half centuries Indians have so completely renounced the art of navigation that nowadays not a single Indian sailor or coolie is seen on board English ships.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th April 1908.

SWARAJYA, 25th April 1908.

An attempt on the life of the Mayor of Chandernagore.

77. Referring to the attempt on the life of the Mayor of Chandernagore, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 25th April, says that this is the result of the bitterness caused by the high-handed actions of the authorities there.

"To what an extent," continues the editor, "have these officers, by their excesses, set those peace-loving Indians against them who consider men in authority as representatives of God."

MOHINI, 21st April 1908.

An appeal on behalf of Hindi.

78. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 21st April, publishes a poem in which the writer makes an appeal for the encouragement of the use of the Hindi vernacular as tending towards making Indians one united nation.

ANAND, 23rd April 1908.

Mr. Morley's peerage.

79. Referring to Mr. Morley's peerage, the Anand (Lucknow), of the 23rd April, remarks:—"Mr. Morley has become a full nawab (a peer) now and has got a seat in the House of Lords. This has been quite in keeping with the wishes (lit. natural aspirations) of Mr. Morley. Since he has been Secretary of State for India, he has been dictating a form of government on the lines of absolute monarchy. He should therefore be congratulated on attaining the rank of a Peer."

ARYA MITRA, 24th April 1908.

Amalgamation of the Arya Samaj and the Sanatan Dharma.

80. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th April. says that there is no truth in the statement made by the Sanatan Dharma Gazette that Lala Lajpat Rai has advised the amalgamation of the Arya Samaj and the Sanatan Dharma (vide paragraph 92 of Selections no. 15), and that the report was merely the outcome of a piece of drollery indulged in on the 1st of April.

V.—Legislative.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th April 1908.

Want of sufficient accommodation on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

81 Referring to the construction of special carriages for Lord Kitchener and His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the United Provinces by the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th April, remarks that instead of wasting money on the construction of these costly saloons it would have been much better had the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway increased the number of third class carriages on the line and in this way relieved the poor passengers who are now packed into goods waggons for want of sufficient accommodation.

RAHBAR, 28th April 1908.

Lucknow junction station.

82. Referring to the beating of a native clerk by the European assistant station master of the Lucknow junction station, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, holds the latter's conduct as utterly reprehensible.

The editor asks the authorities to take serious notice of this incident so as not to create agitation among the people of these provinces.

Railway accidents.

83. Referring to the various accidents and collisions that have recently occurred on Indian railways, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th April, sarcastically remarks that it is owing to the prestige of Government that such incidents never result in serious loss of life, as it has been noticed that even in the most serious accidents the loss of life has never been reported to be more than one or two or four at the most.

ZUL-QURNAIN, 28th April 1908.

Railway lines in native states.

84. The Zul-Qurnain (Budaun), of the 28th April, notes with satisfaction that the Jhind and Bhawalpur States are going to open railway lines in their respective territories and have made an agreement with the Government in this matter.

The editor expresses the hope that the Political Agents of other native states also will advise the Raises to consider the idea of railway extension in their territories as railways are paying and at the same time of public utility.

VII.—Post Office.

Postal Department. How to reform it.

85. The editor of the Postal Magazine for March, 1908, advertised that a prize would be given to the writer of the best essay on "What would I do were I to be raised to the position of a Director General of Post Offices." The essays that were sent in the editor published in the April number of the Postal Magazine (Agra). This number, therefore, is replete with suggestions, some of them important and others visionary. Some of these suggestions for the reform of the Postal department to which the editor would like to draw the attention of the authorities are given below:—

1. In view of the fact that much difficulty is felt by the office hands one essayist suggests the desirability of housing postal employés in post office compounds.

2. Another would establish a commission of enquiry into the grievances of postal clerks and of others connected with the department.

3. A third would create an All-India Association for postal servants, where all of them could meet and discuss matters and adopt measures for the improvement of their condition.

4. A fourth would make a searching enquiry into the matter of the ill-treatment of clerks by the higher authorities.

5. A fifth would organize a club, attached to which there would be a tennis ground and field for other manly sports—all this for the benefit of postal employés.

6. A sixth would increase the pay and status of mail peons, clerks, deputy post masters, post masters, inspectors and superintendents.

7. A seventh would make liberal provisions for granting pensions, and other things, such as medals, certificates, &c., in recognition of the good services of the members of the Postal department.

8. An eighth would advocate the establishment of a training school for clerks, inspectors and superintendents.

9. A ninth would decrease the number of working hours of clerks in such a way that each clerk should work only for seven hours.

10. A tenth would see that members of the Postal department are granted all gazetted holidays.

11. An eleventh would concentrate all his energy on bettering the condition of village peons and branch and sub-postmasters.

12. A twelfth would reintroduce the system of granting commission on the sale of postage stamps.

13. In recognition of the services of postal servants, a thirteenth would look to the education of their children, and provide:—

(a) that a uniform of a particular kind be granted to postal employés
(b) that they be allowed to retire on full pension after twenty years good service;
(c) that free use of postage stamps to the value of one rupee, in every month, be allowed to every member of the post office;
(d) that the life of every servant of the post office be insured for Rs. 1,000;
(e) that they should not be frequently transferred from one place to another;

and for the public convenience he would advocate—

(a) the establishment of a public waiting room attached to every post office;
(b) the decrease in the value of deferred and ordinary telegrams.

14. A fourteenth would invest the Postal department with dignity and grandeur in order to secure the respect and confidence of the public at large.

Grievances of postal employés.

86. Referring to the memorial of the employés in the Postal department for increased salary and better prospects, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 26th April, remarks:— ADVOCATE, 26th April 1908.

"The discontent of this class may not vent itself in strikes and in threats, but the very fact that these grievances are silently borne should induce the department to pay greater attention to them."

JADD-O-JEHAD, 27th April 1908.

Complaints against the Shahabad Post Office.

87. The editor of the Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad, Hardoi) of the 27th April, publishes a full text of his telegram which the telegraph clerk in Shahabad refused to send to the Postmaster General, and of the complaint which he made against the local post office to the Postmaster General.

He also complains of the non-delivery of his paper to many subscribers and suspects that the action of the local postal staff in not supplying him with stamps when required is an indirect attempt on the part of the postal authorities to damage his business and the circulation of the paper.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 30th April 1908.

Murder, the result of competition.

88. Referring to the sentence of death passed on Abdul Ghani, a candidate for the post of mail peon in Bijnor, for murdering Amjad Ali, who stood in his way in the service, the Nasim-i-Agra, of the 30th April, notes with regret that this is the woeful consequence of the extreme poverty of Indians.

The editor further remarks that want and necessity may blind a man and move him to do the foulest and the most dangerous deeds.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

MODERN REVIEW, April 1908.

Religion and reform.

89. A brief article entitled "Religion and Reform" appears in the Modern Review (Allahabad) for March, in which the editor points out that political and social reform must involve recognition of the claims of religion.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, April 1908.

Social reform.

90. An article entitled "Social Reform—What does it mean?" is contributed to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for April, by Mr. Chuni Lal Mukerji, in which he maintains that justice is the basis of all reform.

Social reform, he states, is that which furthers reciprocal activity and hearty co-operation between all individuals with a view to the general welfare of the community. Political reform, he notes, is agitated for when there is a general feeling that the ruling race is not governing justly. In the same way, he argues, social reform is only possible when there is a sense of injustice on the part of one section of a community towards another.

CITIZEN, 19th April 1908.

The Gurukula Academy.

91. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 19th April, has the following on the progress made by the Gurukula Academy during the six years of its establishment at Hardwar:—There is no doubt that the Gurukula anniversary is fast becoming the event of the year in Upper India. The Reverend W. E. Holland, Warden of the Oxford and Cambridge Hostel, Allahabad, who was one of the distinguished Europeans that attended our last anniversary, thus describes the earnestness and enthusiasm of the Gurukula pilgrims. "Under the blazing sun of an April day I trudged along the sandy river bed which in the rains is swept by the Ganges in full flood. For miles one could trace the line of pilgrims and tinkling groaning bullock carts under the long cloud of dust. The women were chanting as they, equally with the men, tramped along, carrying the bundles that contained their bedding and cooking utensils. Though this mela is only five years old, as compared with the millenniums that have passed since the Hindu pilgrimages began to be, there were 60,000 pilgrims . . . . . and unlike the other melas, the majority of these were educated or semi-educated people. This is a thing of special significance."

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th and 24th April 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

92. Among the many proposals made by the Jain Gazette (Deoband, Saharanpur), of the 16th and 24th April, for the protection of the Parasnath Hill from its alleged desecration, the following are worthy of note:—

> Graduates in Arts and Law, Barristers and Vakils are requested to collect all information they can, bearing on the best means for defending the cause of the Parasnath Hill and report to Dhannu Babu at Calcutta.

Europeans of all ranks intending to build bungalows on the Parasnath Hill should be asked not to build any houses there.

A number of men well up in English should proceed to England and represent the grievances of the Jains to the people there.

Their lamentations should reach the ears of their King-Emperor.

All-India Shuddhi Sabha.

93. The Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd April, reports that an All-India Shuddhi Sabha has been formed to reclaim to Hinduism those Hindus who have been converted to Christianity or Islam, of which a member of the Suket Raj family is to be the President, and Pandit Rambhaj Dat, of the Lahore Bar, the Secretary.

MUSAFIR, 23rd April 1908.

Images of Jain gods on buttons.

94. In its combined issue of the 16th and 24th April the Jain Gazette (Deoband, Saharanpur) comments on Australian manufacturers engraving images of Jain gods on the buttons made by them, and ascribes this to the evil days in store for the Jain religion inasmuch as their chief sacred place, the Parasnath Hill, is going to be desecrated, as the paper says, by an order of the Government of Bengal allowing Europeans to build bungalows on it.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th and 24th April 1908.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

"At Home" in Benares.

95. While describing the "At Home" party given to Mr. and Mrs. Radice, at Benares, on the occasion of their departure to England, by Maulvi Habeeb Ahmad, Vice-Chairman of the municipality and Sheikh Muhammad Umar, Honorary Magistrate, the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 28th April, remarks that the warmth of feeling, the enthusiasm and the sincere devotion shown by the entertainers and the public on the occasion, show the popularity of the guests and the high estimation in which they have been held by the people.

SULAIMAN AKHBAR, 28th April 1908.

Naini Tal:
The 4th May 1908.

S. T. HOLLINS,
Offg. Asstt. to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

Camp Branch, Government Press, United Provinces.
109

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 19 OF 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 9th May 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign:
1.	Turkey and Germany	409
2.	England and Russia in Persia... ...	409
3.	A Pan-Islamic Conference	409
	(b)—Home:
4.	Ill-treatment of Indians in Canada ...	409
5.	Indians in British Colonies	409
6.	The Indian National Congress ...	409
7.	The Indian National Congress ...	410
8.	Moderates and Extremists	410
9.	Moderates and Extremists	410
10.	The Moderate Convention	411
11.	Swaraj	411
12.	Agitation and Anarchy	411
13.	The Government of the Eastern Bengal ...	411
14.	Government measures and the people ...	411
15.	The Muzzaffarpur incident	412
16.	Mr. Asquith	412
17.	Letters of an American to the Indian people	412
18.	Letter from Jesus Christ to Sardar Ajit Singh...	412
19.	Indian brotherhood	414
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
20.	The Mohmands	414
21.	The Mohmands	414
22.	The Frontier tribes	414
23.	The Mohmands	414
24.	Frontier inroads	414
25.	The Frontier Expedition	415
26.	The Amir	415
27.	The Frontier trouble	415
28.	Tribal disturbances on the Frontier ...	415
29.	The Mohmands and the Amir... ...	415
30.	The Frontier trouble	415
31.	The Frontier Expedition	416
32.	The Amir and the Mohmands	416
33.	The Frontier trouble	416
	III.—NATIVE STATES.
34.	Freedom of speech in Travancore ...	416
	IV.—ADMINISTRATION.
	(a)—Judicial and Revenue:
35.	Maulvi Liakat Husain	416
36.	Europeans and Indians	416
37.	Separation of the judicial and executive functions	416
38.	The Dinajpur assault case	416
	(b)—Police:
39.	Conviction of police constables ...	416
40.	Police in Bengal	417
	(c)—Finance and Taxation:
	Nil.
	(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:
41.	The Lucknow Municipality	417
42.	Water-supply in Agra	417
43.	The Benares water-supply	417
44.	Wells in Lucknow	417
45.	Tax on pilgrims to Ajodhia	417
46.	Tax on pilgrims to Ajodhia	417
	(e)—Education:
47.	Leaking out of Matriculation Examination papers...	418

		Page.
48.	Leaking out of Matriculation Examination papers	418
49.	Allahabad University examinations ...	418
50.	The Matriculation Examination ...	418
51.	The Matriculation Examination ...	418
52.	The Matriculation Examination ...	418
53.	The Allahabad University scandal ...	418
54.	Teachers' Training Colleges	419
55.	Education and the Government ...	419
56.	New Inspectors in the Educational department	419
57.	Education in India	419
58.	Musalman Education	419
59.	A Muhammadan on the Gurukul of the Arya Samajists	419
60.	Establishment of a girls' Gurukul at Meerut	420
61.	Need for Boarding-houses in the Aligarh College	420
62.	Indian students in America	420
(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land:
63.	Famine and prices	420
64.	Famine Relief Works	420
65.	Famine in the United Provinces ...	421
66.	Famine and permanent settlement ...	421
67.	Famine Relief Works	421
(g)—General:
68.	Conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain	421
69.	Conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain	421
70.	Conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain	421
71.	Conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain	421
72.	Temperance crusade in Poona ...	421
73.	Temperance agitation in Poona ...	421
74.	Temperance agitation in Poona ...	421
75.	Temperance Volunteers at Poona ...	422
76.	Temperance Volunteers at Poona ...	422
77.	The swadeshi movement and the Kshattriyas	422
78.	Foreign sugar versus country sugar ...	422
79.	Foreign sugar	422
80.	The High Court ruling on cow-killing ...	422
81.	"Asia Contra Mundum"	422
82.	Mrs. Annie Besant on the word "Native"	423
83.	Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal on the Hindu-Muhammadan problem	423
84.	Kidnapping of Hindu boys in Hyderabad (Sindh)	423
85.	Europeans and Indians	423
86.	The British order for Japanese bayonets ...	423
87.	Kayasthas and Government service ...	423
88.	Musalmans and banking	424
V.—LEGISLATION.
Nil.
VI.—RAILWAY.
89.	Railways	424
90.	Doubling of railway lines	424
91.	Doubling of railway lines	424
92.	Railway assaults	424
VII.—POST OFFICE.
93.	The Signallers' strike	424
VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
94.	The need for an All-India Social Hague ...	424
95.	"The future of dress in India" ...	425
96.	Liberty to females	425
97.	The Parasnath Hill	425
98.	Decline of the Hindus	425
IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
99.	Cremation of a Hindu in America ...	426
100.	Kabulis in the United Provinces ...	426
101.	Lord Curzon fined	426

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

Turkey and Germany.

1. Referring to the treacherous methods by which, according to Al-Muwéid, an Arabic newspaper published in Egypt, Germany is going to take possession of the Farsan Islands near the western coast of Arabia, at present under the possession of the Sultan of Turkey, Al-Hadi (Simrauta, Rae Bareli), of the 1st May, hopes that the rumour may prove untrue, for otherwise this incident will lead to strange complications in which Russia—the enemy of Turkey—is sure to take an active part.

AL-HADI, 1st May 1908.

The news, says the editor, has caused much sensation and regret among the Musalmans of India.

England and Russia in Persia.

2. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 5th May, referring to the ever-increasing influence of Russia in Persia, remarks that England has by its own carelessness given Russia the upper hand in Persia, and suggests that England should try to cultivate friendly relations with Persia, Afghanistan, and Turkey.

MASHRIQ, 5th May 1908.

A Pan-Islamic Conference.

3. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 6th May, reports that a Pan-Islamic Conference will be held in Egypt at the end of the year 1326 A.H., to which Musalmans from all parts of the world will be invited. The aims and objects of the Conference will be declared at least six months before it is held. Salim Al-Bashri, the Principal of Al-Azhar University, will be its President.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 6th May 1908.

The Conference is being held at the instance of Ismail Gesbornsky, the well-known Musalman Journalist and scholar of Russia; circular letters have been sent to all the Musalman papers of the world.

Its proceedings will be conducted in Arabic, Persian, Turkish, and Urdu.

(b).—Home.

Ill-treatment of Indians in Canada.

4. Referring to the proposal of Mr. Morley to depute an ambassador to settle the question of treatment of Indians in Canada, the Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 23rd April, remarks:—"Those who have been born to suffer, must suffer".

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 23rd April 1908.

Indians in British colonies.

5. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, while reviewing a paper read by Mr. Richard Jebb before the Society of Arts, London, on the Imperial Problem of Asiatic Immigration, does not accept the conclusions of Mr. Jebb that the Natal Act should be enforced in all colonies, and that the natives of India should, by way of compensation, be granted a fiscal system by which they may be enabled to develope their industries and make their country "a self-conscious unit;" but agrees with Mr. A. Lyttelton, M.P., who presided on the occasion and said that if England was not prepared to satisfy the legitimate demands of Indians in this direction, they would unite against her and she would then find it very hard to maintain its position in the East. In this connection the editor concludes by saying:—

ADVOCATE, 3rd May 1908.

"Let us only hope such a contingency will not arise, at least not in the lifetime of the present generation. But there is the risk, as Mr. T. J. Bennett, who is not unknown in this country, points out that the one result of recent events in Africa, no less in other colonies, will be to consolidate the Asiatic feeling and to lead Indians to turn away from England and seek support among their Asiatic brethren. 'It is the subject of my time,' so said the Chief Minister of a progressive Native State, a level-headed practical administrator, to Mr. Bennett, 'on which we Indians must all think alike, and that is why the Government will suffer; if this injustice is allowed to continue.' Indians from different parts of the country have not been slow to point the way retributive justice should take in case the colonists persist in their campaign against our countrymen in their midst."

The Indian National Congress.

6. The Rástgo (Allahabad), of the 1st May, says that the action of the Moderates provokes fresh bitterness every day. The memory of the Surat incident was not as yet quite forgotten when the members of the Convention Committee by their policy of exclusion revived the old quarrel once again.

RASTGO, 1st May 1908.

Can this new Congress of the Moderates, the editor asks, survive when the old one, which had attained its majority, perished away? Surely not. It is therefore more prudent, he says, to revive the old Congress than to create a new one.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 3rd May 1908.

The Indian National Congress.

7. Under the heading "The Ideal and the Real," the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 3rd May, remarks that from the conception of the Indian National Congress, as the beginning of a national organization, to the stern facts that confront us to-day, is a great fall. The recent split by itself need not have been regretted if behind it there were the signs of greater progress and activity. But it has displayed, not development by antagonism, but a lack of all cohesion, a complete absence of discipline, and a total failure to comprehend the duty that rests on all of us. He says that we have realized how swiftly the bureaucracy scents danger and resorts to violence, but we have not realized the supreme need of sinking all differences at such a time and standing together. On the other hand, he observes, Indians have proved their own enemies, and the ideal that they had so long cherished is farther from their reach than ever.

SWARAJYA, 2nd May 1908.

Moderates and Extremists.

8. The following is a translation of an article that appeared in the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 2nd May :—

"Surat witnessed a split in the Congress camp last year. After the split the Nationalist party wanted to patch up a compromise with the Moderates. But soon after they realized that the Moderates, who had become completely demoralized after centuries of foreign rule, and in whom there was not left a bit of that faith in Providence and in themselves, that is so essential both for the individual and the nation, could not be reconciled to a party that relied upon its own strength and resources and which made it its policy that nothing of importance could be achieved without self-sacrifice. The split therefore became inevitable. It was precipitated by the false notion which had seized the minds of the Moderates that the Extremists owed their existence to them, and that without their protecting influence they would be crushed in no time.

But where was this protecting influence when so many of the Nationalist workers were so hurriedly thrown into jails? Where was this protecting influence when the idol of the country, Lala Lajpat Rai, was sent away to Mandalay? Has the Nationalist party been crushed down by the withdrawal of this protecting influence? But there is none more blind than those who will not see. It is therefore useless to argue with those—whose strength lies in petitions and memorials. Serious workers! do not care for them; go on with your work. Do not be afraid of difficulties and dangers. They will simply make you more determined and resolute. And through your determination and resolution God will work out His will."

OUDH AKHBAR, 9th May 1908.

Moderates and Extremists.

9. Referring to the split in the Congress camp, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 9th May, says that the Extremists ask the Moderates to give up their policy of begging, because this policy had neither been successful in the past nor will it be successful in the future. If this request is agreeable to the Moderates, a compromise will once more secure the solidarity of the Congress.

But if this much-desired compromise is not effected, the Extremists will have a Congress of their own: and then party spirit and party quarrel will become the order of the day. Already the organs of the different parties have begun to indulge in mutual recrimination, and it seems as if the parties care more for personalities than for principles. In principles, too, there is a good deal of difference. The Moderates say they are adopting the lines of least resistence, while the Extremists hold that it is never expedient to avoid the struggle. The former places its hope in the ultimate sense of British justice, while the latter declares its belief in self-help and self-reliance.

If the faith of the Extremists in their own self is genuine, why do they go about holding meetings, thanking Governors, and giving evidence before Commissioners? Their actions show that they believe one thing and do another. Whatever their faith may be, their actions are on the lines of the Moderates. Where, then, lies the difference? In view of these facts the editor asks both parties to reconcile and to sink their differences in the common cause of the country.

The Moderate Convention.

10. Commenting on the Moderate Convention that held its sittings at Allahabad during Easter, the Mohini (Kanauj), of the 28th April (received on the 4th May), considers that the absence of Central Provinces delegates from the deliberations of the Convention and the small number of those from Madras indicate that Moderates have lost almost all their ground in those Provinces, and that in Bengal, too, their influence has declined, as was evidenced by the preponderance of Extremists in the Pubna Conference. MOHINI, 28th April 1908.

The editor expresses the opinion that the Convention made the future of the Congress dark, and that the Congress revived on the lines laid by the Convention, will do no good to the country.

He wonders how it can revive and develop indegenous arts and industries without having recourse to the swadeshi and boycott movement and to propagating education on national lines, and notes that the Convention seems to exist only to devise means for the destruction of the growing spirit of nationalism and self-reliance in the country.

Swaraj.

11. Under the heading "Can Swaraj be Established in the Land?" the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st May, publishes an article, of which the following is a translation :— AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st May 1908.

"A section of the Indian people is going mad after Swaraj. But do they ever pause to consider their own condition? First set your own house in order and then aspire for Swaraj. Frequent are the complaints about 'official tyranny' and bureaucratic oppression, but do the complainants ever realize the treatment they receive from their own wealthy countrymen? Thousands of the people are dying of famine and yet their purse remains as tightly closed as ever.

'Shake the hearts and then you will be able to shake the world' says a certain Greek philosopher. If this be true, then ye aspirants for Swaraj and sons of Rishis and great men! go out into the world, shake the hearts of these wealthy Indian autocrats. Pour into their ears the tales of the various sufferings and woes of your land. Let them hear the cries and wailings of hungry humanity. Let them realize the agonies of your silent widows. Do all this and then the justice-loving British Government is sure to entertain your claims for Swaraj."

Agitation and Anarchy.

12. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 7th May, refers to the wisdom of the decision arrived at by the Convention Committee at Allahabad, and remarks that though we do not acquit the Government of all blame, because repression necessarily leads to violence, yet the anarchist propaganda is directly due to the dangerous and inflammatory doctrines of a band of men who have become impatient of constitutional agitation. He calls those who have brought about this state of things the enemies of their own people and country, and in view of the gravity of the situation, asks all to unite in helping the Government to root anarchism and political murder out of the country. INDIAN PEOPLE, 7th May 1908.

The Government of the Eastern Bengal.

13. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th May, says that in spite of the change of Governors, Eastern Bengal has known no peace since the partition of Bengal. TOHFA-I-HIND, 4th May 1908.

The editor hopes that under the new officiating Lieutenant Governor all the memories of the past will be forgotten and that peace and security will be established once more in the land.

Government measures and the people.

14. Under the heading "The Perversity of Ignorance," the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 7th May, makes the following observations :— INDIAN PEOPLE, 7th May 1908.

"When Bengal was partitioned, every possible form of protest was adopted but without effect. The Government would not listen, and the Ministry would not interfere. The Government knew the people thoroughly well. They would hold meetings, pass resolutions, and become quiet again.

But the agitation never subsided. It became dangerous in some quarters. Inflammatory speeches were made; newspapers preached violence and disorder. The Government, in the plentitude of its strength, took prompt measures. The offending newspapers were prosecuted and punished; preachers of sedition were arrested and convicted. Public meetings were forbidden. An ordinance prohibiting meetings was followed by a law dealing with seditious meetings. Disciplinary measures were taken against school and college boys, and the Government congratulated itself that all trouble was at an end. Far-seeing and wise people, who wished well to the Government, and who understood their own people, repeatedly warned the Government that repressive measures would fail and that violence of language would translate itself into action. But no heed was ever paid either to advice or warning. It was forgotten that no race in the world permanently retains the same character. All the signs of an awakening in Asia were ignored. But other people understood the signs. They realized the strong spiritual element in the Bengali character. The Bengali is not merely intellectual. Would it ever have been believed that Bengalis would become Russian Nihilists? And yet the impossible has happened.

So long as India was free from those dangerous ideas, European Anarchism seemed impossible here, but now that it has appeared, it is likely to stay and to spread, for it exercises a strange fascination for young minds. The intense ignorance of the authorities as to the rapid and startling changes that are coming over the minds of the people was never more apparent than now."

ADVOCATE, 7th May 1908.

The Muzzaffarpur incident.

15. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th May, expresses its indignation at the dastardly outrage committed at Muzzaffarpur, sympathises with Mr. P. Kennedy, and condemns the growth of this highly dangerous feeling, that implies a great disturbance of the public peace and is destined to lead to disastrous consequences if ingrained in even the smallest section of the community. The editor gives credit to the Bengal Police for the discovery of the dens for bomb manufacture and for the arrest of conspirators, thereby saving many lives from destruction and misery.

He hopes that Government at this time of excitement will act coolly and see that no strong measures are taken in a hurry. He concludes by saying that: "on the contrary we trust that even in this excitement those responsible for the government of the country will ponder whether the time has not come to make a searching enquiry into the causes of the present unrest which has led certain hair-brained youths to attempt the lives of Englishmen with utter indifference as to their own fate, an unrest which has led men, apparently of some education, to adopt a course which is foreign to eastern traditions and sentiments."

ANAND, 30th April 1908.

Mr. Asquith.

16. Mr. Asquith, says the Anand (Lucknow), of the 30th April, is reported to be a very high-minded statesman, and India can hope to receive some justice at his hands, provided he survives infection from Mr. Morley.

CITIZEN, 30th April 1908.

Letters of an American to the Indian people.

17. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th April, publishes a letter from Myron H. Phelps, of the New York Bar, in which he shows by the aid of statistics that Great Britain is declining economically. He thinks that this is due to the gradual exhaustion of coal and iron in the country. He concludes with the following quotation from Professor Jevons:—

"When navigation and the construction of a fleet is a pure question of coal mining and iron metallurgy, it is hard to see how we (?) can insure that invincibility on the seas which is essential to the safety of an insular nation dependent upon commerce for its bread."

OUDH PUNCH, 30th April 1908.

Letter from Jesus Christ to Sardar Ajit Singh.

18. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 30th April, publishes a letter, of which the following is a literal translation :—

"LETTER FROM JESUS CHRIST TO SARDAR AJIT SINGH."

I am at a loss to find a title for you. The Sikhs have refused to recognize you as a Sikh. The title of Swami has also been denied to you.

Your own assumed title, "Bhagoo Halwai", was a temporary one which you arrogated to yourself through policy or necessity at the time of your disappearance. But that, too, was suitable only for the time before you were taken into custody by the Superintendent of Police. What remains then now? The title of Masiah, whose coronet was put upon your head! But you possess none of the qualities of the Masiah!

You cannot bring the dead to life!
You can perform no miracles!
You can produce no trays of heavenly food!
You cannot cure a leper! You cannot impart strength to the infirm!
You appear to be sickly yourself and cannot cure those that are ill!
What else then?
Should you be called a national martyr?
But you have nothing of the glory of martyrdom about you.
Your nation is not oppressed, your ruler is not despotic, nor does there appear any necessity for martyrdom.

Consequently, I call you by the name of Ajit Singh only; and leave it optional for you to apply any title you think best suited to yourself.

I am an isolated person, and my place of residence is so high that I know nothing of your world below; neither have I time to know anything, nor do I care to do so.

What little I know is from the angels who come back from their duties in the nether or material world and talk about India here above.

I heard something like this that a certain man lives at Qadiyan and calls himself Masiah; although no Masiah has been sent from here, nor will any be sent, nor does there appear to be any necessity for sending one. But it is ascertained now that he is a self-styled (lit. self-grown) Masiah who, instead of bringing the dead to life, foretells the death of his opponents, and it appears that the world of Qadiyan is confined within the Panjab.

Now it is rumoured that you have been a Masiah among the Hindus of the Panjab. But I do not know what peculiar miracle you work. It is, perhaps, agitation, absconding or concealment. (Is it not?)

But for myself, I never did such things. I never fled from the oppression of the Jews, neither did I ever call myself a Bhagoo Halwai.

I never feared death or calamity. My God protected me and took me under the wings of His mercy.

I never opposed the kings who ruled during my time, neither did I ever go against them.

They crowned me with thistles. They hanged me. But I bore it patiently. I should never have exhausted my patience, had you not grieved and annoyed a respectable member of my faith by insolently disparaging me, and calling me the son of a poor carpenter and comparing me to yourself in that you, too, were the son of a poor zamindar.

You compared me to yourself simply to grieve one individual among my followers.

Am I the son of a poor carpenter or the son of God (lit. The Holy Ghost)? You call yourself a zamindar; but every member of every creed in the world is a holy being and an object of respect to the zamindars, who can make kings, and even emperors.

What then makes you so insolent as to claim equality or comparison with me?

Hear me attentively when I declare that I have nothing to do with such nonsense. It concerns you and your King only. If you are right, your King will do justice to you, as he is just. If you are wrong, then know that Burma is not far off.

The glory that God has given to my follower, whose fame echoes in the four corners of the world, is owing to the fact that they are just and sympathetic to humanity; and I see no reason to interfere in what they do.

I am at a loss to know what object you have in view in making yourself a Masiah, or what need there is that requires a Masiah.

Is it because your King oppresses you? No.

Has he deprived you of your livelihood (bread)? No; never.

You are found in all departments of Government, in the military and in the civil. You are entirely free, so much so that you openly revile me and call me the son of a poor carpenter in the presence of my followers, and they simply laugh at it.

You wear a coronet and he (the King) remains silent. What has he (the King) not given you? If you consider, you will find that your race is better off than mine.

The followers of my brother Muhammad, who in reality have faith and the power of revelation similar to mine, get proportionately less than you.

What more do you want?

A national martyr is one who defends his nation against a despotic King. Brother! How does the King of my faith oppress you? Tell me plainly. Will you call him just only when he makes you the Viceroy of India in his place?

You have lately got seats in the India Council.

Why does not Pal deserve to be called a martyr, and why did I not sympathise with him? He refused to give evidence in Court. The natural consequence was that he should be imprisoned. What else could the court do?

Is it martyrdom? No. It was flat and gross disobedience.

Why are Bengalis martyrs? Is the partition of Bengal an oppression?

If you manage a small estate you find it necessary to transfer one person from one place to another and also to make changes and to annex one village to another.

My followers will rule over you for hundreds of years more and race after race of your people will pass by.

I get all this news here from the head office.

Remember that you will repent if the English Government leave you.

The more just and independent my followers are the more insolent you are. You blaspheme and abuse me uselessly. Know your own position and mine. I am Masiah, the Son of God. I am patient and can perform miracles. How can you match me?

I have no concern with you. I am here alone and know nothing. The matter lies between you and your rulers, and it is useless therefore to quarrel with me.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st May 1908.

19. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 1st May, contains a national anthem composed by one Damodar Sahai Singh of Chhapra in which it is urged that Indians, irrespective of artificial and natural difference should form a brotherhood with the worship of mother land India as its object, and that they should be ready to sacrifice themselves at her altar in her interests.

Indian brotherhood.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 28th April 1908.

20. Referring to the raid on the frontier territories by the Mohmands, the Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 28th April, says all this trouble is due to the tolerant attitude of the Government towards the Afridis. If instead of granting subsidies, the Government had dealt with them a little more severely, and if it had not released the "captured culprits" no one would have heard of the Mohmands and their raids.

The Mohmands.

ANAND, 30th April 1908.

21. The Mohmands, says the Anand (Lucknow), of the 30th April, are unacquainted with the practice of having their grievances redressed by representations, and instead they use rifles and guns if the necessity arises. The writer considers that the reason why the Anglo-Indian Press has not this time found the educated classes of India at the bottom of the rising of the Mohmands is that it seems to be frightened out of its wits by Lala Lajpat Rai's libel suit against the Englishman and the Civil and Military Gazette.

The Mohmands.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 30th April 1908.

22. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 30th April, referring to the frequent inroads of the Frontier tribes into British territory, remarks that the Amir of Kabul is not responsible for their misbehaviour, but that they are robbers, free-booters and dacoits by nature, heredity and training, and that in future no mercy should be shown to them when subdued.

The Frontier tribes.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 1st May 1908.

23. Referring to the raid upon a village named Mirza Dher, the Kanauj Punch of the 1st May says that security and peace are impossible unless the whole of the Mohmand tribe is severely punished.

The Mohmands.

RASTGO, 1st May 1908.

24. Referring to the frontier affairs, the Rástgo (Allahabad), of the 1st May, asks why steps are not taken to completely prevent the recurrence of such raids upon frontier territories? Is it because Government wants engagements for its troops, or is it simply to squander away the hard-earned money of the famine-stricken people of India?

Frontier inroads.

The Frontier Expedition.

25. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, contradicts the rumours set afloat by the English and Anglo-Indian journalists regarding the complicity of the Amir in inciting the tribesmen to make inroads into British territory, and remarks that the Amir has nothing to gain by such treacherous conduct, and that the most that can be said for him is that he has not been as yet able to establish a settled government in Afghanistan. The Mullas are, in the editor's opinion, responsible for these disturbances, and the Amir is unable to counteract their influence. Immediate steps should be taken to nip the activity of the tribesmen in the bud and Government should not plunge the country in a war with the Amir, when it is still in the throes of a terrible famine.

ADVOCATE, 3rd May 1908.

The Amir.

26. Referring to the relation of His Majesty the Amir of Kabul with the British Government in connection with tribal risings, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 3rd May, remarks that as far as the Amir is concerned, the spin of the coin means a win both ways: 'heads I win, tails you lose,' and so why should he tempt fate and fortune by abandoning his golden neutrality. He says that the view that the Amir encourages the tribesmen may be unhesitatingly rejected, but that he would come to the help of the British Government by attacking the tribesmen in the rear, is equally absurd.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 3rd May 1908.

The Frontier trouble.

27. Referring to the frontier trouble, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 3rd May, observes that the so-called punishment of the tribesmen, if it means that they are badly scared, is a myth. He says that the military authorities and Anglo-Indian papers were loud in their praise on the successful termination of the Zakka Khel expedition, but it is hardly over before another tribe is at the same game, rushing British posts and raiding British territory. These expeditions, the editor remarks, are no credit at all to the Government, as even the ignorant onlooker does not think much of the power that cannot chastise semi-savage hillmen effectively. Moreover, engagements with such tribes have a demoralizing effect on the troops, for they forget the real thing, as was seen in the Boer War, where the British troops almost hopelessly lost their prestige, because they had been so long accustomed to fight only inferior races.

In conclusion, he says, that when Maharaja Ranjit Singh ruled over the Panjab, tribal raids into Peshawar were never heard of, and the reason why the present Government has failed with the tribesmen is that two arguments, the first of steel and the second of gold, have been tried simultaneously, but not very effectively.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 3rd May 1908.

Tribal disturbances on the Frontier.

28. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 3rd May, referring to the various surmises regarding the causes of the frequent disturbances on the frontier, remarks that Mullas are not responsible for such disturbances; the real cause being the heavy duty imposed by Government on the salt which the tribesmen and the Afghans import from British territory. The editor thinks that the Government, which can afford to grant them subsidies, can as well remit this burdensome tax and thus remove a constant source of friction.

CITIZEN, 3rd May 1908.

The Mohmands and the Amir.

29. The Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad), of the 4th May, says that the rumour that has got abroad to the effect that the Amir of Kabul is helping the Mohmands in their raids with men and money is absolutely groundless. The editor says that as long as the present friendly relations continue, the British Government has nothing to fear from the Amir of Kabul.

JADD-O-JEHAD, 4th May 1908.

The Frontier trouble.

30. Referring to the raids on the frontier, the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th May, says that in view of the fact that the Afghan authorities never allowed Pathans in the past to take part in frontier wars, it is hoped that they will make an effort to prevent the influx of Pathans into British territory.

TOHFA-I-HIND, 4th May 1908.

HINDUSTANI, 6th May 1908.

31. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 6th May, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, on the Frontier Expedition.

The Frontier Expedition.

OUDH AKHBAR, 6th May 1908.

32. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 6th May, contradicts the rumours started by the Anglo-Indian Press that the Amir is helping the Mohmands with men and money, and remarks that no sovereign could be held responsible for the doings of his uncontrolable subjects, and that the tribesmen are not supplied with arms by the Amir, but steal them from British cantonments. The editor concludes by saying that the Amir maintains his father's policy of friendship with the British and that it is very unjust to accuse him of treachery.

The Amir and the Mohmands.

MUSAFIR, 8th May 1908.

33. The Musafir (Agra), of the 8th May, referring to the disinclination of the British Government to occupy the Pathan country permanently, remarks that if this is the intention of the Government, it had better keep quiet at home, and punish people for sedition, as punitive expeditions cannot overawe these tribesmen.

The Frontier trouble.

III.—Native States.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 1st May 1908.

34. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st May, expresses its satisfaction at the order prohibiting public speeches in the Travancore State, and says that such speeches were certain to cause a breach of the peace.

Freedom of speech in Travancore.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

UNION GAZETTE, 28th April 1908.

35. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 28th April, notes with satisfaction the release of Maulvi Liakat Husain on bail and remarks that this salutary change in the policy of Government will be welcomed by all.

Maulvi Liakat Husain.

HIND, 30th April 1908.

36. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th April, referring to the heavy sentence passed on an Indian employé of the Excise department in Jullundar for taking bribes, and the dismissal of Mr. G. E. Stephen, Extra-Assistant Commissioner of Gujranwala, for the same offence, remarks that this was very unjust and that both should have been punished equally. Such travesties of justice, in the opinion of the editor, are calculated to poison the minds of the people much more than the articles in the Sandhya and the Yugantar.

Europeans and Indians.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 1st May 1908.

37. Referring to the proposed separation of the judicial and executive functions, and to the experimental measures adopted in connection therewith in Bengal, the Kanauj Punch, of the 1st May, pays a high tribute to the Bengalis whose patient agitation has brought about this consummation.

Separation of the judicial and executive functions.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st May 1908.

38. Referring to the objection of the counsel for prosecution to the transfer, to Alipore, of the Dinajpur assault case in which Babu Durga Charan Sanyal of Bagra is alleged to have assaulted two Europeans, on the ground that it would not be advisable to have the case tried by a Bengali jury, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 1st May, remarks that no complaint has ever been heard of partiality or injustice on the part of Indian juries, but that it is well known what sort of justice European juries administer in cases in which Europeans are charged of murder or of causing grievous hurt to Indians.

The Dinajpur assault case.

(b).—Police.

HIND, 30th April 1908.

39. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th April, referring to the conviction of three policemen on the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway for theft from the railway cash safe, expresses its regret at the confidence reposed by the Government in men of such doubtful character, especially in giving credence to their reports regarding political offenders.

Conviction of police constables.

40. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th April, referring to the action of the police with regard to the mock lathi fights held in connection with the anniversary of the Ausulian Samiti at Manikganj, in Eastern Bengal, remarks that all manly games are more or less dangerous, and that if section 336 of the Indian Penal Code is interpreted literally, cricket, football, racing, motor driving, &c., will all have to be interdicted. The prestige of the Government is lowered by such actions of the police and the people cannot be inspired with feelings of loyalty in this way.

Police in Bengal.

HIND, 30th April 1908.

The editor expresses a hope that the Government will, in the interests of justice, transfer the officers responsible for this to some other place, in order to restore confidence among the people.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

41. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 30th April, complains that the Lucknow Municipality intends to impose taxes on meat and wine, and remarks that if taxes go on increasing at this rate people will find it very hard to maintain their families.

The Lucknow Municipality.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 30th April 1908.

42. The editor of the Nasim-i-Agra, of the 3rd May, asks the municipal authorities of Agra to look to the insufficient supply of water at Agra in the early morning.

Water-supply in Agra.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 3rd May 1908.

43. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 4th May, complains of the shortage of the water-supply at Benares and remarks that as cleanliness cannot be properly observed without an adequate supply of water, the municipality should make necessary arrangements.

The Benares water-supply.

BHARAT JIWAN, 4th May 1908.

44. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 6th May, makes the following suggestions for the improvement of the condition of wells in Lucknow:—

Wells in Lucknow.

HINDUSTANI, 6th May 1908.

(1) Water should not be allowed to stand around the wells.
(2) Sheds should be erected over wells to prevent leaves from falling into them.
(3) High platforms should be erected around wells so that water from neighbouring places may not flow into them.
(4) People should not be allowed to bathe or wash their hands and feet on the platforms of wells.

Since well water is usually used by every class in Lucknow, the writer hopes that the municipal authorities will pay attention to the above suggestions.

45. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 1st May, contains a letter from a correspondent complaining that on the last fair day at Ajodhia thousands of pilgrims could not take a dip in the sacred Sarju on account of the imposition of one anna assessed by the Fyzabad Municipality on each pilgrim. He declares the imposition to be very irritating and highly oppressive to pilgrims, particularly owing to the prevailing famine, and requests that Government will lose no time in abolishing the tax, thereby winning the gratitude of the entire Hindu public. The editor says that he has received several letters to the same effect and that the tax has created great dissatisfaction among the people as being an interference by Government in their religious affairs. He expresses the hope that Government, realizing the gravity of the situation, will direct the abolition of the imposition and will make a grant from the Provincial Budget to the Fyzabad Municipality, if it is short of funds.

Tax on pilgrims to Ajodhia.

ABHYUDAYA, 1st May 1908.

46. The Bháratbási (Allahabad), of the 5th May, says that on the occasion of the fair in Ajodhia this year, thousands of pilgrims had to go back without bathing in the Sarju, or could not bathe where they wanted to owing to their inability, through stress of famine, to pay the tax of one anna imposed on every pilgrim by the municipality.

Tax on pilgrims to Ajodhia.

BHARATBASI, 5th May 1908.

The editor asks the Governor to look into the matter and expresses the hope that His Honour will lay pilgrims under a heavy obligation to him by ordering the abolition of this tax.

(e).—Education.

ADVOCATE, 30th April 1908.

Leaking out of Matriculation Examination papers.

47. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 30th April, complains that Matriculation candidates were put to much trouble recently owing to the uncertainty of the date of their re-examination in History, the original paper in which had leaked out. The editor remarks: "What is all this due to? With all the care bestowed upon keeping the list of examiners secret, the question papers get out. It has evidently become a scandal. The entire system requires overhauling."

HIND, 30th April 1908.

Leaking out of Matriculation Examination papers.

48. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th April, referring to the leaking out of the Matriculation Examination papers, remarks that the Registrar and other officers responsible for this must be adequately punished, and that the second set of examination papers must be leniently marked.

ARYA MITRA, 1st May 1908.

Allahabad University examinations.

49. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st May, says that in addition to various other anomalies noticed in the Allahabad University examinations of this year, there were a number of misprints in several question papers. The editor asks that allowance be made for students in awarding marks, as they cannot be held responsible for the mistakes involved in answering such question papers.

ADVOCATE, 3rd May 1908.

The Matriculation Examination.

50. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, makes the following comments on the leaking out of the Matriculation Examination papers and the probable re-examination of the candidates:—

"To undergo examination for about a fortnight together—one paper a day is troublesome enough, and a strain on the nerves of young boys in this most unenviable weather; to be re-examined in one or two subjects means waste of labour in the original paper; now to live under the dread of a wholesale re-examination means a suspense that is well-nigh unbearable. And who is responsible for all this trouble? Surely the party who had the charge of the printing of the papers. It appears that almost all the papers had oozed out. A wholesale re-examination may any day be decided upon as the only way out of the difficulty. But having regard to the inconvenience to which hundreds of students will be put, this course cannot be easily recommended. We demand a public enquiry into the present scandal and we think it is high time a committee was appointed to consider the entire system of appointing examiners, printing the papers, and conducting the examination."

BHARATBASI, 5th May 1908.

The Matriculation Examination.

51. The Bháratbási (Allahabad), of the 5th May, says that the re-examination of the students for the Matriculation Examination, consequent upon the leaking out of question papers just after the first examination was over, has put the students to serious inconvenience, severe strain and unnecessary expense, for which they have made no arrangements.

The editor remarks that although the Vice-Chancellor and the Registrar of the University cannot be held responsible for the oozing out of question papers, yet they should have consulted the convenience of the examinees in re-examining them.

HINDUSTANI, 6th May 1908.

The Matriculation Examination.

52. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 6th May, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, on the leaking out of Matriculation Examination papers.

CITIZEN, 7th May 1908.

The Allahabad University scandal.

53. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 7th May, has the following:—

"So some of the Matriculation papers have oozed out again this year. If Dame Rumour is to be believed, all the papers were out on payment of a sum to the tune of Rs. 2,000 in certain quarters. The delinquents, so far as we are aware, are still at large. What a commentary on the efficient management by the University, which represents the talent, culture, wealth and power of these Provinces! We ask—Is there no remedy to check the yearly recurrence of this most scandalous affair? We hoped that last year's ignominious experience would teach the authorities to be on their guard in future, and that all the dirty linen of the University would be washed clean by the new brand dhobi-soap of Lord Curzon.

But that was not to be. Perhaps the leaking out of the questions has grown into a cherished tradition too sacred and too dear to be suppressed. We confess we fail to see how such an august assembly should be so much lacking in common sense as to devise no means to check it effectively. The postponement of the examination in different subjects from day to day and protracting it to about the whole of a mortal month spell not a little worry and anxiety to the juvenile boys, not to speak of the heavy expenditure, personal discomfort and the consequent risk of losing their health that they have to incur. The University should, in all conscience, make good at any rate the pecuniary loss the students suffer. Surely these innocent creatures, with of course the solitary exceptions, cannot be made to pay for the follies of their elders!"

Teachers' Training Colleges.

54. Al-Hadi (Simrauta, Rae Bareli), of the 1st May, notes with satisfaction the order sanctioning the establishment of two separate training colleges, one at Allahabad for graduates, and the other at Lucknow for under-graduates. — AL-HADI, 1st May 1908.

Education and the Government.

55. The Kanauj Punch of the 1st May, says that as compared to other Governments, the Government of this country spends very little on education. — KANAUJ PUNCH, 1st May 1908.

New Inspectors in the Educational department.

56. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, agreeing with the Bengalee (Calcutta), takes exception to the appointment of graduates of British Universities almost fresh from College to the posts of School Inspectors in Bengal and Burma, and remarks that without any knowledge of the temper and habits of the people the graduates so appointed are round corks in square holes. — ADVOCATE, 3rd May 1908.

Education in India.

57. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 4th May, has the following:— — HINDOSTHAN, 4th May 1908.

"A debate like that in the House of Commons on educational methods in India serves to show the increasing interest taken by the House in Indian affairs. No one denies that our educational methods have been responsible for a great deal of the unrest among Indian students. Stricter discipline alone will not remove this canker, but what is needed is some form of religious instruction for the different creeds and denominations, and we much doubt if this can ever be given in State schools; at any rate on a compulsory basis. Mr. Hobhouse, whose speech shows that he made a sincere effort to acquaint himself, while in India, with the educational needs of this country, pays a well-deserved tribute to Indian administrators when he says that no subject is closer to their hearts than education. There has, as we know, been a substantial increase in expenditure on education everywhere, of which these provinces furnish a marked example, but the point to be borne in mind is the need for increased attention to physical and moral training, if the problem of Indian education is to be adequately solved."

Musalman Education.

58. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 5th May, reports that at a meeting of the school section of the Muhammadan Educational Conference it was decided to establish model schools for the education of Musalman children in order to protect them from the baneful influence of the secular education imparted in ordinary schools, and that as a preliminary measure it was resolved to make a yearly grant of Rs. 500 to the Islamia High School at Etawah. — AL-BASHIR, 5th May 1908.

A Muhammadan on the Gurukul of the Arya Samajists.

59. The following is a translation of an article which appeared in the Al-Hadi (Simrauta, Rae Bareli), of the 1st May:— — AL-HADI, 1st May 1908.

"It is a well-known fact that Arya Samajists are the declared enemies of Muhammadans. It behoves the latter, therefore, to mark their movements and adopt defensive measures accordingly. But it is a matter of great regret that while the Arya Samajists are making every sort of preparation for the struggle, no such step is being taken by the Muhammadans. Take for instance the Gurukul of the Samajists. Is not this institution a living example of the Aryan solicitude for the moral, mental, and physical development of their children? But the activities of the Muhammadans are paralysed; they know not that within a few decades there will go out from this Gurukul bands of young men fired with the enthusiasm of patriotism and determined to drive away the non-Aryans from their land.

Had they known all this, they would have adopted measures to counteract the influence of these Aryas. They would have established similar educational institutions and as advantageously situated as the Gurukul. Their men and women would have contributed to the funds as liberally as the Arya ladies and gentlemen did at Hardwar during the anniversary of the institution."

The editor, in giving prominence to the above, appeals to Muhammadans to take up the suggestions embodied in the article in all earnestness.

HINDOSTHAN, 3rd May 1908.

Establishment of a girls' Gurukul at Meerut.

60. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 3rd May, announces that a Gurukul has been established at Meerut through the efforts of the local Arya Samajists to educate girls free of all charges.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 6th May 1908.

Need for Boarding-houses in the Aligarh College.

61. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 6th May, publishes an appeal asking well-to-do Musalmans to subscribe liberally towards the construction of Boarding-houses in the Aligarh College, as every year hundreds of Musalman students, hailing from all parts of India, have to be refused admission on the plea of want of room. The authorities of the College cannot raise it to the status of a University as long as its strength is less than a thousand, and this maximum can be reached only when there is ample accommodation for students. The editor exhorts rich Musalmans to follow the example of their co-religionists in Egypt and Russia, who are liberally endowing educational institutions.

MODREN REVIEW, May 1908.

Indian Students in America.

62. Saint Nihal Singh contributes an article to the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May, entitled "Indian Students in America" in which he points out the many hardships Indian students have to endure when they first land in America. Generally speaking, he says, Americans make no allowance for colour, and consider any one who is in the least dark, a Negro. Hence, at the very outset, Indians have the natural antipathy of Americans to their colour to contend with. This leads to Indians experiencing great difficulty in obtaining any kind of employment—a very serious thing for those who go to America with the idea of educating themselves and at the same time of being self-supporting. Then again, he points out, unless Indians who go to America with such intentions, are prepared to lay aside their caste prejudices and take any work that offers, they will find it practically impossible to attain their object. In conclusion he mentions a number of influential Americans in several of the large cities of America who take a deep interest in the welfare of Indians in America.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

CITIZEN, 30th April 1908.

Famine and prices.

63. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th April, referring to the abnormal rise in the price of grain, requests the Government to interdict the export of grain, as this would relieve the people of a great deal of suffering and give them an incentive to adopt better methods of agriculture. The editor exhorts swadeshi preachers to dissuade rich zamindars and merchants from exporting grain to foreign countries and to urge them to form societies on the lines of the Annarakhshini Sabha of Bengal for storing grain in different centres in the country.

ADVOCATE, 3rd May 1908.

Famine Relief Works.

64. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 3rd May, does not approve of the Government order regarding the closing of all relief centres by the 15th May. He says that under the provisions of the Famine Code as soon as these relief works are closed Government will feel itself relieved from the duty of supporting the dependants of men employed on relief works and the situation will naturally become more acute. In his opinion the best time for closing the relief works would be the beginning of July, and if the works are closed by the 15th May the distress will be great and there will be numerous cases of death from starvation. In the same issue the editor appeals to his countrymen, especially the student community who are now enjoying summer vacation, to come forward and offer themselves for this godly work of feeding and clothing the destitute famine-stricken people. He eulogises the excellent work that is being done by Lala Lajpat Rai and his young workers and by Babu Abinash Chandar Majumdar of Lahore.

65. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 3rd May, publishes a note by Lala Lajpat Rai giving an account of his visit to these provinces in connection with the Famine Relief Fund. — INDIAN PEOPLE, 3rd May 1908. — Famine in the United Provinces.

66. Referring to the speech of Raja Peary Mohan Mukerji, in which he advocated the adoption of permanent settlements as a remedy for the ever-recurring famines, the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th May, asks the landlords of the United Provinces to try to have this system enforced in those parts of these provinces where it does not obtain. — TOHFA-I-HIND, 4th May 1908. — Famine and permanent settlement.

67. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 6th May, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, in connection with famine relief works in these provinces. — HINDUSTANI, 6th May 1908. — Famine Relief Works.

(g).—General.

68. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 29th April, expresses its satisfaction at the conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain, Secretary to the Trustees, Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh. — ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 29th April 1908. — Conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain.

69. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 30th April, notes with satisfaction the conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain, Secretary, Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh. — NIZAM-UL-MULK, 30th April 1908. — Conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain.

70. The Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad), of the 4th May, says that Muhammadans all over India will be glad to learn that His Excellency the Viceroy has been pleased to confer the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain, Secretary of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh. — JADD-O-JEHAD, 4th May 1908. — Conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain.

71. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 5th May, referring to the conferring of the title of Nawab by His Excellency the Viceroy on Maulvi Mustaq Husain, remarks that this honour has not been conferred only on the Maulvi himself, but on the Aligarh College and on the whole Musalman community of India. The editor advises Musalmans in all parts of India to hold meetings and thank the Viceroy for his gracious act. — AL-BASHIR, 5th May 1908. — Conferring of the title of Nawab on Maulvi Mushtaq Husain.

72. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th April, referring to the stopping of the work of Temperance Volunteers and to the arrest of several educated men interested in the temperance cause, remarks that the Collector of Poona has acted in a very arbitrary manner, as temperance work is not interfered with in any civilized country. He expresses the hope that His Excellency the Governor of Bombay will settle the matter to the satisfaction of the parties concerned. — HIND, 30th April 1908. — Temperance crusade in Poona.

73. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 1st May, referring to the order of the District Magistrate of Poona prohibiting temperance agitation, remarks that it is the duty of every civilized Government to protect the rights of its subjects, but that no one has the right to claim to indulge in evil ways, and Government is quite justified in not granting such rights. People should have a right to do only such acts as tend to their improvement, and those officials who impede such progress should be punished, whereas those who facilitate it should be made the object of every praise. — ABHYUDAYA, 1st May 1908. — Temperance agitation in Poona.

74. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 1st May, says that Government will be well advised to cancel the order issued by the District Magistrate of Poona prohibiting all temperance agitation there, or else the people will think that Government only cares for its revenue, although it may be a source of corruption of the morals of the people. The editor further observes that it is the arbitrary orders of such self-willed officials as the District Magistrate of Poona that create unrest, even among persons who are not within the reach of Sandhya and Yugantar. — ABHYUDAYA, 1st May 1908. — Temperance agitation in Poona.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

BHARAT JIWAN, 4th May 1908.

Temperance Volunteers at Poona.

75. Referring to the order of the District Magistrate of Poona prohibiting the local Temperance Volunteers from persuading people not to drink, the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 4th May, considers that it is not unlikely that ere long obstacles will be put in the way of those also who preach against prostitution. The editor remarks that only those sources of livelihood should be allowed which are consistent with religion and morality, and that no consideration should be shown to persons who make a living by leading their customers into evil ways.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 30th April 1908.

Temperance Volunteers at Poona.

76. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 30th April (received on the 7th May), expresses surprise that while the English are passing the Licensing Bill for checking the obnoxious habit of drinking among their countrymen, the District Magistrate of Poona should leave no stone unturned in encouraging the consumption of liquors, as is evident from his prohibiting the local Temperance Volunteers from persuading people not to drink and from his arresting some of them who were exceptionally earnest in their work.

RAJPUT, 30th April 1908.

The swadeshi movement and the Kshattriyas.

77. The Rajput (Agra), of the 30th April, discussing the effect of the swadeshi movement upon Kshattriyas, remarks that although this movement is good in itself, yet it will deal a heavy blow to the prosperity of Kshattriyas, who are mostly engaged in agriculture, as factories that will come into existence under the règime of the swadeshi movement will absorb all labour hitherto employed upon land and will thus increase the cost of cultivation and restrict agricultural produce which has so far furnished the most valuable contribution to the national income of the country. The editor further remarks that the swadeshi movement will benefit the owners of factories and shopkeepers at the expense of the zamindar and the common cultivator.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 1st May 1908.

Foreign sugar versus country sugar.

78. Referring to the imposition of a heavy tax upon foreign sugar in Bikanir State, the Kanauj Punch, of the 1st May, says that the news will doubtless be welcome to the friends of the swadeshi movement. It then quotes the opinion of the Hind (Lucknow), which asks other native chiefs to follow the "sacred example" of the Maharaja of Bikanir.

BHARAT JIWAN, 4th May 1908.

Foreign sugar.

79. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 4th May, reports that at a meeting held in Yakutganj (Farrukhabad), on the Ramnaumi day, the residents of the town, both Hindus and Muhammadans, took an oath not to use foreign sugar and confectioners pledged themselves never to use it in their preparations.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 23rd April 1908.

The High Court ruling on cow-killing.

80. Referring to the ruling of the High Court on the question of cow-killing, the Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 23rd April, calls it a "shock to the religion" and appeals to Hindus not to leave any stone unturned to protect cows from slaughter and to consider the matter a religious duty. All the ancient Hindu Kings held it a sacred duty to protect cows. The incarnation of god Krishna was given the name of Gopal (lit. the tenderer of cows) and the British Government is also called the protector of religions and its policy of tolerance has raised its prestige. The writer here indirectly prays that the Government will act up to the Queen's Proclamation setting forth that no religion will be interfered with, and exhorts the people to be prompt in forming associations and houses for the protection of cows. Rules should be framed to prevent the sale of cows to persons who slaughter them and those who break the rule should be excommunicated.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 30th April 1908.

"Asia Contra Mundum."

81. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 30th April, while reviewing an article in the Fortnightly Review, headed "Asia Contra Mundum" by "Viator" and discussing the probable outcome of the struggle for existence between the sons of the East and West in different continents, writes as follows:—

"If therefore brown and yellow men are really to be excluded from the four continents either occupied or controlled by the white people, it is incumbent then on white enterprise to find out and show equally fair quarters of the globe where the Oriental exploiters may go without a sense of being followed by the white 'pioneers,' and without the fear of being ultimately done out of the fruits of their labour as has been the case in Natal. Let the white races protect their interests by all means, but they must solve the question squarely and equitably lest 'economic grievance would provoke economic retaliation of a more and more systematic kind—the sentiment of swadeshi would spread to China with the fixed purpose of excluding the goods of the white peoples from all Asiatic markets,' and lest the conception and consciousness of Asia against the whole world gradually arouse all the Asiatic races to a colossal crusade."

Mrs. Annie Besant on the word "Native."

82. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st May, agrees with Mrs. Besant in holding that the word "Native" means something quite different from indigenous population. It dinnotes savagery and barbarism. All self-respecting Indians should, therefore, in the opinion of the editor and Mrs. Besant, resent the use of it. AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st May 1908.

It would cost nothing to them, says the editor, if Europeans and Anglo-Indians adopt a more sympathetic attitude towards Indians and thus remove every source of bitterness and irritation.

Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal on the Hindu-Muhammadan problem.

83. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st May, reproduces that portion of Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal's speech in Madras which deals with the question of union between Hindus and Muhammadans as one of paramount importance in Indian politics. KANAUJ PUNCH, 1st May 1908.

Kidnapping of Hindu boys in Hyderabad (Sindh).

84. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st May, referring to the wholesale kidnapping of Hindu boys in Hyderabad by Muhammadans, says that if Government pays no attention to the representations of Hindus, they themselves should take proper steps to protect their community against the encroachments of Muhammadans. ARYA MITRA, 1st May 1908.

Europeans and Indians.

85. A correspondent of the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 4th May, cites an instance in which a European Magistrate is alleged to have made an Indian gentleman stand for three hours for the so-called fault that he asked the Magistrate, after he had sat in the court almost the whole day, when he was going to hear his case. The correspondent remarks that Europeans will be well advised to mend their attitude towards Indians, otherwise it will be a bad day for both Europeans and Indians if the latter come to return tit for tat. BHARAT JIWAN, 4th May 1908.

The British order for Japanese bayonets.

86. Referring to the British order for fifty thousand Japanese bayonets for the use of Gurkha Sepoys, the Bharatbasi (Allahabad), of the 5th May, remarks: "Shall there come a day when Indian bayonets will be sent for by foreigners as being the best specimens of their kind." BHARATBASI, 5th May 1908.

Kayasthas and Government service.

87. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 6th May, publishes an article upon this subject. The following is a translation of it:— HINDUSTANI, 6th May 1908.

"The Kayastha community has been looked upon by every Government in India as one of great importance for the successful administration of its affairs. This community also looked upon Government service as its chief source of livelihood. So much so, that it forsook its mother tongue, Hindi, after the advent of the Musalman kings and adopted Urdu in its place.

Hard-working, peaceful, devoted and loyal, the Kayasthas found favour everywhere they went. But only recently the British Government has thought it proper to withdraw its favours from this community. First they (the Kayasthas) were told that they were not a manly race, and that therefore they could not be admitted into military service. They, however, found consolation in the fact that other services were open to them. But soon after they realized that they were precluded from entering the Police department also. Since this department does not possess the confidence of the public, they also thought it better to avoid it. But now the recent announcement in the Government Gazette of the 14th April goes to show that the doors of the Government service as a whole are going to be closed upon them. The reason set forth is that the Kayasthas already predominate in the Government service. But, pray, what of that? They predominate because they are more capable than others. Do you want to recruit incapable men simply to secure representation of different castes? If so, how can the efficiency of the service be maintained? There is no inherent defect in the Kayasthas, we think. Are they disloyal? If so, can any one point to any act of disloyalty on their part? Are they dishonest? If so, let us have a specific proof of it. And besides, is not dishonesty rampant among the members of other castes?

Why then has this community come to be looked upon so unfavourably by the Government? We must not be understood to be asking concessions. We raise this question simply because we want fair treatment; and Government also ought to be anxious to see that justice is done us all alike."

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 6th May 1908.

Musalmans and banking.

88. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 6th May, referring to the establishment of an "Oriental Bank" by the Musalmans of St. Petersburg advises the Musalmans of India, like Sir Adamjee Peerbhoy and others, to follow their example, and thus increase the material resources of their co-religionists.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

CITIZEN, 30th April 1908.

Railways.

89. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 30th April. complains that J. E. Robertson, the Acting District Traffic Superintendent of Cawnpore, is very partial to Musalmans and is trying to fill all vacancies with men of this creed, although some of them have proved incompetent.

ADVOCATE, 3rd May 1908.

Doubling of railway lines.

90. Referring to the proposal to double the line between Lucknow and Shahjahanpur, which has often been discussed, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, expresses satisfaction at the decision that the first nine miles—Lucknow to Kakori—is to have a double track for the present. In this connection the editor suggests, for the consideration of the Railway Board, that both for the convenience of traffic and with a view to the future development of Lucknow, the proposed alignment be changed, and that a fresh line be laid passing through Agha-Mir-ki-Deohri, Pulkasia, Daulatganj, and joining the present line either at Alamnagar or Kakori Station. Further on he asks the Municipality to have a Freeganj, on the lines of the Agra Municipality, in the interest of trade, and fixes Aishbagh for it, as there can be no better centre for both narrow and broad gauge lines.

HINDUSTANI, 6th May 1908.

Doubling of railway lines.

91. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 6th May, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 3rd May, on the doubling of the railway lines from Lucknow to Shahjahanpur.

MUSAFIR, 8th May 1908.

Railway assaults.

92. The Musafir (Agra), of the 8th May, referring to an assault on ladies in a female compartment of the Panjab Mail, remarks that such incidents are becoming very common and that immediate steps should be taken to prevent the occurrence of such incidents.

VII.—Post Office.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 1st May 1908.

The Signallers' strike.

93. Referring to the inconvenience to which the public have been put to owing to the strike of the Signallers in Calcutta and Burma, the Kanauj Punch, of the 1st May, says that prompt measures should be adopted to secure smooth and peaceful working in the future.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social matters.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, April 1908.

The need for an All-India Social Hague.

94. Mr. S. Z. Ali of His Highness the Nizam's educational service, contributes an article entitled "The need for an All-India Social Hague" to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for April. He begins by pointing out that up to the present the different social conferences that have been held in various parts of India have been much too local and too denominational in character to assume a pan-Indian phase. Even the All-India National Conference is not representative, as most of the delegates are Hindus. That there is an urgent need for an All-India Social Conference, the writer thinks no one can possibly deny. Such a conference would try to bridge the social gulfs between the various communities, put an end to inter-racial feeling and party strife, root out social evils, and inaugurate a healthy system of social reform congenial to the growth of a community of interest. The writer then sketches the lines on which this conference should be formed. It should be fully representative, all classes and communities being proportionally represented. The president should be a man universally loved and respected, and specially chosen for his disinterestedness. A paid secretary should be appointed, whose duty it would be to prepare the annual report, draw up lists of questions to be discussed, and do all the correspondence. This All-India Social Conference would hold its annual meeting at Easter so as not to clash with the Christmas session of the National Conference.

Provincial and district conferences would be started and amalgamated with the All-India Conference, where, on the return of delegates, all matters that came up for discussion at the meeting of the All-India Conference would be laid before the members. In this way the writer thinks the various communities of India could be led to lay aside their personal and racial differences and could be brought to strive for the general advancement of India.

"The Future of Dress in India."

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, April 1908.

95. An article entitled "The Future of Dress in India", is contributed to the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for April, by Mr. T. S. Rama Shastri, in which he discusses the various kinds of dress in use in India at the present day and speculates as to the possibility of a common form of dress being adopted by Indians of all classes and creeds at some future date.

Liberty to females.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 1st May 1908.

96. Referring to the granting of liberty to females, the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 1st May, says that in a country that is still uncivilized and ruled by foreigners, and where the respect and dignity of the Musalmans is the same as those of other subject races, it is quite out of season to talk of granting liberty to females. The consequences of granting such liberty, says the editor, cannot but be ruinous to the best interests of the Musalmans.

The Parasnath Hill.

ANAND, 30th April 1908.

97. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 30th April, says that Government has not acted in a statesmanlike manner in injuring the religious susceptibilities of the peaceful Jain community by sanctioning the erection of bungalows for Europeans on their sacred hill. The editor remarks that the Jains seem to be very much excited at the decision and are preparing to achieve their end by having recourse to law courts and to the boycott of foreign goods.

Decline of the Hindus.

MUSAFIR, 8th May 1908.

98. The Musafir (Agra), of the 8th May, referring to the gradual numerical decline of the Hindus, remarks that it is due to the following causes :—

(1) Corruption of the Vedic religion and the non-admission of converts into the fold of Hinduism.
(2) The prohibition of widow marriage.
(3) The rigour of the caste system, by which many young men and women remain unmarried, and by which the power of procreation is weakened owing to consanguinity of blood.
(4) Early marriages and unequal matches, which to a great extent affect the health of both the parties.
(5) The use of intoxicants among the lower classes, and bhang and opium among the higher.
(6) The over-bearing and contemptous attitude of the higher towards the lower castes by which entire communities have been led to accept Christianity.
(7) Dedication of girls to temples, as in the Deccan and Garhwal, and the adoption of asceticism by a large number of men.
(8) The low average of births among educated Hindus owing to the adoption of western modes of life.

The editor advises educated Hindus to take immediate steps to arrest this decline.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 23rd April 1908.

Cremation of a Hindu in America.

99. Referring to the cremation of a Hindu merchant of New York, named Ballabh Hira, the Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 23rd April, remarks that the cremation ceremony was watched with great curiosity by the Americans and was attended by all the Hindu and non-Hindu Indians at New York, who rent the sky with shouts of Bande Matram. The writer concludes with the lines "when will this union (of Indians) in foreign lands (lit. exile) enhance the glory of India?"

HIND, 30th April 1908.

Kabulis in the United Provinces.

100. A correspondent of the Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th April, complains that the Kabulis are putting the poor people of these provinces to great trouble. They sell cloths on credit at exhorbitant rates and advance money, taking interest at the rate of two annas per rupee per mensem. To recover these loans they do not have recourse to law, but generally have recourse to dunning by abusing and beating their debtors. The correspondent requests the Government to legislate on this matter at an early date.

HIND, 30th April 1908.

Lord Curzon fined.

101. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 30th April, referring to the fine of 30*s.* imposed on Lord Curzon for driving his motor car beyond the speed limit, remarks that it is a terrible retribution that Lord Curzon, who had the audacity to call all Indians untruthful, has now been convicted on the evidence of an ordinary constable, his statement that he was innocent being disbelieved.

Naini Tal :
The 9th May 1908.

S. T. HOLLINS,
Offg. Asst. to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

Camp Branch, Government Press, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 20 OF 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 16th May 1908.

CONTENTS.

		Page.
	I.—POLITICS.
	(a)—Foreign:
1.	Europe and Turkey	429
2.	Turkey	429
3.	England and Turkey	429
4.	Repeal of the Arms Act in Chandernagore	429
5.	Arms Act in Chandernagore	429
6.	The Awakening of Persia	429
7.	Siam	429
	(b)—Home:
8.	The Muzaffarpur outrage and the bomb disclosures	429
9.	The Muzaffarpur outrage	430
10.	The Muzaffarpur outrage and the Calcutta Conspiracy	430
11.	The Muzaffarpur outrage and the Calcutta Sensation	430
12.	The Muzaffarpur outrage	430
13.	The Muzaffarpur bomb outrage ...	431
14.	The Muzaffarpur outrage	431
15.	The Muzaffarpur outrage	432
16.	The Muzaffarpur outrage	432
17.	Unrest in Calcutta	433
18.	The present situation in Calcutta ...	433
19.	The Calcutta Sensation	433
20.	The Tuticorin riots and the Calcutta Sensation	434
21.	The Anglo-Indian Press on the Calcutta Sensation	434
22.	The Calcutta Sensation	435
23.	The Anglo-Indian Press on the situation	435
24.	The Anarchist movement in Calcutta ...	435
25.	Rebellion in India	435
26.	Anarchism in Calcutta	435
27.	Anarchism in India	436
28.	External and internal agitation in India	437
29.	Government and the people	437
30.	Government and the people	437
31.	Government and the people	437
32.	Treatment of the suspects in Calcutta ...	438
33.	The character of the conspiracy ...	438
34.	House search	438
35.	The future of the Nationalist party ...	438
36.	Warning to Moderates	439
37.	Bombs in India	439
38.	The bomb discoveries	439
39.	British rule in India	439
40.	The British Government of India compared to Whiteants	440
41.	If Russia ruled India	440
42.	History on Indian problems	441
43.	The Convention Committee	441
44.	The Moslem League	441
45.	The need of reforms	441
46.	An Advisory Council of Taluqdars and other landed proprietors	442
47.	Military Officers	442
48.	The pay of the sepoy	442
49.	Unrest in schools and colleges ...	443
50.	The Swarajya and the authorities ...	443
51.	British rule in India	444
	II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.
52.	The frontier trouble	444
53.	The frontier trouble	444

		Page.
54.	The Frontier Imbroglio	445
55.	Afghanistan	445
56.	The Mohmands	445
57.	The Frontier trouble and the Amir of Kabul	445
58.	The Frontier trouble	445
59.	The Mohmand Expedition	446
60.	The Amir and the Frontier raids ...	446

III.—NATIVE STATES.

61.	British influence in the Native States ...	446

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue :

62.	Professional witnesses	447
63.	Efficiency of European jury	447
64.	Munsifs...	447
65.	Excise	447

(b)—Police :

66.	Punitive Police	447

(c)—Finance and Taxation :

	Nil	447

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs :

67.	The Agra Municipality	448

(e)—Education :

68.	A head master and a student ...	448
69.	The Allahabad Kayasth Pathshala ...	448
70.	The Entrance Examination of the Allahabad University	448
71.	The Matriculation Examination ...	448
72.	School inspection	448

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land :

73.	Wells in Behar	449
74.	The Famine	449
75.	The Famine	449
76.	Famine in the United Provinces ...	449
77.	The Famine	449
78.	Famine and its causes	450
79.	The Famine	450
80.	The Famine	450
81.	Famine relief	450

(g)—General :

82.	Plague	450
83.	Some industries of Eastern Bengal and Assam...	451
84.	Art of the East and of the West ...	451
85.	Government and journalists	451
86.	The Vernacular Press	451
87.	Mr. Mitra	451
88.	Bengal women and the swadeshi movement	451
89.	The Etawah incident	451
90.	Hindus and Muhammadans—a plea for their reunion	451
91.	Europeans and Indians	452
92.	Mr. Tilak	452
93.	Temperance work in Poona	452
94.	Kayasthas in Government service ...	452
95.	Kayasthas in Government service ...	452
96.	Kayasthas and their future occupation ...	453
97.	Kayasthas and Government service ...	453
98.	Trade in fruit	453
99.	Kerosine oil, a cause of plague ...	453
100.	Government servants and their pay ...	453
101.	Promissory notes	453
102.	Promissory notes	453
103.	Hindus and Musalmans	453
104.	Swadeshism and its opponents... ...	454
105.	The cotton industry of India	454
106.	Sanitary reform	454
107.	European Engineers	454

V.—LEGISLATION.

Nil.

VI.—RAILWAY.

108.	Hardwar Railway Station	454
109.	Railways	455
110.	The Fyzabad City station	455
111.	The Ghaziabad collision	455
112.	The Ghaziabad collision	455
113.	The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway accident	455
114.	The railway accident near Ghaziabad ...	455
115.	The Ghaziabad Railway collision ...	455
116.	The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway accident	456
117.	Railway collisions	456

VII.—POST OFFICE.

118.	Post-cards	456
119.	House arrangement for inspecting officers of the Postal department	456
120.	Grievances of Post Office staff... ...	456
121.	Postal employés	457
122.	The Telegraph department and Indian employés	457

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

123.	Anniversary of the Baisalpur Arya Samaj and the Magistrate of Pilibhit ...	457
124.	Beggars in Lucknow	457
125.	The Parasnath Hill	457
126.	The Parasnath Hill	457
127.	The Parasnath Hill	458
128.	"Anomalies of Civilization"	458

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

129.	Pice	458

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. Referring to the encroachments of European Powers on Turkey, the Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for April (received on the 12th May), remarks that the recent developments in the international relations between European Powers and Turkey do not seem to augur a lengthy existence for the flag of Islam in Europe, but that the swallowing up of Turkey by Christian states will imply the alienation of the entire Musalman community from Christians, which is sure to disturb the peace of the world for some time. The editor further remarks that at present race-feeling has become very much accentuated and does not seem to augur well for the peace of the world.

Europe and Turkey.

SIPAHI, April 1908.

2. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th May, compares the strength of Turkey and Japan, and remarks that while Japan is abhorred even by China, Turkey retains the affections of all the Musalmans of the world, and thus its material strength is considerably increased. Turkey has been slowly developing its naval strength and will give a good account of its prowess if it has to fight with a first class Power. In conclusion, the editor advocates a triple alliance between England, Germany, and Turkey.

Turkey.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 8th May 1908.

3. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 12th May, referring to an insinuation made by the Hindustan (Lahore), that England is no well-wisher of Musalmans, as has been seen by her treatment of Turkey, and that she does not like the idea of strengthening the Musalmans of India, advises the Government to prevent its Musalman subjects from being taken in by the deceitful advice of such papers, to leave the Christians of Macedonia to their fate, and to cultivate friendly relations with Turkey.

England and Turkey.

AL-BASHIR, 12th May 1908.

4. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 7th May, considers the repeal of the Arms Act in Chandernagore a measure making for a closer union between the rulers and the ruled, and remarks that where public opinion receives due weight, the possibility of discontent making any head is reduced to a minimum and that the growth of the feeling of loyalty is impossible where public opinion is repressed as a form of sedition.

Repeal of the Arms Act in Chandernagore.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 7th May 1908.

5. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 7th May, referring to the repealing of the Arms Act in Chandernagore at the request of the people, advises the British Government to deal with the people in the same prudent and conciliatory manner.

Repeal of the Arms Act in Chandernagore.

HIND, 7th May 1908.

6. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for April (received on the 12th May), referring to the reorganization of the army in Persia, remarks that it seems that Persia, too, has awakened and has come to know that she has really got between the Lion (England) and the Bear (Russia).

The awakening of Persia.

SIPAHI, April 1908.

7. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for April (received on the 12th May), says that the progress that the Siamese are making in every department of life appears to be an eyesore to Europeans, and that Siam politics not unfrequently puzzle European statesmen. The editor remarks that as the awakening of Asiatic countries is not to the advantage of Europeans, it is no wonder that they should watch with anxiety the progress of the new spirit in Asia.

Siam.

SIPAHI, April 1908.

(b).—Home.

8. Referring to the Muzaffarpur outrage and the bomb disclosures in Calcutta, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th May, says that all this is due to the bitterness created by the partition of Bengal.

Will the Government, the editor asks, even now recognize its mistake and annul the partition of Bengal?

The Muzaffarpur outrage and the bomb disclosures.

RAHBAR, 7th May 1908.

RASTGO, 8th May 1908.

9. The Rástgo (Allahabad), of the 8th May, referring to the Muzaffarpur outrage, remarks that the act will be condemned by all humane persons, and that the culprit has implicated the whole country in his guilt. The editor hopes that Khudi Ram Bose and his accomplices will be adequately punished. He however believes that Khudi Ram is a mere tool, and trusts that the whole conspiracy will be unearthed. The resentment of the English and Anglo-Indian press is not unjustifiable, but the Government should not be misled by it.

The Muzaffarpur outrage.

ABHYUDAYA, 8th May 1908.

10. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 8th May, contains the following on the Muzaffarpur outrage and the Calcutta conspiracy :—

The Muzaffarpur outrage and the Calcutta conspiracy.

"The Muzaffarpur outrage and the Calcutta conspiracy have astonished the whole country, from one end to the other. The Aryan race (Hindus) is afflicted at the murder of any person, no matter who he may be. Our grief is past description at the murder of two innocent ladies—ladies who were the nearest and dearest of a friend of ours. Everybody will be extremely afflicted at such a calamity overtaking Mr. Kennedy, who is very much respected and loved by all Hindus for his sympathy with India. We offer him our heartfelt sympathy in his bereavement. The disclosure of the conspiracy at Calcutta has made the situation all the more horrible, deplorable and difficult. The anarchists are not only the enemies of Government but also of the Moderates, who are the advocates of constitutional agitation for the salvation of the country. The work of the latter will be very much hindered by this act of the anarchists."

The editor next points out that bomb outrages and unconstitutional agitation will not work out the salvation of the country, but that for this consummation, the cultivation of righteousness, self-sacrifice and moral courage, and the spread of education are necessary.

He remarks that the use of bombs is an exotic from the West, which does not become the Hindus in India, and that it is much to be regretted that Indians only imitate the weak points of the people of the West and not their good sterling qualities. In conclusion, he urges the Government to keep cool and to proceed most cautiously in dealing with this delicate situation, otherwise unreasonable panic is sure to lead to deplorable consequences.

AL-BASHIR, 12th May 1908.

11. Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 12th May, referring to the Muzaffarpur outrage and the Calcutta sensation, remarks that these are not due to the partition of Bengal but to the agitation (against the Government) that has been incessantly carried on for the last thirty years. The establishment of athletic clubs, the throwing of stones at the Viceroy's motor car, and the blowing up of Sir A. Fraser's train were attributed to the youth of the culprits, but now the culmination has come. The editor, however, reserves his judgment for a future occasion when the papers that have been unearthed by the police will be published. He is glad to note that the Musalmans have sedulously declared themselves opposed to sedition, otherwise the Hindu press would have placed the whole blame on them, as was done during the Mutiny, although they were innocent.

The Muzaffarpur outrage and the Calcutta sensation.

BHARATBASI, 12th May 1908.

12. The Bháratbási (Allahabad), of the 12th May, makes the following comments upon the Muzaffarpur outrage :—

The Muzaffarpur outrage.

"Murder is in itself shocking—murder of innocent persons is still more shocking—but murder of innocent girls, belonging to a family well known for the kind disposition of its members, is literally astounding. There is no wretch, therefore, who will not feel sorry—even the murderers themselves did when they realized their mistake—at the distress which has overtaken Mr. Kennedy at Muzaffarpur.

The Government should at this occasion be very careful of the steps it takes. It should not accept the prejudiced opinions of the Anglo-Indian papers without reservation. Harsh government drives the people to desperation and compels them to use brute force.

The Muzaffarpur outrage is the practical example of this. Our Christian Government, therefore, should use Christian methods for removing discontent from the land.

The Lahore and the Etawah incidents have disclosed strange doings on the part of the police. The sensational nature of the news that we receive from Calcutta these days leads one to doubt if the whole of the police version is true. We would ask the Government to keep cool at this juncture. Punish the offenders, or in your mercy excuse them; but pray do not be led away wholly by the sensational discoveries of the police and by the mad and malicious writings of Anglo-Indians in the press. These men think that bombs exist everywhere in Calcutta—in tanks, in private houses, in gardens and in newspaper offices.

In view of the confessions of the prisoners, Government ought now to consider the question of releasing those coolies who are undergoing imprisonment for the alleged offence of attempting to wreck the train of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal."

Referring to the article in the Patrika (Calcutta), in which the writer ascribes the bomb outrages to the orders of whipping passed in the case of young boys of noble families by Mr. Kingsford, the Bhiratbasi further says that slight remedial measures would have converted these young boys into good citizens; but harsh and barbarous punishments have made them anarchists. The same policy, if continued, may lead to still more disastrous results. Will the Government consider all this and adopt the most prudent policy?

13. A correspondent of the Fitna (Gorakhpur), of the 13th May, says: "The centre of administration has been changed into a centre of war." — FITNA, 13th May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur bomb outrage.

Did we not tell the English not to establish their capital at Calcutta? But as they wanted to fix their centre of Government at "a place where every one lives a life of peace", they thought Calcutta of the Bengalis—of those Bengalis who never even killed a mosquito, and who used to fly at the mention of the word killing—the most suitable place for the seat of the administration of this vast country of India. But now, tell us O! ye Englishmen. Have you seen what phosphorous found in fish is capable of doing? Those very Bengalis who never killed an ant are now killing human beings.

We would have been glad if the Bengalis had killed base-born Indians and allowed existence only to those of the pure blood. But, O God! They are killing Englishmen—even attempting the Lieutenant-Governor's life. Truly their enthusiasm and strength were under a severe restraint, and now the reaction has been equally violent.

For the details we would refer you to the Mashriq (Gorakhpur), but here we can say only this that these Bengalis are not less than Gog and Magog. The Commissioner of Police says that their influence has spread throughout the country.

"Brave Bengalis—what can we say of you and your mothers who gave you birth and of your fathers who gave you your education."

But surely it is no bravery to kill those who are staying among you as your guests. These Englishmen serve you, and if a servant spoils your work surely his proper punishment is not death. Beware lest they grow exasperated. Give up these unmanly attacks—"agitate—demand your rights and acquire knowledge like them." Do all this and they themselves will yield.

But if you use bombs, and they use maxim guns in return, your dhoties and saries will be seen fluttering in the air."

14. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 14th May, expresses its regret at the Muzaffarpur outrage and remarks that such nefarious practices of anarchists will retard the true progress of India for which Indian leaders, Moderates and Extremists alike, have been steadily working for years past. — BHARAT JIWAN, 14th May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur outrage.

The editor traces the origin of what he calls this heinous practice of bomb-throwing to the want of religious instruction in the curriculum of Indian schools and colleges where purely secular education infuses the poison of materialism into the minds of Indian youths and brings them into contact with European history, where they find a surfeit of bomb-throwing and revolutions which turns their pliant and flexible minds into evil ways. The missionaries, he notes, had no little share in diverting their minds in this direction, inasmuch as they in their schools daily impressed upon the minds of the young the value of liberty, with the result that young men are now possessed with an inordinate craving for it and use means for its attainment, regardless of whether they are foul or fair. He suggests that to counteract this evil influence, which has led Indian youths so far astray, it is absolutely necessary that religious instruction on orthodox Hindu lines should be imparted in every school, and that this would be beneficial to rulers and ruled alike.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

MUSAFIR, 15th May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur outrage.

15. The Musafir (Agra), of the 15th May, observes that the repressive policy of the Government has at last brought about the day when bombs have begun to be thrown upon Englishmen in India. The first bomb was intended for one who has surpassed the Magistrates of the whole world, in incarcerating editors, in ordering young boys of noble families to be whipped, and in oppressing national workers.

The editor then gives the details of the dastardly outrage upon the ladies at Muzaffarpur and remarks that it is needless to say that this incident has caused great sensation in official circles—and no wonder that it is so—for since the advent of the British, this is the first offence of its kind committed in India. He further says that he would not discuss who is responsible for this outrage, but he holds that if Indians, especially Hindus, have deviated from the true path of their religion, which says in no ambiguous terms that—

"Ahinsa parmo dharmah."

(Abstinence from killing is a great virtue) then surely destruction and annihilation await them in the near future.

OUDH AKHBAR, 15th May 1908.

The Muzzaffarpur outrage.

16. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 15th May, referring to the Muzaffarpur bomb outrage, remarks that in the past the native Governments of India were in the main despotic and the people had little craving for freedom. But since the advent of the British in the country, the regard which the people had for autocratic Governments has disappeared and they are gradually moving towards democracy and nationalism. The English, who have themselves struggled hard to attain their freedom, have hitherto ungrudgingly granted constitutions to subject races. The civilization of Europe is exerting a tremendous influence on India for good and for bad, and the appearance of anarchism in the country is one of the features of the imported civilization. It should not, however, be thought that the people of this country welcome anarchism as an auspicious thing. The responsibility for the outrage lies with its perpetrators only and not with the whole Bengali nation. The outrage is very dastardly and its victims deserve sympathy. The ill-feeling that it has caused (among Anglo-Indians?) is justifiable. But the contention of the Anglo-Indian press that this is due to the seditious opinions of Indian political leaders is quite false. As a matter of justice, only those persons should be punished who have perpetrated the crime, as is done in Europe where secret societies are springing up like mushrooms and where the blame for their crimes is not laid at the door of the whole nation.

In a subsequent article the editor writes that the outrage has been very horrible and that its authors must be adequately punished. The manufacture of bombs in India is altogether a new thing, and there are many ideas now prevalent in the country which were regarded with horror in the past. This revolution is due to modern education. There was a time when it was criminal to give expression to those sentiments that are now openly held by Indian politicians. The British Government does not view with resentment the higher aspirations of the people and is in fact encouraging them by conferring upon them the boon of education. So it behoves the people to remain loyal to such a Government. But there are always some turbulent and ungrateful persons who cannot realize how indebted they are to such a liberal Government. But no attention should be paid to the doings of these persons just as the Moghul Government did not trouble itself when its treasuries were looted. The manufacture (?) of bombs at Muzaffarpur has been especially unfortunate, as the political agitation of the Bengalis has been already supposed to be seditious. In England this outrage will excite little criticism, as these matters are of frequent occurrence there. Besides this is due to the imitation of European methods, and it would not be wrong to say that when industries flourish in India, the manufacture of bombs, &c., would not be deemed a matter of great moment. These bombs would not necessarily be used against the Government, but the aspirations of the people would become higher, and no means would be spared by them in demanding their rights. It is true that the Bengalis constitute the most conspicuous race in India and that they have been favoured with a greater share of Government patronage than others. They have learnt lessons of patriotism from Europe and think themselves to be the saviours of the whole country. This claim of theirs may be exaggerated, but it cannot be denied that they are the originators of the swadeshi and Nationalist movements. They were at one time branded as cowards, but by their learning and vivacity they have become bold and fearless. This outrage is the work of a few hot-headed youths, but the majority of the people think that rights should be demanded by constitutional and loyal means only, and this policy is endorsed by Government also.

Unrest in Calcutta.

17. Referring to the alleged indiscriminate arrest of persons in Calcutta in connection with the bomb discoveries, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 9th May, says that on mere suspicion the police arrest gentlemen and send them to the lock-up with much ignominity. Adverting to the search by police of Arabinda Babu's room, the same paper remarks that the police rough handled and intimidated a girl who was going to wake up the Babu from his sleep.

SWARAJYA, 9th May 1908.

The present situation in Calcutta.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th May, strongly condemns the agitation set on foot by the Anglo-Indian press urging the Government to use extraordinary measures and to introduce fresh repressive measures to meet the present situation. The editor does not deny that the malignant writings of a section of the Indian press and the inflammatory speeches of some speakers have brought anarchy into India, but he thinks that these writings and speeches are attributable to the autocratic rule of the bureaucracy. The real and original responsibility for the anarchist propaganda, he says, lies with Lord Curzon. By his partition of Bengal, the Extremists sprang up, and extremism developed into anarchism. He says that leniency should not be shown to the anarchists, but he impresses upon Government the fact that that brute force cannot crush anarchism, but endows it with virility, and that Government will never be able to root it out entirely. The appearance of anarchism in the country is a source of danger both to the Government and the people, so it must be crushed, but "Government should not yield to the fierce advice of the Anglo-Indian press. The law must take its course and the conspiracy must be exposed as far as possible. Undue severity will recoil upon itself and give a fresh impetus to the terrorist organization."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 10th May 1908.

The Calcutta sensation.

19. Under the heading "An Eye-opener", the Citizen (Allahabad), of 10th May, has the following in connection with the Calcutta sensation :—

CITIZEN, 10th May 1908.

"To say that we have been astounded at the mad freak of certain schoolboys of Bengal, who, actuated by a false sentiment of patriotism and in an exuberance of bravado, not merely attempted to take the lives of others but freely risked their own lives, would be the very exaggeration of rhetorical restraint. That there has been method in the madness of the boys, no sane man would deny, but let not the authorities, too, fail to acknowledge that it is their own Russianized method of carrying on things for the last four years or five that partially brought on the madness. Goaded to desperation, the educated and responsible sections of the Indian community took to the preaching of swadeshism and boycott. The Risley circular having denied to our schoolboys even the inexpensive and innocuous luxury of airing their lungs, it is no wonder that a few of the silliest among them received their inspiration from English translations of French romances and doctrines of foreign fanatics, which they could but ill-digest, and unmindful of what might eventually result, at once developed into full-fledged liberators of the land. Poor, deluded young men, they could little understand that what was but mock heroism on their part meant a sad and serious deathblow to the cause of the country. Already have our disinterested friends, the Anglo-Indian journalists, raised the terrific cry of the empire being in danger, and unless the authorities do at this juncture keep their heads cool, there is much fear of their future policy being considerably influenced by the alarm sounded by our contemporaries. As for ourselves, we do not hesitate to boldly declare that coercion has always been found to be at the best a mistaken policy, and it is conciliation that alone is the sovereign remedy. We trust the startling revelations made by the Manicktola prisoners will prove an eye-opener to all parties."

MASHRIQ, 12th May 1908.

The Tuticorin riots and the Calcutta sensation.

20. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 12th May, referring to the Tuticorin riots and the Calcutta sensation, remarks that up to this time the agitation carried on by the Congress was on constitutional and perfectly justifiable lines, and that Government, too, did not think the movement to be in any way hostile to its permanency. But the recent turn which events have taken clearly shows that some young and imprudent individuals have got beyond the control of their leaders, and have laid the flattering unction to their souls that they can subvert the British Government by bombshells and other anarchist methods. This, the editor thinks, is due simply to their youth and the misconstruction they have put on the words of their leaders. If such things continue, Government will at last be exasperated, and will adopt coercive measures by which the progress of India will be considerably retarded. The Government should at this juncture act with moderation and tact, and it behoves the leaders of both the Moderate and Extremist parties to curb the misdirected enthusiasm of their young and imprudent followers and bring them to a sense of their duty to Government and loyalty to the authorities constituted by law.

ADVOCATE, 10th May 1908.

The Anglo-Indian press on the Calcutta sensation.

21. Referring to the angry denunciations and the extremely ungenerous generalizations of the Anglo-Indian press on the Muzaffarpur outrage and on the horrifying disclosures made at Calcutta, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 10th May, observes that the use of violent language will not help the solution of the problem that has disturbed Europeans as much as Indians. He says that the anarchist is no friend of anybody, be he Indian or European, and the advent of such a person to India cannot but bring the greatest disaster on the country.

He then criticises the remarks of the Pioneer and asks if is it not criminal folly on the part of the Allahabad journal to throw venom on respectable and well-disposed persons. It is only exciting the lower feelings of Europeans against Indians by telling them that from the imperial legislator down to the vernacular newspaper publisher everybody is bent upon exciting popular hatred against Government. He hopes that the Government of India will be in no way misled by these counsels and concludes by saying that "It is easy to take away the right of public meeting, to muzzle the press, and to adopt other drastic measures, but will such a course deter desperate men from their misdeeds, till such time as the cause of unrest on which they feed is removed? We know deep discontent and unrest exist in Bengal. Have any steps been taken to remove unrest? Meet the anarchists with condign punishment, but at the same time remove the cause of discontent so that some other spark may not ignite it. Do not treat public opinion with contempt, do not be suspicious of the motives of the candid friend, do not consider all Indians from the highest to the lowest incapable of giving an honest opinion on administrative problems, do not believe that a wrong if not righted through zid increases official prestige. These are a few of the many ways that the soil of India, which has ever been uncongenial to anarchists, can be kept so. The situation requires calm consideration. Repression in the past has failed; reconciliation will alone succeed. This is the weapon that, accompanied by justice and fairness helped British statesmen of earlier days in founding the Empire. This is the weapon that must be used for the preservation of peace. Against one anarchist we have a million for the maintenance of the British Raj. In spite of their groanings which are mainly due to economic causes, people are not willing to exchange this Government for any other. Statesmanship requires that the existing unrest should be removed and that men with diseased imagination should not be allowed to poison the popular mind. It is the duty of every peace-loving citizen to help the State in preventing the spread of this poison. But this is possible only when the work of doing so is made possible by stopping the insinuations in which the Anglo-Indian press is in the habit of indulging."

22. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 13th May, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th May, on the Calcutta sensation.

HINDUSTANI, 13th May 1908.

The Calcutta sensation.

23. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 14th May, adversely criticises the view of the situation put forward by the Anglo-Indian press, especially the Pioneer, and remarks that it is as clear as words can signify that the average Anglo-Indian mind makes no distinction between Moderate and Extremist, and between constitutional and unconstitutional agitation. Mr. Gokhale is to the Anglo-Indian just as bad as Mr. Pal—the idea being that any kind of political agitation is necessarily the precursor of violence and crime. He says, this is the first time that it is seriously maintained that criticism naturally and logically leads to anarchism and quotes the indignant protest put in by the Statesman (Calcutta). The Anglo-Indian press, the editor further observes, consider that the people of this country have nothing to do beyond making protestations of loyalty. It wants the country to be kept in a state of perpetual helplessness; but how differently things would have turned out had the Anglo-Indian press and community realized that if the "cry for the moon" was impossible, a state of utter quiescence was equally impossible. The heedlessness that confounds men and movements is as reprehensible as the maliciousness that prompts it. To treat an entire community as suspects without sufficient cause may seem easy to an irresponsible journalist, but a responsible Government ought to realize that such a course is not wise.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 14th May 1908.

The Anglo-Indian press on the situation.

24. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 7th May, referring to the anarchist movement in Calcutta, remarks that it is not of indigenous growth but an exotic from the West. The editor, however, urges that condign punishment should be meted out to all those connected with it so as to nip the evil in the bud.

He suggests that Government should proceed very coolly in the matter and should not lose its balance of mind over it, remembering that there are black sheep in every flock.

ANAND, 7th May 1908.

The Anarchist movement in Calcutta.

25. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 7th May, referring to the rumours that are current in the English and American press about the growing ill-feeling between the English and Indians, and the preparations of the latter for revolt, remarks that they are all false and are being circulated with the intention of discrediting the legitimate aspirations of the people of India.

HIND, 7th May 1908.

Rebellion in India.

26. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 10th May, in various notes on the anarchist disclosures in Calcutta, remarks as follows:—

INDIAN PEOPLE, 10th May 1908.

Anarchism in Calcutta.

The appearance of anarchism in India is said to be due to the imitative instinct of its people, and the influence of European anarchism is manifest from the seizure of European revolutionary literature in Calcutta and from the fact that one of the accused systematically studied the manufacture of explosives in France. But this explanation is hardly sufficient. Bombs may have been known in India, but the more deadly machines of European anarchists were unheard of. The ordinary Indian mind, even the ordinary Indian criminal, abhors a deed of a violent and diabolical character. It is difficult to find out how the calm and placid Hindu who, under ordinary circumstances, looks on the shedding of blood with horror could be brought to a state of mind when he is capable of commiting murder in cold blood. The editor is disposed to think that this is due to the disregard shown by the Government to the excited feelings of the people in the matter of the partition of Bengal. The Government regarded the grievances of the people as sentimental, but such grievances drive people to madness and crime. "Why does the European anarchist commit murder, except for some sentimental wrong? What could be more tragic than the assassination of the Empress of Austria? Her murderer owed her no grudge; she was no tyrant, but because she was a Queen and a Royal personage her life was forfeited. In India anarchism is aimed not at a policy, but at its instruments."

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

Among the persons arrested, there must be, undoubtedly, many innocent persons, and it is equally probable that many guilty ones are still at large. Among those arrested are boys of very tender age, and who, according to their statements, were going through a preparatory course of study and were not initiated into the mysteries of the society. The recruiting for the society was vigorous but cautious, and it is suspected that there are members outside Bengal. "It would, however, be possible that what has happened in Bengal may happen anywhere else, provided cause is given for intense popular excitement."

The editor expresses "painful astonishment" at the arrest of Mr. Arabinda Ghose on charges identical with those brought against others. His gifts, his culture, and his career all forbid the presumption that he would cast in his lot with such dangerous criminals. The fact that his brother was the leader of the anarchists does not in any way implicate him. "But the fact cannot be overlooked that Mr. Arabinda Ghose is not a person, but a party, not an individual, but a cause, and as he emerges from the trial, so will the party stand or fall."

Referring to the charges preferred against the prisoners, the editor remarks that they are as formidable as the bombs they were engaged in manufacturing. This array of sections would make the anarchists vain, and they would be proud to think that they have made a bid for national freedom, and that they have done what no criminal has as yet dared to do. He thinks that this is hardly the way to exterminate the "brood of anarchists."

The editor gives due credit to the police in capturing the murderers of Mrs. and Miss Kennedy, and unearthing the anarchists' conspiracy in Calcutta, but says that the same police concocted evidence to show that some starving coolies had tried to blow up the Lieutenant-Governor's train. He requests the Bengal Government to release these coolies at once.

Referring to the disclaimer issued by the Nationalist party repudiating the action of the anarchists, he remarks that a section of the party goes beyond the propaganda of terrorism. Many of the conspirators have confessed that they drew their inspiration from the Extremist press. "The new political movement of absolute swaraj may not be directly responsible for the anarchist propaganda, but it does contain in its ranks frenzied enthusiasts who have drifted into anarchism."

Adverting to the search made by the police in the houses of Babu Subodh Chandra Mallik and several other gentlemen in Benares, who were suspected of being concerned in the Calcutta conspiracy, the editor remarks that such searches, although they are useful, should be conducted with such secrecy and circumspection as to avoid every search being likened to a police raid.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 13th May 1908.

Anarchism in India.

27. Haji Musa Khan Sahib, Honorary Joint Secretary, All-India Moslem League, writes as follows to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 13th May :—

"The sympathies of all men of sense and feeling will be ungrudgingly given to the two innocent ladies who fell victims to the nefarious cowardice of Khudi Ram Bose on the night of the 30th April. It is due to the blind faculty of imitation and to the undigested secular education, that the people of India, who were afraid of molesting even little animals, have entered upon this diabolical career of crime. The enquiries that have been made into the outrage have brought to light the existence of secret societies in Bengal. All peace-loving persons have heard the news with awe, and will welcome the day when these societies will be stamped out from the country.

It is a matter of satisfaction that the Government is earnestly trying to unearth this diabolical plot, and that the Calcutta police has been successful in its attempts in this direction. The Government should not rest till it has rooted out anarchism from the country. The Musalmans of Bengal should render all the assistance in their power to the authorities.

The progress of anarchism in Europe has been due to the spread of materialism amongst the masses and to the total indifference to religion. If anarchism takes root in India, we shall have to wait at least a century before we make any further political progress.

It is highly gratifying that the Musalmans have kept themselves sedulously aloof from this movement, and that they are still unflinching in their loyalty. The holy Koran teaches us to be loyal to the Government under which we are living, and prevents us from creating disturbances in the country in which we live. The Musalmans have always shown, by their conduct in all countries, that they love peace and would sacrifice themselves to defend the Government under which they live.

All Musalmans should help the Government in suppressing the Bengali anarchists. May God help it in this."

28. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 13th May, publishes a letter from Maulvi Syed Ahmed of Delhi, who gives some sound advice to the Bengali agitators and the frontier Mullahs.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 13th May 1908.

External and internal agitation in India.

He appeals to the good sense of the Bengalis and asks them if they can meet the might and prowess of Great Britain by killing a few scores of men by bombshells. They are not ignorant like the Mullahs and know full well what the resources of the Government are in the time of war. The military power of Great Britain is immense: to say nothing of its naval power. How can they expect to subvert such a mighty power. If the Government partitioned Bengal as an administrative measure, what did they lose. It is useless to kick against the pricks. If it wants to do so it can deprive them of the responsible posts they hold, confiscate all the zamindaris they possess, and reduce them to a nation of clerks. The success of Japan, and the indulgence shown to the Transvaal has intoxicated them, but they are grievously mistaken in this; a single threat of the Government would silence them. In the end he advises them to be loyal to the Government.

Addressing the Mullahs, he tells them that they have misunderstood the real meaning of jehad, and that India is not Dar-ul-harb (a country where Musalmans are not allowed full religious liberty). The British Government has relaxed the rigour of Islamic laws. Had it acted according to those laws, all the frontier tribesmen would have had their hands cut off for robbery and theft, and many of them would have been whipped and stoned to death. They must realize that they are extremely insignificant compared to the Government.

29. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 7th May, referring to—

HIND, 7th May 1908.

Government and the people.

(1) the proposed enhancement of taxes in the Lahore Municipality;
(2) the oppression that is being wrought in the Umballa Cantonment by Captain R. S. Scott, the Assistant Magistrate; and
(3) an order recently circulated by the authorities of the Nowshera Cantonment that any man living in the Sudder Bazaar and found guilty of keeping his house dirty, would have his face blackened and would be made to ride through the Sudder Bazaar seated on a donkey, remarks that it is by such imprudent actions that European officials are making the British Government unpopular in India. If the perpetrators of such gross iniquities and the framers of such laws as the one enforced in Nowshera are adequately punished, sedition would be rooted out in India, and the confidence of the people in British justice would be restored.

30. The Brahman Sarvaswa (Etawah), for October (received on the 13th May), says that the highest duty of Government lies in its paying early attention to removing the grievances of Indians and that this is the best policy that it can adopt for its own advantage. The editor further observes that had Government shown parental affection towards Indians, they would have shed their blood in its defence and it would not have had any cause of apprehending disloyalty on their part.

BRAHMAN SARVASWA, October 1907.

Government and the people.

31. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th May, says that for a long time a political match between Lord Minto and the Indians has been going on:—

MUSAFIR, 15th May 1908.

Government and the people.

"Lord Minto, who went in first, had the 'bat' of oppression and repression in his hand, and the Indian bowler had to oppose him with the ball of 'swadeshi and boycott'. For a time the match went on and at last Lord Minto was bowled out. He should not now stand in the field with bat in hand. The sooner he leaves it to other capable men the better for him.

Deviating from this figurative language, the editor advises his 'kind rulers' to give up their policy of repression, for no Government has ever been able to create love and loyalty in the heart of a subject nation by force. He would let 'bygones be bygones' and would advise his rulers to begin their rule wisely and justly once again. This would drive away all unrest from India.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

SWARAJYA, 9th May 1908.

Treatment of the suspects in Calcutta.

32. Referring to the handcuffing of suspects in Calcutta in connection with the bomb discoveries, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 9th May, remarks that they were as cruelly handcuffed as if they "had been caught on the battlefield while fighting for their nation and for their country."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 14th May 1908.

The character of the conspiracy.

33. Under the heading "The Character of the Conspiracy", the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 14th May, says that "Every form of outrage was contemplated with the full knowledge that the innocent would have to be sacrificed with those considered guilty by the Society. Each attempt was carried on with great deliberation and everything was calculated and deliberately and fully planned. It was not a momentary madness or frenzy that moved them, but it was revolutionary relentless, in the clearest sense of the word.

The leader now admits that they did not expect to gain independence by political murders but only to teach people to dare and die. What daring is shown by throwing a bomb at night at some one and then running away in the dark? If such an outrage is attempted in broad daylight, as the European anarchist does, it would be some proof of daring, though it would not affect the dastardly character of the act. The conspirators have brought indelible disgrace on the Hindu character by perpetrating and contemplatinga crime never heard of in this country. They have done incalculable injury to the cause of national progress and they have brought darkness and despair on the land."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 14th May 1908.

House search.

34. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th May, writes as follows regarding house search in connection with the anarchist conspiracy:—

"Everything that can be done to expose thoroughly the anarchist conspiracy will have the cordial assent of all right-thinking men and supporters of law and order. So far, however, it has not transpired that the conspiracy is very widespread and extensive, and the ordinary law should be suspended to meet the emergency. Besides the confessions of the principal prisoners, the police have come upon a mass of correspondence which has already implicated others and is likely to implicate more. Searching houses for correspondence or incriminating evidence, arms or explosives, must necessarily form part of the enquiry. As long as the search is based on reasonable suspicion, it is quite proper, even if nothing incriminating is found. But when a man, who has nothing against him, and against whom there is no reasonable suspicion, has his house searched perhaps with the foreknowledge that nothing suspicious will be found, it becomes a serious matter. Reckless house-searching is as unwise as reckless arrests, for it puts an indignity upon men who have done nothing to deserve it and turns their hearts to bitterness. Let the most vigorous search be made by all means but let it be made in the proper direction."

SWARAJYA, 9th May 1908.

The future of the Nationalist party.

35. Under the heading "The Future of the Nationalist party" the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 9th May, reproduces a translation of the article from the Bande Matram (Calcutta), and makes some comments of which a literal translation is given below:—

"Brave men! Arise. You have taken in your hands a very gigantic task. Do not care for those men (Moderates) who are afraid to join you in the accomplishment of this task. Stick to your work. When you will thus persevere in your task and when on the advent of every calamity and misfortune, you will come out successful from the ordeal, then the very (force of your) truth will dispel the fear of these cowardly and timid persons (Moderates). And just as iron is attracted by a magnet, so in the same way those who are afraid to join you (lit. those that put hands on their ears when joining you) will of their own accord draw nearer and nearer to you. The only thing essential (for the occasion) is that you should not show your back at the time of trial. The blows the enemy aim at you, you should manfully bear on your chest, and should always continue to utter the words "Bande Matram." Prove it in practise that whatever the brave say they also put into practice."

"Lions! Arise. Gird up your loins very tightly, be ready to serve the purpose of gravel and stone for the foundation of the national edifice. Establish district associations in every city (even) after undergoing every sort of hardship and calamity and then create national panchayats, not only in every tahsil and town, but also in every village."

"Brethren! This work will be accomplished only through exertion, and without accomplishing this task it is impossible for us to continue to exist. Arise! and treading down the opposing forces scatter yourself into villages, and with the skies echoing in response to the cries of Bande Matram and 'victory to the motherland' unfurl the banner of Swaraj everywhere in the land. The task is no doubt difficult. But arise! Providence will help you, for this is the sacred mission that you have to carry out."

Warning to Moderates.

36. Referring to the warning conveyed through the medium of the Englishman to Moderates and Loyalists in general, to cease preaching their cowardly doctrines, the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th May, remarks that the Moderates, too, are now threatened with bombs unless they give up all activity. The editor says that to him it sounds like a distinct challenge and a clear call to duty. He says that the Moderates must openly and finally disclaim all connection with the new party and do all that lies in their power to save the country from the new and great danger that threatens to overwhelm it.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 14th May 1908.

Bombs in India.

37. The Rástgo (Allahabad), of the 8th May, writes as follows under the heading "Bombs in India":—

RASTGO, 8th May 1908.

"When we used to learn from Feringhee newspapers that bomb-throwing was a matter of frequent occurrence in Europe, we used to wonder what it was and why it was resorted to. However, now with the other evils from which India is suffering, there have appeared in it, fortunately or unfortunately, bomb-manufacturers and bomb-throwers who are known in Europe as anarchists or nihilists.

When free trade is being championed everywhere, it is not to be wondered at that the European anarchists and nihilists have opened an agency for the sale of their commodities in India, thinking that India is as dissatisfied with its rulers on account of oppression as they are, and especially as the people of Russia are, where bomb-throwing is a matter of daily occurrence.

Has the (long-threatened) Russian advance, of which the Feringhees were so much afraid, really manifested itself? There is no doubt about the fact that every one sympathises with the relatives of the victims. But this fact is also evident that the men who have risked their own lives and to whom the killing of other people is a matter of little moment, must be true, staunch and unswerving patriots. However deluded they may be in our opinion and that of our readers, it is evident that according to their own rights and principles, there is nothing that such true and dauntless men who have no regard for their lives, cannot accomplish.

The bomb discoveries.

38. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th May, referring to the bomb discoveries in Calcutta, writes as follows:—

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 12th May 1908.

"The discovery of dynamite, bombs and other explosives in Calcutta is very inopportune and has created a panic. Europeans are feeling much grieved, but this is a time when they should control their tempers. With the exception of mischievous people, the whole country has been shocked, and we believe that not only has our progress been (rudely) stopped (by this), but it has been considerably retarded, and in the future we shall have to grope in darkness."

British rule in India.

39. The Sipáhi (Cawnpore), for April (received on the 12th May), says that unlike the period of Hindu and Muhammadan rule, all communities of India have received equal treatment at the hands of the British Government, and that British rule in India has been worthy of praise in every respect, save that it has dealt a heavy blow to the martial spirit of the people. The editor urges that the army in India is only sufficient to protect the people against internal disorder, but that it cannot resist a powerful enemy from without. If India remains so weak even under British rule, he says he cannot help remarking that the very atmosphere of India is such that whoever came to this country weakened its power and left it a prey to others.

SIPAHI, April 1908.

WITHOUT PERMISSION OF THE INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS
IOR L/R/5/85

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

The British Government of India compared to Whiteants.

40. The editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad), in the editorial notes for May, says :—

"The following from the pen of an Anglo-Indian may be found interesting :—

'Some native sage has compared the Europeans in India to dimaks or whiteants, which from dark, or scarcely visible beginnings, pursue their determined objects insidiously and silently, destroying green forest trees, and in their excavated trunks building edifices, communicating by numerous galleries with the hardened clay pyramids, far and near, that denote where formerly flourished the far-spreading cedars. Attacking every thing, devouring every thing, they undermine and sap and desolate. The simile is not a very flattering one, though it is not in some measure without its aptitude either. * * * After all, however, there can be no question that in our early connection with India, there was much, from the contemplation of which the moralist will shrink and the Christian protest against, with abhorrence.'—[The Calcutta Review, volume VII (1847), p. 226.]

Has there been much real improvement since ?"

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

"If Russia ruled India."

41. An editorial article entitled "If Russia ruled India," appears in the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May. The language all through is very strong, and a very unfavourable comparison is drawn between English and Russian methods. The editor begins by pointing out that the English are rendered narrow-minded by their insularity and consequently take a prejudiced view of the Russian character. In their pride and self-sufficiency, they find nothing worth imitating in foreigners, and in Russians least of all, as they fear that Russia may some day wrest India from them. The editor then goes on to remark that Russia and India possess much in common. The customs of both countries are very much alike, so that a closer relation between the countries would lead to an interchange of thoughts and ideas. Again, Russia being an agricultural country would not make the same demand on India for food stuffs as England does. England being a commercial and manufacturing country, can only prosper at the expense of Indian industries and trade. The natural consequence, the editor says, has been the industrial ruin of India and dire poverty, ruin and distress. The British, too, being a maritime nation, have found it to their interest to discourage all mercantile enterprise on the part of Indians. Russia, on the contrary, would have enlarged the harbours of the country and fostered all maritime enterprise. Again, under the Russian régime, India would be granted those political rights she is now denied, and there would be a revival of the village community and the joint family systems—institutions completely destroyed by British rule. The article then concludes as follows: "And now as to the terrors of Russian rule. We have been told again and again by Anglo-Indians that there is no freedom of speech, no liberty of the press in Russia. But have we not been gagged, too? Have not Indian orators, editors, and printers been deported without trial, or sent to jail for publishing the truth and doing what Anglo-Indian editors do with impunity every day? In the Central Provinces and in East Bengal, have not printing presses belonging to newspapers been unlawfully confiscated or destroyed by the police? If there is a difference between Russia and India in these respects, it is a difference, not in kind, but in degree. Moreover, as to the free expression of thought in writing or speech, we find that Count Tolstoy has written and published the most revolutionary things in politics, economics, sociology and religion; and yet he is a free man in Russia. Is it conceivable that any man in India writing such things can remain in India outside a jail, even under the present radical ministry?

It is said that there is no personal safety in Russia for the politically suspect and no liberty of the subject. Is there very much more of that commodity in India? Let East Bengal reply, let Calcutta reply, let Tuticorin reply, let the Peshawar border reply. Substitute the punitive police, the military police, the Gurkhas, those members of the Calcutta and Mymensingh police force who behaved like ruffians, and the low-class Musalman ruffians at Jamalpur and elsewhere in East Bengal,—substitute all these, we say, for the Cossacks in the Russian Army, and if you find a difference at all, it will be one in degree but not in kind.

Students are said to be the objects of special persecution on the part of the Russian Government. Our students also are subjected to much persecution (whipping and imprisonment included) and constant espionage. The difference, we say again, is one in degree but not in kind.

Further, we are curious to know whether the barbarous Russian Government has disarmed and emasculated all its Asiatic subjects, as the most supremely enlightened British Government has done its Indian subjects. As far as we know, it has not.

We should also like to know the names of the Indians whom the British Government has appointed Governors of provinces and Generals in the Army, as the Russian Government has appointed a few at least of its Asiatic subjects.

But we think it were time we cut short this unprofitable speculation. Of course we have not fallen in love with Russian rule, just as we have not fallen in love with British rule,—in spite of its love-compelling sedition laws and regulation lathies, bayonets and maxim guns."

42. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th May, while reviewing a paper on "Some lessons from History on the Problems of Indian Administration", contributed by Mr. C. W. Whish to the Imperial and Asiatic Quarterly Review, endorses the three points raised by him— ADVOCATE, 14th May 1908.

History on Indian problems.

(1) the admission of Indians to the privileges of British citizens;
(2) the value of municipalities as affecting the growth of nations;
(3) the appreciation of British genius by the British ruler, and remarks:—

"The difficulty of the situation is so serious that the writer suggests compromise as the only course, a word which, though it has an ugly sound, is considered by many to be almost synonymous with statesmanship. The word has been given a new definition—ability to see things from opposite points of view. It means something more than mere sympathy: a keen insight into the fact that certain concomitants of British civilization which seem desirable and indispensable to the British may be absolutely abhorrent to the Indian mind. It is high time both the rulers and the ruled here learnt to practise the great principle of successful life: Put yourself in his place."

43. The editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May, referring to the work of the Convention Committee, remarks that a public body striving for freedom by methods that are not secret runs the risk of being suppressed ere long. Freedom, he says, either absolute or of the colonial kind, will not and cannot be given by England. It has to be taken, almost equal strength and effort being required in either case. The bureaucrat is the friend of neither the Extremists nor the Moderates. He wishes only to destroy. Indians should, therefore, not place themselves, or any section of their countrymen, at the mercy of the alien exploiters. In conclusion, the editor expresses his regret that the Convention Committee defined the constitution of the Congress absolutely. The next Congress, he thinks, cannot be called a National Congress, but rather a sectional one. MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

The Convention Committee.

44. The editor of the Zamana (Cawnpore), in its issue for April, notes with satisfaction the re-constitution of the Moslem League, and although he does not agree with its principles, yet he is disposed to think that when the Moslems are once in the thick of political controversy, they will not be able to recede from their position. He thinks that the League would prosper under the direction of Mr. Amir Ali and Major Bilgrami. ZAMANA, April 1903.

The Moslem League.

45. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for April, referring to the great stress laid by the non-official Members of the Viceroy's Council in their speeches during the Budget debate, on the pressing need of thorough reform and overhauling in various departments, remarks that it ZAMANA, April 1908.

The need of reforms.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

is owing to listlessness and apathy on the part of the Government that discontent and disaffection are spreading among the employés of various departments, whose salaries have not been increased with the great rise in prices, and as a result, strikes have become frequent. The Government has been for a year parading its intention of introducing various reforms, but although these reforms have been thoroughly discussed by the public and the press, yet it has not as yet intimated whether it is going to adopt these reforms or not. The editor thinks that the separation of the judicial and executive functions should have been experimented upon in all provinces, and an invidious distinction should not have been made in favour of Bengal.

HINDOSTHAN, 8th May 1908.

An Advisory Council of Taluqdars and other landed proprietors.

46. Referring to the speech of the Hon'ble Raja Muhammad Ali Muhammad, Khan Bahadur, on the United Provinces Budget debate, the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 8th May, makes the following observations:—

"We think that the proposal of the Hon'ble Raja Muhammad Ali Muhammad, Khan Bahadur, to appoint an Advisory Council of the Taluqdars and other landed proprietors is a very reasonable one, because with all the good intentions of the Government, there is yet great room for improvement in the department of Court of Wards, and what could be a greater lack of principle than to exclude the party for which the Court of Wards is established? There may arise difficulties about its constitution, but we are quite prepared to accept election or Government selection. In making this suggestion, the Raja says he does not make any complaint against the present method of the Court of Wards administration. But, nevertheless, he thinks that a council composed of a few well chosen Taluqdars and landholders of Agra would be able to give advice regarding the administrative needs of estates, which may be found of value and would possibly prevent serious errors arising from ignorance of Indian methods and customs. If the Raja does not make complaints, then we do, and declare that the present Court of Wards system is objectionable and that there is great room for improvement which should be effected without delay. It is a great honour for a ruler to be ready to assist his subjects. But it is also most desirable that such a ruler's rule should be so spotless that nobody can find fault with it.

The encouragement given for sinking wells is very good, but not at the cost of making canals, by censuring which improvement, he, the Hon'ble Raja, shows the old unwise selfishness of the Taluqdars by which they opposed the Government in making a canal through Oudh. But as we have said before, we repeat it again, that the distribution of takavi should be made through the Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies."

SWARAJYA, 9th May 1908.

Military officers.

47. Referring to the oppression wrought by Captain Scott of the Umballa Cantonment, the Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 9th May, remarks:—

"The administration of civil officers is after all based on law and common sense. But we feel sorry at the condition of those poor persons who have to pass their life under the administration of military officers. Every military officer is in himself an independent ruler. His will is law; and his animal passion is his wisdom. He is mighty in every respect. He strikes but does not allow (one) to weep. This is why the poor people are so afraid of even the dogs of the Cantonment Magistrates—not to speak of the Magistrates themselves. But poor people! What can they do? They have neither the way to escape, nor the courage to stop oppression."

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

The pay of the sepoy.

48. An editorial article entitled "The Pay of the Sepoy" appears in the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May, in which the editor points out that in spite of the increased cost of living during the last fifty years, no substantial increase has been made in the pay of the sepoy. The Indian Army, he notes, attracts men of the best families in the country, and is, accordingly, far different from continental armies in which only those of ruined fortune and bankrupt reputation enlist. This being so, the editor thinks sepoys ought to get a suitable wage, especially as the wage-rates of all members of the professional and artizan classes have more than doubled themselves during the last twenty years.

CENTRAL HINDU COLLEGE MAGAZINE, May 1908.

Unrest in schools and colleges.

49. Mrs. Annie Besant contributes an article on the "Unrest in Schools and Colleges" to the Central Hindu College Magazine (Benares), for May in which she strongly condemns the participation of students in politics. She ascribes the disaffection and restlessness among the students to the baneful influence of Messrs. Tilak and Arabinda Ghose who, though they are fervid patriots, are openly anti-English. They do not want any help or co-operation from the English, even in working educational institutions. Their policy, she says, is destructive and not constructive. They have no constructive programme and are using the boys as mere counters in their game. If they do not want their young countrymen to study in institutions under the control of the Government, they must first lay the foundation of their own institutions. She appeals to young men to have regard for their fathers who stint themselves to pay for their sons' education. In conclusion she impresses upon them that even in England, disciplinary measures are more strictly enforced and that they should not chafe under such well-meant restraints.

SWARAJYA, 9th May 1908.

The Swarajya and the authorities.

50. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 9th May, publishes an article headed "A Bird's Chirrup" to which is appended another headed "Narayana's reply" of which a literal translation follows :—

"Narayana (editor of the Swarajya) was doing his work in the office of the Swarajya. Around him some birds were gaily chirruping. They had no fear or anxiety on account of plague, famine, sedition or section 153A. They flew wherever they liked and picked up grains everywhere. Narayana, too, when he got tired of work, amused himself by looking at their playful antics, and sometimes envied them, for they were free and were masters of their own nests, and had not fallen in the clutches of any European (vilayati) eagle."

In the meanwhile one of the birds came and sat near Narayana, and he heard what the bird said :—

"Beware! The enemies' eyes are on you, your fearless articles in the Swarajya have more effect on their chests (hearts?) than bombshells. The fearless criticism of the Swarajya has the effect of arrows on their hearts. So, as they have become unable to oppose these arrows and muskets, they are now after the Swarajya (want to prosecute it?) acting on the principle, if there are no bamboos, there would be no flutes (made of bamboo) to play upon. It is possible that Narayana may not be sent to jail, when the Swarajya is prosecuted for sedition, but his hands may be cut off (he may be prevented from carrying on his work) by making him give security for good behaviour, and he may be threatened that if his spark-emitting (lit.) pen led to a conflagration, he would be held responsible for it. Take care. Beware."

NARAYANA'S REPLY.

Hearing these words of his sympathiser, Narayana smiled and said: My friend, 'We would stop only when we have shaken (as by an earthquake) the earth and when we have lifted the world on our shoulders (lit. head). Anybody may gag our mouth (lit. throat) a thousand times, but we would not keep quiet.'

As long as Narayana is alive, his pen and tongue will not be prevented from doing their work. He will do his work wherever he is, on the earth or on the sky, in jail or in the lock-up. If he would not be able to get pen, inkstand, paper and ink, he would write out his thoughts on the ground and wipe them off; if there would be no one to hear his voice, he would make the four walls of his narrow and dark cell listen to his mental anguish and would make the morning breeze his messenger. He believes that in the world, anything done is never wasted or lost. As to the security for good behaviour 'He whose accounts are clear, has no fear of the checking (of his accounts).'

Anyone who is of bad character would have to give security and would be afraid of it. Narayana knows his character very well and so he is not at all afraid. But if patriotism, the well-wishing of the nation and the desire for the prosperity of the country are regarded as crimes (bad chalni) then

'We do not want honour or reputation, although it is a matter of disgrace with wise persons.'

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

And as to the responsibility for sowing the seed of disaffection and revolt (fitna wa fasád)

'I am disposed to laugh at Man. He commits evil deeds, and blames Satan for it.'

Is there any human being, who according to (the dictates of) wisdom and religion can hold Narayana responsible for disaffection and revolts (fitna wa fasád). The truth is this, the same tyrannical, oppressive, imperious and un-God-fearing officers are responsible for the fierce criticism (sharar fisháni, emission of sparks lit.) of Narayana's pen, owing to whose (officer's) unforeseeing policy and want of prudence, discontent is spreading everywhere. So Narayana cannot in any way be held responsible for his evil deeds. Go and tell anyone who wants to punish Narayana for performing his duty righteously that "You may oppress us, you may tyrannise over us, you may never look at us with the glance of love.

By your own God, you should not abate your zeal in prosecuting him (do not do anything less for him. lit.)."

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

British rule in India,

51. Discussing the Budget debate, the editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May, remarks that most of the non-official members of the Council showed, by their speeches, their fitness for self-government. No national need, no national grievance was lost sight of. But their courage, their devotion, their industry, their intellectual acumen, were of no avail—could be of no avail. Indians pay and the foreigner spends—and spends mainly and primarily in furtherance of his own aims and ambitions. Generally speaking, the editor points out, cheap and abundant food, sanitation of rural areas, general and industrial education, are the urgent needs of the hour. But the bureaucracy spends on the army and the police, and on their own comforts much more than the nation wants. A large European army is maintained for overawing the people, and the police have been strengthened for the work of espionage and repression. Railways are said to be intended as a means of prevention of famine, but famine continues to stalk through the land. The real reason, the editor remarks, why railways receive so much attention in India is because they are chiefly intended for the benefit of the British iron industry, for the British exploitation of India, and for strategic purposes. Again the Indian nation lives in villages, and village sanitation is utterly neglected. The sanitation of towns is better, chiefly because Europeans dwell mostly in towns. As for education, there is no civilized country on earth where the degree of illiteracy is so great as in India, and Government is still engaged in devising means for not introducing free primary education. Are Indians to allow their money to be squandered without protest, the editor asks. Certainly not. But protest or no protest, the result is practically the same. Indians must band themselves together and strive to awaken the national consciousness of their countrymen. Those that have the welfare of the country at heart must battle with famine, pestilence, and even death. India, generally, must be trained up till she is able to take her rightful place amongst the nations of the world. Great was the selfishness that made Indians slaves, greater far must be the self-sacrifice by which they will become free.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 8th May 1908.

The frontier trouble.

52. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th May, referring to the constant trouble on the frontier, remarks that it is due to the liberality of the British Government, as it gave the Sardars of the Zakka Khels money after punishing them. The editor is of opinion that these men should be severely punished whenever they make incursions into British territory and that no indulgence whatever should be shown to them.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 12th May 1908.

The frontier trouble.

53. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th May, referring to the trouble on the frontier, remarks that the Amir must feel some sort of resentment at not being consulted when the Anglo-Russian Convention was ratified, and may perhaps feel insulted by such casual treatment. So, the editor thinks, it is not to be wondered at that he did not look askance at the depredations committed by his subjects in British territory even if he did actually connived at them. He thinks that it would be much better to strengthen the frontier defences than to send expeditions into the Afridi country.

The Frontier imbroglio.

ADVOCATE, 10th May 1908.

54. Under the heading "the Frontier Imbroglio," the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 10th May, remarks that anarchism at home and war on the frontier have all of a sudden developed a peculiar situation in India. The former is only an exotic with the shortest possible span of life, but the latter is long-standing and has expanded both ways, spread far and wide and taken deep root. He says that experience has shown that if the misdeeds of the tribesmen are not properly brought home to them, it will give them an impression of weakness on the part of the Government. The recognition of Habibullah Khan as an independent ruler, his visit to India and the sojourn of Sardar Nasrullah Khan in England marked distinct advances towards the establishment of a more cordial relationship between the British Government and the Amir, but the Mohmand rising, he observes, has been the unmaking of everything, and if rumours about private parties of Afghans crossing their border in order to join the Mohmands be true, then there is no doubt about the prevelance of an anti-British feeling in Afghanistan, especially in eastern territories, fanned by Mullahs. The presence of large bodies of Afghans in the lashkars and the indifference and inactivity of the Amir at this juncture, must necessarily lead to the inevitable result of an advance up to the Durand line with the prospect of continual guerilla warfare.

Afghanistan.

MASHRIQ, 12th May 1908.

55. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 12th May, referring to the insinuation made by the Pioneer and other English papers that the Amir is in league with the Sufi Mullah and other malcontents, remarks that he has inherited the prudence and tact of his father, and would not deliberately let go the friendship of the British, from whom he gets many advantages, and has nothing to gain from opposing them. He may have found it difficult to restrain his people from following the Mullahs, as the King's voice is far less powerful than that of the priest in a country where religion is supreme.

The Mohmands.

HINDOSTHAN, 12th May 1908.

56. In the editorial notes of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), for May 12th, the following appears in connection with the Mohmands:—

"Anyway, if the Mohmands and their allies appeal for peace, we will strongly advise our Government not to grant their request at a cheap rate. A patched-up peace is worse than open hostilities, however expensive. If they mean war, let them have it with a vengeance, and let exemplary punishment be inflicted upon them so that it may take some time before they think of disturbing the peace of the frontier again. We are sure the Government have by this time realized the mistake of a weak policy and trust they will not repeat it."

The Frontier trouble and the Amir of Kabul.

HINDUSTANI, 13th May 1908.

57. Referring to the opinion of the English papers, both conservative and liberal, regarding the Amir's part in the Mohmand raids, the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 13th May, remarks:—

"There is a good deal of talk in the English papers these days regarding the Amir's attitude towards the British Government. All these papers are agreed that if the Amir is not directly responsible for the raids on the frontier, it is at any rate certain that he has connived at the actions of the Afghans. Be this as it may, one thing is tolerably certain, e.g. that the relation between the British Government and the Amir is somewhat strained. The reason probably is that the Amir was not consulted in the matter of the Anglo-Russian Convention. Both England and Russia, so might the Amir think, have combined to secure for themselves commercial facilities in Afghanistan without even consulting the ruler thereof.

It is proper, therefore, to remove this probable misunderstanding from the mind of the Amir, for if it is allowed to continue, Afghanistan will ever remain a source of anxiety to the British Government."

The frontier trouble.

OUDH AKHBAR, 14th May 1908.

58. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 14th May, referring to the insinuations made by English papers that the Amir is responsible for the recent troubles on the frontier, remarks that these insinuations are quite false, and the foolish action of the tribesmen is suicidal, as they will very soon be crushed by the British Government.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

HINDOSTHAN, 14th May 1908.

The Mohmand Expedition.

59. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 14th May, has the following:—

"Now that the cloud of uncertainty that shrouded the Amir's attitude towards the frontier rising has disappeared, it will be a brief business to bring the difficulty to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion. General Willcocks' troops will make short work of the Mohmand refractories, and we earnestly hope will teach them a lesson which they will not easily forget. We need not say that the Government of India will insist upon an adequate reparation to be made by the Mohmands before they order the troops back. The mistake of a hasty withdrawal from the Zakka Khel territory must be too fresh in the mind of the Indian Government to allow them to content themselves with verbal assurances of good conduct in future on the part of the Mohmands. If the Government had inflicted severe punishment on the Zakka Khels before they withdrew the troops in the recent expedition against them, we are sure the present trouble would never have arisen, and we trust our Government will profit by their past mistakes this time."

OUDH AKHBAR, 16th May 1908.

The Amir and the frontier raids.

60. Political policies of these days, says the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 16th May, are undergoing rapid changes every day. The Amir received a hearty welcome from the British Government last year, and yet scarcely a year has elapsed before the relations between the two Powers are not what they ought to be. The editor says we are not prepared to admit that this bitterness of feeling is due to the fact that the Amir is helping the Mohmands with men and money. It would be quite premature to hold him responsible for this fanatical outburst of the frontier tribes. The news that reaches us emanates from those mischief-makers who do not like to see the present amicable relations continuing between the British Government and the Amir.

But the fact that the Amir is not quite pleased with the terms of the Anglo-Russian Convention is equally indisputable—and this, the mischief-makers might say, is the motive that actuates the Amir in conniving at the Mohmand raids. But a supposition like this is quite unwarranted. The real cause of the frontier disturbances is that the preachings of the Mullahs have so exasperated their subjects that the Amir and Sardar Nasrullah Khan have lost their hold upon them. But the Anglo-Indian papers, on the ground that some Afghan soldiers were found among the dead, do not hesitate to conclude the complicity of the Amir in the affair. All this cannot but embitter the existing relations, and the Government, therefore, ought to put an end to such ravings of the Anglo-Indian press.

It is a well-known fact that religion is a great factor in the life of the Afghan: hence it is that secular authority has often to bow before religious powers. In order to establish his supremacy, the late Amir, Abdur Rahman, had to use violent methods of suppressing these 'learned men'. But as a strong Government is naturally and usually followed by a weak one, the present Amir has found it impossible to continue the same policy. To misunderstand this and to always advocate a Jingo policy is the height of folly at the present occasion. Happily the present Government is not so weak as the Government of Lord Lytton and it can well afford to allow the Anglo-Indian press to indulge freely in their inflammatory writings.

III.—Native States.

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

British influence in the Native States.

61. The following appears in the editorial notes of the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May:—

"The British Government has disarmed and emasculated its own subjects. They are also worse fed than the inhabitants of the Native States. Now the Arms Act has been feeling its way in Travancore, to extend its operations to other states gradually, perhaps. Last year Kashmir interdicted political agitation. Now Travancore and Mysore have followed suit. How the goddess Pax Britannica is spreading her wings over the Native States!"

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

Professional witnesses.

62. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 11th May, says that there exists a class of persons with whom it has become a profession to give false evidence in the law courts in any and every case. If Government wants to discourage this practice, it should, he says, direct the courts to enter the names of the witnesses appearing before them in a general register. This would put a moral restraint upon this class of persons, and would also give facility to the authorities in singling out members of this professional class.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 11th May 1908.

Efficiency of European jury.

63. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 14th May, refers to the account of a recent trial in Rangoon, in which the accused, William Johnstone, charged with the murder of one Jerome Jacobs, was acquitted on a verdict of "not guilty" returned by a European jury without fully hearing the evidence, and without taking the Judge's exposition of the law on the point and remarks that this is a striking instance of the inability of European juries to return proper verdicts in cases of trial of European offenders. He further says that it is a matter of common repute that it is almost impossible to get a European jury to return a verdict of guilty, should the accused happen to be a European and the aggrieved a coloured man. This belief it is the duty of every European in the country to refute. Time was when the people in the country absolutely believed in the even-handed justice of British courts, and upon this belief to a very great extent was founded and rests the Empire of Britain in India. Repeated miscarriages of justice, in cases in which the accused were Britons, have, in truth, visibly shaken the confidence of the public in the impartiality of British courts of justice, the far-reaching effects of which, it is dangerous to ignore. When people find that it is difficult, nay, impossible, to get justice against an European, it is simply natural for them to abjure the courts and obtain what reparation they could otherwise secure for their wrongs.

CITIZEN, 14th May 1908.

Munsifs.

64. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th May, publishes a letter from a correspondent who, while suggesting the advisability of making the Subordinate Judicial Service more attractive than it is now, remarks that in the case of those approved candidates who have officiated as Munsifs and who are about to exceed the age limit, it would be advisable to exempt them from the age limit rules, and in the case of those approved candidates who have not been appointed to permanent posts because their juniors were about to attain the age limit, he thinks that they should be appointed in the next higher grade, for they had to wait so long for no fault of their own but simply to give a chance to their older juniors who would have been otherwise disqualified.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 14th May 1908.

Excise.

65. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th May, referring to the proposed Licensing Bill for regulating the sale of liquor in England, suggests the advisability of similar legislation in India, as it would be a boon to the country in its present condition.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th May 1908.

(b).—Police.

Punitive police.

66. The editor of the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May, makes the following observations on the punitive police in his editorial notes :—

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

"The Bengal papers are full of facts and figures to prove that punitive police have been imposed in many villages in East Bengal simply to crush the swadeshi movement. For the maintenance of the punitive police, Hindus have been generally taxed and Musalmans have either not been taxed at all or only nominally taxed. Again, swadeshi Hindus have been very heavily taxed, whereas anti-swadeshists have been nominally taxed. Of course 'Lord' Morley cannot believe this. Why should he? He is not paid to do so. And he is not a Pharisee!

We have already pointed out in our note on 'the British jazia' in the March number that this punitive police tax will eventually lead to passive resistance on the part of the people. But the time is not yet come. Let the cup of tyranny be full to the brim. Passive resistance bears fruit very soon where there is the practicability of active resistance. But even in the circumstances in which we are placed, passive resistance will lead us to victory—only let there be the will to resist in every bosom."

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

(c)—Finance and Taxation—Nil.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 7th May 1908.

The Agra municipality.

67. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 7th May, referring to the embezzlement of some water-rate money by bill-collectors in the Agra municipality, remarks that it is due to the neglect of the accountant and other officials of the municipality who do not check the accounts every month. The editor further writes that some people say that this confusion is due to the age of the Secretary-Engineer who cannot supervise the work efficiently, and as a result the whole work devolves on the Assistant Secretary and other overworked officials.

(e)—Education.

HIND, 7th May 1908.

A head master and a student.

68. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 7th May, complains that the Head Master of the Aligarh District School caned some students of his school who attended Lala Lajpat Rai's lectures and recently kicked an Arya Samajist student who was performing the religious ceremony called Agnihotra.

KAYASTHA HITKARI, 8th May 1908.

The Allahabad Kayastha Pathshala.

69. The Kayastha Hitkári (Agra), of the 8th May, makes the following suggestion in connection with the improvement of the Kayastha Pathshala at Allahabad:—

(1) That students of all caste and creed, including Muhammadans, should be admitted to the institution.

(2) That the Pathshala authorities should not treat public opinion with contempt when it is decidedly in favour of certain reforms; but should try to meet the arguments of the public by issuing pamphlets in justification of their conduct, for this would remove all mutual misunderstanding.

(3) That an appeal on behalf of the institution for subscriptions from the public should be issued from time to time under the signature of the President.

(4) That the annual reports should be circulated among the whole of the Kayastha community instead of among the members only.

(5) That the names of donors and subscribers to the funds of the institution should be published in some organ of the Kayastha community.

HINDOSTHAN, 13th May 1908.

The Entrance Examination of the Allahabad University.

70. The following is from the editorial notes of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 13th May :—

"The Entrance Examination of the Allahabad University extended this year to about three weeks. The reason for this was that most of the papers leaked out, and questions set in examination papers could be procured at Rs. 2 each beforehand. Such a scandal deserves thorough enquiry and the culprits, when caught, should be severely punished. The printing of these papers was, it is said, entrusted to the Pioneer press, and if it is found that the papers leaked out through the agency of the printers or compositors there, it does very little credit to the supervision in the premier press in India. In fact it would be no injustice if the press were refused payment or remuneration. The extra inconvenience and expense to which the mofussil candidates were put also requires consideration."

ADVOCATE, 14th May 1908.

The Matriculation Examination.

71. Correspondents writing to the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th May, on the Matriculation Examination scandal, suggest that there should be no re-examination, as it would entail a great hardship upon the students, and that in future examinations should be held in colleges only, so that the chance of the leaking out of the papers may be eliminated.

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

School inspection.

72. The following is from the editorial notes of the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May :—

"The Hon'ble Babu Jogendra Chandra Ghosh pointed out the other day in the Bengal Council Chamber that for Primary Education, out of a total expenditure of nine lakhs, Rs. 2,01,800 were meant for inspection. Evidently the Government cares less for providing intellectual food than for the (political) quality of the food supplied. Perhaps the official logical division of the genus Inspector is somewhat as follows: (a) Police Inspector, (b) School Inspector. Police inspectors to deal with adult and actual criminals, and school inspectors to deal with young and possible criminals."

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

73. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 9th May, suggests the desirability of wells being dug in Behar on a large scale in order to make the cultivator as far as possible independent of the uncertainty of periodical rains in his agricultural operations, and as being a cheaper and more suitable form of irrigation than canal irrigation.

HINDOSTHAN, 9th May 1908.

Wells in Behar.

74. The Bhárat Sudashá Pravartak (Farrukhabad), for April (received on the 13th May), considers that famine in India is not so much due to the scarcity of grain as to the scarcity of money, which is a natural consequence of heavy taxation by Government. The editor suggests the reduction of taxation, the restriction of the export of grain and the improvement of the productive capacity of land as means for preventing famine in India.

BHARAT SUDASHA PRAVARTAK, 13th May 1908.

The Famine.

75. The Zamana (Cawnpore), for April, complains that Government is doing nothing to make the frequent occurrences of famines impossible. Relief works are of a very temporary character and have no permanent effect. The poverty of the people is daily increasing, but the officials are still harping upon their prosperity. The country is being drained of grain in enormous quantities, but no steps are taken to interdict its export. The apathy of officials towards the people is due to their ignorance of the real condition of the people. The non-official members of the Viceroy's Council made many proposals for the relief of the poverty-stricken masses and for the development of industries and arts, but they were all rejected as impracticable. Large grants have been made for the construction of railways, and the military expenditure has not beenreduced.

ZAMANA, April 1908.

The Famine.

76. The following is from the editorial notes of the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May:—

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

Famine in the United Provinces.

"It is a sad commentary on the public spirit of the United Provinces, that non-official famine relief work should have had to be commenced there by men of other provinces. We are pleased to find, however, that Oudh has awaked, and we hope Agra will soon follow. Lala Lajpat Rai and Babu Abinash Chandra Majumdar have been doing the work of relieving the famine-stricken in right earnest. In this blessed work they are being helped by bands of enthusiastic volunteers. Babu Abinash Chandra had hitherto been working in Allahabad; he has lately opened a fresh centre of relief at Bahraich, whence he has been sending to the papers painful descriptions of the condition of the people. Says he:—

'Wages given to labourers are not sufficient even to keep them in healthy condition, not to speak of their family and children. The paternal Government considers it its duty to keep men safe from the clutches of death. But if I were given the choice, I would have probably preferred an immediate relief to a prolonged life of starvation and ultimate end by dysentery and diarrhœa. The Famine Code is a standing disgrace to the British idea of charity. If you are generous and charitable, save the starving fully or leave them to their fate to struggle and die. Why tantalize them with a hope of life which you are unable to grant?'

Babu Abinash Chandra being engaged in the self-imposed work of famine relief at great self-sacrifice and under trying circumstances, has been driven by the painful scenes he daily witnesses, to indulge in this bit of frank criticism. But we have no right to read what he writes unless we help him in his work. His address is Lawrenceganj, Allahabad."

77. Referring to the rumour regarding the closing of the famine relief works and the opening of small civil works instead from the 15th May, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th May, remarks that famine relief works are a great boon to the

RAHBAR, 7th May 1908.

The Famine.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

famine-stricken cultivators of the United Provinces. Their closing, therefore, will mean a good deal of hardship to the workers who are still crowding into them in large numbers.

RAHBAR, 7th May 1908.

Famine and its causes.

78. A correspondent writing in the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th May, says that it is now an established fact that famine is due to the constant decrease in the number of cattle in India. The superficial observer holds the flesh-eating population, e.g. the Muhammadans, responsible for this decrease. In the opinion of the writer, Hindus are more to blame in this connection than Muhammadans; for they being in the majority consume the greatest part of the articles made by the leather of slaughtered animals. The editor, therefore, urges upon Hindus and upon their leaders especially, the necessity of giving up the use of leather goods and of substituting the use of canvas ones instead.

MASHRIQ, 12th May 1908.

The Famine.

79. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 12th May, referring to the intention of the Government to close all famine works from the 15th May, suggests the advisability of continuing these works till the kharif crops are ready. The editor moreover complains that tahsildars have already begun to press people for land revenue and for the repayment of takavi advances.

HINDUSTANI, 13th May 1908.

The Famine.

80. A correspondent of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 13th May, while discussing the measures adopted by the Nepal Government to ward off famine, remarks that in Nepal there are canals from which cultivators can take water for irrigation without paying anything, that in all villages there is a grain dépôt maintained by the Darbar, from which grain is distributed to the people during famines and that the export of grain is at once stopped when the state is threatened with famine. He requests the British Government to adopt similar measures.

CITIZEN, 14th May 1908.

Famine Relief.

81. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 14th May, publishes the following:—

"We give a prominent place to a letter from Lala Lajpat Rai, in the hope that it may successfully appeal to some of our readers and induce them to give him the required help in his philanthropic mission.

SIR,—I regret that for want of volunteers my famine relief work is not proceeding as it should. The young men who had been so far carrying on this work, have returned to their duties and their places have not yet been filled in by others. It will be a great pity if the funds supplied to me by the benevolent people of other provinces remain unexpended for want of a proper agency to distribute the same. I have already sent two young men to Oudh, two more are going in a day or two; some half a dozen or more are already there, but the number is too inadequate to cope with the demand for help. It is a matter of extreme regret that the sympathy displayed by other provinces towards their famine-stricken brethren in the United Provinces should have failed to evoke an adequate response in the educated men of the United Provinces. So far the work has been principally done by the Panjabis. I appeal to the young men of the United Provinces to come to my help and carry on the work of relief so well started by their Panjabi brethren. To the Panjabis also I beg to make the same appeal. It will not add to their credit if the trust reposed in one of them, by the good people of other provinces, fails to be properly discharged for want of good and reliable workers.

Yours &c.,
LAJPAT RAI."

(g)—General.

SARASWATI, May 1908.

Plague.

82. Dr. Mahendu Lal Garga contributes an article to the Saraswati (Allahabad) for May, in which he urges that educated classes should take steps to remove the superstitious idea prevalent among the masses that Government has spread plague in the country in order to reduce its population which has grown out of all proportion to the means of subsistence.

83. An article entitled "Some Industries of Eastern Bengal and Assam", is contributed to the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May, by Mr. Daxshina Ranjan Ghosh, in which a good deal of information is given regarding the actual industries, and various suggestions are made regarding the possible industries of Eastern Bengal and Assam.

"Some Industries of Eastern Bengal and Assam."

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

84. Dr. A. K. Coomarswamy contributes an article to the Modern Review (Allahabad), for May, entitled "Art of the East and of the West", in which he points out that it is impossible to understand Indian art unless one is acquainted with the traditions of which it is the direct expression. The Eastern and Western ideas of art, he says, are totally different. The robust muscularity of a Greek statue is repugnant to the lover of the repose and refinement of the limbs of Orientals. The same is the case with features and colour. But the real division lies deeper still. The absence of all mystery, the altogether limited ideal of art and satisfaction at the expression of physical beauty render the Western conception of art far inferior to the Eastern. The Western artist, the writer remarks in conclusion, sees nature with his eyes and judges of art by intellectual standards, whereas the Indian seeks truth in his inner consciousness and judges of its expression by metaphysical standards.

"Art of the East and of the West."

MODERN REVIEW, May 1908.

85. The Cawnpore Gazette, of the 8th May, referring to the enthusiastic welcome accorded by the people of Bombay to Mr. Chaggan Lal, editor of the Swaraj (Bombay), on his release from prison, remarks that before he was prosecuted for sedition and imprisoned, he was an unknown man, but he has now become exceedingly popular with the people, instead of being disgraced in any way.

Government and Journalists.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE, 8th May 1908.

86. The Ánand (Lucknow), of the 7th May, advises its contemporaries to give up indulging in violent language, which is simply intended to increase their sale, lest they should be regarded as advocating to the manufacture of bombs, as certain papers are said to have done as alleged by Khudiram Bose, who is accused in the Muzaffarpur bomb outrage.

The Vernacular Press.

ANAND, 7th May 1908.

87. The Ánand (Lucknow), of the 7th May, condemns the suggestion of Mr. Mitra regarding the control of the Vernacular press in India, and remarks that Mr. Mitra is a disgrace to the Bengali community.

Mr. Mitra.

ANAND, 7th May 1908.

88. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th May, applauds the women of Bengal for their efforts in encouraging the swadeshi movement and says that their interest in the movement is due to most of them being educated and enlightened. The editor exhorts the women of these provinces to take a lesson from their sisters of Bengal and to take an interest in the regeneration of the country.

Bengal women and the swadeshi movement.

ARYA MITRA, 8th May 1908.

89. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 8th May, says that since Government thinks Khalilullah alone responsible for the Etawah conspiracy, he cannot be an ordinary man and his arrest will lead to important disclosures. The editor urges that as the Criminal Investigation Department of these provinces has not so far been able to effect his arrest, it would be advisable to ask the aid of the Criminal Investigation Department of Bengal, which has shown exceptional skill in unearthing the Calcutta anarchist conspiracy.

The Etawah incident.

ABHYUDAYA, 8th May 1908.

90. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 8th May, in an article on Hindus and Muhammadans says that Hindus have a capacity to adapt themselves to their environment. On the advent of Muhammadans in India, they took to Muhammadan modes of life, which they did not feel the least pang at renouncing in favour of the habits of the English, when the supremacy of the latter was established in India. This power of adaptability, however, did not come in the way of—rather made possible—their living peacefully with Muhammadans, though it is alone responsible for the disappearance of that domestic simplicity and pious rusticity which were once the characteristic features of Indian life.

Hindus and Muhammadans, a plea for their reunion.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 8th May 1908.

But of late signs of coming discord and strife have been visible, and the system of English education, which was expected to create national consciousness in the Indian mind, has served only to foster a peculiar hatred for all that is of Indian origin. The result is that strange developments have taken place. There is not that mutual love and affection between Hindus and Muhammadans that made life in ancient times quite enviable. Distrust, selfishness, and prejudice have combined to make those happy relations of former days quite impossible now.

But this state of affairs should not be allowed to continue any longer now. Every sincere leader, every well-wisher of India, and every one who is anxious to see his affairs administered by himself, should try to re-establish perfect union between these two great races of India.

In conclusion the writer, who is a Muhammadan, feels assured that Muhammadans who are 'worthy sons of worthy fathers' will surely co-operate with every movement of the Hindus, provided they are not objectionable and seditious.

SHAHNAI-I-HIND, 8th May 1908.

Europeans and Indians.

91. The Shahnai-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th May, referring to the question of social intercourse between Europeans and Indians, remarks that many misunderstandings would be removed if there were freer intercourse between the two communities, and that the people of India would welcome this most heartily. But, the editor says, there are many obstacles in the way. Many European officers want Indians to demean themselves by taking off their shoes when they come to see them and to flatter them by calling them huzur, &c., as ignorant and interested persons do. They do not like educated Indian gentlemen to meet with them on terms of equality. It is this over-bearing conduct of European officials that is making the Government unpopular.

ARYA MITRA, 8th May 1908.

Mr. Tilak.

92. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th May, says that of all Indian leaders Mr. Tilak is respected most by the public, the reason being that he has suffered more than any other leader in the cause of the country. The editor notes that it is alleged that in the calamity that overtook the Temperance Volunteers in Poona owing to their prohibiting people not to drink, Mr. Tilak rendered them the greatest help, in as much as he paid the fines imposed upon them by the District Magistrate from his own pocket.

ADVOCATE, 10th May 1908.

Temperance work in Poona.

93. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th May, makes the following observations on the press note issued by the Bombay Government regarding the temperance crusade :—

"We are as much sorry for the practical failure of the crusade, the inevitable result of the proposed deputation not meeting the Governor, as for the mistake in fixing Mahableshwar as the 'trysting place.' Sir Sydenham Clarke would have been well advised to come down to Poona, the scene of magisterial vagaries and temperance activities. A discussion on the spot would have better justified any decision that could be arrived at."

RAHBAR, 7th May 1908.

Kayasthas in Government service.

94. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th May, says that in these days when Government wants to set one caste against the other it is no wonder that one hears of the Kayasthas—whose profession by the way has always been Government service—being precluded from entering it in order to secure "due representation" of other castes.

Had not "divide and rule" been its policy, the Government would have carried into effect the words of the Queen's Proclamation, and secured the confidence of all sections of the Indian people.

KAYASTHA HITKARI, 8th May 1908.

Kayasthas in Government service.

95. Referring to the order of the Government regarding the recruitment of Kayasthas for Government service a correspondent writes to the Kayastha Hitkari (Agra), of the 8th May, as follows :—

"In view of the fact that the Government has now publicly announced its intention to preclude the entering of Kayasthas into its service, it is now obligatory upon the leading men of the community to start technical schools for giving practical training to Kayastha children." The correspondent also suggests the desirability of building more rooms in connection with the Kayastha boarding house at Allahabad.

96. Referring to the recent order of Government regarding the admission of the Kayasthas into the Government service, the Kayastha Hitkari (Agra), of the 8th May, says that in case Government is not prepared to grant posts to Kayasthas they should now turn their attention to commerce and industry. They should establish national emporiums in every town and city, and submit a list of shops thus opened to the Hitkari office for the information and guidance of the community at large.

KAYASTHA HITKARI, 8th May 1908.

Kayasthas and their future occupation.

97. A correspondent writing to the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th May, says that "it is the literary ability and the capacity to serve Government well that have enabled the Kayasthas to hold their own against the non-office-seekers,—and it shall, indeed, bring about their ruin, if the officers having the patronages of appointments at their disposal, shut the doors of service against them and do themselves what the modern office-seekers failed to do on the score of ability and efficiency. To exclude the Kayasthas from Government service—the main source of livelihood—would be to keep them away from an honourable career and to create a new poor class—a state of affairs quite inconsistent with the liberal policy of the present Lieutenant Governor, Sir John Hewett, as adopted by him during the seasons of scarcity to save his people from starvation and keep their bodies and souls together. The excess (if any) of the number of Kayasthas in Government service should not be visited by punitive measures like exclusion and supersession. The number of Kayasthas in Government service has already been reduced and the number now remaining is simply inadequate considering their numbers and general education, and in proportion to the numbers and education of other communities. At all events they look to the United Provinces Government for protection."

ADVOCATE, 10th May 1908.

Kayasthas and Government service.

98. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 10th May, remarks that Indians would be better remunerated for the time and money spent on their education, if they were to take to business rather than to service in some office, and points out that trade in fruit within the country itself and the export of fruit to foreign countries would be a very paying business, if carried on scientific lines.

HINDOSTHAN, 10th May 1908.

Trade in fruit.

99. A correspondent writing to the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 11th May, exhorts the people to give up burning kerosine oil, as experience shows that it is conducive to the dissemination of plague germs.

BHARAT JIWAN, 11th May 1908.

Kerosine oil, a cause of plague.

100. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 11th May, says that corruption in public offices is due to the low pay of subordinate officials. The existing rate of pay was fixed at a time when provisions were very cheap. But now that grain is selling at famine rates these officials are compelled to resort to dishonest methods for earning their livelihood. The editor therefore requests the Government to increase the pay of low-paid officials, if it wants to discourage bribe-taking in their ranks.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 11th May 1908.

Government servants and their pay.

101. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 7th May, reproduces from the Yugantar (Calcutta), an article in which the writer tries to show that Promissory Notes issued by the British Government are worthless and unredeemable. The editor, however, does not agree with the conclusions arrived at.

HIND, 7th May 1908.

Promissory notes.

102. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th May, referring to the scurrilous leaflet on Promissory Notes, which was circulated broadcast in Bombay theatres, remarks that such writing simply produces irritation and is not calculated to bridge over the gulf between the rulers and the ruled. The writer concludes by saying that Government would not feel annoyed if the people of India were to invest their money in swadeshi concerns.

OUDH AKHBAR, 12th May 1908.

Promissory notes.

103. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th May, referring to the existing relations between Hindus and Musalmans, remarks that India cannot make any progress as long as Hindus and Musalmans are not fused together into one national

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th May 1908.

Hindus and Musalmans.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

unit. Religious scruples and susceptibilities should not be allowed to interfere in political unity.

OUDH AKHBAR, 13th May 1908.

Swadeshism and its opponents.

104. The gain of one party is the loss of another, and so it is no wonder, says the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 13th May, that the swadeshi movement—the movement for the regeneration of India—has met with opposition at the hands of those who have the power to crush it down completely.

Indians are usually peace-loving. Their "unaggressive civilization" and "simple policy" made it possible for the foreigners to gain complete mastery over the Indian market. The result has been that the whole mercantile trade is now altogether into the hands of foreign races. But since necessity is the mother of invention, the poor Indians were compelled to adopt foreign methods for bettering their own condition. They came to realize that degeneration has crept into every department of their life. With this consciousness there arose simultaneously the idea of the swadeshi movement as the sovereign remedy for every defect in the "national organism." Now this swadeshi movement, as has been said in the beginning, has two aspects. Firstly, it will herald the beginning of a new era of prosperity for the Indians; and, secondly, it will mean loss (by the decline of their trade) to foreigners. Hence, these persons have begun their opposition to the movement in right earnest.

The editor then quotes the instance of a high Government official trying to discourage the swadeshi movement in Bengal and refers to the case reported in the Indian Empire (Calcutta), of the 20th April.

HINDOSTHAN, 14th May 1908.

The cotton industry of India.

105. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 14th May, says that "recent experiments in cotton have fully demonstrated the fact that Egyptian cotton can very easily be grown in Sindh, that the best Indian varieties can successfully be introduced where inferior sorts are generally sown, that those good varieties can still be improved by careful selection, and that all varieties can be kept from deterioration only if properly maintained by selection. The cotton industry of India would surely be transformed were it possible to bring these facts home to the cultivators. But how are these discoveries to be brought to the knowledge of the ryot, to be of any practical value to him, is a question that can very well be disposed of by the various agricultural departments."

ADVOCATE, 14th May 1908.

Sanitary reform.

106. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th May, referring to the letter addressed by the Calcutta Trades Association to the Government on the subject of Sanitary Reform, and to the suggestion to employ European officers only in large towns, remarks that these suggestions are based entirely on self-interest. The editor cannot understand why European officers are to be employed "in a work in which the passions and prejudices of the people have to be fought against and won over to the side of reform." He thinks that European training may be insisted upon, but that there is no reason why the Association should lay so much stress on the employment of European officers.

OUDH AKHBAR, 14th May 1908.

European Engineers.

107. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 14th May, referring to the demand for forty European Engineers by the Panjab (?) Government, remarks that when competent Indian engineers can be had in the province there is no need for drafting such a large number from England, and that such indiscreet action should not be repeated.

V.—Legislation.

Nil.

VI.—Railway.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 7th May 1908.

Hardwar Railway Station.

108. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 7th May, suggests the advisability of constructing a rest-house for parda-nashin Indian ladies at the Hardwar Railway Station, which is much frequented by pilgrims.

Railways.

109. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th May, makes the following suggestions for the consideration of the railway administration :— ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 8th May 1908.

(1) Railway accidents can be, to some extent, prevented if the lines are doubled.

(2) The quarters for the Railway Police and other employés should be improved as they are very uncomfortable on some lines, especially on the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

(3) Ample accommodation should be provided for intermediate and third class passengers and extra carriages should be attached to trains if reserved accommodation has to be provided.

(4) Water should be supplied to passengers at all stations in the hot weather, as there are many people who cannot afford to pay for ice.

(5) Zenana waiting rooms are urgently required at the Moradabad and Bareilly Railway stations.

(6) The railways should, by means of criers, inform ignorant people of the concessions they make during holidays and fairs, as only educated people can read the printed notices.

The Fyzabad City Station.

110. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th May, complains of the inconvenience caused to the public at the new city station at Fyzabad for want of a waterman, a raised platform, a waiting room, and on account of the non-stoppage of all the night and day trains, and the closing of foreign booking, and hopes that the railway authorities will not lose time in meeting the popular demand for station improvement. ADVOCATE, 10th May 1908.

The Ghaziabad collision.

111. Referring to the railway accident in Australia, which resulted in three hundred and sixty-eight killed and injured, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th May, says that it would be an offence to foretell the number of deaths due to the collision of trains near Ghaziabad; but an approximate idea of the number can be had by comparing the present accident with that in Australia. The editor, however, promises to publish the names of those persons of Moradabad, who were travelling by these trains, in the next issue. RAHBAR, 7th May 1908.

The Ghaziabad collision.

112. Referring to the serious railway collision near Ghaziabad, the Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 8th May, says that the accident is due to some mistake in the transmission of the line clear message. Some signallers may consequently be sent to jail; but what consolation can the Government offer to such of the bereaved families as have none left to maintain them. MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 8th May 1908.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway accident.

113. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 13th May, referring to the recent accident on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, remarks that an investigation only will not be sufficient, but an enquiry into the causes that lead to such accidents is essential and if accidents are found to be due to press of work, the subordinate officials of the railway should be relieved of their excessive duties. HINDUSTANI, 13th May 1908.

The railway accident near Ghaziabad.

114. Referring to the ghastly accident that occurred between Ghaziabad and Dasna, on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, details of which are simply harrowing, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 14th May, remarks :— CITIZEN, 14th May 1908.

"Whatever the cause, we hope the Government will hold a thorough, searching and independent inquiry into the accident. There is some screw loose somewhere, and the public will not be satisfied until the circumstances which resulted in such a horrible calamity are impartially investigated and adequate measures devised for the prevention of such dreadful accidents, in so far as they may be due to avoidable causes."

The Ghaziabad Railway collision.

115. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 14th May, says that Indians are particularly unfortunate in these days. Some calamity or other is always present at their doors. They had hardly survived the plague and the famine, when another misfortune in the shape of railway accidents completely overwhelmed them. The memory of the Ludhiana incident was still fresh in their minds when the Ghaziabad collision UNION GAZETTE, 14th May 1908.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

came to fill the cup of their misery. Is it not the time, one might ask the railway authorities, to consider the question of doubling the railway lines all over the country?

ADVOCATE, 14th May 1908.

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway accident.

116. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th May, referring to the recent accident on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, remarks:—

"But this accident, heart-rending as it is, will pass away without moving the heart of the Railway administration to have better men on better salaries on the stations and to remove the root evil—that of overwork—to which all these accidents are due."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 14th May 1908.

Railway collisions.

117. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th May, referring to the frequent collisions on Indian railways, remarks that up to this time the Indian public has been complaining only of the discomforts it has to suffer in railway travelling, but now it is confronted with a graver danger, i.e. the frequent mishaps on railways. The Government does not take any serious notice of it because Indian lives are thought to be a cheap commodity. The princely incomes derived by the railway administrations should be devoted to the better management of the lines. Station Masters in charge of roadside stations are very ignorant and overworked. Attempts should be made to attract better qualified men by offering them handsome salaries. Most of the Station Masters are unable to understand the circulars on "electric connections" and "insulators," &c.

VII.—Post Office.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 8th May 1908.

Post-cards.

118. A correspondent writing to the Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 8th May, says that much trouble and inconvenience is felt by the public in ascertaining why sometimes even sufficiently stamped service and private post cards are marked bearing. The writer suggests that the reason for marking them bearing should also be stated somewhere on the post cards, as this would make the postal authorities more cautious.

POSTAL MAGAZINE, April 1908.

House arrangement for inspecting officers of the Postal department.

119. A correspondent writing to the April number of the Postal Magazine (Agra), says that considering the difficulty and inconvenience to which the branch and sub-postmasters are put in providing accommodation for inspecting officers visiting their post offices, Government should either build suitable quarters for such inspecting officers or provide them with tents.

POSTAL MAGAZINE, April 1908.

Grievances of the Post Office staff.

120. A correspondent in the April number of the Postal Magazine (Agra), wants to draw the attention of the authorities to the following grievances:—

(a) Members of local post offices and of the Railway Mail Service complain that their work is very heavy and that the staff is insufficient.

(b) That though entitled to it, they do not get leave on occasions of extraordinary importance.

(c) That when on leave, they get their pay on joining the office. This entails great hardships upon them; for during the period they are on leave they do not get anything to meet their daily expenses.

(d) That they do not get holidays on the occasion of Hindu and Muhammadan festivals.

(e) That like Railway servants, who get free passes, they do not get travelling allowance when proceeding on leave.

(f) That messengers and village peons have to suffer a good deal of hardship in the winter and rainy seasons, because they are not provided with suitable clothes: what they get they have to pay for from their own pockets.

(g) That the system of granting commission on the sale of postage stamps was a great boon to post peons and to branch and sub-postmasters. It should either be renewed or their pay should be increased.

121. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 12th May, referring to the proposal that is about to be submitted by the postal employés to the Government, makes the following suggestions :— RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 12th May 1908.

Postal employes.

(1) Salaries should be increased, and grain and compensation allowances should be sanctioned for those stationed in the hills ;
(2) The posts should be graded with steps every five years.
(3) Some compensation is necessary for the abolition of the commission on the sale of postage stamps.
(4) Free quarters should be provided for those who work more than eight hours, or house allowance should be given instead.

122. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 14th May, says that the solution of the difficulty in connection with the telegraph trouble has left the position of Indian employés very much as it was, and in spite of their loyalty during a period of exceptional difficulty, nothing has been done in recognition of their service. He says that we have never been able to understand why an invidious distinction should be made between European and Indian employés in the matter of house allowance and why the latter should be placed on what is called the Local Scale, when they have to do the same work as the former, who enjoy the advantages of the General Scale. CITIZEN, 14th May 1908.

The Telegraph department and Indian employes.

He hopes that Government and the Department will yet reconsider their decision and remove the legitimate grievances of Indian employés.

123. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th May, expresses its astonishment at the order of the Magistrate of Pilibhit forbidding the celebration of the anniversary of the Baisalpur Arya Samaj. It says that the present Magistrate was thoroughly trusted by all sections of the Pilibhit public and that there was no sign of unrest anywhere. But his present order has disturbed and exasperated a great law-abiding people. The celebration, says the editor, had to be abandoned and the guests had to go away, disappointment and sorrow rankling in their hearts. With reference to the above, the Riyáz-i-Faiz further publishes a letter from the District Magistrate to Babu Janki Prasad, Vice-President of the Samaj, stating that his order was quite misunderstood by his subordinates and that he had no intention to forbid the celebration of the anniversary. In that letter the Magistrate also states that the officers who were responsible for stopping the celebration of the anniversary have already been punished. The Magistrate, in concluding the letter, hopes that in view of this disclaimer every misunderstanding will be removed. RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 4th May 1908.

Anniversary of the Baisalpur Arya Samaj and the Magistrate of Pilibhit.

Commenting upon this letter the editor praises the District Magistrate for his justice, high-mindedness, sympathy and tolerance. He feels proud at having such a Magistrate in his district. Some more officials of this stamp and the present estrangement between the people and the Government would cease to exist.

124. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 7th May, complains that in Lucknow there is a class of beggars called Murchirias who extort money from shopkeepers and others by pretending to wound their bodies by pointed instruments made of iron and by other disgusting means. The editor requests the Deputy Commissioner to prevent them from begging in this manner. HIND, 7th May 1908.

Beggars in Lucknow.

125. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 8th May, contains an article urging as usual the boycott of foreign goods as a means of attracting the attention of the British public and of Government to the grievance of the Jain community in the matter of the Parasnath Hill so as to save it from the intended desecration by the construction of bungalows upon it. JAIN GAZETTE, 8th May 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

126. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 8th May, reproduces the address delivered by Mr. Gulab Chand, M.A., before the All-India Jain Young Men's Association at Surat in which he pointed out that the construction of bungalows for Europeans on the Parasnath Hill would interfere with the religion of the Jains, that it would be a source of constant friction between Jain pilgrims and the European inmates JAIN GAZETTE, 8th May 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

INDIA OFFICE LIBRARY & RECORDS

of those bungalows, and that when once bungalows were built there the entire hill would be covered with buildings sooner or later in spite of the assurance of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to the contrary. He urged that by every means in their power, the Jains should acquaint the Government that its decision had dissatisfied their entire community, and that unless the proposed measure was abandoned they would not be reconciled. In conclusion he called upon the Jains to agitate and agitate till their King-Emperor took notice of their grievance and they got their end.

ADVOCATE, 10th May 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

127. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 10th May, says that the decision of the Government of India regarding the Parasnath controversy has disappointed the Jain community throughout India, and wounded their religious susceptibilities.

The editor says that there are many ranges of hills in Bengal where bungalows for Europeans can be made without wounding anybody's feelings, and he thinks that the whole hill should be leased in perpetuity to the Jains.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 14th May 1908.

Anomalies of civilization.

128. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 14th May, publishes a précis of a paper headed "Anomalies of Civilization" contributed by Mr. Amir Ali to the April number of the Nineteenth Century.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

AL-BASHIR, 12th May 1908.

Pice.

129. A correspondent writing to Al-Bashir (Etawah), of the 12th May, complains that the money-changers generally give only 15½ annas worth of pice in exchange for a rupee, which is a great hardship on people in such hard times. The correspondent asks Government to make some special arrangements for this.

Naini Tal :
The 16*th May* 1908.

S. T. HOLLINS,
Offg. Asst. to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

RECEIVED
6 JUN 1908
INDIA OFFICE.

Camp Branch, Government Press, United Provinces.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 21 of 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 23rd May 1908.

CONTENTS.

Page.

I.—POLITICS.

(a)—Foreign:

1. Macedonia 461

(b)—Home:

2. The Muzaffarpur bomb outrage ... 461
3. The Muzaffarpur outrage 461
4. The Muzaffarpur outrage 461
5. The Muzaffarpur outrage 462
6. Reflections on bomb outrages... ... 462
7. The Calcutta sensation 462
8. The Calcutta sensation 462
9. The Calcutta sensation 463
10. The Calcutta sensation 463
11. The Calcutta sensation 463
12. Bomb discoveries 463
13. Bombs in Calcutta 464
14. Anarchists in India 464
15. The anarchist conspiracy 464
16. Anarchists in Calcutta 464
17. The Calcutta conspiracy 464
18. Fruitless searches 465
19. Confessions of the anarchists 465
20. The Anglo-Indian press 465
21. The Anglo-Indian press on the situation ... 465
22. The Moslem League and the anarchists ... 466
23. The present situation 466
24. The present situation 466
25. The present situation 466
26. The present situation 467
27. The present situation 467

Page.

28. The future of India 467
29. India—Past and present 467
30. Cause of sedition in India 467
31. Sedition in the country 467
32. Seditious movements in India... ... 467
33. The Tinnevelly riots 468
34. The solution of the Transvaal question ... 468
35. India and Egypt 468
36. Nihilism in Europe and in India ... 468
37. "History on Indian problems" ... 469
38. The poverty of India 469
39. Indians and the present situation ... 469
40. Hindus and Muhammadans 469
41. How to punish offenders 470
42. Yugantar and unrest 470
43. Russian methods in India 470
44. Sir A. P. MacDonnell 470
45. Reforms and anarchism 471

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

46. The Amir 471
47. The Frontier 471
48. The Frontier 471

III.—NATIVE STATES.

Nil.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue:

49. A Madras sensation 471
50. Whipping in India 471

Page.

(b)—Police:

51. The police and the blowing up of Sir Andrew Fraser's train 472

(c)—Finance and Taxation:

52. The English Budget 472
53. Conversion of Government paper ... 472

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:

54. Local Self-Government 472
55. The Agra Municipality 472
56. The Moradabad Municipality 473
57. Water-supply at Benares 473
58. Calcutta Improvement Scheme ... 473

(e)—Education:

59. Indians in the Educational department ... 473
60. The Model Girls School in Bareilly ... 473
61. Industrial education in schools ... 473
62. Educational problems 474

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land:

63. Co-operative Talukdari Estate Banks ... 474
64. Famine in Gonda and Bahraich ... 474
65. Famine and the duty of Indians ... 475

(g)—General:

66. Industrial development of India ... 475
67. Commercial relations of India and England 475
68. Industrial activity in the United Provinces 475
69. The future of Indian industries ... 475
70. Treatment of Indians in their own country 475
71. Europeans and Indians 476
72. Europeans and Indians 476
73. The Vernacular Press 476
74. The Vernacular Press 476
75. Inflammatory writings 477
76. The Swadeshi movement 477
77. Promissory Notes 477
78. Grievances of Clerks in the office of Examiner of Accounts 477
79. The Sivaji cult 477
80. Mr. Pal and a European gentleman ... 478

Page.

V.—LEGISLATION.

81. The threatened press legislation ... 478
82. The threatened press legislation ... 478
83. The threatened press legislation ... 479

VI.—RAILWAY.

84. Railway accidents 479
85. The Ghaziabad railway collision ... 479
86. The Ghaziabad railway collision ... 479
87. The Ghaziabad railway collision ... 479
88. Railway accidents 479
89. Railway accidents 479
90. Railway accidents 479
91. The Ghaziabad collision 480
92. The Ghaziabad railway accident ... 480
93. Railway collisions 480
94. Platform tickets for East Indian Railway stations 480
95. Neçessity for the extension of a railway line... 480

VII.—POST OFFICE.

96. The Jadd-o-Jehad and the Post Office ... 480
97. The Jedd-o-Jehad and the Post Office ... 480

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

98. The Parasnath Hill 481
99. The Parasnath Hill 481
100. The Parasnath Hill 481
101. Temperance crusade 481
102. Government and the temperance movement 481
103. Converts to Hinduism and Buddhism ... 481
104. Protection of cows... 481
105. Hardwar 481
106. The Shia and Sunni quarrels 482
107. Widow marriage 482

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

108. Sale of minors 482
109. Cooli Utar in Kumaun 482
110. Inspection bungalows 482

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

1. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th May, advises England to leave off her policy of obstruction in Macedonia and to give Turkey a free hand to deal with her recalcitrant Christian subjects, as terms cannot be dictated by England to Turkey without the active support of other powers, and this support is never likely to be obtained.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 16th May 1908.

Macedonia.

(b).—Home.

2. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, referring to the Muzaffarpur outrage and to the Calcutta disclosures, remarks :—

RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur bomb outrage.

(1) The police are so panic-stricken that while searching a certain house in Calcutta recently they took the trunk of a wooden elephant for a gun.

(2) The police are trying to obtain evidence against Arabinda Ghosh and it is very likely that he will get some months' imprisonment.

(3) Those of our Bengali friends, who are in any way connected with the suspects in Calcutta, have to suffer a good deal of hardship these days. The house of Babu Subodh Chandra Mullick in Benares was thoroughly searched, presumably because he had made a princely donation to the National University.

(4) The police have arrested Babu Kishori Mohan at Muzaffarpur. His brother went to the Telegraph Office to wire to some of his relatives, but the signaller on duty would not accept the message for "he required a Magistrate's permission to do so."

What can be more unjust, asks the editor, than this?

3. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th May, referring to the Muzaffarpur outrage, remarks that such things take place only where tyrants bear sway and the people are oppressed and deprived of their rights. It is rather strange to think, the editor says, that such a thing has taken place in India, a country under the benign rule of the British. It is a result of the Western education that has been imparted to the Bengalis. But they ought to have realized, he says, that they cannot destroy the British nation by murdering a few individuals. This could not be done even in the Mutiny, which was a revolution on a much larger scale. The Government should take severe measures in this connection and prevent the recurrence of outrages by a thorough investigation. But it should also make a thorough enquiry into the causes of the discontent that led to this outrage. It can be traced back to the partition of Bengal. The Bengalis have some substantial grievance, otherwise they would not have dared to defy the Government. If the Government undoes the partition, it will not in any way lower its dignity, but will be conferring a great boon on the people of the province. An autocratic Government only stands on ceremony, whereas a popular Government is always ready to rectify its mistakes. If the Government of India can do nothing in this respect, the Home Government must come to the rescue. Repression will only add fuel to the fire.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 16th May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur outrage.

In a subsequent note the editor, speaking on behalf of the Musalmans, says that they condemn the rebellious attitude of the Bengalis, but think at the same time that Government must exercise great moderation and tact in dealing with the discontent in Bengal. Bengalis having received Western education are hankering after a Western form of government and Government should, therefore, respect their aspirations and remove their grievances, for if their feelings had been considered they would not have adopted such a dangerous and suicidal policy. Government should not rely solely on the information supplied by its officials, but should make independent enquiries. India is not an uncivilized country, and the wishes of its people must be taken into consideration. If Government acts with moderation, no one will say that it is afraid of the Bengalis.

4. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th May, says that the Muzaffarpur outrage has caused grief not only to the inhabitants of Muzaffarpur but to the entire country, as the murdering of innocent women is considered the greatest sin. The editor expresses surprise that the Bengalis, who are thought to be the most timid section of the inhabitants of India, should dare take the lives of Europeans whom they formerly regarded as more than human, and remarks that it is the disregard of public opinion by the Government that is making possible what has hitherto been an utter impossibility.

ARYA MITRA, 16th May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur outrage.

OUDH AKHBAR, 20th May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur outrage.

5. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 20th May, referring to the Muzaffarpur outrage, remarks that although legitimate revenge is tolerated by some religions, yet it is always preferable to forgive one's enemies. It is said, the editor further remarks, that these outrages are the outcome of the partition, but this policy of terrorism will have little effect. It is possible to be revenged upon a single individual, be he a beggar or a king, but it is impossible to be revenged upon a class, and especially upon the British nation. It is useless to threaten them, only constitutional agitation can have any effect.

OUDH AKHBAR, 21st May 1908.

Reflections on bomb outrages.

6. The editor of the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), in the issue of the 21st May, says that in view of the fact that the British Government has conferred so many blessings upon Indians and has provided them with ample opportunities to advance the cause of the country, they should disassociate themselves from those who sympathize with attempts upon the lives of Englishmen.

Indians must always remember that the present national movement owes its existence to the English. Before the national consciousness became dominant in the Indian mind, European and Anglo-Indian papers used to say with pardonable pride that to them alone India was indebted for her renascence. It would have been proper and compatible with their pride if they had continued to recognize the aspirations of the people. But instead of this just recognition it is found that national selfishness has made an impartial consideration of Indian grievances quite impossible, and this is why every party is trying to vilify the other even at the sacrifice of all sense of decency and propriety. Instead of adopting remedial measures, Government has resorted to a repressive policy—a policy which though intended to serve as a deterrent has produced a spirit of retaliation. At such times the policy of forgive and forget would be most successful. The editor does not mean to say that offenders should go unpunished. They should be punished, but at the same time an effort should be made to investigate the causes which have made such crimes possible these days. No attention should be paid to the choleric writings of the Anglo-Indian press, for if what is advice is listened to, the situation will become worse, and mutual ill-feeling and bitterness will go on increasing.

HIND, 14th May 1908.

The Calcutta sensation.

7. The Hind (Lucknow), of the 14th May, referring to the bomb disclosures in Calcutta, remarks that the incident has produced a commotion throughout India. The editor says that it is a matter of regret that some inexperienced and irresponsible young men have rendered the whole political agitation fruitless by their indiscreet actions. No one has any sympathy with them and every one is willing to help the Government in suppressing the conspiracy. Indians have as much sympathy for Mr. Kennedy in his bereavement as Europeans. It is a matter of wonder that Mr. Aravinda Ghosh, a man of culture, is implicated in the outrage. This will be a good opportunity for the Anglo-Indian press to vilify Indian political leaders to their hearts' content, and such papers will have no scruple in declaring that Indian leaders have a hand in the matter. But the editor remarks in conclusion that officials, too, are to blame for this, as they have exasperated the Bengalis by such perverse action as the partition of Bengal and by the harsh sentences passed by Mr. Kingsford on Calcutta journalists, and in this way have driven the young men of India to seek refuge in anarchism.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 16th May 1908.

The Calcutta sensation.

8. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th May, referring to the bomb discoveries, remarks that it is a matter of great satisfaction that the conspirators have been run down before they could do any grave mischief. The dauntless confessions of the persons who have been arrested show that they would have proved very dangerous. The editor asks the Government to have thorough enquiries made into the matter and to proceed cautiously.

9. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 16th May, reproduces an article from the Hindustani (Lucknow), on the Muzaffarpur outrage and the Calcutta discoveries. RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 16th May 1908.

The Calcutta sensation.

10. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 19th May, in various notes on the bomb discoveries in Calcutta, remarks :— AL BASHIR, 19th May 1908.

The Calcutta sensation.

(1) The moderate papers are of opinion that the Hindu religion condemns such outrages. But it is very wonderful that they should regard a revolution against the British Government as contrary to religion, when they think Sivaji, in spite of his treacherous conduct, cruelty, marauding habits, &c., the saviour of India and celebrate the anniversaries of his birth. They, moreover, say that the conspiracy has been hatched by some indiscreet youths and that no responsible leader is concerned in it, but when agitation on European lines has been deemed to be legitimate, how can the formation of Secret Societies on the same lines and the use of dynamite be condemned? Undoubtedly, whatever has happened is the outcome of the incessant efforts of the Indian National Congress during the past twenty-five years.

(2) Two Hindus, who have been arrested, were dressed as Musalmans. They wanted to give out that they were Musalmans and thereby implicate the Musalman community in their crimes. This is one of the tactics adopted by the Hindus (to vilify the Musalmans).

(3) The number of Musalman police officers engaged in the searches in Calcutta was very small, otherwise the whole Hindu press would have accused them of concocting cases against the persons arrested, as was done in the Panjab. No Hindu paper has criticized the action of the police, although they have arrested even Mr. Aravinda Ghosh, who is declared innocent both by the Moderates and the Extremists.

(4) The Hindu leaders are mainly responsible for this outbreak of anarchism. They inaugurated the volunteer movement; they established akhárás (athletic clubs); they taught the young men to picket and destroy foreign goods; they persuaded them to molest the harmless Musalmans of Eastern Bengal and they taught them to insult Europeans wherever they met them. These leaders, who call themselves the saviours of India, may not be directly concerned in the manufacture of bombs and may be sorry for what has occurred, but it cannot be denied that they have foolishly and imprudently set the young men on a wrong path. It is owing to this very reason, the editor says, that he has been a determined opponent of the Congress and thinks its existence in India to be a sort of divine punishment.

11. Referring to the Calcutta bomb discoveries, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st May, says that Englishmen in England and in India laugh at those infatuated youths who consider the use of bombs an important factor in the regeneration of their mother country. They should take a more serious view of the present situation, says the editor, lest this new method may turn out as detrimental to the British interests as the once ridiculed swadeshi movement. RAHBAR, 21st May 1908.

The Calcutta sensation.

In a subsequent note the same paper remarks that the police, in their zeal for unearthing bomb conspiracies, have quite forgotten their primary duty, e.g. protection of person and property from budmashes and thieves. In support of its allegation it cites the case of a young girl in Calcutta who was robbed of her earrings while going to the house of a relative.

12. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th May, appreciates the detective ability of the Calcutta Police and says that some of the persons arrested have made sincere confessions with a view to save others from trouble. These strange disclosures show that the persons engaged in the plot have no care for their lives, ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th May 1908.

Bomb discoveries.

and are ready to sacrifice them for the supposed good of their country. The editor remarks that such actions on the part of the revolutionists are quite imprudent and injurious to the best interests of the country.

JADD-O-JEHAD, 18th May 1908.

13. The Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad), of the 18th May, referring to the discovery of bombs in Calcutta, remarks that Government should take drastic measures to crush the conspiracy. The editor says that the questions that naturally arise are: "Is the patience of the people at an end?" and "Have the rulers become tyrants?" But it is beyond his power to give answers to these questions. He says that the details of the manufacture of explosives should not have been given publicly. He endorses Mr. Romesh C. Dutt's views about the conspiracy.

Bombs in Calcutta.

ANAND, 15th May 1908.

14. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 15th May, says: "It is in consequence of Western civilization that nihilism has begun to count its votaries in India also, and so it is but natural that one should hear of bomb outrages and secret murders in Bengal. God forbid that the number of anarchists should multiply in this country as in European countries, as, if it does, people will find it too difficult to live at ease even in their very houses."

Anarchists in India.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 20th May 1908.

15. Referring to the anarchist conspiracy in Calcutta, the Riyaz-i-Fiaz (Pilibhit), of the 20th May, says that in view of the fact that oppression begets mischief, it would be proper for the Government to adopt mild measures in eradicating the seeds of anarchism from the country.

The anarchist conspiracy.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 21st May 1908.

16. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 21st May, remarks:—

Anarchists in Calcutta.

With reference to the ways of the terrorist, the lives of his countrymen are worth as little as those of the Firanghees he professes to hate, and consequently he is the common enemy of all. If the terrorist conspiracy had not been discovered (the pity is that it was not discovered earlier) the land would have run red with blood, and mostly with the blood of Indians, for the anarchist is the nation's enemy first and the Government's afterwards. The editor says that it is the bounden duty of all citizens to help the police in tracking the terrorists and in breaking up the conspiracy completely. The danger is not so great for Europeans as for the people of the country, for the anarchists are too young to distinguish between their victims, and their idea is to threaten every one and to terrorize all round.

Referring to the confessions of some of the accused arrested in connection with the anarchist conspiracy, the editor observes that most of them are expelled students, and that the measures taken to enforce discipline in schools and colleges and to prevent young boys from joining political movements, are to a great extent responsible for turning refractory school boys into anarchists.

OUDH AKHBAR, 23rd May 1908.

17. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 23rd May, publishes a letter from a correspondent who, while condemning the Calcutta conspiracy, remarks that the adoption by the Bengalis of the tactics of European anarchists has been very imprudent. A subject nation should always try to win over the ruling nation to its side, and its efforts for its own wellbeing should be constitutional. But the Bengalis have become much incensed by the partition of their province and have tried to excite the people of other provinces also. They ought to have tried to gain the confidence of the British, but they are proceeding on entirely wrong lines, and have forfeited whatever claim they had to the confidence of the British nation. Bengal does not set an example to other provinces, and its imprudent policy will be looked on in other provinces with little appreciation. They know well that they cannot destroy the British Empire by bomb shells, and European officers, too, are too strong-minded to be overawed by such threats. The British nation is itself strong enough and it has the willing allegiance of the loyal prince of India, and there is very little chance for any revolutionary body to subvert its power. The anarchists could have only blown up some buildings, resulting in the loss of life of their own countrymen. The Bengalis have proved it beyond doubt that they have little affection for the English, and when the enquiries into the origin of the conspiracy are complete, it will be seen how many rich and influential Bengalis had a hand in it. It is a notorious fact that most of the young men were misguided by the seditous speeches of Bepin Chandra Pal and other irresponsible agitators. The present attitude of the Bengalis is looked upon with disgust by the people of other parts of India, and as for the British rulers, they care very little for the hysteric outbursts of deluded Bengalis.

The Calcutta conspiracy.

Fruitless searches.

18. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 17th May, takes exception to the regular campaign of house-searching for infernal machines, explosives and arms by the Bengal Police, and observes that indiscriminate house-searches will exasperate people and merely help to swell the ranks of the terrorists. INDIAN PEOPLE, 17th May 1908.

Confessions of the anarchists.

19. From the voluntary confessions that have hitherto been made by the anarchists, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 17th May, draws two inferences. He says that in the first place the prisoners have shown their utter fearlessness, neither death nor imprisonment has any terror for them, nor are they troubled with remorse. In the next place their object is to induce other young men to follow in their footsteps. INDIAN PEOPLE, 17th May 1908.

The Anglo-Indian press.

20. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 17th May, publishes a letter sent by Mr. Nepal Chandra Rae, B.A., of Allahabad, to the Pioneer for publication, which for some reasons was not published in that paper. CITIZEN, 17th May 1908.

Mr. Rae quotes a paragraph from the Pioneer referring to the assassination of some persons in Mr. Stolpyne's Villa, that concludes as follows:—

"It becomes impossible for even the stoutest-hearted men to govern fairly or strongly when every moment of their lives is spent in terror of a revolting death and they grow into craven shirkers, and sustain themselves by a frenzy of retaliation which increases the conflagration they are striving to check. Such conditions cannot last."

Mr. Rae says that human nature is the same all the world over, and the conditions holding good in Russia are applicable to India also.

The British bureaucrats are as much responsible for the bomb outrages in India as the Russian autocrats are in their country. Repressive measures will prove as futile in this country as anywhere else and may perhaps increase the conflagration. He says that violence is naturally repulsive to the people of India, and that the tactics used by the anarchists are of entirely European origin.

For the growth of this dangerous feeling in the country, the Anglo-Indian press is as much responsible as the bureaucracy. He complains that contemptible scribblers have been allowed to vilify the Bengalis in the Anglo-Indian papers. This has exasperated many young men and they have thus entered upon their career of crime.

In the end, he appeals to the Anglo-Indian press and to the Pioneer especially to stick to its principle and to give sound and sober advice to the Government at this critical moment.

The Anglo-Indian press on the situation.

21. The editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), referring to a remark of the Pioneer in connection with the Muzaffarpur tragedy, suggesting the adoption of Russian methods by the British Government, says, in the issue of the 17th May, that it is not at all advisable to adopt methods that have been quite ineffectual in their results in the land of their birth. He says that Russian methods, if adopted in India, cannot fail to alienate the sympathies of the most moderate among the Indians from the Government. HINDOSTHAN, 17th May 1908.

MASHRIQ, 19th May 1908.

22. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 19th May, notes with satisfaction that the British committee of the Moslem League has condemned the rash action of the anarchists. The editor, however, advises Government to act with moderation. Many English officers are apt to form wrong opinions of the loyalty of the educated classes who are always vilified in their presence by subordinate officials.

The Moslem League and the anarchists.

In a subsequent note he indignantly contradicts a rumour that some dynamite, &c., can also be discovered in these provinces.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th May 1908.

23. The editor of the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), in the issue of the 15th May, remarks that he has ever been opposed to the adoption of violent measures on the part of the rulers and the ruled alike as being suicidal to the best interests of order and peace, which are essential for the social, political, and economical development of India. He points out that the use of bombs and the adoption of violent methods are foreign to Indian soil and contrary to the habits and traditions of Indians, and so they can never take root in India, and even if they do they are sure to fall short of their object. He urges that truthfulness, mutual confidence, self-sacrifice and a feeling of brotherhood are the qualities which Indians should cultivate, and suggests that they should devote their energies to the spreading of education among their countrymen and to the development of the resources of the country before they can aspire to improve the condition of their mother land. He remarks that it will be a stain on the character of Indians as a nation if a large number of persons renounce their ancient and righteous practices and imitate Europeans in their diabolical practices in the matter of nihilism.

The present situation.

In conclusion he advises Government not to be misled by the advice of the Anglo-Indian press, as represented by the Pioneer and the Englishman, etc., inasmuch as extraordinary measures of repression will in no way relieve the situation, but on the contrary will make it worse. The best advice in the matter, he thinks, has been given by Mr. R. C. Dutt, and Government will do well to follow it.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 15th May 1908.

24. The Sundar Shringar (Muttra), of the 15th May, expresses abhorence at the Muzaffarpur outrage and at the doings of the Calcutta anarchists. The editor thinks that this spirit of nihilism is the natural outcome of the secular education imparted in Indian schools and colleges without any religious instruction on orthodox Hindu lines. He advises Government to put down this growing evil, not by means of extraordinary measures of repression, as advocated by the Anglo-Indian press, as such action will only help to strengthen the cause of the anarchists, but by the adoption of a conciliatory policy, such as was followed by the late Queen Victoria after the Mutiny of 1857, which had the effect of winning the devotion of Indians for at least fifty years.

The present situation.

HINDOSTHAN, 17th May 1908.

25. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 17th May, has the following on the present situation :—

The present situation.

"Our own idea is that if Government had been properly repressive and in proper time, most of the current evils would have been averted. The repression of a certain kind of speaking and writing would have saved the country from a great deal of mischief. Government has been weak and remiss, not vigilant and severe. But granting all that is alleged against it, is it to be treated as an excuse for seditious conspiracies? We are pained and surprised to find grey-haired men exerting their ingenuity to condone the darkest of crimes, because, forsooth, the country is not self-governing. Does the political wisdom, which they have acquired, justify them in expecting that self-government will be accelerated by the methods that have been revealed? Do they mean to say that Government will now be frightened into a surrender? Or will think it expedient to buy up opposition with generosity? Has that been the case anywhere? Has it been so in England itself? Outrages have never resulted in concessions. The people must either follow methods strictly constitutional, or must force the hands of Government by declaring war and overcoming it. The latter method is out of the question."

The present situation.

26. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 19th May, remarks :— NASIM-I-AGRA, 19th May 1908.

"Where interests clash, there is no mutual union. This is why the rule of foreigners always leads to complications in every country.

A difference between the rulers and the ruled is always baneful. It leads to mutual ill-will and insecurity of life and property, and disorganizes the system of government.

Unrest is detrimental to the interests of the country where it reigns. If unrest prevails it should be removed ; but who is to remove it ?

When a country is about to progress or to retrograde, strange sights are to be seen. Disorganized institutions get organized and vice versa. In such times the perception of right and wrong becomes difficult, and instead of union and order there is chaos everywhere. The condition of India fills us with horror these days. Are these the signs of a coming storm which will sweep away everything from the surface of the earth, or are these the signs of progress ? Plague, cholera, small-pox, and malaria lead to strange forebodings. O, Lord ! what will happen next ?"

The present situation.

27. A correspondent of the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 21st May, expresses his regret at the bomb outrage at Muzaffarpur and severely condemns the action of the young men who did it. No genuine Hindu, he thinks, can contemplate this state of things without "instinctive horror and pain." He is, however, glad to see that the number of these "misguided firebrands" and "soulless cranks" is very small. He cannot see how the regeneration of India, for which peace and order are necessary, can be effected by these means. He ascribes the whole thing to the baneful influence of "lurid anarchist literature from Europe." In conclusion he says that he is disposed to believe that the scheme was financed by some "monied wire-pullers" and thinks that the young men responsible for the outrage have received aid from France. He hopes that the authorities will not confine their enquiries to Bengal, but will extend them to foreign countries as well, which are the happy haunts of nihilism and anarchism. CITIZEN, 21st May 1908.

The future of India.

28. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 16th May, reproduces an article from the Jhang Sial (Jhang, Panjab), headed "We and Our Future". SWARAJYA, 16th May 1908.

India—Past and present.

29. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), in its combined issue of the 8th and 16th May, while comparing the past and present conditions of India, remarks that it is a matter of regret that Indians are not appointed to high posts in the Civil Service and in the Army, when they are fit for such appointments. The editor exhorts the people of India, and especially of the United Provinces, to reform society and to interest themselves solely in the acquisition of knowledge. AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th and 16th May 1908.

Cause of sedition in India.

30. Referring to the article in the March number of the Calcutta Review for the year 1856, and also to the speeches of Sir Jasper Nicholson (?) and Captain Maken (?) before the Select Committee of the House of Commons in 1832, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, says that in order to make the Indian Army loyal, the pay of the soldiers should be increased. For the present, in spite of their acknowledged good services, their condition is even worse than that of an ordinary coolie who can earn 12 annas a day. RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

Sedition in the country.

31. Commenting upon a telegram that appeared in the Pioneer, to the effect that political lecturers are spreading sedition in Madras, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, says that the statements that have been represented as seditious are :— RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

"That Europeans are taking away gold and silver from the land and that people should remain prepared for self-government." The editor says that the former statement, if true (as it is), does not imply anything seditious, and the latter also he sees no reason to call seditious.

Seditious movements in India.

32. Referring to an article of the London correspondent of a Japanese paper dealing with the secret importation of firearms in India, the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 20th May, says that it is possible that there are some seditious Indians in America, HINDUSTANI, 20th May 1908.

but that they or the Indians in India can subscribe for a lakh of rifles is beyond comprehension. It was rumoured last year that some officers of the detective department had gone from England to America, but it is not known if they went there in this connection or for some other purpose.

RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

The Tinnevelly riots.

33. Referring to the Tinnevelly and Tuticorin riot cases, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, says that the result of the trial is a foregone conclusion, and that Government may adopt whatever proceedings it likes.

ADVOCATE, 17th May 1908.

The solution of the Transvaal question.

34. Under the heading "The Transvaal Solution—Its Lessons," the Advocate of the 17th May, makes the following observations :—

"The success of the agitation in the Transvaal has once more proved the fact that forces mightier than might are at work even in the political world and privileges may be wrested from rulers even without shedding one drop of blood, provided, of course, there is the one thing needful—unity and solidarity. How we lack this supreme and saving virtue. And hence our trouble."

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 16th May 1908.

India and Egypt.

35. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 16th May, says that the majority of Indians want to progress but adopt foolish methods to do so. The Egyptians are also actuated by the same motive, but their measures are always prudent.

SWARAJYA, 16th May 1908.

"Nihilism in Europe and in India."

36. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 16th May, under the heading "Nihilism in Europe and in India", remarks :—

"Nihilism is of European origin and the climate of India is not adapted to its growth. The young men who were responsible for the Muzaffarpur outrage clearly showed by their subsequent behaviour that they were very sorry for what they had done, i.e. for killing two innocent women. They seemed to be convinced that their mission was under divine disfavour and so they boldly declared themselves ready to suffer capital punishment.

But European anarchists seldom display such weakness. They are at war with society and have little regard for human suffering. They feel a diabolical pleasure in shedding human blood. It was this blood thirstiness which led them to assassinate President McKinley and the late King of Italy. Their murderers, when arrested, declared that no man had a right to bear sway over his fellow-men, and therefore they killed such men (kings and rulers)."

Continuing, the editor says, that it is impossible that India should give birth to such men. One effect of contact with Western people is that Indians are slowly getting demoralized. The reason of this is that the sole characteristic of European civilization is selfishness, and the result is that to one rich and well-to-do man there are hundreds of paupers and beggars. The Hindus are firm believers in the doctrine of Karma, so they do not envy others who are more prosperous, and they hope that they will be happy and contented in their next life, if they live honestly in the present one. In Europe very few men are content with their lot and bitterly envy the fortunate few. This hatred leads to nihilism. But there is a higher class of nihilists, the members of which are not selfish. They are men of feeling and culture and cannot brook the harsh treatment meted out to their brethren, and cannot endure the piteous spectacle of the strong ill-treating the weak. They are perfect models of humanity and sympathy. But they have to adopt these infernal tactics (nihilism) for a time in order to save the oppressed from the tyranny of the wicked, and to gain these ends they become demons incarnate. They are driven into this dangerous position by their indignation at the sufferings of the people and by the contempt they feel for their oppressors. At last they become mad with passion and have no hesitation in stabbing their victims, and they do not think that they are themselves committing a grievous sin.

The editor further says that he cannot refrain from remarking that if European civilization and power had not made the people of this country a prey to so many evils, they would not have been so much infuriated and would not have become nihilists, and especially when they were themselves living in ease and comfort, they would not have jeopardized their lives. It is impossible that the nihilism of the baser class could ever take root in India, for the Hindus are naturally averse to the shedding of blood, and such aversions cannot be easily conquered.

Up to the present, he says, he did not believe that the nihilism of the other class, too, could find favour with the people of India, but he has been sadly deceived. Repression always produces bitterness and exasperation, and in such a state a man is generally prone to err. So he advises the Government to rule justly and equitably. If this is done, he is sure that nihilism, which is getting a hold on the minds of young men, will naturally die out."

HINDUSTANI, 20th May 1908.

"History on Indian Problems."

37. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 20th May, reproduces the comments of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 14th May, on the article entitled "Some Lessons from History on the Problems of Indian Administration" contributed by Mr. C. W. Whish to the Imperial and Asiatic Quarterly Review.

HINDOSTHAN, 17th May 1908.

The poverty of India.

38. Commenting upon the speech of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya on the United Provinces Budget, the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), in the issue of the 17th May, says that "undoubtedly it is true that much of the poverty and distress of the bulk of the people is due to the fact that the State does not leave a fair portion of the fruits of his industry to the tiller of the soil, and the delusion that the cultivator is to retain eight annas in the rupee has been removed and the hopes that were placed on the suggested settlement have been shattered by Government's providing for the constant occurrences of drought and hail."

He then refers to the invidious distinction made by the Government between the treatment of revenue defaulters and judgment-debtors, and asks "is this not a right grievance, and, if it is, then does it not deserve our Government's kind consideration, which will minimise, nay, rather obliterate the vigour of drought and hail?"

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th May 1908.

Indians and the present situation.

39. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th May, referring to the Muzaffarpur outrage and Calcutta discoveries, remarks:—

"The kite in the fable desired to get rid of the chord in order to attain a 'wondrous height,' but no sooner was the string broken than it found itself down upon the earth.

In the same way the desire for freedom is making Indians responsible for many a suicidal act. In the beginning we scarcely believed the rumour regarding the illicit importation of firearms in the country, but now the Muzaffarpur outrage and the Calcutta discoveries show the truth of the rumour. These incidents will be heard of with feelings of regret by every well-wisher of the country. Can a Government, over whose dominion the sun never sets, adopt a moderate policy through the fear of a handful of rebellious persons in the country? On the contrary these persons court their own destruction and ruin by such conduct. The nation that wants to trample the rights of its rulers will itself be trampled down.

A comparison of the present incident with the Etawah affair will show that the former is a practical step while the latter existed only in theory. Had the Etawah affair been thoroughly sifted, some secret would have been revealed. But if the present enthusiasm continues the day is not far distant when the conspiracies, which have been dismissed as existing only in deranged minds, will prove to be real. In any case the present situation is quite deplorable."

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th May 1908.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

40. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th May, after referring to the internal quarrels and dessensions between Hindus and Muhammadans in this country, says that now that a desire to regenerate their mother country has become almost a passion with Indians these days, it is time to consider the question of reunion between Hindus and Muhammadans.

The difference of religion, in the opinion of the editor, can be no bar to union. He says that Indians should take a lesson from the Chinese, who, in spite of their religious differences are always ready to present a solid front to the enemy. The Muhammadans there have adopted the Budhist mode of life and are scarcely distinguishable from the inhabitants of the country. In India the case is quite different. Though the "aims and objects" of every society are to promote healthy relations between different communities of India, yet in practice such aims are honoured more when antagonistic than when conciliatory.

For example, the Hindu leaders, who always pose as advocates of reconciliation, do not forget to refer to Mahmud Ghaznavi, and to Muhammad Ghore in their public speeches. What can such conduct do except to emphasize the existing bitterness? Can we not forget the past and proceed united in our common cause and determined to attain our object without allowing any sectarian feeling to come in our way?

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 16th May 1908.

How to punish offenders.

41. Referring to the advice of the newspapers that Government should not have resort to fresh legislation for suppressing anarchists because the arm of the law is long enough to reach every criminal, the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 16th May, says that fresh legislation would be really very unfortunate for the country. But it cannot be said that, after the Calcutta discoveries, everything of the kind has come to an end. The situation has not improved. Some of the violent organs have not modified their tone. Secret Societies are still at work. It is the duty of all good citizens, therefore, to co-operate with the police in finding out these agencies with a view to put a stop to their devilish work.

The editor remarks that it is very wonderful that the persons that have been arrested in Calcutta and Muzaffarpur are quite calm—even jubilant—and do not betray any anxiety regarding the fate which is in store for them.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th May 1908.

Yugantar and unrest.

42. Referring to the article on Promissory Notes that appeared in the Yugantar (Calcutta), and commenting on the statement that if one man was taken from every village in India there would be a regular army of eight lakhs of Indians, the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th May, says that these are the writings that have created unrest in Bengal and imperilled the peace of the whole of India.

HINDOSTHAN, 19th May 1908.

Russian methods in India.

43. Continuing the remarks on the application of Russian methods to India, the editor of the Hindosthan (Kalakankar), in the issue of the 19th May, says that to place the whole Indian press under the hand of an arbitrary censorship or to subject it to reactionary laws would be both unjust and inadvisable. Moreover, the press, as a safety valve for the escape of superfluous gas in the shape of political ravings, will lose most of its usefulness, and the expression of political grievances through the channel of the press may be replaced by more dangerous institutions. Another reason, the editor says, why Russian methods should be put off is that the Government has still to try the policy of conciliation, for hitherto no regard whatsoever has been paid to public opinion in India. Our rulers are under the impression that it would be a confession of weakness if the influence of public opinion was acknowledged, and to illustrate this idea the editor refers to the speech of the Viceroy on the Government resolution regarding the reform proposals in which His Excellency said: "That the Government of India had of their own initiative, &c., &c.," when Indian public opinion had for years been agitating for similar concessions. In the present situation he suggests that Government should take every opportunity of acknowledging its amenability to the influence of public opinion, and should take measures to conciliate rather than coerce the people. Individual persons and newspapers inciting the people to violence and crime should be dealt with in the severest manner possible. He concludes by saying that "with the co-operation of Indian leaders and members of the aristocracy it would be easy to restore things to their normal condition, and when once so restored, a sympathetic policy of conciliation and the recognition of public opinion will secure order, peace and progress, and Russian methods will be needed neither to restore nor to maintain order."

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th and 16th May 1908.

Sir A. P. MacDonnell.

44. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), in its combined issue of the 8th and 16th May, publishes an article by a correspondent, who says that he has seen, in a state of trance, that Lord Minto has handed over the Government of India, on the plea of inability to cope with the difficulty of the present situation in India, to Sir A. P. MacDonnell; that Mr. D. C. Baillie has been appointed Lieutenant Governor of Bengal with Mr. Radice as his Chief Secretary.

45. Referring to the announcement that the Government here and in England, while fully alive to the danger of violent political crime, has no intention of withdrawing or deferring the proposed reforms, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 17th May, says that it is satisfactory, as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough, and if the scheme tentatively put forward is ultimately sanctioned without any increase in popular representation, it will not be looked upon as a reform but as the reverse. He says that such reforms, without the assent of the people of the country, will not have the slightest effect on the country beyond creating widespread disappointment and discontent. The real reform to which the country looks forward is the recognition by the Government of what is due to public feeling and public opinion. He characterizes the aloofness of the system of Government as a bar to reform, and observes that no real influence can be exerted upon public measures either by the Council of Notables or by the expanded Legislative Councils.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 17th May 1908.

Reforms and anarchism.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

46. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th May, referring to the disturbances on the frontier, advises the British Government not to doubt the good faith of the Amir, unless the rumours current have been proved to be true, and to refrain from pressing the Amir to accept the terms of the Anglo-Russian Convention, as it is mainly in the interests of Russia and will be of little use to either Afghanistan or England.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 16th May 1908.

The Amir.

47. A correspondent of Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 19th May, contradicts the insinuation made by the Anglo-Indian press that the Amir supplies the frontier tribesmen with arms. He remarks that it is an open secret that they steal most of their weapons from British cantonments, and they probably steal some from Afghanistan too.

AL BASHIR, 19th May 1908.

The Frontier.

48. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 22nd May, referring to the constant disturbances on the frontier, remarks that the tribesmen have been always unruly and turbulent, even under Musalman Government. The British Government has always dealt leniently with them and so they have been led to think that they are too strong to be overcome and therefore the Government always adopts a conciliatory policy towards them.

OUDH AKHBAR, 22nd May 1908.

The Frontier.

The Government, when dealing with the frontier tribes, does not take into consideration the immense influence wielded by the Mullahs in Afghanistan and on the frontier. It is they who insite the border men to make depredations on British territory, and something must be done to bring them round and thus put an end to this endless warfare on the frontier.

III.—Native States.

Nil.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

49. Commenting upon the very light sentence of a fine passed upon a certain European gentleman by a Magistrate in Madras for the alleged offence of beating a driver so severely that he subsequently died from the effects of the injuries received, the Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 20th May, asks how long will Magistrates continue to embitter the feelings of the public against the Government by such partial judgments? The matter deserves the serious attention of the Government.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 20th May 1908.

A Madras sensation.

50. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 21st May, strongly condemns the Whipping Act in India, and in arguing for the abolition of whipping as a punishment refers to Regulation II of 1834 and to the Indian Law Commissioners' report of 1837, which once graced the Indian Statute Book. The editor says that its exclusively punitive and degrading character as a punishment ought to find no place in the legal methods of civilized humanity.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 21st May 1908.

Whipping in India.

(b).—Police.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th May 1908.

The police and the blowing up of Sir Andrew Fraser's train.

51. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 15th May, says that now that an anarchist of the Calcutta conspiracy has confessed to his attempt to blow up Sir Andrew Fraser's train, it is advisable that Government should order a sifting inquiry into the matter and should not only release the khalasis who have been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment as the authors of the outrage, if they are proved to be innocent, but also compensate them for the trouble and hardship they have undergone, and that the police officers who brought those innocent men into trouble should be taught such a lesson as will impress upon their minds the fact that their duty is only to trace real culprits and get them properly punished and not to bring trouble upon helpless and innocent persons.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

CITIZEN, 17th May 1908.

The English Budget.

52. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 17th May, while comparing the English and Indian Budgets, remarks :—

"What a delightful, though from our point of view, melancholy, contrast does the English Budget present to our own! In three years they have reduced the National Debt by 40 to 50 millions. In the Budget for the current year they have provided for a reduction in the duty on sugar as well as in the marine insurance duty, while provision has also been made for an expenditure of £1,200,000 for payment of old age pensions. Contrast with this the position of our own Government. The English Government can afford the luxury of taking a decided step towards Socialism; our Government cannot spend adequately, or, indeed, more than a nominal sum, on such an urgent requirement as sanitary improvement. The conditions of the two peoples differ exactly in the same proportion as the financial positions of the two Governments. In England we have a people, the bulk of whom are well-to-do, if not prosperous. In India we have a population, a considerable portion of whom never know what it is to have a full meal from year's end to year's end. When we speak of the prevailing discontent, let none of us forget the part which the poverty of the bulk of the people, coupled with the failure of the Government to look to their most urgent needs, whether on account of its perennial want of pence or for other reasons, plays in bringing that state of things into existence."

ADVOCATE, 21st May 1908.

Conversion of Government paper.

53. Referring to the request of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce to the Government of India to convert the 3 per cent. promissory notes into 3½ per cent., the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st May, makes the following observations :—

"We hope that the Government will be in no hurry to oblige the investors in Madras and Bombay and that it will consider whether ½ per cent. extra interest will prove a burden to the Indian taxpayer or not."

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

Local self-government.

54. Municipalities are said to be the training schools for those that want to take part in the larger scheme of self-government. But, asks the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, have Indians really any voice in the management of these bodies?

The imposition of taxes on persons leaving Lahore and the ridiculous order of the Naushehra Cantonment Magistrate clearly show that officers responsible for these acts do not hold themselves responsible to any one. These are the causes of unrest, and since they themselves are the authors of them, they go about in search of other causes, to which they can attribute the present unrest.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 15th May 1908.

The Agra Municipality.

55. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 15th May, complains that—

(1) the Agra Municipality supplies water only for four and a half hours in the day instead of for nine hours;

(2) that the drains in the city are in a very dirty condition and will probably be the cause of an epidemic.

56. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th May, invites the attention of the municipal authorities of Moradabad to the wretched condition of the Katra Serai which is so much frequented by strangers coming to the city. The serai is in a very dilapidated condition and its surroundings are very unclean. If the authorities do not turn their attention to it, it is very probable that cholera and plague will break out and devastate the whole town.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th May 1908.

The Moradabad Municipality.

57. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 18th May, again complains of the insufficiency of the water supply of Benares.

BHARAT JIWAN, 18th May 1908.

Water supply at Benares.

58. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st May, makes the following observations on the scheme for the improvement of the congested areas of Calcutta, sanctioned by the Secretary of State:—

ADVOCATE, 21st May 1908.

Calcutta improvement scheme.

"So long as one does not see the terms in which the ultimate responsibility of the Corporation is defined, one cannot say how far the liabilities of the proposed Trust should devolve on the former. The Corporation gave it out as its opinion that it ought not to be held liable should the scheme miscarry. This is indeed a legitimate demand. And when the control of the Trust will be in hands other than those of the Corporation, its responsibility for liabilities seems a procedure against both law and equity. The Government as the authority appointing the Trust and checking its accounts and controlling its operations should guarantee its liabilities. The primary right of checking and sanctioning every estimate being denied to the Corporation, it cannot be held responsible for the transactions of the Trust."

(e).—Education.

59. Referring to the rumour that Government wants to prevent Indians from entering the Educational department because they disseminate sedition among students, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, says that whatever may be the truth of the rumour, this at any rate is certain that the Pioneer's explanation of the prohibitory order is quite incorrect. The real reason is not the incapability of Indians as is said by the Allahabad journal. There may be some unknown considerations at work. "May God grant a sense of justice to our rulers".

RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

Indians in the Educational department.

60. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th May, asks if the Model Girls School in Bareilly is a sectarian institution. If not, how can the absence of the Muhammadan element in it be accounted for? Will the District Magistrate and the Inspector of Schools kindly look to it?

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th May 1908.

The Model Girls School in Bareilly.

61. Reviewing the increasing difficulty in finding suitable vocational training for Indian youths and the want of adequate provision for such training in the present day schools, the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 17th May, remarks that culture is certainly a requisite factor in the development of good citizenship, but "industrialism" is no mean factor in the emancipation of the country from many evils. It is a hopeful sign that present day activities have drawn the attention of responsible persons to the fact that the general problem of industrial education in the country must be solved with special reference to such training of Indian youths as will enable them to be usefully employed after they leave school. After describing the state of affairs that has made this problem more serious for the middle class people, the editor observes:—

INDIAN PEOPLE, 17th May 1908.

Industrial education in schools.

"Nothing is clearer, therefore, than that the means hitherto employed for the education of our youths are inadequate. To save them from the existing situation and its dangers, if not for the social and thence the political emancipation of the country, our youths must be seriously taken in hand. They must be given useful and healthy occupations in life, so that they can really become 'economic units' which they at present are not and cannot become." It is to be deplored that in spite of the want of skilled and educated labour nothing has been done to meet this demand. The real need, the editor says, is the establishment of independent and separate institutions side by side with public schools where youths may obtain commercial and vocational training. There is a grand opportunity, he points out, for any honest and enterprising man with some capital; for the undertaking is bound to be profitable and will relieve many poor parents and guardians of the necessity of sending their boys to Bombay, Poona or Calcutta.

CITIZEN, 21st May 1908.

Educational problems.

62. Lala Hardayal Mathur contributes a lengthy article to the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 21st May, on educational problems in which he says that the chief aim of education should be to awaken in the minds of children the sense of patriotism and esprit de corps by teaching them the traditions of their race. He says:—

"Education must therefore begin with the history of the race to which the boy belongs. The individuality of a nation consists in the mass of tradition and historical memories which should form the intellectual equipment of even the meanest and the most uncultured member of the social group. This historical tradition distinguishes one nation from another—it is the chief badge of nationality, the sign of freemasonry that gives admission to its sacred circle. All that the race has done is its treasures, the deeds it has wrought, the thoughts it has perfected, the emotions it has felt, the arts it has developed, the revolutions it has undergone, all this and much more the race preserves and transmits from generation to generation as an heirloom never to be cast aside. Thus the boy is made to feel that he is bound by indissoluble ties to those who have gone before him, that he has a part in all the experiences of his race and that he must merge his little life in the vaster and grander life of the nation. The awakening of patriotism through the teaching of national history is thus the first requisite of a sound educational system.

And this training resolves itself into several elements:—

(1) The teaching of historical tradition.
(2) The consequent formation of a certain type of character.
(3) The reproduction of the social environment of the nation in the life of the school, as the customs and manners of a people are the result of the process of historical growth it has passed through."

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

HINDOSTHAN, 19th May 1908.

Co-operative Talukdari Estate Banks.

63. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 19th May, advocates the establishment of Co-operative Talukdari Estate Banks to be run by the opulent talukdars and bankers of the province in order to afford facility in the management of such encumbered estates as are not properly managed by their proprietors.

ADVOCATE, 21st May 1908.

Famine in Gonda and Bahraich.

64. Of all the famine-affected districts in Oudh, the editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), remarks in the issue of the 21st May, Gonda and Bahraich are the most affected, and to add to the hardship of the famine-stricken cholera has also broken out here and there. He says that it is a matter of pleasure that the Oudh Provincial Famine Committee has resolved to spend every pie that it can afford to mitigate the sufferings of the people in Gonda and Bahraich, and hopes that the Committee's example will be followed by private agencies. The question why of all places Bahraich should suffer most when these two districts have been the granaries of coarser grains in the late famine, the editor thinks, requires explanation, and to arrive at a satisfactory solution some steps should be taken to make an inquiry into the economic condition of these districts. He asks the talukdars of these districts and other landholders whether the time has not come when they should revise their system of collection of rent and abolish the middlemen between themselves and their tenants, as experience has shown that mustagir leaseholders of villages realize more than what they have to pay to the zamindars. They have no permanent interest in the village and it matters little to them if the tenant is ruined. They have all the power of the landholder for oppression without having any interest in the welfare of the people. In conclusion, he advises the leading talukdars of these two districts to put their heads together as to what measures of self-protection they should take to prevent the tenantry from being reduced to the condition of paupers.

65. One-fourth of the population of Bahraich district, says the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st May, is on Famine Relief Works these days. Does not this show the extreme poverty to which we have been reduced under the aegis of the British Government? The wonder is that whatever little we feel disposed to do in order to remove the sufferings of the poor we do through the agency of the Government. Cannot Indians start independent relief missions? As long as Indians are not self-reliant there is very little hope of an improvement in the condition of the country.

RAHBAR, 21st May 1908.

Famine and the duty of Indians.

(g).—General.

66. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 15th May, contains a long article on the industrial development of India, in which the writer, after reviewing the annual report of the Director of the Geological Survey of India, urges the necessity of Indians taking to commerce and industries as being the sole means whereby the most crying need of the country, namely the improvement of its economical condition, can be achieved. The editor points out that for the attainment of this object, Indians should cultivate industry, technical skill, and a knowledge of the organization of labour and capital and not the knowledge of manufacturing bombs for the destruction of European officials.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th May 1908.

Industrial development of India.

67. A correspondent of the Awaza-i-Khalq, writing in its issue of the 8th and 16th May, remarks that the English in India appear in four capacities, i.e. as masters, financiers, traders (buyers of raw produce), and merchants (sellers of finished products), and that Indians figure as subjects, clients (debtors), cultivators, and buyers. In these four ways the English exploit the wealth and resources of India. India has to pay exorbitant salaries to English officials in India and in England and interest on British money invested in railways, &c. English traders take away almost all the grain produced in India, and do not pay for it in hard cash, but by exchanging the finished products of their own country. They have another advantage: they buy promissory notes issued by the Secretary of State for India in English currency, and then get them cashed in India, and pay off their liabilities to Indian traders, making a little profit by the transaction.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 8th and 16th May 1908.

Commercial relations of India and England.

68. Under the heading "A Plea for Activity", the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 17th May, notes that the prominent feature of industrial activity in these provinces seems to be that many questions are being mooted, and many schemes launched. The pros and cons of all these schemes are carefully weighed and the proposals are abandoned. He then refers to the "Pioneer Sugar Company" scheme and asks if the gentlemen responsible for the situation are not feeling that the reputation of the educated community is at stake? Any other industrial scheme under these circumstances, he says, will be taken up with very little sympathy by the public when the fate of the "Pioneer Sugar Company" scheme is generally known.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 17th May 1908.

Industrial activity in the United Provinces.

69. Mr. Keir Hardie, says the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st May, holds very optimistic views regarding the future of Indian industries. In his opinion the time is not far distant when Lancashire and Yorkshire will pale into insignificance before the rising centres of Indian trade. But the sloth and indifference of Indian leaders, says the editor, does not make one very hopeful. Besides, the rise of Indian industries does not necessarily mean the death of English ones. The Britisher, if ousted from India, will surely find another field for his activities in some other part of the world.

In another note the editor remarks that our progress was much handicapped because of the fact that Indian leaders overlooked the real population of India, e.g. the masses. But, fortunately, the present revival has brought home to them the necessity of carrying the masses with them and, so, much practical work may be expected in the near future.

RAHBAR, 21st May 1908.

The future of Indian industries.

70. Indians, says the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, should try to secure respect in their own country if they want to be treated with consideration in the land of

RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

Treatment of Indians in their own country.

others. They complain of ill-treatment in the Transvaal, but are they not equally ill-treated in India? Take for instance the case of the Magistrate of Puri, who has made it punishable for Indians to walk along the beach road there. Can't we remove these restrictions? We can if we only will.

ARYA MITRA, 16th May 1908.

Europeans and Indians.

71. A correspondent writing to the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th May, reports that one Babhut Nath of Goral was severely thrashed by a European military officer at Champawat (Kumaun) because he refused to carry his luggage to a certain place.

JEDD-O-JEHAD, 18th May 1908.

Europeans and Indians.

72. The Jedd-o-Jehad (Shahabad), of the 18th May, complains that Englishmen of the present generation do not treat Indians considerately, and call them liars, &c., without realising that they may resent such treatment. This he ascribes, to some exent, to the coarse flattery used by some Indians when speaking to Europeans. It even sometimes happens that while speaking to an Indian in the vernacular, they begin to abuse him in English, thinking that he does not understand English. Another cause of the ill-feeling among Indians is the scarcity of foodstuffs, which is due to unrestrained exports to foreign countries.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 15th May 1908.

The Vernacular Press.

73. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 15th May, referring to some correspondence in the Pioneer about the restriction of the Vernacular Press, remarks that if officials honestly noted the advice given them by the press and tried to act upon it, there would be little discontent among the people. The editor hopes that the English will not let go their hold on the hearts of the people of India, and says that he is doubtful whether any fresh press legislation will be useful in allaying the widespread discontent.

CITIZEN, 17th May 1908.

The Vernacular Press.

74. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 17th May, in discussing the proposal of Mr. S. M. Mitra (who is called a traitor) regarding the gagging of the Vernacular Press, makes the following remarks:—

"There is nothing original in the suggestion. It was tried and abandoned. It was tried by a Tory Viceroy and was abandoned by a Liberal Government. But though the suggestion is old and hackneyed, the fact that it is made by a native of India is bound to make an impression upon English public opinion. In times of excitement the popular mind is prone to accept foolish suggestions, having an air of plausibility and apparently made by competent authority. To restrain the Vernacular Press by measures outside the ordinary law of the land is really to sit on the safety-valve; and especially this is so in a time of unrest and excitement. Every available avenue of information ought to be wide open free from restraint of any kind, at a time when the Government ought to be in close touch with the deeper thoughts of the people. To suggest the gagging of the press at such a time is counsel of supreme unwisdom, and it could only have been made by one who does not understand what he is talking about or is distinctly inimical to the Government. The true remedy of the situation lies in an altogether different direction. Not repression, but conciliation should be the motto of the Government. Repression has been tried and it has failed. It is a melancholy fact that in the world-wide Empire of Britain, Nihilism should have found its imitators in India alone and among a people notoriously peaceful and law-abiding. The fact is a sad commentary upon the methods of British administration in India. It points to the urgent needs of substantial changes in the form of the government of the country. Why is it that an outrage, such as the one which has convulsed the country from one end to the other and has filled the public mind with horror, is unknown in any other part of the British Empire? Because in those parts the people are satisfied with their lot and enjoy the blessing of self-government. But here we have been told by the highest authority that self-government is not to be thought of, even within such time as the imagination of man can pierce through. This fatal doctrine, inconsistent with the laws of God and man, must be disavowed and definite steps should be taken towards giving the people an assured position in the government of their own country. Mr. Mitra's suggestion is mischievous and foolish. No one has made him the spokesman of his countrymen. We repudiate his representative character."

Inflammatory writings.

75. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 21st May, refers to the most objectionable paragraph that appeared recently in the Asian in connection with the Muzaffarpur bomb outrage and remarks that seditious writings in Indian newspapers have resulted not only in the multiplicity of prosecutions, but have also called forth a special circular letter from the Governor General in Council, whereas nothing has been done about Anglo-Indians who appeal to the worst passions of their readers. He says that Government will fail in its duty if it punishes the Yugantar and allows the Asian to go free.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 21st May 1908.

The Swadeshi movement.

76. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 16th May, exhorts Jains to use and deal in swadeshi articles even though they may be coarser and dearer than those of foreign manufacture, so as to encourage indigenous manufactures and thereby resuscitate the material resources of India.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th May 1908.

Promissory notes.

77. Referring to the notice that has been circulated among the people to the effect that they should not invest their money in Government Promissory Notes, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, says that this incident points to the unrest due to the imprudent policy of the rulers of this country.

RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

Grievances of clerks in the office of Examiner of Accounts.

78. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 17th May, publishes an article from a correspondent in which the writer brings to the notice of the Local Government the following grievances of the clerks in the office of the Examiner of Accounts, Public Works Department, Allahabad :—

CITIZEN, 17th May 1908.

(1) That Mr. Swetenham, since he has taken charge of his post, has filled six or seven permanent vacancies with men who are not trained accountants, who have not passed any high University examination, and who are, in the majority of cases, Europeans.

(2) That some trained and qualified men holding responsible posts have resigned owing to the highly objectionable behaviour of Mr. Swetenham.

(3) That he has appointed in his office, on salaries of Rs. 60 or Rs. 80, men who have been doing insignificant work on Rs. 20 in other provinces.

(4) That he has abolished the only clerical post of Rs. 200.

(5) That the older clerks are doing responsible work on small salaries while these new men, with large salaries, are doing only audit work which is very easy.

(6) That he has reduced the number of clerks, in spite of the protests of the gazetted officers in the department, and so the clerks have to work nine or ten hours every day.

(7) That he misinterprets article 71 of the Civil Service Regulations and says that the whole time of a public servant is at the disposal of the State.

(8) That he is day by day unnecessarily increasing the work of his office.

The Sivaji cult.

79. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 19th May, publishes a letter from a Musalman correspondent who condemns Sivaji, calls him a highwayman, rebel, and a traitor, and says that he has little claim to be called a national hero. It is downright ungratefulness, he says, to revive the memory of such a man when India is being governed by a just Government, and when the grievances of the people, if any, are more imaginary than real. He is of opinion that although Sivaji worship had its origin in the Mahratta country, yet it was given its present importance by the Bengalis who wanted to excite the feelings of the warlike Mahrattas. He severely criticizes the present untenable position of the Bengalis and holds them guilty of vilifying of Government by the kindness of which they have been appointed Collectors and Commissioners and have been given access even to the India Council. The disaffection among the Bengalis towards the Government has culminated in the murder of Mrs. and Miss Kennedy. He tells them that it is rank folly on their part to defy a Government which succeeded in establishing itself in India at a time when it was harassed on the one side by the Mahrattas and on the other by the Pindaris, and suppressed the Sepoy Mutiny.

SAHIFA, 19th May 1908.

He concludes with an exhortation to the Musalmans to keep aloof from agitation and advises the Government to put down sedition with a strong hand.

RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

Mr. Pal and a European gentleman.

80. Mr. Pal, says the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, was travelling with some of his friends in a tramcar. There were some students also in the car. A European gentleman got into the car and asked a boy to vacate the seat for him. The boy refused to do so and the European gentleman removed him by force. The boys in the car felt much annoyed and appealed to Bepin Babu, and said if you were not here we would give the gentleman a severe thrashing. If we did so in your presence you would be held responsible for it."

On hearing this Bepin Babu went to the European and the following dialogue then ensued :—

Bepin Babu.—Sir, why did you disgrace that Bengali young man?

European.—Who are you to ask me such questions?

Bepin Babu.—Don't you know me: I am the (worthy) son of my mother . . . . . People call me Bepin Chandra Pal.

European.—(In a tremulous tone) what! Pal! The great renowned Patriot Pal! Excuse me. I will tell you the truth, Mr. Pal. After a hard day in office I felt so exhausted that I thought the air would do me good so came for a ride. Excuse me, I do not want to quarrel. I myself am going to leave the seat. I shall sit by you. When the European gentleman was comfortably accommodated, Mr. Pal said :—"It was well that I was here otherwise these boys would have injured you and they would have willingly consented to be royal guests in the Presidency jail."

This incident, the editor says, shows what great respect our rulers have for the brave patriot—Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal.

V.—Legislative.

ANAND, 16th May 1908.

The threatened press legislation.

81. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 16th May, reproduces a translation of the article in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th instant, entitled "The Threatened Press Legislation."

ADVOCATE, 17th May 1908.

The threatened press legislation.

82. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th May, says that after the bomb outrage at Muzaffarpur, Anglo-Indians and a section of Indians which is always ready to second every proposal of the Anglo-Indians, are loud in their cry for special legislation. The editor, while admitting that a section of the press has given offence to the Government, and that some papers exist only for violent writing and for exciting class hatred, asks if for the sake of a few is it just and proper that the liberty of the entire press should be taken away? He says that the existing law of the land is strong enough to deal with such papers, and that there seems no reason why the Government should have resort to exceptional measures that will rouse still more indignation and fan racial feeling.

Referring to the suggestion that every newspaper should be asked to furnish a substantial security, he remarks that if this is accepted, it will lead to the closing of almost ninety-five per cent. of the vernacular newspaper offices and will be deplorable from every point of view. On the other hand, the one great agency for popular education will be gone and the hands of the Government will be weakened by removing the means of ascertaining public opinion. He further observes that the Extremist press is cutting the ground from under its own feet and that the present policy is most dangerous and suicidal to their cause.

In conclusion he says that it should not be forgotten that any press legislation now sanctioned will come to stay and will undo the work of progress.

83. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 20th May, reproduces the remarks of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th May, on the threatened press legislation.

HINDUSTANI, 20th May 1908.

The threatened press legislation.

VI.—Railway.

84. Referring to the recent Ghaziabad collision, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, says that these frequent accidents have made journeys by railway quite dangerous and that it will be no cause for wonder if people revert to their former modes of locomotion in the course of a few years.

RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

Railway accidents.

85. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 15th May, referring to the Ghaziabad railway collision, remarks that although the number of railway accidents this year has been the largest yet the railway authorities have taken no steps to prevent their recurrence. The editor thinks that railway accidents in India are mainly due to the insufficiency and, at the same time, to the incompetency of the railway staff, and urges that if the number of railway employés is increased and capable men on good salaries are appointed, the number of railway accidents is sure to be reduced to the minimum. He suggests that in order to teach a wholesome lesson to the Railway Company, the relatives of those who have fallen victims in this collision should bring compensation suits against it.

ABHYUDAYA, 15th May 1908.

The Ghaziabad railway collision.

86. Referring to the Ghaziabad railway collision, the Anand (Lucknow), of the 15th May, asks if any mercy will be shown to the dependants of those who have been killed in the accident. The editor expresses a hope that Government will interdict the use of the tablet system for line clear, considering that it is frequently accompanied with such appalling disasters.

ANAND, 15th May 1908.

The Ghaziabad railway collision.

87. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 16th May, referring to the Ghaziabad railway collision, remarks :—

SWARAJYA, 16th May 1908.

The Ghaziabad railway collision.

"It is remarkable that the Government does not take any notice of such mishaps. On the one hand the railway employés are always insulting respectable Indian passengers, and on the other railway travelling is daily becoming more dangerous owing to such accidents. In this way the people are getting more and more discontented and suspicious. But the Government takes no notice of this. It would like to teach the people loyalty by force, but in this way loyalty can never be inculcated, so it should leave this delusive policy and try to be just or it will one day rue its fatal mistake."

88. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th May, referring to the frequent occurrence of accidents on Indian railways, advises Government to compel the railway authorities to pay indemnities to the families of deceased persons.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 16th May 1908.

Railway accidents.

This, the editor says, would have a very salutary effect on railway authorities and they would try to prevent such accidents.

89. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 17th May, referring to the appointment, by the Railway Board, of a committee to inquire into the causes of the failure of the tablet system, remarks that the public would like to know the exact number of persons killed, and points out that the number can be computed by checking the number of tickets issued. The editor wonders why the Railway authorities try to mislead the public by giving wrong figures. He suggests that relief should be given to the families of persons killed and their property should be handed over to their relatives.

ADVOCATE, 17th May 1908.

Railway accidents.

90. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 18th May, referring to the frequent occurrence of accidents on Indian railways, makes the following suggestions for their prevention :—

TOHFA-I-HIND, 18th May 1908.

Railway accidents.

That the railway staff and the pay of the railway employés should be increased, that no one should be made to work day and night and that those lines should be doubled on which there is a good deal of traffic.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th May 1908.

The Ghaziabad collision.

91. Referring to the Ghaziabad collision, the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th May, says that the Railway Board should try to prevent such accidents in future, as if the dangerous nature of railway journeys continues to be present before the mind of the public, the income of railways will suffer very much.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ, 20th May 1908.

The Ghaziabad railway accident.

92. Referring to the Ghaziabad railway collision, the Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 20th May, says that as long as the proposal for doubling railway lines is not accepted, such accidents will continue to be a matter of frequent occurrence.

ZIA-UL-ISLAM, 16th May 1908.

Railway collisions.

93. The Zia-ul-Islam (Moradabad), of the 16th May, referring to the Ghaziabad railway collision and other serious accidents, remarks that they are generally due to the employment of young Eurasians in responsible posts in the railway and to the intemperance prevailing among such railway servants as guards, drivers, &c.

CITIZEN, 17th May 1908.

Platform tickets for East Indian Railway stations.

94. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 17th May, referring to the issue of platform tickets for the Cawnpore Railway Station, suggests the advisability of similar tickets being issued for Allahabad and other important stations on the East Indian Railway, as they would remove a constant source of inconvenience to the Indian public and would prevent frequent altercations between the public and ticket collectors.

HINDUSTANI, 20th May 1908.

Necessity for the extension of a railway line.

95. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 20th May, publishes a letter in which the writer suggests the desirability of connecting Madhoganj, in the Hardoi district, with Shafiganj, in the Unao district, by a railway line. He says that the construction of this line would create great facilities for trade and would also remove the inconveniences to which the public are put in going to Shafiganj to attend annual religious fairs.

VII.—Post-Office.

JADD-O-JEHAD, 11th May 1908.

The Jadd-o-Jehad and the Post office.

96. The Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad), of the 11th May, complains that the Superintendent of Post Offices came to Shahabad on Tuesday, the 3rd May (?), and sent for the manager of the Jadd-o-Jehad who had gone to Lucknow on business. When the Superintendent was informed that the manager was away, he declared that the man had absconded and threatened to cane a servant of the press if he did not inform him of the whereabouts of the manager. The Superintendent had given no previous notice of his coming to the place to make inquiries. The manager publishes an extract from a letter written to him by one M. Samiullah Khan of the Taraqqi-a-Hind Press in connection with the affair, which he received at Lucknow, and a copy of the application addressed by him to the Postmaster-General, in which he invites the attention of the latter to the action of the Superintendent.

JADD-O-JEHAD, 18th May 1908.

The Jadd-o-Jehad and the Post office.

97. The Jadd-o-Jehad (Shahabad), of the 18th May, in a notice to its subscribers, informs them that the publication of its future issues will be delayed owing to the determined opposition of Bishan Prasad, the postmaster, and Hari Lal, the telegraph clerk of Shahabad.

The editor complains that he cannot procure postage stamps in the local post office and that he does not receive his dâk regularly. For over a week he did not receive even a single post card. The Superintendent of Post Offices came to make inquiries, but he granted him no redress, and during the inquiry he called the editor a liar.

In conclusion, he says that he will not be able to issue his paper in future unless the two Babus are transferred or uuless he can make arrangements to publish the paper elsewhere.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social matters.

98. A correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 16th May, says that had the Jains been a united community, bungalows would never have been built on the Parasnath Hill. He points out that they can even now prevent the erection of bungalows there if they but unite together and unanimously boycott English goods.

The Parasnath Hill.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th May 1908.

99. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 16th May, contains two articles in which it is suggested that the Jains should try to protect the Parasnath Hill at any cost. They should fight the matter from the lowest law court to the Privy Council, and if they do not succeed even then, they should boycott foreign goods and resort in a body to the hill and lay themselves down there to be killed before any bungalows are erected.

The Parasnath Hill.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th May 1908.

100. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 16th May, makes the following comments on the representations made by the Jains to the Government about the Parasnath Hill :—

The Parasnath Hill.

SWARAJYA, 16th May 1908.

"No one has mercy on these men. And why should any one be merciful to them. What right have slaves to ask for justice or mercy or to give expression to their religious beliefs.

Selfishness is the order of the day. Whoever speaks of righteousness is supposed to be mad. The demanding of rights is a sin and complaining is a crime. Even this door is closed to us."

In a subsequent note on the same subject the editor remarks :—

"Will not the Government, by its unjust measures, one day cause a conflagration (of popular discontent) in which both the rulers and the ruled will be consumed? The wise should ponder over this, and should not pave the way to their own destruction and ruin by transgressing all limits."

101. Referring to the controversy that is raging over the Licensing Bill in England, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st May, remarks that if a Licensing Bill is necessary in England to stay the havoc done by the drink curse, in India, too, the increasing sale of intoxicants should also be considered a national disgrace and the revenue considerations of the Government should not defeat the much-needed reform in respect to strong drink. In this connection the editor also observes that measures relating to the utilization of the money at the disposal of religious and endowment fund trustees for legitimate purposes are also called for in India, and if the wealth that is at the disposal of mahants and shivaits is not squandered much good will accrue to society.

Temperance crusade.

ADVOCATE, 21st May 1908.

102. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st May, says that in view of the fact that Government has, at the request of the Chinese, stopped the opium trade with China, it is hoped that if a general request is made by Indians, the selling of liquors will be stopped in a short time. But, the editor asks, are Indians prepared to make such a request? If not, Government surely cannot sacrifice its revenue of its own accord.

Government and the temperance movement.

RAHBAR, 21st May 1908.

103. Referring to the conversion of Mrs. Besant to Hinduism, and of Mr. Allen MacGregor to Buddhism, the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th May, says that those who know that Europeans are ready to sacrifice even their lives when national interests are at stake, will think these conversions unreal.

Converts to Hinduism and Buddhism.

RAHBAR, 14th May 1908.

104. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 16th May, contains a poem in which the writer exhorts Hindus to take steps to protect cows as being the most useful animal in household economy, and strongly condemns Muhammadans and Europeans for the slaughter of cows, as also those Hindus who sell cows to butchers.

Protection of cows.

JAIN GAZETTE, 16th May 1908.

105. There is a famous place by the side of the Ganges in Hardwar called Har-ki-Peri. Pilgrims from different parts of the country, says a correspondent of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 20th May, come to this place in order to throw the burnt ashes and bones of their dead in the sacred Ganges. The correspondent says that Hardwar.

HINDUSTANI, 20th May 1908.

this custom should be discouraged both by the public and the Government, since it pollutes the water which is used both for bathing and drinking purposes.

ADVOCATE, 21st May 1908.

106. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st May, has the following :—

The Shia and Sunni quarrels.

"It is rather unfortunate that the relations of Shias and Sunnis at Lucknow continue to be strained. We think steps should have been taken to appoint a Special Magistrate to try the Ashra cases and dispose of them as soon as possible in order to prevent the keeping up of an agitation which is bound to engender an amount of ill-feeling. The Shias complain that the melad meetings held in commemoration of the Prophet instead of being confined to the month of Rajjab are being even now held at which jhandas are read and Sunni boys go about reciting verses to the annoyance of the Shia community. The Sunnis, on the other hand, complain that meetings like Bazam Firozi are held to cause them annoyance. Such activity on the part of both parties adds to the complications of the situation which cannot be removed by appointing commissions but by taking strong executive action against persons who attempt to insult and cause annoyance to people of other persuasions. The fire of class antagonism is smouldering, it must be extinguished; otherwise, who knows, it may lead to deplorable feuds."

AGRA AKHBAR, 21st May 1908.

107. The Agra Akhbar, of the 21st May, while reviewing a pamphlet on widow marriage by Rai Bahadur Nanak Chand, C.I.E., of Indore, endorses his conclusions and advises all Hindu Social Reform Societies and the Muhammadan Educational Conference to take up the subject of widow marriage seriously and make it practicable.

Widow marriage.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

GARHWALI, 18th May 1908.

108. The Garhwali for April (received on the 18th May), reports that for some time past the sale of young girls has been going on very briskly in the Udaipur patti of Garhwal. The editor points out that the purchasers of these girls state that they want them for marriage purposes. He thinks, however, that this is said simply to impose upon the public and upon Government and expresses a hope that Government will take proper steps to stop this nefarious traffic.

Sale of minors.

A correspondent writing to the same journal reports that he was an eye-witness of a sale of some young girls by three individuals named Balkhu, Raju, and Nettru on the 17th September 1907, in village Balsi in the Udaipur patti. He points out that cases in which young girls are sold are not brought to the notice of Government by the village authorities as they are handsomely paid for their silence.

GARHWALI, 18th May 1908.

109. With reference to the statement made by the Hon'ble Mr. Hose in a recent meeting of the United Provinces Legislative Council in connection with Cooli Utar in Kumaun, the Garhwali for April (received on the 18th May), notes with regret that Government took no notice of the articles that appeared in its columns on the subject from time to time, but has decided to keep this obnoxious practice in force as recommended by the district officers.

Cooli Utar in Kumaun.

The editor urges that the district officers are interested in maintaining the existing state of affairs for selfish reasons though it presses heavily upon the people. He points out that it is the disregard of their complaints that gives rise to unrest among the people.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 21st May 1908.

110. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 21st May, takes exception to the Chief Engineer's letter dated the 14th January 1908, to the address of the Superintending Engineer, 3rd Circle, Provincial Works, and remarks that inspection houses have been constructed with public money not for the "convenience of European officers," but for "the use of all Government officers" on duty. He sees no reason why the rules framed by the Government which made no distinctions as to what class of officers might use these bungalows should now be modified because Indians are growing more enlightened and conform more to Western customs and usage. If this invidious distinction laid down in the letter referred to is maintained, Indian gentlemen will also find dâk bungalows and railway waiting rooms, &c., closed against them before long, and this will still widen the gulf which is already yawning between Europeans and Indians. The prohibition, he says, is intended for native officers of all departments, but it is doubtful how far it can be enforced in the case of the "native officers of the Public Works Department" itself, as many of the latter are in charge of divisions and districts themselves and control these buildings, and the result of the orders contained in the Chief Engineer's letter will be that they will either quietly ignore the rules in their own case, or else the Public Works will suffer.

Inspection bungalows.

The prohibition, the editor remarks in conclusion, is not in accordance with the Government policy regarding Indian women. Female education is being encouraged by Government and yet the wives of native officials are now debarred from one of the best methods of acquiring education, viz. travel, as they are not allowed to use inspection houses, and so cannot go about in camp with their husbands.

NAINI TAL :
The 23rd May 1908.

S. T. HOLLINS,
Offg. Asst. to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police,
Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

PRINTED AT THE GOVT. CAMP BRANCH PRESS, NAINI TAL, BY P. C. GHOSH.
129

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 22 OF 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 30th May 1908.

CONTENTS.

Page.

I.—POLITICS.

(a)—Foreign:

Nil.

(b)—Home:

1. The Muzaffarpur outrage 487
2. The bomb outrage 487
3. The bomb outrage 487
4. "The Dread of Bombs" 488
5. "Why was the Bomb thrown?" ... 489
6. Anarchists—their origin 490
7. Anarchist conspiracy in Calcutta ... 490
8. Anarchism in Bengal 490
9. The Government and the conspiracy ... 490
10. Bengali anarchists 490
11. The Calcutta sensation 491
12. Revolutionary propaganda 491
13. The bomb outrage 491
14. A rejoinder 491
15. The consistency of the Pioneer questioned 492
16. The Pioneer and the Indian leaders ... 492
17. The Pioneer and the Indian leaders ... 492
18. The present unrest in India 492
19. The present situation 493
20. Why is India restless? 493
21. The future of India 493
22. Panic among Europeans 493
23. The Moderate Convention 494
24. The Convention 494
25. The Congress 494
26. Hindus and Muhammadans 494
27. Hindus and Musalmans 494

Page.

28. The frontier campaign and the Hindu Press 495
29. Muhammadan and British rule in India—a comparison 495
30. Regeneration of India 495
31. Means of doing good to India ... 495
32. Grievances of Indians 496
33. Patriotism 496
34. Service of the motherland 496
35. Liberty 496
36. Women suffragettes in England ... 497
37. The coloured races and the franchise ... 497
38. Messrs. R. C. Dutt and Gokhale ... 497
39. Was Sir Saiyid Ahmad a traitor to the cause of his country? 497
40. Religious neutrality of the Government ... 498

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

Nil.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

41. Fire in Baroda 498
42. Rampur 498

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue:

Nil.

(b)—Police:

43. Government and the police 498
44. The police 498
45. Police head muharrirs 498

(c)—Finance and Taxation:

Nil.

		Page.
(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:
46.	A metalled road from Roorkee to Kaliar...	498
47.	Poll tax at Benares	499
48.	The Muttra Municipality	499
49.	The Bara Banki Municipality ...	499
50.	Roads in Agra	499
51.	The Agra Municipality	499
52.	Sanitary reforms	499
53.	Sanitary reforms	500
(e)—Education:
54.	Indians and their higher education ...	500
(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land:
55.	Famine and Muhammadans	500
56.	Famine in Gonda and Bahraich ...	500
57.	Water famine in the United Provinces ...	500
(g)—General:
58.	Bengalis and the Swadeshi movement ...	500
59.	The Swadeshi movement	500
60.	India and its industries	501
61.	Hewett Weaving School, Bara Banki ...	501
62.	Indian fisheries	501
63.	Yugantar and its conduct	501
64.	Freedom of the press	501
65.	An appeal to Sir John Hewett ...	502
66.	Bribery...	502
67.	Village school masters and famine allowances	502
68.	The Medical Congress at Bombay ...	502

V.—LEGISLATION.

69.	Press legislation	502
70.	The threatened press legislation ...	502
71.	The threatened press legislation ...	502
72.	The threatened press legislation ...	503
73.	The Explosives Bill	503
74.	The Whipping Act	503

VI.—RAILWAY.

75.	Railway accidents	504
76.	Railway collisions	504
77.	Railway collisions	504
78.	Railway accidents	504
79.	The Muzaffarpur outrage and the Ghaziabad collision	504
80.	The Ghaziabad railway collision ...	504
81.	The Ghaziabad railway collision ...	504
82.	The Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway ...	505
83.	The Bengal and North-Western Railway...	505
84.	The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway management	505

VII.—POST OFFICE.

Nil.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

85.	The Parasnath Hill	505
86.	The Parasnath Hill	505
87.	The Parasnath Hill	505
88.	The Parasnath Hill	506
89.	Musalmans	506
90.	Shias and Sunnis	506
91.	The Prag Narayan Endowment, Cawnpore	506

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

92.	Deaths caused by wild animals ...	506

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

Nil.

(b)—Home.

1. The Nasir-ul-Akhbar (Meerut), of the 20th May, makes the following remarks on the Muzaffarpur outrage :— NASIR-UL-AKHBAR, 20th May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur outrage.

"As long as the Government will not find out the real cause of the unrest and discontent prevailing in the country, the sore will continue to fester. As long as the real source of ill-feeling is not eradicated, mere superficial measures will be of little avail. We do not think that the Government of India realizes the gravity of the situation, and it will be necessary for home politicians to interfere. The British Government can solve such difficulties with one stroke of pen, but it is strange that it has allowed the present state of things to continue so long. The Government of Bengal can neither send all the Bengalis to prison, nor can it hang or shoot them. The difficulty can only be solved by a policy of conciliation.

The confessions of the persons arrested in Calcutta are truly startling. It is strange to think that such things can take place even in India. May God have mercy on us all."

2. The bomb outrage, says the Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for March (received on the 23rd May), decidedly shows that anarchists have made their appearance in India and that their number seems to be multiplying day by day. We are grieved at the formation of such an organization : India has always been a loyal country. It (the rise of nihilism) is solely the result of Western education. Now the question arises as to why anarchists have appeared in India, a country well-known for the loyal, virtuous, meek and peaceful character of its inhabitants. Surely it is owing to those who have the reins of government in their hands. Their tyranny has become so unbearable that people taking their lives in their own hand have brought themselves to commit such deeds. It would be well if our white rulers were to awake even now and refrain from their repressive policy. But they will not do this. It will be dangerous for the country if the number of such mischief-makers among the people increases. When the people are ready to sacrifice their lives, there can be little hope that such outrages will not be committed again. The Anglo-Indian press has got a very good opportunity. Instead of throwing cold water on the fire of anarchism it will all the more excite (the lower passions of) the authorities. It is an established fact that the Anglo-Indian press is a curse to the country and its doings will ever widen the gulf between the rulers and the ruled. HINDI PRADIP, 23rd May 1908.

The bomb outrage.

3. Referring to the Muzaffarpur bomb outrage as being due to the alleged harsh punishment meted out to two young students by Mr. Kingsford in his capacity of the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, the Swadésh Bándhava (Agra), for May, says that the question for Anglo-Indians and Indians to consider is why these young men have taken to bomb-making ? Why have they adopted a policy unknown in the history of India ? Why have Bengali young men of tender age, and cowards by nature, taken to such a bold and dangerous method of political agitation ? The repressive policy of Government is not calculated to improve the situation. The Anglo-Indian papers also should not add to existing bitterness by indulging in harsh and repression-invoking language. The duty of every Englishman and of every Indian lies in discovering and removing the causes that have been at work behind the present unrest. SWADESH BANDHAVA, May 1908.

The bomb outrage.

The want of cordial and social intercourse between the rulers and the ruled is to a great extent responsible for the unrest and disaffection. In this connection the advice of the Prince of Wales, if followed, would do a lot of good. The impartial observer will have no difficulty in finding out that all this unrest, agitation, violence and mutual estrangement are due to the following amongst other causes :—

(1) to the distinction which is often made between Europeans and Indians by the authorities of such institutions as railways, social clubs and dâk bungalows ;

(2) to the partition of Bengal;
(3) to certain measures passed by Lord Curzon;
(4) to the repressive policy in Bengal; and
(5) to the actions of some of the magistrates.

Now in view of the seriousness of the situation it is desirable for Government to give up a policy that has led to such violent demonstrations and to adopt a more sympathetic tone towards Indians. The ideal relation of father and son should again be established between the rulers and the ruled.

ANAND, 22nd May 1908.

4. The Ánand (Lucknow), of the 22nd May, publishes a letter entitled "The Dread of Bombs" to the editor from a correspondent who signs himself "A Eunuch." The following is a literal translation of the letter:—

"The Dread of Bombs."

"Sir,—What should I say I am afraid of the very word 'bomb'. The same Bengalis whom I used to laugh, to scorn as wearers of the dhoti—when I was strutting about like a cock (lit. puffed up as a fantail pigeon) in the vain glory of my pantaloons—have (now) become a bugbear to me. I know that Bengalis will never make me the victim of a bomb. There are no Bengalis living in my neighbourhood. But, alas! the very sight of a Bengali turns me pale. I am very much puzzled as to what I was and what I have come to. I was not in the least afraid of the Boers. Neither could Turkey overawe me. I never cared one whit for Russia, Japan or Afghanistan. But the very mention of a bomb makes my body quiver like an aspen leaf (lit. makes my body imitate kadamb tree). If I could, I would have never let the particulars of such affairs leak out of the court. I would have decided the case quietly after hearing it or, like the ancient kings, I would have appreciated the enterprising spirit of the followers of the bomb cult and thus would have persuaded them to leave off such nefarious practices. But who would listen in a concert to the poor notes of the parrot? Accordingly, anticipating the future of the bomb, I am grieved to think of the fate of these miscreants. I have been stunned to hear of the murder of the ladies by means of the bomb. O, God! How have such acts of violence come into vogue among the inhabitants of this loyal and peaceful country? O, God! Why do you not take pity and grant good sense to officials and military officers? Such acts do not become a poor country. But my advice is not listened to. All (my) manliness has disappeared at the very mention of the word 'bomb' and I have become accustomed to cringing habits like poor, helpless creatures. The malady of this bomb is not a little serious. It has completely surpassed the verulence of plague and cholera. I have made a name for manliness by the destruction of birds with guns. I am so rash that I dare assault a man on the least provocation (lit. I am so given to strike others that I can dare slap one on the face off-hand). The police also exist to protect me. But the very thought of a bomb makes my body shake like an earthquake. What should I do, whither should I go? If I were a servant I would have taken leave and gone across the seas. Were I an official I would have indulged in blandishments free from fear under protection of the police, in pardah, like newly-married brides and begams. But where should the poor livelihood-seeker go? It seems that a bomb is destined to put an end to his life. I am inclined to write to Lord Curzon 'My Lord, what a disaster you have brought about by committing a blunder in your policy with reference to Bengal?' But I am afraid lest being mistaken for a companion of Lord Curzon, I should fall a victim to a bomb. Considering this my senses are bidding me adieu. I have all worldly comforts, money, name, fame and such other things, but do not possess courage to meet the bomb. I pray God that all the bomb-wallas may never rise from their sleep; that will satisfy me. But why should God listen to such a prayer? Alas! the bomb has spoiled all the game.

Cursed be those doctors who by inventing picric acid have devised an all-destructive instrument. What should I say of those chemists who were so foolish as to teach the art of manufacturing bombs? Accursed be chemistry which brought the bomb into existence. I am tired of the worshippers who call aloud bom, bom.

I am astounded at the very mention of the word 'bomb'. If this state of affairs continues, it will be no wonder if people give up the ghost as soon as one utters the word 'bomb'.

I shall be highly obliged to the person who will let me know how I can remain free from the dread of the bomb. This letter has been penned in a state of bewilderment. If it is not all, it ought to be, I should be excused.

The object of your favour—"A Eunuch".

NOTE.—It is impossible that eunuchs could be an object of favour of the Anand. Perhaps the fear of a bomb has deprived them of their senses.—EDITOR."

SWARAJYA, 23rd May 1908.

"Why was the Bomb thrown?"

5. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 23rd May, has the following under the heading "Why was the Bomb thrown?" "The Anglo-Indians hold the Indians entirely responsible for the bomb outrage, and they do not stop at blaming a few individuals but would like to implicate the whole Indian people from the Legislative Councillor to the man in the street. Their accusations are false, but if they and their allies, the bureaucrats, continue their present policy of exasperation, we are afraid that what they falsely affirm of the present may come to be true (the people of India may as a whole take to bomb-throwing?) and then they (Anglo-Indians) will have to repent.

Anglo-Indian and Indian politicians view the matter in entirely different lights. The tremendous commotion produced by the bomb-throwers has created a panic among the Anglo-Indians and they have become bereft of their senses. The Anglo-Indian papers are giving vent to their undigested opinions, and do not for a moment think what effect such writings will have on the officials and the excited people.

The Pioneer accuses the whole educated community of participation in the crime; and the same opinion is expressed by other Anglo-Indian organs, although in a less bitter vein. They continue to do this in spite of the fact that all Indian papers have condemned the deed in unmeasured terms and the respectable and influential people of all classes have held meetings to express their deep and unfeigned sympathy with the victims of the outrage. But the result of these effusions of loyalty and sympathy was that they were branded rebels by the Anglo-Indian press. (Here the editor tries to refute the arguments of the Pioneer in an article in which it sought to prove that the Indian members of the Legislative Council, and the Moderate Congressmen were the originators of sedition and suggested that when a revolution takes place it would be sufficient to severely punish a few leading men without trial.)

The Anglo-Indians may say whatever they like, but the people of India view the matter in a different light. They find that some one else is responsible for the rise of the bomb cult. They hold that it is due to the actions of men of the Curzon and Fuller type. Lord Curzon's obstinacy culminated in the partition of Bengal and Sir B. Fuller induced the Musalmans to oppress the Hindus and the result was a reign of terror in Bengal. The unrest created by these measures spread into other provinces also, and strongly affected the student population of Bengal! To add fuel to the fire, they were very severely dealt with by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the police, and the result was that the more daring and enterprising among them took to bomb-throwing.

Undoubtedly India has never been under such a bad Government as it has been during the past twenty-five years. During the early days of the British Government, people had faith in its sense of justice and so they adopted a policy of entreaty (in demanding reforms?) But gradually notwithstanding their good intentions, their faith in the British Government grew fainter and fainter. They were made subject to the most cruel, tyrannous and ruinous legislation, and the most depressing taxes were imposed upon them and justice (especially when Europeans are concerned) has been reduced to a farce. The police have been given unlimited powers which are daily increasing. To crown all, Bengal was partitioned in spite of the protests of the people to the contrary and in contravention of all laws. Such cruelty is unparalleled in the history of the British Government. This policy has exasperated all persons educated and uneducated, rich and poor, men and women, old and young, and life has become to them a burden.

The officials made a great mistake in noticing the actions of the student class. It is a fact admitted on all hands that an experienced man can bear with tyranny, but young blood cannot brook insult and degradation. To believe that they would quietly bow to the indignities heaped upon them was sheer madness. If their boyish pranks had been overlooked they would have quietly returned to their studies. But this was not to be, they were flogged in public and were incarcerated in jails like ordinary thieves and vagabonds. Would not the sons of gentlemen resent such ignominious treatment? These atrocities were enough to turn their heads, and in a moment of weakness, they took to bomb-throwing.

But still there is time. If the Government is prepared to change its policy for the better and makes a vow to rule in the interests of India and to refrain from enriching England at the expense of India, it will very soon come to realize how grateful and loyal the Indians are; otherwise we fear that the terrible disease (sedition ?) will spread still more rapidly.

MUSAFIR, 23rd May 1908.

Anarchists—their origin.

6. Referring to the insinuation that the Vernacular press is responsible for the appearance of anarchists in India, the Musáfir (Agra), of the 23rd May, asks if it would not be more just that before the Vernacular press is gagged inquiries should be made from their Anglo-Indian contemporaries as to whether Lord Curzon, Lord Morley, Sir B. Fuller and others are not the root cause of nihilism in India.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 23rd and 27th May 1908.

Anarchist conspiracy in Calcutta.

7. The Nasim-i-Agra, in its issues of the 23rd and 27th May, reproduces an article on the Anarchist conspiracy in Calcutta from the Akhbar-i-Ám (Lahore).

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 24th May 1908.

Anarchism in Bengal.

8. The editor of the Nizám-ul-Mulk, of the 24th May, holds the Congress responsible for the outbreak of anarchism in Bengal. The Congress was carrying on its seditious propaganda and highly exciting speeches were delivered from its platform, but the authorities did not interfere. People may have been led to think that this is due to the strength of the Congress. Next came the partition of Bengal which was followed by a strenuous agitation to undo it. The Government either from its innate sense of mercy or from oversight did not pay adequate attention to this. If the Bengali miscreants had thrown themselves on the mercy of the Government, their lot would have been infinitely better. Even now, the editor thinks, there is time, and if the Bengalis change their tactics, the Government will be only too glad to forgive and to forget. In a subsequent article he remarks that it is useless to rebel against a powerful Government, especially when it has a great claim to the people's gratitude for restoring order in the country, and conferring upon it various other boons. He appeals to seditious papers to stop their career of iniquity and to be grateful to the Government which, notwithstanding so much provocation, keeps its head cool and is making a thorough enquiry into the bomb conspiracy so that no innocent man may be unjustly punished.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 24th May 1908.

The Government and the conspiracy.

9. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 24th May, notes with satisfaction the policy of forbearance that the Government has adopted towards the terrorists. It is fortunate, he says, that the conspiracy has been discovered before it became more formidable. The whole Bengali nation has been shocked by the conduct of the anarchists, and is ready to render to the Government every assistance in its power, as the anarchist is an enemy of human society and makes little difference between Europeans and Indians. There is little necessity, he says, of employing Russian methods of repression or of the proclamation of martial law. The men who are guilty must suffer, but there must be no trace of vindictiveness in dealing with them, nor must the law be unduly strained to punish them. In the end, the editor remarks: "To hold that the sudden outburst of anarchism is due only to violent writing and preaching is to misread the signs. Higher and larger statesmanship will have to be brought to bear on the problem that faces the Government for a satisfactory solution."

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 24th May 1908.

Bengali anarchists.

10. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of the 24th May, says that the agitation of the Bengalis has at last culminated in the Muzaffarpur outrage. Their mischievous political propaganda has created a class of persons unknown in the history of India—persons who are mischievous, bloodthirsty, rebellious, and devoid of all humanitarian sentiments. It is a source of wonder that such persons are to be found among the Bengalis who have been famous for their cowardice, temerity, and weakness. Though the whole of India can in no way be held responsible for the actions of the Bengalis and Madrasis, yet these actions forbode grave dangers to all parts of the country alike. No one can tell how these Bengalis have come to know the art of bomb manufacture. It is possible that some of them may have gone to Europe and learnt something of the art from anarchists there. But in view of the recent police discoveries, it is hoped that their infernal mission will soon be brought to an end. For the present, bombs are supposed to exist only in such places as Calcutta and Chandanagore. But if the present discovery does not result in drastic measures, the movement may spread secretly and at last endanger the safety both of the State and of the country.

MASHRIQ, 26th May 1908.

The Calcutta sensation.

11. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 26th May, asks the Government to make a thorough investigation into the Calcutta conspiracy and not to suspect any class in India without due inquiry. The editor says it is true that nearly all the men arrested in Calcutta are poor and yet some rich and influential men must have supplied them with funds to enable them to procure arms, &c. He advises the Government not to rely on the uncertain and misleading reports of the police.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 28th May 1908.

"Revolutionary propaganda."

12. Under the heading "Revolutionary Propaganda" the editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 28th May, reviewing the remarks of the Times that at Vancouver, and in the heart of London itself, seditious movements are being hatched by Sikhs and Indian sojourners, says that those who have been accustomed to Mutiny celebrations and dinners, to the parade of Mutiny veterans at the Delhi Darbar, will of course be disagreeably surprised to find that the part played by the mutineers may be admired and commemorated by others. He says that no right-minded Indian, whatever his political opinions are, can look upon the Mutiny as an event to be commemorated. It was not a popular rising, but only a revolt of the sepoys employed in the British Army, and the Mutiny of 1857 can therefore scarcely furnish an inspiring ideal to Indian revolutionists. Residence and education in England, he says, certainly promote a passionate yearning for national independence, but hitherto this desire tended in the direction of reform. It has now come to revolution and is not confined to Indians in England. Educated young men, whether at home or abroad, have become impatient of the older methods of constitutional agitation and the wave of unrest and national awakening that has passed over Asia has caught the youth of India and borne them on its crest out into the sea of uncertainty and thrown them into the Maelstrom of revolution. The swiftness with which agitation has passed from one stage to another and with which violent deeds have followed wild words, is in itself conclusive evidence of revolutionary ideas. The editor, in conclusion, remarks that the future alone can show whether the measures that are being taken will kill the movement or give it a more powerful impetus.

HINDOSTHAN, 28th May 1908.

The bomb outrage.

13. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 28th May, says that the bomb will not work out the salvation of India : industrial and technical education alone can improve the economic condition of this country. The editor condemns all those who spread anarchy in the country and urges that Indians should always remain loyal to Government and should demand their rights and privileges humbly and respectfully. He warns his countrymen that violent methods can do no harm to the Government, but on the contrary, will be detrimental to their own cause.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd May 1908.

A rejoinder.

14. The Pioneer, says the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 22nd May, is considered to be the mouthpiece of the Anglo-Indian officials in India and its utterances, therefore, are supposed to carry much weight with them. It would not be, consequently, quite out of place to examine its reflections upon the Muzaffarpur bomb outrage.

Having said this by way of introduction, the editor quotes passages from the Pioneer, of the 7th May, and remarks : "The sentiments contained in these passages are repeated in the Pioneer of the 20th May. It therefore appears that they are not a momentary ebullition of feelings, but that they represent the writer's settled convictions. It would be worth while, therefore, he says, to examine the views set forth in the columns of the Pioneer.

Now the sum and substance of the passages referred to comes to this that 'Racial antipathy towards Europeans has permeated every section of Indian society.' If this be held to be true, as doubtless the Pioneer holds it to be, then there can be no more undesirable reflection upon British administration in India than this, for it shows that even 150 years of British rule has not been able to make a favourable impression upon the Indian mind, and that to-day the Indian nation stands as much opposed to the personnel of the Government obtaining in this country as it ever was. And if such a state of affairs were a reality, the Government would have collapsed ere long. Happily things are not what they are represented to be. This 'unrest' has no doubt spread to a great extent. But the feeling of racial antipathy is confined to a certain class and the sentiment of disloyalty to the Crown is limited to an insignificant member of this class. To brand the whole Indian community as disloyal and to class constitutional agitators in the same group as irresponsible politicians betrays a sad lack of statesmanship on the part of the Anglo-Indians of to-day. But the fact is that our Anglo-Indian friends do not like us to take part in any demand for our rights and hence all this vilification of our sober and moderate countrymen.

In conclusion, the editor says, it would not be amiss to refer the reader to the comments of the Statesman (Calcutta) upon these passages.

How bombs have appeared in India and who are responsible for them, we shall set forth in a future issue."

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd May 1908.

The consistency of the Pioneer questioned.

15. The Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 22nd May, quotes a passage from the Pioneer expressing its views upon the bomb outrages in Russia, and remarks :—

"If the sentiments expressed in this passage are compared with the views of the Pioneer as expressed in connection with bomb outrages in India, they will lead one naturally to think that prejudice and party feeling exercise a great influence over man's reason and judgment.

The Pioneer, which almost justified the conduct of Russian revolutionists on the ground that "recourse to violence is the only method of fighting left to a people who are at war with despotic rulers" now turns round and criticises the conduct of mad Bengali youths. This leads to the conclusion that the Pioneer's judgment is quite biased."

OUDH AKHBAR, 25th May 1908.

The Pioneer and the Indian leaders.

16. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 25th May, while criticising an article in the Pioneer, in which Indian leaders are accused of being the originators of the seditious movement in India, remarks that the attitude of the Pioneer and of other Anglo-Indian papers is the result of the selfish desire on the part of the editors that the opinions they express should not be contradicted in the Council by native members, and that the latter should not give vent to the grievances of their countrymen. Those leaders, who keep the Government informed of the thoughts and aspirations of the people, the editor says, are not its enemies but are its true friends, as they warn it of the dangers it may be exposed to. In conclusion he indignantly repudiates the insinuation made by the Pioneer that the Moderates are as much opposed to the Government as the Extremists.

OUDH AKHBAR, 26th May 1908.

The Pioneer and the Indian leaders.

17. In continuation of its remarks on the insinuation made by the Pioneer that the Indian leaders are the originators of the seditious movement in the country, the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 26th May, condemns the short-sighted policy of the Anglo-Indian press and its want of discrimination in making no difference between men of moderate opinions and irresponsible enthusiasts. The Anglo-Indian press is at peace with all Indian leaders only as long as they do not differ from it. When they advocate the particular interests of their nation, the Anglo-Indian press immediately raises a hue and cry. The same is true of the Indian press. Indian journalists are, on the whole, loyal, although they may now and then indulge in strong and intemperate language, for which they have to suffer.

The editor advises the Government to prevent the Anglo-Indian press from making disparaging remarks on Indian leaders, and to introduce the urgently needed press reforms, so that the tension of feeling between it and the people may be relieved.

ANAND, 22nd May 1908.

The present unrest in India.

18. Now that the East India Railway loan cannot be negotiated in London and the prices of the various kinds of paper currency are falling, the Anand (Lucknow), of the 22nd May, says that even now it will not be too late to devise means to remove the discontent in India. If something is not done the entire trade is likely to suffer very heavily.

The present situation.

19. Haji Ismail Khan Sahib sends the following letter to the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 27th May :— ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 27th May 1908.

"I have been shocked by the bomb outrage but not astonished. The agitation carried on by the Congress, and the bitter writings of the Congress organs all pointed to one end. And that end has come. Persons who are always ready to vilify the Government, who think it their glory to be punished (for sedition) and who revive the worship of Sivaji are responsible for this state of affairs. Men of strong character may not be impressed by such writings, but their influence on weaker minds is very potent.

Those persons who have at heart the progress of India should criticise the Government and the people with equal fairness, but this is seldom seen in India. It may be argued by some journalists that they have followed this principle, but I may ask them if they have done so candidly and fairly. Criticisms of the Government are in a bitter and hostile tone, while those of the people are light and flippant.

It is true that almost all the Congress papers have expressed their horror and indignation at the bomb outrage, but it must be admitted that there is in their paragraphs an undercurrent of sympathy with the perpetrators of the heinous crime. The sentence "but the Government should also enquire into the causes of discontent" occurs as a refrain in all these expressions of sympathy. Does it not serve as a sort of encouragement to mischievous persons ?

Political meetings can be useful in the country only when both the Government and the people are subjected to criticism. The Government very often legislates to the benefit of the people. Such measures as the Seditious Meetings Bill or the Partition of Bengal were for restoring public peace. Why is not satisfaction expressed at these, when every opportunity is snatched to vilify the Government ?

The country is not yet prepared for political agitation. The Government should not be exasperated by unfair criticisms and demands ; a policy of conciliation and mutual confidence must be adopted and the idea that liberty means the harassing of the Government, should be eradicated from the minds of the people.

I do not see why the recent legislation of the Government is supposed to put restraint on the liberty of speech and on the freedom of the press. Liberty is never unrestrained : it is always qualified. If we had not misused our liberty, the Government would never have been obliged to have recourse to such legislation, and if we behave well in the future, legislation will become a dead letter. But if we do not, then we shall have no right to blame the Government, if it adopts repressive measures."

20. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th May, has the following :— ADVOCATE, 28th May 1908.

Why is India restless ?

"Thou has multiplied the nation, but not increased their joy." This, Sir George Birdwood says, is the verdict of every Briton on British rule in India. Man does not live by bread alone, certainly not the Indian whose land is the home of Brahmanism and Buddhism, Vaishanavism and Sikhism. Sir George Birdwood says :—

"Our rule is strong and just, but it is not sympathetic ; and the more impregnable in a material sense our position in India becomes, the more likely are we to be confirmed in the egotistical methods of the scholastic, literary, and artistic education, and of the religious proselytism, that we have so strenuously enforced on its many-languaged and its many-religioned peoples. We are destroying their faith and their literature and their arts, and the whole continuity of the spontaneous development of their civilization, and their great historical personality ; in a word, we are destroying the very soul of the nation."

This is the cause of India's restlessness. And the solution lies largely in the hands of the rulers.

21. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th May, reproduces from the Jhang Sial (Panjab), an article headed "We and Our Future" (vide Panjab Selections, para. 2, No. 18.) RAHBAR, 28th May 1908.

The future of India.

22. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 23rd May, referring to the panic created in a European club in Behar by the bursting of a soda water bottle, remarks :— SWARAJYA, 23rd May 1908.

Panic among Europeans.

"Alas ! the descendants of Clive and Hastings have now been reduced to this. It is (really) true that oppression always weakens the tyrant and strengthens the oppressed. Indians, do not be afraid of being tyrannized over. Bear patiently whatever (misfortune) befalls you. In this way your power will increase by leaps and bounds, and the hearts of tyrants will grow feeble. Hold your own (my) lions, hold your own (date raho) whatever 'befalls a man passes away.'

"Even the atom will one day shine as a star, if Heaven and the earth keep their respective positions."

HINDI PRADIP, 23rd May 1908.

The Moderate Convention.

23. Discussing the Moderate Convention, the Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for March (received on the 23rd May), remarks that it has more or less weakened the National Congress and that its chief object was to exclude Mr. Tilak from the Congress.

SWARAJYA, 23rd May 1908.

The Convention.

24. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 23rd May, reproduces from the Hitkari (Lahore), an article headed "The Consequences of the Convention" by Lala Hardayal, M.A. The editor does not make any comments on the article.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 28th May 1908.

The Congress.

25. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th May, says that the Congress movement has turned over a new leaf and that everything has to be reorganized. The editor remarks that events of terrible importance have recently occurred rendering it imperatively necessary that all the forces of law, order and constitutional action should be ranged in a solid phalanx against the spirit of anarchy and revolution. The contention that the Congress never had any article of faith and that the Convention is now seeking to impose a creed upon it, he says, is false, for constitutional agitation is the very essence of the Congress. He further remarks that those who recommend implicit compliance with the whims and caprices of the authorities as the only way of salvation are selfish and dishonest. Those who advise recourse to violence and disorder are the enemies of the country. He says that arrangements for holding the next Congress should be made forthwith and that steps should be taken to give effect to the decision of the committee of the Convention.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 24th May 1908.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

26. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th May, referring to the deportation of Lala Lajpat Rai and Sardar Ajit Singh, remarks :—

"Muhammadans all over the country held meetings to express their loyalty to the Crown and openly insinuated that Hindus alone were responsible for the seditious agitation in the country. Where was the need for parading loyalty in this way? Did Government suspect them of sinister motives? But things turned out in a different way. Lala Lajpat Rai and Sardar Ajit Singh are once again free men. No charge could be proved against them. The anxiety of the Muhammadans to show off their loyalty to the British Throne and to entangle Hindus in difficulty has only resulted in creating ill-feeling between the two great communities of India. So much so that Hindus have come to regard the Muhammadans as their bitter opponents. The Government cannot be led away by such false professions of loyalty on the part of Muhammadans. It will do what is right and the right it will come to know sooner or later. The ultimate sense of British justice (as distinguished from the Anglo-Indian sense of justice) will in the end recognize the claims of Hindus and then the position of the time-servers and mischief-makers will be queer indeed.

The age is democratic and the English are a libertyloving people. Indian aspirations have thus a fair chance of being realized. But if Muhammadans had joined the Hindus, most of the privileges would have been secured long before this and bomb outrages might have thus been averted.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 27th May 1908.

Hindus and Musalmans.

27. Haji Musa Khan Sahib writing to the Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 27th May, on the ever widening gulf of Hindus and Musalmans, remarks that it should not in any way alarm the friends of Indian progress, as it is really accelerating general advancement by fostering among the two communities a healthy spirit of competition. The protection of one's interests cannot be called the invasion of another's rights, and the measures that are being adopted by the two communities to safeguard each other's interests, are perfectly legitimate. If the Musalmans supported the partition of Bengal, as it brought their brethren in Eastern Bengal into prominence and relieved them from the incubus of an oppressive Hindu majority, or if they are trying for racial representation in the Council, they cannot be blamed for it. Both communities should guard their interests and should not encroach on the rights of others.

28. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 26th May, referring to the advice given by the Hindu press to the Government to deal severely with the Mohmands and even to invade Afghanistan, if necessary, remarks that up to this time the Hindu press has been opposed to frontier campaigns on the plea of excessive military expenditure and the poverty of the country, but that now it has changed its tone. Is this sudden change of front, asks the editor, due to the hatred of the Musalmans, or do the Hindus want to implicate the Government in a war with Afghanistan, and then cause a mutiny in India, and use their dynamite and bombs against the police?

AL BASHIR, 26th May 1908.

The frontier campaign and the Hindu Press.

29. Patriotism and nationalism, says the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 27th May, were unknown quantities in Europe in primitive times. But in every nation there is always an intellectual class whose chief concern is to devise means for the regeneration of their nation and country, and it is to such worthy sons that Europe owes her present greatness and prosperity. It was these people who propagated the cult of patriotism and nationalism in their country and gave Europe her present position among the countries of the world. Love of their country has now become synonymous with religion and all Europeans are deeply imbued with national selfishness. Their first and last aim is to make their country great—both commercially and politically; and to secure this end they are ready to sacrifice everything.

OUDH AKHBAR, 27th May 1908.

Muhammadan and British rule in India—a comparison.

With the Muhammadans, on the contrary, religion was of paramount importance. Hence it is that under their rule different sections of the Indian community were allowed the enjoyment of their national rights and privileges without any attempt on the part of the rulers to interfere with them. The absence of this national selfishness among the Muhammadan rulers made it possible for them to identify their interests with those of the subject race.

Now such a thing in India is not possible these days under the British rule because, as we have said, national selfishness is a part of the European character—and Europeans will resist any attempt that is calculated to effect their national interests.

Indians have realized this and are, therefore, adopting European methods of regenerating their country. But owing to a conflict of interests, serious developments are taking place and there is no knowing which party will emerge successful from the struggle. But this can be said without any fear of contradiction that only the most resourceful can survive.

30. A correspondent in the Kavya-Sudha-Nidhi (Benares), for March (received on the 25th May), notes with gratification that Indians, too, have awakened from their deep slumber and are now steadily applying themselves to the improvement of the condition of their country. A spirit of nationalism, mutual love and sympathy, he thinks, are the essential qualities which Indians should cultivate and the salvation of their country is bound to follow in its train. Indians should take Japan for their model and should adopt adequate and thorough measures to spread education among the masses and then the work of bringing about the regeneration of their country will become a very easy task.

KAVYA-SUDHA-NIDHI, 25th May 1908.

Regeneration of India.

31. Some leaders of the Maha Mandal, says the Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for March (received on the 23rd May), who express lip-loyalty and are enemies of the country should be imprisoned in the Black Hole of Calcutta. A seal should be put upon the lips of the editors and supporters of such Anglo-Indian newspapers, as the Pioneer, Englishman and Times so that they may be incapable of uttering words detrimental to Indians. Padhas, priests, pandas, pujaris and gurus, who are the leaders and guides of the Hindu people, should be seized and given English education, so that their eyes might be opened, and education might prevent them from doing the detestable work of leading the people astray and an awakening might be caused among their pupils and patrons. Men of the old school, and advocates of child marriage, should be deprived of their sight so that they might not take delight in seeing the result of their labours in destroying the after-life of children by fastening a millstone (in the shape of wife) round their necks.

HINDI PRADIP, 23rd May 1908.

Means of doing good to India.

RAHBAR, 28th May 1908.

Grievances of Indians.

32. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th May, publishes an article by a Parsi lady named Madam Cama, in which she gives the following detail of the grievances of the people of India :—

(1) England takes away from India Rs. 2,17,50,00,000 every year and gives nothing in return.
(2) England has no wish to encourage Indian industries, but wants to introduce its own manufactures into the country and has therefore crushed all Indian industries.
(3) Out of the revenues derived from India, 99 per cent. is spent on the salaries of English officers, i.e. the whole English Army and Civil Service is supported by Indian money.
(4) Sixty-five per cent. of the net income from land has to be paid to the Government, and as a result famines are frequent.
(5) The duty levied on salt is 200 per cent. of its cost price, and as the poor cannot afford salt, in consequence many terrible diseases are frequent.
(6) English soldiers are not taught to respect Indian women.
(7) The unfortunate people of India have to supply soldiers with provisions when they are in camp.
(8) All the higher posts are monopolized by Englishmen, so that Indians cannot take advantage of their own money. It is a patent fact that foreigners, however intelligent and industrious they may be, are unable to realize the necessities of the Indian people.
(9) Liberty of speech and the freedom of the press are being daily curtailed.
(10) Illegal arrests and deportations have become matters of daily occurrence. Innocent people are being flogged and imprisoned for trivial offences.
(11) The army is not for the maintenance of order but for overawing the people.
(12) The railways are not for the convenience of the people, but for strategic purposes. The people have to pay freight both for the grain they export and for the finished articles they import.
(13) The police are as cruel and oppressive as in Russia.

In conclusion she remarks :—

"We shall bring about a revolution without shedding blood. We displayed an Indian standard at the Stüttgart International Congress which was hailed with loud cheers. We are as fit for self-government as our fathers were thousands of years ago, when England was a nonentity. Our revenue system was admirable and famines were unknown. By patience we shall regain our liberty during the next ten years."

SWADESH BANDHAVA, May 1908.

Patriotism.

33. A correspondent in the Swadésh Bándhava (Agra), for May, while deploring the present degeneration of India, exhorts Indians to be inspired with the spirit of patriotism and to devote themselves to the service of their motherland if they want to protect their political and national individuality and take their rightful position among the civilized nations of the world. In conclusion he urges his countrymen to make England and Japan their ideal in their march onward.

SWADESH BANDHAVA, May 1908.

Service of the motherland.

34. The Swadésh Bándhava (Agra), for May, urges the advisability of Indians qualifying themselves by intellectual and spiritual training before taking to the task of serving their motherland as misdirected intellect and energy are more liable to prove detrimental to the cause of the country than do it any substantial good.

YAD-I-BAIZA, April 1908.

Liberty.

35. The Yad-i-Baiza (Sikandarabad, Bulandshahr), for April, publishes an article by Khan Bahadur Muhammad Zaka-ullah, who, while praising liberty in the abstract, remarks that no country should aspire for liberty unless its social organization is complete and it has succeeded in eradicating all social evils from its people and unless its industries are on a proper footing and it has a comprehensive system of education. Until then, the writer says, it is vain to cry for liberty. Agitation, he thinks, retards progress, instead of being of any positive use.

ANAND, 22nd May 1908.

Women suffragettes in England.

36. Referring to Mr. Asquith's statement that he will not stand in the way of women being granted the franchise, the Anand (Lucknow), of the 22nd May, remarks that the women in England have fared better than "our babus" inasmuch as they eventually succeeded in achieving their object, though they encountered much opposition in doing so.

CITIZEN, 28th May 1908.

The coloured races and the franchise.

37. Referring to the recent Conference that took place in South Africa in connection with the framing of a Colonial Federation Scheme and to the remarks of the Times in discussing this question, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 28th May, observes that it is a matter of pleasure that the Times advocates a policy, sane and liberal and just as well as generous. He says that if it is most important, as the Times puts it that "natives should feel they have some voice in the Government of their country," and if the principle which the British as a race have always set up "that the greatest possible freedom and the best possible education are the safest and most enlightened gifts" that they can give to their subjects, it follows that the British nation has far less justification either in principle or expediency in withholding from the far more civilized and already cultured Indian people "the greatest possible freedom and the best possible education, as well as their right to have a voice in the government of their country." He says that the denial of such a right and the repudiation of such a principle by latter-day British Ministers, whether Conservative or Liberal, on unfounded distinctions between the Asiatic and the European can only be due to a selfish greed of power and prestige, of emoluments and income, and, last but not least, of commerical and economic resources which subjection to foreign rule imposes on the ruled.

HINDI PRADIP, 23rd May 1908.

Messrs. R. C. Dutt and Gokhale.

38. Referring to the speeches made by Messrs. R. C. Dutt and Gokhale at a dinner given to them in Bombay at their departure for England, the Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for March (received on the 23rd May), remarks that Mr. Dutt was caught by the bait in the form of a seat on the Decentralization Commission and that was why he spoke favourably of the Liberals and the Reform Scheme.

Adverting to Mr. Gokhale's speech the editor observes that it is no use to adopt a policy of entrety when "our" representations are not attended to. To beg one's rights is no disgrace, provided his prayers are acceded to. These days throughout the country, the cry is for bread. Will Mr. Morley's reforms satisfy this demand? "Our" hunger will be satisfied only when India's products will not be exported and its revenues will be devoted exclusively to the good of its inhabitants, which these commissions and deputations can never be expected to accomplish.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 27th May 1908.

Was Sir Saiyid Ahmad a traitor to the cause of his country?

39. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 27th May, referring to some aspersions on the character of Sir Saiyid Ahmad in the Habl-ul-Matin (Calcutta) to the effect that (1) he was a traitor to the cause of his country, and whatever he did was at the instance of the Government; (2) that he was a blind follower of the English and used to praise everything English, and this led him to put false interpretations on the Koran; and (3) that his policy of aloofness from political life will prevent the Musalmans from making any progress in the future, remarks that Sir Saiyid was sincere in his professions, and was not like the politicians of the present day, who profess one thing and do another. He said that if the Musalmans cast in their lot with the Hindus all the advantages would be on the side of the latter. If he were assured that the Hindus would act in a disinterested manner he would have certainly supported them. As to his being a blind follower of the English, his writings prove the contrary. He freely criticised the Bible and Christianity, but it cannot be denied that he tried to interpret the Koran by the light of modern science, which is perfectly justifiable. If he had allowed the Musalmans to enter the disturbed field of Indian politics, a time would have come when the Musalmans would have taken their swords in their hands and blood would have flowed freely in the country. Musalmans are by nature excitable, and they would have not stopped with killing innocent women in the dark. To prevent such a possibility, he restrained them from entering the arena of politics. The British Government is just, and the Musalmans are content with their lot.

RAHBAR, 28th May 1908.

Religious neutrality of the Government.

40. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th May, referring to the expenditure by the Government of India of a sum of Rs. 18,82,900 on Christian Churches, remarks that this shows how hollow are the professions of Government with regard to religious neutrality. If Government helps Christian Churches so liberally, it is its bounden duty to extend the same liberality to Hindu and Musalman places of worship.

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Nil.

III.—Native States.

SWARAJYA, 23rd May 1908.

Fire in Baroda.

41. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 23rd May, referring to the tangible form of sympathy shown by the Maharaja of Baroda to his people during a recent outbreak of fire in Baroda, remarks :—

"Fortunate are the people who live under the Government of such a sympathetic Raja. Outbreaks of fire are very common in British territory, but no one has ever received a courie (shell) to relieve his misery (caused by destitution owing to fires) and even with such treatment, loyalty and gratefulness are expected (from the people)."

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th May 1908.

Rampur.

42. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th May, notes with satisfaction that the Nawab of Rampur has ordered machinery for manufacturing sugar from England and hopes that he will turn his attention to the manufacture of cloth also.

IV.—Administration.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue.

Nil.

(b)—Police.

TAFRIH, 21st May 1908.

Government and the police.

43. Referring to the grant of a reward to the Muzaffarpur police for their detective ability, the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st May, asks if any steps are being taken to punish those of the Police department who did not hesitate to concoct a story in order to fasten the blame of attempting to wreck the Lieutenant Governor's train upon poor innocent coolies.

SWARAJYA, 23rd May 1908.

The police.

44. The Swarajya (Allahabad), of the 23rd May, referring to the harrowing story of police oppression narrated by a person accused of murder before a Magistrate in Allahabad, remarks :—

"God only knows why the Government has given such unlimited powers to these tyrants. Is it only for the purpose of dishonouring respectable people by torturing their servants in a most inhuman and cruel manner in order to make them give evidence against their masters. Mr.————, the Magistrate, himself noticed the marks of torture inflicted by the police on Sarju, the accused."

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th May 1908.

Police head muharrirs.

45. A police head muharrir writing to the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th May, complains that the promotion of police head muharrirs has been stopped; that their pay has been reduced from Rs. 30 to Rs. 15 and that their travelling allowance, too, has been abolished. He requests the Government to have pity on them.

(c)—Finance and Taxation.

Nil.

(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

NASIR-UL-AKHBAR, 20th May 1908.

A metalled road from Roorkee to Kaliar.

46. The Nasir-ul-Akhbar (Meerut), of the 20th May, suggests the advisability of constructing a metalled road from Roorkee to Kaliar, where an Urs is held annually, attended by thousands of persons. The funds for its construction, the editor says, can be easily raised by levying a tax of one pice on every pilgrim.

47. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 24th May, referring to the proposal to levy a poll tax on visitors going by rail to Benares from beyond a radius of forty miles, remarks :— INDIAN PEOPLE, 24th May 1908.

Poll tax at Benares.

"The first question that arises for consideration under these circumstances is why should a tax be levied on persons using the railway, and still more so on those only whose journey is of more than a certain length? If it is a question affecting the sanitation of the city, it stands to reason when it is said that the sanitation of the town is mostly affected by pilgrims from short distances who more often visit the place and in larger numbers. Then the question is whether the tax will be legal. Of course, it can be legalized when sanctioned by the authority of the Government of India. The question, however, will remain, can the municipality legally collect the tax at a place which is outside the limits of Benares City, as it is proposed to collect the tax by a surcharge on the railway fare where the tickets are to be issued? Then again, the question arises, how will the incidence of the tax work out in proportion to the distance travelled? The railway fare decreases as the distance travelled from a place increases. This tax, as a matter of course, will be a fixed sum to be levied everywhere. Will not then the proposed tax mean an increase of, say, 10 per cent. on eighty miles, 20 per cent. on forty miles and a proportionately increasing percentage as the distances travelled are shortened? Cannot the railways themselves, it may again be pertinently asked, claim this increase should the people be found able to pay the fare at what practically amounts to an increased rate?

It remains to be seen now on what grounds the Government can accord its sanction to the re-imposition of this tax, seeing that all the objections against it at the time of its repeal are present and can now be urged with increased force."

48. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th May, complains that the inhabitants of Muttra are put to serious inconvenience owing to conservancy carts passing through the city in a string and with no cover to prevent the contents from falling on public roads. ARYA MITRA, 24th May 1908.

The Muttra Municipality.

49. A correspondent writing to the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 27th May, complains that the Bara Banki Municipality has adopted a very expensive system of lighting the town, the initial cost of which will amount to Rs. 9,000 and which will entail a monthly expenditure of Rs. 450. This recurring expenditure, the correspondent says, will prove a great burden to the town, as its present financial condition is not very satisfactory. HINDUSTANI, 27th May 1908.

The Bara Banki Municipality.

50. The Nasím-i-Agra, of the 27th May, complains that the roads in Agra Cantonment, near the Rajputana-Malwa Railway Station, the Gwalior road and Chhipitolla, are in a very deplorable condition, from which great inconvenience is caused to the public. NASIM-I-AGRA, 27th May 1908.

Roads in Agra.

51. The Swadésh Bándhava (Agra), for May, endorses the complaints of the trading community of Agra against the municipality, as detailed in a memorial submitted to Sir John Hewett, and expresses the hope that His Honour will be pleased to take proper steps to redress the grievances of the Agra merchants. SWADESH BANDHAVA, May 1908.

The Agra Municipality.

52. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), in the issue of the 24th May, notes with satisfaction the measures that the Local Government is about to take to improve the sanitary condition of the larger towns in these provinces, and makes the following suggestions for the consideration of the Sanitary Conference that is about to be held :— ADVOCATE, 24th May 1908.

Sanitary reforms.

(1) People should be asked to co-operate with municipal boards in introducing improvements and should share the expenses for the same. Every city contains men who are willing to bear the expenses of broadening the streets around their houses, and there are many rich people who are willing to perpetuate their names by finding funds for building new roads.

(2) In every large town there are tracts of cultivated or waste land which contain the germs of disease. These lands should be acquired and re-sold to persons desirous of purchasing them for building purposes.

(3) The western muhallas of Lucknow are getting steadily depopulated while the eastern ones are being over-crowded. This can be remedied by having one or two roads between the present Circular and Aish Bagh roads, in order to connect the old city with the comparatively new one.

HINDUSTANI, 27th May 1908.

53. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 27th May, reproduces the suggestions of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 24th May, regarding the sanitary improvement of larger towns.

Sanitary reforms.

(e)—Education.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th May 1908.

54. An article appeared in the Pioneer in which the writer held that the system of imparting liberal education was responsible for the present unrest among Indians. He suggested that higher education should not be given to Indians if it is desired to check the growth of unrest in the country.

Indians and their higher education.

Commenting upon this article, a correspondent of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), says, in the issue of the 26th May, that to education alone is due the continuance of British rule in India, which would otherwise have been impossible in a country inhabited by men of different castes and creeds.

(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 26th May 1908.

55. Referring to the work of the Hindu community in general, and of Lala Lajpat Rai in particular, in connection with the prevailing famine, the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th May, exhorts the Muhammadan community to follow the noble example of their Hindu brethren, for no nation can progress unless it shows sympathy for the welfare of the public.

Famine and Muhammadans.

HINDUSTANI, 27th May 1908.

56. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 27th May, reproduces an article from the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st May, regarding famine in Gonda and Bahraich.

Famine in Gonda and Bahraich.

ADVOCATE, 28th May 1908.

57. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th May, says that: "The risks of a water famine in some parts of these provinces are becoming pronounced. From Jhansi the wail has reached us that the well-known tank yields no more any water and that the supply in the big well in the heart of the city runs a risk of running dry. Hill stations had begun to complain of the coming trouble some weeks ago. We are sure Sir John Hewett is keeping himself fully informed of the state of affairs in hilly and dry districts. It is high time not only that arrangements to cope with the evil—far greater than even want of food—were made, but also that the people were assured that not a moment would be lost in collecting the precious fluid before the local sources become dry. The steps already taken put heart into the people, the later ones should prevent an outbreak of cholera and death from thirst."

Water famine in the United Provinces.

(g)—General.

KAVYA-SUDHA-NIDHI, March 1908.

58. The Kavya-Sudha-Nidhi (Benares), for March (received on the 25th May), says that while on the one hand the authorities seem bent on crushing the swadeshi movement in Eastern Bengal, the Bengalis, on the other hand, are doing their best to enforce the boycott of foreign goods. The editor exhorts the inhabitants of other provinces not merely to show their lip-sympathy with the Bengalis but to follow their example closely and vigorously encourage the swadeshi movement.

Bengalis and the Swadeshi movement.

VAISH HITKARI, April 1908.

59. The worth of a proposal, says the Vaish Hitkari (Meerut), for the month of April, depends much upon the person from whom it emanates. So it was that no one paid any serious attention to the swadeshi movement till it was taken up by the political leaders of India. But there are certain religious and social associations in the country which do not care to enter upon the dangerous ground of politics. Hence they have scrupulously avoided the only movement for the economic regeneration of India. He says, if Indians want to secure the co-operation of every one, it is high time to separate the swadeshi movement from political considerations.

The Swadeshi movement.

There is another point, he remarks, that should be carefully noted. Indians in their zeal for everything swadeshi have begun to patronize those firms which have been established with English capital and the proceeds of which go to English pockets. Such firms, taking advantage of their enthusiasm, charge high rates and thus do more harm than the firms situated in foreign countries. Consequently, Indians should avoid them and start Indian firms with Indian capital and Indian labour. The Vaish community, whose exclusive vocation is trade, should take up this suggestion seriously and earnestly.

India and its industries.

60. Most of our countrymen, says the editor of the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), in the issue of the 22nd May, have been awakened. But awakening not followed by practical work is quite useless, and practical work is possible only when we are well equipped both physically and mentally. Physical equipment means strength—which again depends upon sufficient food. The only practical work therefore for the present is economic. All our powers and energies should therefore be directed towards commerce and industry. No doubt those that have succeeded in destroying trade and enterprise for their own interest will oppose us, and thus the work for the moment may seem impossible. But courage and determination will help us when in troubles and difficulties, and if we keep hopeful we can accomplish all. Now let us look to what we have not considered before. We depend for the necessities of our every-day life wholly upon foreigners. We do not realize the possibilities of Indian commerce and industry. Many foreigners have come and established their factories in India. Take for instance rubber factories. How great are the possibilities of this industry will be apparent from the fact that foreign capital is being invested in this industry in different parts of India—in Mysore, Coorg, Nilgiri, &c.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd May 1908.

If we are really seriously inclined towards the economic regeneration of our country we will have to keep a careful and vigilant eye upon every means through which our wealth is being removed from the country.

Hewett Weaving School, Bara Banki.

61. A correspondent writing to the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 27th May, complains that the Hewett Weaving School, Bara Banki, cannot be utilized by all classes of people, as only weavers are admitted into it and they have to buy a loom before being admitted. The same is true of the hosiery department, as every student has to buy a knitting machine before obtaining admission.

HINDUSTANI, 27th May 1908.

Indian fisheries.

62. Referring to the enquiries made under the orders of the Madras and Bengal Governments into the condition of fisheries, inland and maritime, so that measures might be recommended for their improvement, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th May, says that a company has already begun work in Madras on a large scale on the West Coast for the manufacture of fish fertilisers and fish oil from sardines. The article on the subject concludes as follows :—

"Here is a swadeshi industry gone into the hands of foreign capitalists—not a very flattering compliment to the swadeshi spirit of Madras. In Bengal a Fisheries Board is in course of formation. And a company from England may soon come to exploit the rivers and sea. Are there not patriotic Bengalis to at once float a company in order to take up this rising industry ?"

ADVOCATE, 28th May 1908.

Yugantar* and its conduct.

63. Referring to the seditious tone of the Yugantar newspaper, the Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 20th May, asks why the owners are courting deportation. It then goes on to say that it is a part of their policy—and it is a policy decided by the Secret Society—to undergo any amount of punishment without betraying any compunctions at the wrongs committed. But such a policy will always bring disgrace and degradation upon them, though they may think it otherwise. This is not the way to secure national regeneration.

In conclusion the editor reproduces an article from the Yugantar and says that the best way to stop the papers, which give publicity to such rabid articles, is to introduce the system of taking a heavy security before allowing the publication of any paper.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 20th May 1908.

Freedom of the press.

64. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 26th May, referring to the proposal to make the proprietors of Indian newspapers furnish cash securities of Rs. 25,000 each, remarks that such legislation would be injurious to those papers that are loyal to the Government and criticise its measures in a friendly spirit. The editor thinks that journalists who are guilty of seditious writing should be severely dealt with, but that there is no need for special legislation. He is, however, disposed to think that sedition is chiefly disseminated by means of pamphlets and leaflets printed in unlicensed presses, to which the police pay no attention.

MASHRIQ, 26th May 1908.

MUSAFIR, 21st May 1908.

An appeal to Sir John Hewett.

65. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 21st May, says that the Dewan Sahib of Katiyari estate (district Hardoi), went out on a hunting expedition a short time ago. But either wilfully or accidentally he shot a man who shortly after succumbed to the injuries received. The case has been hushed up and it is feared that no further notice will be taken of it. But are such things to happen during the administration of one so well known for his mercy and justice? We appeal to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to bring the offender to justice.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 23rd May 1908.

Bribery.

66. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 23rd May, referring to the bribery and corruption prevalent in the lower courts, suggests the advisability of providing the Collector of a district with an Advisory Council of reliable men to keep him informed of the misdoings of his subordinates and be otherwise useful to him.

HINDUSTANI, 27th May 1908.

Village school masters and famine allowances.

67. A village school master, writing to the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 27th May, complains that during the hard days of the famine the village school masters of the Kheri district, Oudh, did not get any famine allowance, although their pay is comparatively small.

HINDOSTHAN, 28th May 1908.

The Medical Congress at Bombay.

68. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 28th May, applauds His Excellency the Governor of Bombay for his efforts to convene a Medical Congress at Bombay. The editor suggests that as thousands of persons fall victims to plague and cholera every year in India, the forthcoming Medical Congress will do well to discuss remedial measures against these epidemics and also against leprosy.

V.—Legislation.

ABHYUDAYA, 22nd May 1908.

Press legislation.

69. Referring to the proposal that a high security should be exacted before the publication of a newspaper is permitted, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 22nd May, remarks as follows:—

"1. The exacting of a high security, say, of Rs. 20,000, as is proposed in some quarters, means the extinction of all newspapers whatsoever—for journalism in India is confined to the poorer classes who cannot afford to furnish such high securities. The rich either do not or dare not care for journalism.

2. No doubt there are certain papers which have given grave offence to the Government, but they are being punished and have been punished. It is unjust to visit the sins of a few upon the whole lot.

3. Those that are inclined to mischief-making will continue their ignoble practices in spite of press legislations and other repressive measures.

4. When the press is gagged by legislation, desperate characters will adopt secret manœuvres and then Government will have no means of acquiring information."

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 24th May 1908.

The threatened press legislation.

70. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 24th May, referring to the threatened press legislation, remarks that it will be of little avail as scurrilous pamphlets and seditious speeches will supply the deficit caused by the gagging of the press. Some measures, however, should be taken to keep the press within its legitimate bounds. But it would be highly impolitic to deprive the Vernacular press of its liberty. If any law is passed, it should be equally binding on all papers, whether conducted by Europeans or Indians. The Government knows the advantages of the liberty of the press, and should try to utilize it for its own ends.

AL BASHIR, 26th May 1908.

The threatened press legislation.

71. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 26th May, referring to the threatened press legislation, remarks that to him the liberty of the press is very dear, and he will be very sorry if he is deprived of it. But he is grieved to see that many Arya Samajist and Bengali papers are misusing their liberty and have become the disseminators of sedition, disaffection, and discontent in the country. He says that he has always supported the system of censorship of the press in vogue in Turkey, as the subjects of the Sultan generally misuse the liberty granted to them in this direction. The recent developments in Calcutta have clearly proved that they are due to the baneful effect of seditious journals. It is proposed to revive Lord Lytton's Vernacular Press Act, but it would be useless now as many English papers are at present in the hands of Indian agitators, and are published in the same bitter vein. The other proposal of taking sureties of Rs. 25,000 from every publisher of a paper, too, is impracticable, as there are many loyal journalists, especially Musalmans, who would not be able to do this, or if they did furnish this security, their capital would be too low to allow them to maintain their paper in a proper condition. The Musalman press has been extremely loyal to the Government, and has by its active support prevented the threatened mutiny of 1907. It is to the credit of the Musalman papers that they have prevented ignorant and excitable Musalmans from falling dupes to the tactics of Hindu agitators. If the press is crushed, its place will be taken by hand bills, dramatic performances, secret societies and their emissaries, historical books, &c. Seditious papers would be on the safe side, if the second proposal passes into law, as their circulation is very large and they can afford to deposit a large sum of money as security.

The Government should consider well before listening to the excited opinions of the Anglo-Indian press. The only possible way of dealing with sedition in the newspapers is to inflict heavy punishments on defaulters and to arrange that sedition cases should not be held in open court and that no opportunity should be given to newspaper men to court publicity or to enlist popular sympathy on their behalf by publishing highly-coloured accounts in papers and pamphlets and thus being respected as patriots.

The threatened press legislation.

72. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 29th May, referring to the threatened press legislation, remarks that this is due to the spitefulness of the Anglo-Indian press, as it cannot see that the Indian press should advocate measures calculated to benefit the people of India. Their tactics succeeded with Lord Lytton, and they are trying the same now on a liberal ministry. If the Indian press is crushed, the disaffection will not abate one jot, but may assume alarming proportions. The editor is of opinion that unless radical reforms are introduced in the administration, the tone of the Indian papers will not change, even though if the strongest repressive measures are adopted.

OUDH AKHBAR, 29th May 1908.

The Explosives Bill.

73. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 28th May, says that the Government of India are now considering the introduction of an Explosives Bill on the lines of that in force in England, and remarks that like the Seditious Meetings Bill this measure will be taken up at Simla and passed very probably in the absence of the Additional Members of the Supreme Legislative Council. The editor says that the same story will no doubt be repeated in the case of the Explosives Bill, namely that it is a matter of extreme urgency.

CITIZEN, 28th May 1908.

The Whipping Act.

74. Referring to the reply of Mr. Buchanan to Sir Henry Cotton's question in the House of Commons in connection with the Whipping Act, the editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), in the issue of the 28th May, remarks that "if it is possible to release persons charged with very serious offences on sufficient surety pending appeal, it is really hard to see why the same course could not be allowed with regard to a person who has been condemned to a sentence of whipping. We fail to see what objection there can be to letting out such a person on sufficient bail, especially when it is admitted that this form of punishment is outrageous and degrading to one's sense of self-respect. Nor do we see any reason why the Under-Secretary should so tenaciously support the threat used by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta that he would inflict the sentence of flogging on infantile stone-throwers. Stone-throwing, no doubt, is attended with danger, and it is also true that the practice has grown to some extent in Calcutta recently, but when all this is conceded, one still finds it hard to justify the conduct of a Magistrate who inflicts the cruel sentences of whipping on boys who have not yet entered their teens. Surely there are other ways of dealing with such crimes."

CITIZEN, 28th May 1908.

VI.—Railway.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 23rd May 1908.

Railway accidents.

75. The Sundar Shringár (Muttra), of the 23rd May, expresses surprise that railway companies do not adopt measures for the prevention of such railway accidents as occurred at Ludhiana and Ghaziabad, and remarks that it cannot but be regarded as a divine calamity that railway companies do nothing to ensure the safety of passengers, even though they are earning crores of rupees annually as net profit. The editor urges the necessity of Government taking steps for the early improvement of the railway administration.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 24th May 1908.

Railway collisions.

76. A correspondent of the Riyáz-ul-Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 24th May, referring to the frequent railway collisions, suggests that intemperance among railway employés should be severely dealt with and that the railway lines should be doubled.

MASHRIQ, 26th May 1908.

Railway collisions.

77. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 26th May, makes the following suggestions with a view to preventing railway collisions :—

(1) That all railway lines in India should be doubled.
(2) That drinking among railway employés should be severely dealt with.
(3) That when collisions take place, Government should prosecute railway companies and demand compensation for the lives of its subjects lost in the accident.
(4) That too many passengers should not be allowed to travel in a train.
(5) That the railway employés should be educated men.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 28th May 1908.

Railway accidents.

78. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), in the issue of the 28th May, says that the instructions given by the Railway Board to the various railways to send full particulars of all accidents to the press, without delay, will be cordially approved by the public. He says that the excuse of the railway authorities regarding the insufficiency of staff cannot hold good, for every railway can afford to keep one or two officers whose special duty it should be to promptly send full reports of accidents to the press, as this would put a stop to the wild reports that always follow such disasters. In addition to this, he says, the Railway Board owes a more serious duty to the travelling public. These accidents which are becoming so alarmingly frequent are undoubtedly preventible and to this subject the attention of the Board should be directed. He suggests that the whole standard of intelligence and remuneration should be raised so that the danger of railway travelling may be minimized.

TAFRIH, 21st May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur outrage and the Ghaziabad collision.

79. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st May, says that there is hardly any Indian who does not sympathize with Mr. Kennedy in his bereavement. But those who have expressed their abhorrence of the Muzaffarpur outrage ought to remember that they have a similar duty to perform by their own countrymen. The Ghaziabad incident has come and gone. But has it elicited even a feeble voice of protest at the mismanagement of the railway authorities ? Such accidents are of frequent occurrence only because no organized effort is made to make the authorities conscious of the fact that their responsibility is great and that they should be more careful in the discharge of their duty.

A few suits for damages brought against the railway authorities would serve to bring them to their senses.

SUNDAR SHRINGAR, 23rd May 1908.

The Ghaziabad railway collision.

80. The Sundar Shringár (Muttra), of the 23rd May, reports that a monster meeting was held in Delhi on the 8th instant under the presidency of Saiyid Haider Raza to express indignation at the Ghaziabad railway collision and that a committee was formed to collect funds for the relief of injured passengers and to institute damage suits against the Railway Company.

SWADESH BANDHAVA, May 1908.

The Ghaziabad railway collision.

81. The Swadésh Bándhava (Agra), for May, referring to the Ghaziabad railway collision, urges the necessity of compensation suits being brought against the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway by the relatives of those who were killed in the collision, with a view to teaching the Railway Administration a wholesome lesson.

82. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th May, complains that thefts are very common on the Ramnagar Railway Station on the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway, owing to the absence of the Railway Police. He thinks that Ram Kishan Lal, Station Master, and Chokhi, a pointsman, are concerned in the thefts.

The Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th May 1908.

83. A correspondent writing to the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 27th May, complains that as wood is being used on the Bengal and North-Western Railway instead of coal, many fires are caused in villages near the line by the sparks from the funnels of the engines. He says that he himself saw a village burnt in this way near Lucknow.

The Bengal and North-Western Railway.

HINDUSTANI, 27th May 1908.

84. Referring to the proposal of the Railway Board to lease out the management of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to a private company, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 28th May, says that a good deal of correspondence on the subject has already taken place with the Southern Panjab Railway and that it is expected that the Railway Board will accept the offer made by this company and pass final orders on the question within the next few months. The editor says that the public knows nothing as to the reasons that have led the Railway Board to recommend the leasing out of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. He does not favour the transfer of the management, as far as the public is concerned, and says that "in place of a highly-paid Government official at the head of the management if we have an agent of a company whose chief concern is to show large dividends sitting at Delhi, the management will not be in touch with the public and serious will be the inconvenience to which the local trade and travelling public will be put. The leasing will not be in the interest of the public; it may be in the interest of the Government as it may bring forth larger profits. These profits will, however, be earned at the cost of public convenience. We for ourselves do not know why it should be difficult for the Railway Board to ensure economy which can be obtained in more directions than one. We hope that the Railway Board, before it takes final action in the matter, will take the Indian public into its confidence, and tell them the reasons that have led it to lease out this prosperous State line to a private company."

The Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway management.

ADVOCATE, 28th May 1908.

VII.—Post Office.

Nil.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social matters.

85. The Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 24th May, says that the recent decision of the Government of India regarding the construction of bungalows on the eastern and western ridges of the Parasnath Hill will not be acceptable to the Jains, as they regard the whole range as sacred. The editor exhorts them to hold panchayats in different places with a view to informing the Bengal Government and the Government of India of their inability to accept the decision so that the question may be reconsidered.

The Parasnath Hill.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th May 1908.

86. Manak Chand Hira Chand, Secretary to the Bharat Digambar Jain's Tiothkshetra Committee, advertises in the columns of the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 24th May, for two capable preachers to move about the country and inform the Government of the grievances that the Jains have against it regarding its decision with reference to the Parasnath Hill and to collect funds and register the names of persons desirous of rendering personal assistance in the litigation that may be carried on for the protection of the sacred hill.

The Parasnath Hill.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th May 1908.

87. A correspondent in the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 24th May, characterizes the construction of bungalows for Europeans on the Parasnath Hill as an infringement of the late Queen Victoria's Proclamation of 1858 and says that the proposed measure means the returning of evil on the part of the English for the good that the Jains have done them by means of trade and industry. He exhorts the followers of the various creeds in India to support the Jains on principle in their struggle for the protection of their religion, inasmuch as a similar calamity may also overtake them in course of time. He concludes by warning the Government that although the Jains are a loyal and peaceful people, they can offer sustained resistance for the protection of their religion.

The Parasnath Hill.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th May 1908.

JAIN GAZETTE, 24th May 1908.

The Parasnath Hill.

88. One Sital Prasad, writing to the Jain Gazette (Deoband), of the 24th May, on the subject of the Parasnath Hill, says that the Jains have so far regarded British rule in India as a blessing to them, inasmuch as it granted them full religious liberty. But now that the Government proposes to construct bungalows on their sacred hill,—a proceeding that will wound their religious susceptibilities,—it is to be feared that their feelings will be alienated from it. He remarks :—" Religion is the very life of India and the Sovereign who protected it was always loved by its inhabitants. But the King who destroys it is an enemy of India and cannot expect to enjoy himself for long."

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 24th May 1908.

Musalmans.

89. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th May, referring to the indebtedness generally prevailing among Musalmans in India, suggests that they should establish banks from which they could give loans to their brethren in debt, and thus decrease the indebtedness of the Musalman community.

MASHRIQ, 26th May 1908.

Shias and Sunnis.

90. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 26th May, notes with satisfaction His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's intervention in the long-standing quarrel between the Shias and Sunnis of Lucknow, and advises both parties to settle their differences amicably.

HINDUSTANI, 27th May 1908.

The Prag Narayan Endowment, Cawnpore.

91. A correspondent writing to the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 27th May, complains that the managers of the Prag Narayan Endowment, Cawnpore, do not keep their accounts in a proper order; that they do not submit them to the managing committee; that the accounts are not audited regularly; and that full lists of the ornaments, &c., belonging to the endowment are not kept.

He advises the Government to adopt Dr. Rash Behari Ghose's proposal about such trusts, so that there may be no mismanagement in future.

IX.—Miscellaneous.

CITIZEN, 24th May 1908.

Deaths caused by wild animals.

92. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 24th May, referring to the large number of deaths caused by wild animals in India, suggests the advisability of attaching specially trained shikaris, equipped with guns and rifles, to thanas and village outposts to kill animals and snakes, and of giving these shikaris a substantial reward for their labours. This scheme, the editor says, would be in no way affected by the operations of the Arms Act and would probably be very effective.

Naini Tal: The 30th May 1908.

S. T. HOLLINS,
Offg. Asst. to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Criminal Investigation Department, United Provinces.

PRINTED AT THE GOVT. CAMP BRANCH PRESS, NAINI TAL, BY P. C. GHOSH.

CONFIDENTIAL.] No. 23 OF 1908.

SELECTIONS

FROM THE

NATIVE NEWSPAPERS

Published in the UNITED PROVINCES

Received up to 6th June 1908.

CONTENTS.

Page.

I.—POLITICS.

(a)—Foreign:

Nil.

(b)—Home:

1. The Muzaffarpur outrage 509
2. The bomb outrage 509
3. The bomb outrage 509
4. The bomb outrage 509
5. The Calcutta sensation 509
6. The bomb outrage and the Calcutta conspiracy 510
7. The Calcutta conspiracy 510
8. Causes of the unrest in India 510
9. The present unrest 511
10. The present situation 511
11. The present discontent and how to remove it 511
12. The present situation 511
13. Sir Charles Elliott on the present situation in India 511
14. Discontent in India 512
15. The English press on the bomb outrage ... 512
16. The English press on the bomb outrage ... 512
17. English opinion on Indian terrorism ... 512
18. Hoti Lal Varma 512
19. A reported arrest at Agra 513
20. Arrest of H. L. Varma 513
21. "Messrs. Dutt and Gokhale in England" 513
22. Messrs. R. C. Dutt and Gokhale in England 513
23. Indian Tariff Reform 513

Page.

24. Lord Curzon on India 514
25. The Bharat Dharma Mahamandal deputation 514
26. "What is Swaraj?" 514
27. Mistakes of the Government 515
28. The growth of the movement 515
29. Repressive measures 516
30. The test of severity 516
31. The new spirit 516
32. "The Domination of Race" 516
33. "Potency of Thought" 517
34. India and Mr. Keir Hardie 517
35. Sedition 517
36. "Economic Decline of England" ... 517
37. Indians in the Transvaal 518
38. The Jamalpur damage case 518

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

39. The Amir 518

III.—NATIVE STATES.

40. Bharatpur State 518
41. The reinstatement of the Maharaja of Bilaspur 518

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial and Revenue:

42. Europeans and Indians 518
43. The Allahabad High Court 519
44. Law and Justice 519

(b)—Police:

45. Police 519

		Page.
46.	Secret Police	519
	(c)—Finance and Taxation:
	Nil.
	(d)—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs:
47.	Water-supply at Agra	519
48.	Water-supply at Benares	519
49.	Vaccination	520
	(e)—Education:
50.	The Aligarh College	520
51.	Education in India	520
52.	The Government and the Nadwat-ul-Ulama	520
53.	The Muhammadan Educational Conference	520
54.	Musalmans in the Educational department	520
	(f)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land:
55.	The object of opening famine relief works	521
	(g)—General:
56.	"Noble Parentage"	521
57.	Post mortem examinations	521
58.	The Medical College	521
59.	Backwardness of the United Provinces ...	522
60.	The Urdu press	522
61.	Kayasthas	522
62.	The Government and the press ...	522
	V.—LEGISLATION.
63.	The threatened press legislation ...	522
64.	The threatened press legislation ...	522
65.	The threatened press legislation ...	523
66.	The threatened press legislation ...	523
	VI.—RAILWAY.
67.	Railways	523
68.	Railways	522
	VII.—POST OFFICE.
	Nil.
	VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.
69.	Social reform among sepoys	523
70.	Religious controversy	523
71.	The Parasnath Hill	523
72.	Conversion of Musalman Rajputs to Hinduism	523
73.	Shias and Sunnis	523
74.	The Gurukul	523
75.	"The Malady of too much Wisdom" ...	524
	IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.
76.	The Sarvopakari Sabha, Allahabad ...	524

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

Nil.

(b)—Home.

1. The Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 30th May, referring to the Muzaffarpur outrage, remarks that the victims have suffered for the sins committed by them in their past lives. The editor expresses his sympathy with the families of the perpetrators of the deed and says that if their mothers and wives were imbued with the same spirit of patriotism they would be jubilant at the deed, instead of wailing for the sad lot of their loved ones. He proceeds to say :— SWARAJYA, 30th May 1908.

The Muzaffarpur outrage.

"We cannot refrain from saying that it is incumbent on those who express their sympathy with Mr. Kennedy, if they have really got sympathetic hearts, if their sympathy is not feigned and spurious, and if it is not expressed in order to escape the wrath of Mr. Kennedy's countrymen, to have sympathy with these young men also who in their overflowing though misguided love for their country, subjected themselves to what is a calamity from their point of view on behalf of their country, and their nation which will now consider them 'worthy of being killed and beheaded.'

If there is one jot of kindly feeling in their hearts, they should express their sympathy with the relatives of these young men who were 'immersed in the love of their nation' [they may have been misguided, but no one can deny that whatever they did was for (the good of) their nation] or otherwise their sympathy is neither real nor unfeigned and will not be appreciated either by Mr. Kennedy or by the Government.

* * * * * * *

To try to cheat the English is to deceive one's self. Indians are novice in the art of deception, while the English are adepts in it. So such tactics should not be resorted to, and whatever moral courage remains should not be frittered away in such cheating and deception."

2. The Swarájya (Allahabad), of the 30th May, referring to the meeting held at Allahabad to condemn the bomb outrage and the Calcutta conspiracy, remarks that it was attended by a few professional toadies and illiterate raises and their effusions of sympathy were entirely feigned. None of the Moderate leaders took part in it. The editor hopes that the Government will take the resolutions passed at their true worth. SWARAJYA, 30th May 1908.

The bomb outrage.

3. The Rájput (Agra), of the 31st May, contains the following on the bomb outrage at Muzaffarpur :— RAJPUT, 31st May 1908.

The bomb outrage.

"The bomb outrage has quite stunned the whole country. It is a misrepresentation of facts to attribute it to the so-called unrest in the country, for as to the unrest there is none among the people. It is, however, quite a different thing if the imaginary discontent of a few semi-educated persons be taken to be the real discontent of the country. It is nothing short of the perversion of all moral feeling that a few wretches of the same province which owes most to the English should requite that debt by such dark deeds * * * * * *.

Every well-wisher of the country should help the Government in crushing the anarchist movement for the bomb thrower is the enemy of the Government and the people alike and it is quite possible that the bomb may be used for wreaking vengeance in domestic matters if the evil is not nipped in the bud."

4. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st June, agrees with the Temps and the Sháhna-i-Hind in thinking that although the Bengali anarchists are rightly to be condemned for their crimes yet the Government alone is responsible for their appearance. ARYA MITRA, 1st June 1908.

The bomb outrage.

5. The Fitna (Gorakhpur), of the 27th May, has the following on the Calcutta sensation :— FITNA, 27th May 1908.

The Calcutta sensation.

"The events that are taking place in Bengal are the outcome of the agitation that has been carried on during the last fifty years in Bengal, and the attitude of the officials towards it (lit. are the interpretation of the dream which the Bengalis and the officials have been dreaming during the last fifty years). Freedom, which is the result of Western education, has now manifested itself. Bengal has become Europe; it can be almost called Eastern Europe. It is the opinion of wise people that violence and repression will prolong the struggle and if great restraints are imposed (on the Bengalis) their bravery and fortitude will be increased; and this seems to be true from experience. Those who advise the Government to adopt a policy of repression are not its friends.

The more the officials show their resentment, the more determined the Bengalis are becoming, and the Bengali papers are harping (lit.) on the weakness of the officials.

* * * * * * * *

In our opinion both the officials and the people of that province should change their policy."

ZUL QARNAIN, 28th May 1908.

The bomb outrage and the Calcutta conspiracy.

6. The Zul Qarnain (Badaun), of the 28th May, referring to the Calcutta conspiracy, remarks that it was not formed by a few misguided Bengali youths, but was the logical outcome of the fierce and bitter anti-British campaign carried on assiduously during the last few years by "political enthusiasts and the devotees of swaraj." The importance of this conspiracy should not be be-littled, as has been done by some Bengali papers, because its influence will be far-reaching. The Mutiny of 1857 originated in the immediate neighbourhood of Calcutta, and there is no gainsaying the fact that the political unrest that has manifested itself in its peculiarly horrible form in Calcutta, will spread abroad.

The conspirators, who have been arrested, must be adequately punished, so that there may be no chance of such a thing happening again. In the end, the editor says that it is vain to suppose that the English can be driven out of the country by bombs, or that Indians can preserve their liberty for a day, when they have left.

RAJPUT, 31st May 1908.

The Calcutta conspiracy.

7. The Rájput (Agra), of the 31st May, says that the Muzaffarpur outrage and the discovery of the Calcutta conspiracy have caused quite a consternation throughout India and that every right-thinking person has been extremely shocked at the outrage. The expectations of persons who were looking forward to a time when Indians would make substantial progress under the blessings of British rule have received a cruel blow. The dastardly crime of these anarchists is all the more aggravated, when it is considered that they are educated men, and that they were carrying on such diabolical practices under the cover of religion and patriotism. There can be no worse evil-doers than these wretches who have cast a slur on the honest and simple character of Indians, who have profaned the sacred names of Gita and Vedanta with their dark deeds, who have played false to their benefactors, the English, and who have put obstacles in the smooth path of progress. This evil propensity in their hearts cannot be traced to their forefathers since they were all men of strong moral fibre and of peaceful character. Neither can it be said to have its origin in the poverty of the people, for Bengal is the richest of all the provinces in India, nor is it traceable to any harm that Englishmen may have done to Indians for beyond conferring the blessings of civilization upon them, Government has done nothing to merit this return of evil for good. On close examination, it appears that political agitators, platform orators and editors of rabid newspapers have instilled a poison into the minds of their followers which has culminated in the perpetration of infernal acts of violence. Kshattriyas should be on their guard against the spread of this contagion among them.

ABHYUDAYA, 29th May 1908.

Causes of the unrest in India.

8. Referring to an article in the Pioneer in which it attempted to prove that race hatred was at the bottom of all the unrest in India, the Abhyudaya (Allahabad), of the 29th May, remarks that its contemporary's diagnosis of the situation is not correct, and that even if it be admitted that race hatred is the cause of the recent disturbances in India, a certain section of the Anglo-Indians themselves is responsible for its growth and development as was admitted by the Bishop of Lahore in one of his letters. They keep themselves aloof from Indians to such an extent that they will not associate even in railways with natives of higher social station than themselves. The editor expresses the opinion that the disregard of Indian public opinion, the poverty of India, the failure to fulfil the hopes of Indians that were raised by the Proclamation of 1858 and the high-handedness of a number of imprudent and proud officials are the root-cause of all the disturbances that have hitherto taken place in India.

ARYA MITRA, 1st June 1908.

9. "Indians," says the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st June, "have never had a Government without a King and they are never satisfied unless they see their Sovereign. But to-day their Emperor, King Edward VII, does not live in India but in England beyond the seven seas and the thirteen rivers. The grievances of his Indian subjects never reach His Majesty. This is the reason why the conflagration of unrest is kindling in India on account of the doings of the bureaucrats and that public opinion is entirely ignored in this country. The simplest remedy for the discontent in India is to remove the grievances of the people."

The present unrest.

MASHRIQ, 2nd June 1908.

10. The Mashriq (Gorakhpur), of the 2nd June, referring to the present situation, remarks that there was a time when the people of India were afraid of the sight of an Englishman and used to like the gaudy and attractive European manufactures, but now by the liberalizing influence of Western education they have become aware of their rights and have begun to develop the material resources of their country and are becoming more manly and self-reliant. The bomb outrage is a mere by-incident and is condemned by all sensible men. The English introduced the study of Western arts and sciences into India, and they are responsible for the new developments. The Indian press, too, derives its inspiration from England. Anarchism, also, is a result of contact and intercourse with the people of the West. At this juncture, it is the duty of the Moderate leaders, the editor says, to check the enthusiasm of the younger generation and of the Government to introduce suitable reforms in consultation with these leaders.

The present situation.

OUDH AKHBAR, 3rd June 1908.

11. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 3rd June, referring to Mr. Keir Hardie's views on the bomb conspiracy, remarks that he is right in saying that India is no longer what it was and that repressive measures will not succeed in allaying the discontent, which has its root in the disinclination on the part of the bureaucracy to give educated Indians a share in the government of their country and to remove their disabilities for advancement. The editor, in conclusion, says that if the Government adopts a policy of generosity and conciliation, it will not be construed into weakness on its part, but will be appreciated not only in India but in other countries also.

The present discontent and how to remove it.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 4th June 1908.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th June, in reviewing the opinions of the two retired Lieutenant Governors on the present situation in India, observes that Sir Charles Elliott's suggestions for dealing with the situation are not original, as they are precisely what the Anglo-Indian press is clamouring for. The editor, however, approves of Sir Charles Crosthwaite's views and says that the advocates of unrestrained force lose sight of the far-seeing wisdom of Professor Seely and think that indiscriminate punishment and stern repression all round will banish all defiance and bring about the return of the old spirit of submissiveness. But, he says, it is a great mistake to think so. The error which Sir Charles Crosthwaite made, he remarks, is that he did not distinguish between Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal. This error, however, is characteristic of the English as they never distinguish between friend and foe.

The present situation.

CITIZEN, 4th June 1908.

13. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 4th June, while reviewing an article by Sir Charles Elliott in the Empire Review on the present situation in India, remarks :—

Sir Charles Elliott on the present situation in India.

"A stranger statement has not been heard of on this side of the world for long years, the fact being exactly otherwise. The theory of 'loneliness' has been made much of, but Sir Charles has crystallized it and the upholders of the theory may now feel considerably relieved. That assaults on Europeans go unpunished, is a statement that is bound to startle not only Europeans, but Indians as well, out of their wits, and it is wonderful how Sir Charles could entertain so monstrous an idea. The originality of the invention, however, is what Sir Charles may be proud of in his old age. He shows that on the mental resources of Anglo-Indian Imperialists, age has no effect whatsoever, the fertility of their imagination remains unimpaired to the last, and they can fall back on it at any time when they may feel the need of it. Another suggestion Sir Charles makes is that the staff of European officers should be largely increased. A better cure for unrest and discontent has not certainly been suggested, and Lord Morley may well give it a trial for only a temporary period to see how it operates. But when will the Government be saved from its friends?"

TOHFA-I-HIND, 4th June 1908.

Discontent in India.

14. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th June, referring to Mr. R. C. Dutt's statement that the discontent prevailing in India is due to the callousness of the Government towards reform, remarks that if a constitutional form of Government is granted to India, or if Indians are admitted to the highest offices under the Government, it will benefit the educated minority only, while the discontent is due to the abject poverty of the people, and it cannot be removed as long as the export of grain is not interdicted and measures are not taken to ameliorate the sufferings of the people.

ADVOCATE, 31st May 1908.

The English press on the bomb outrage.

15. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 31st May, referring to the opinion of the English press on the bomb outrage says :—

"There is no anti-foreign feeling in the country, none of the masses of the people are against the British rulers. The feeling is that the rulers are becoming more indifferent towards the sufferings of the people and do not take steps to see them prosperous and happy. Having regard to the impoverished condition of the people, this feeling is natural, and the best way to remove it is to learn its intensity through their constituted mouthpieces. The liberal press feels the necessity of this end in spite of the pain caused by these outrages; it is a matter of no less satisfaction to us to know that the English press has not failed to realize the real issue involved in the struggle. We appreciate the good service done by the English press at this juncture to us; we are grateful to our English friends for their acts of friendliness at this crisis. The best way in which we can show our gratefulness is to support law and order, and while disassociating the Congress movement from people who fan racial feeling, we should not hestitate in telling the English public that the responsibility for the abominable crime lies deeper than merely on irresponsible writings in the press. The repetition of the crime must be prevented by the strongest of measures, but the cause at the bottom should also be knocked out by conciliatory measures."

HINDUSTANI, 3rd June 1908.

The English press on the bomb outrage.

16. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 3rd June, reproduces the comments of the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 31st May, on the opinions of the English press on the bomb outrage.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 4th June 1908.

English opinion on Indian terrorism.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 4th June, in commenting on the feelings of the British public regarding the anarchist conspiracy in Bengal, remarks that "the thinking Englishman will not be satisfied with the theory that men have been driven to political crime by violent speeches and writing alone. These might have fanned the flame, but the fire must have been smouldering somewhere. Without a grievance or a sense of wrong, the writer or preacher could do nothing. In Russia there never was any freedom of the press or of speech, but the anarchist movement is nowhere so strong as it is there. Freedom of speech and writing are in a measure the correctives of anarchism. Wherever absolute freedom of speech and writing exists and public opinion sways the counsels of State, secret political crime cannot come into existence. The present situation in India must be deeply humiliating to thoughtful Englishmen. British rule in India rests upon the assent and co-operation of the people and not upon despotism and force. Even the instrument of power is very largely Indian. The English public has been repeatedly assured by Anglo-Indian administrators and writers that India was never happier, more prosperous and more contented than to-day. How is that glowing account to be reconciled with the dread reality of the most terrible form of political desperation?"

NASIM-I-AGRA, 31st May 1908.

Hoti Lal Varma.

18. The following appears in the columns of local news of the Nasim-i-Agra of the 31st May :—

"It is rumoured that a young man named Hoti Lal, who was educated in the Agra College, and who had just returned from Japan after learning the manufacture of matches and was staying in the Jat Boarding House, Agra, has been arrested by the local police as a suspicious character and was placed before the District Magistrate, who ordered that he should be kept in custody until the police were satisfied about his conduct. He is now in custody. It is rumoured that he was collecting funds to open a match factory and the police suspected that he was a vagrant."

A reported arrest at Agra.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 31st May 1908.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 31st May, has the following :—

"Certain Calcutta papers publish a telegram stating that a Hindustani gentleman was arrested at Agra in connection with the bomb conspiracy. He has travelled in foreign countries and has lately returned to India. This intelligence requires verification. It has also some bearing on the Aligarh incident. As we have stated, it is surmised that the sender of the telegram about the arrest of the anarchist 'patriots' and the distributor of a certain leaflet are the same person. It is in the highest degree improbable that any native of these provinces is a member of the Calcutta Secret Society. One of the prisoners confessed that he had travelled a great deal in India in connection with the anarchist movement, but had met with indifferent success. The college scheme included members in different parts of the country, but this part of the plot had not been carried out when the police raided the dens. The man reported to have been arrested at Agra has not yet been produced before a Magistrate and the charge against him is not known. No fresh development has taken place at Aligarh, and it is to be hoped that the theory that the telegram indicates the existence of a party or a conspiracy will be abandoned."

Arrest of H. L. Varma.

ARYA MITRA, 1st June 1908.

20. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st June, also notes the arrest of H. L. Varma on the 25th ultimo by the local police.

"Messrs. Dutt and Gokhale in England."

INDIAN PEOPLE, 31st May 1908.

21. In a note headed "Messrs. Dutt and Gokhale in England", the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 31st May, says that there need not be any difficulty in understanding what Messrs. R. C. Dutt and G. K. Gokhale must have said to the Liberal members of the Parliament. The editor then remarks :—

"To demand any rights by the help of infernal machines is to abandon all claim to them. It becomes a matter of force against force, an attempt to wage war against the King. On the other hand, the determination of the Government to withhold all reforms because of the appearance of terrorism would be also lamentable. The power of the Government is derived not from the army or the police, but from the willing support of the people. It is not difficult to conceive that the support will be gradually withdrawn if the administration remains unsympathetic and repressive. No terms need be made with the terrorists because none can be made. But the Government may so conduct the administration that the anarchist movement will die out for want of recruits. The real discontent is not confined to any particular part of India, and it cannot be removed by force. It is growing and is being intensified by the measures taken to check it. The advice given by Messrs. Dutt and Gokhale is the same as that of a host of English politicians, but its acceptance rests entirely with the Government."

Messrs. R. C. Dutt and Gokhale in England.

ARYA MITRA, 1st June 1908.

22. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st June, sees no good in the agitation that is being carried on by Messrs. R. C. Dutt and Gokhale in England and remarks that as no nation can ever expect to be great without self-reliance, Indian leaders will do well to spread political education among their countrymen and teach them ways and means whereby they can work out their salvation by themselves, without extraneous help.

Indian Tariff Reform.

CITIZEN, 4th June 1908.

23. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 4th June, makes the following comments on the Tariff Reform debate in Parliament :—

"The question of Tariff Reform in its application to India, has been the subject of some discussion including a debate in the House of Lords. The academic character of the debate is evident from the fact that Lord Morley did not care to take part in it. Lord Curzon's definition of the Indian view of the question will be generally accepted as correct in this country. His Lordship said in effect that if India were allowed to arrange her tariffs from the point of view of her own interests and were not obliged to the dictation of interested agitators in England, she would be prepared to give Tariff Reform favourable consideration. One thing is certain that India did not want Free Trade and did not get it owing to any importunity on her part. Indian economists now prefer Free Trade as the lesser evil to a system of customs duties which may be manipulated by the manufacturers of England to their own selfish advantage. If the Tariff Reformers are honest about admitting India to the advantages of a Zollverein, they should be prepared to give her a reasonable measure of autonomy in adjusting her taxation. The attitude of Lord Milner and others of his school on the cognate subject of the treatment of British Indians in the Colonies, does not encourage us to think that they will be more considerate to Indian opinion in respect of tariff arrangements. The issue, so far as India is concerned, is not Free Trade or Preference, but fiscal subjection or fiscal autonomy."

ADVOCATE, 4th June 1908.

Lord Curzon on India.

24. Referring to Lord Curzon's recent speech on the application of Tariff Reform to India, the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th June, says that "Lord Curzon thinks India will hail the scheme with delight if she is given a free hand. Everything hinges on this. Without control over her own finances and without a fiscal policy India can reap but little or no benefit from either Free Trade or Protection; autonomy in this matter is of prime importance to her. But, like Lord Curzon, we would be dreaming dreams to think of a radical reform being in store for India in matters fiscal in spite of the sympathy of the Government for the swadeshi movement."

HINDI PRADIP, March 1908.

The Bharat Dharma Mahamandal deputation.

25. A correspondent in the Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for March (received on the 23rd May), referring to the Bharat Dharma Mahamandal deputation that some time ago waited upon the Viceroy, headed by the Maharaja of Durbhanga, remarks that it was quite uncalled for and was got up merely for selfish ends under the cover of professions of loyalty to the Government. He says that he takes no exception to such professions of loyalty, provided they do not condemn the work of the well-wishers of the country and do not damp the awakening of the people in general. He urges that it is the Anglo-Indians and these deputations that stand in the way of the Government knowing the grievances of the people and that make them out to be disloyal if they ventilate their grievances. He concludes with the remark that Indians as a whole are loyal to His Majesty the King-Emperor, but that it is idle to think that they could be loyal to the entire bureaucracy from the Secretary of State for India down to the ordinary police constable, as most of their grievances are owing to the high-handedness of these officials.

HINDI PRADIP, March 1908.

"What is Swaraj?"

26. "Swaraj," says the Hindi Pradip (Allahabad), for March (received on the 23rd May), "is to get rid of slavery and to become independent. Swaraj is no new thing for us. It has been in existence in India from time immemorial, just as our Sanatan Dharma has been existing from eternity and will continue (down to the end of time). This swaraj is like the mukti (salvation) of the Vedantists. Just as ignorance and illusion are obstacles in the way of attaining mukti so there are also obstacles to (the attainment of) swaraj. Swaraj is not a thing that can be obtained by asking. Why should he who has it in his possession make a gift of it . . . . ? What are then the means whereby it can be attained without begging? The best way is not to mind any obstacles but to bear patiently any calamity that overtakes one. People should put up with all sorts of troubles and should go on working, keeping their goal steadily in view. To create energy in themselves, to be of one mind and to be self-reliant are the means of attaining swaraj. We shall be crowned with success if we do our work, putting out trust in God and relying upon our own strength. Such also seems to be the will of God. It is beyond the sphere of human possibility that an awakening could take place among the people and that they should be aroused within a year and a half. The promotion of National education is a work which we ourselves should undertake. No help can be expected from Government in this direction. The second step our leaders should take is to encourage the development of indigenous arts and industries as much as possible. History teaches us that no nation has remained in perpetual bondage. It is our duty to be patient and to march onward step by step. A period of at least twenty years—and it may be fifty or a hundred years—seems to be essential for our march. For (the attainment of) swaraj both National education and swadeshi and boycott are essential. All signs of progress are found in our youths. Rashness is extremely detrimental to the success of our cause: why, then, should we not give it up? Within

